

Orchesis performers leap above the stage with perfect precision in one of the two performances they put on every year. Orchesis, the College's dance company, performed in PBK Hall in a fall Dance Event and spring Evening of Dance. ^

While Lola pouts in the background, Mr. Applegate tempts a young Joe Boyd with dreams of success in William and Mary Theater's fall musical Damn Yankees. >

Photo courtesy of Dan Pichal.

BECOME A STAR

The varied and successful productions of William & Mary Theater, the popular Choirs, Orchesis Dance Company, and smaller performing troupes entertained both the student body and surrounding Williamsburg community throughout the year.

With such distinguished performing alumni like Glenn Close and Patton Oswalt, the actors and singers of the College could imagine Hollywood-level success. With the large number of productions to join, they had the chance to spread their wings on the stage and grow in their talents.

As supportive faculty and friends encouraged them along the way, thespians, dancers and singers practiced and performed their art to perfection.

→Meredith Howard