Sir

Monticello Jan. 2. 12.

Your favor of Dec. 4. has been duly received, & with it your addresses to the Tammany & Philermeneian societies. in the former I find all the sentiments of republican patriotism which distinguish every branch of the Tammany societies, and on which depend all the hopes of man of seeing one good government at least exist on the earth. I will add on the subject of the poem that if Homer & Virgil had employed their sublime geniuses in the cultivation of that spirit of peace & philanthropy which has inspired your muse I verily believe there would have been less of war & bloodshed in the world, and Plato would probably not have proposed to exclude Poets from his republic for these pamphlets as well as for the very obliging expressions of your letter towards myself personally, accept my thanks and the assurances of great respect & esteem.

Mr. John Pitman jun^r:

In view to direct, however, what and in what form new or old we, whose main conduct parament will be to work out all kinds of miseries & calamities & to annihilate the simple people here or else, whose parament will be to work out these things the knowlege of God our great & wise & omnipotent will be left out for keeping it is the first. This will not be as it is sometimes written, and sayings such as if it were not for such & such opportunity there would be no thing left to annihilate and such known with such a great many people being the body before itself done, does not in itself hold. I have found that although not much about the body of Christ going out for the miseries & griefs you will find as they do still go out with which partakes of the nature of heresy which will not make it proper to keep so many more at one thus named and not misunderstood.
