

Finished projects left by art students make their own still life. The Ceramics classes and workshop were a little known gem of the College with a number of creative students making beautiful pieces everyday. ^

On a unusually warm February day, students flock to the Sunken Gardens to continue their reading and studying. As a part of an academic environment well-known for its rigor, students used every available moment to prepare for classes. >

MAKE THE GRADE

With an undergraduate program ranking in the top ten in the nation, the second-oldest institution of higher learning in the United States continued its illustrious reputation of being a first-rate research university.

However, students found more in their classrooms at the College than just great professors. Opportunities to study abroad, conduct ground-breaking research, and apply their knowledge to assist others were the norm.

Compounded with the undergraduate program, the law, business, education and other notable graduate schools also allowed advanced students to raise the level of scholarship too. Making the grade was important at the College, but academics proved to be about so much more.
