2008 SEASON OUTLOOK

If the preseason selection of a fifth-place finish in the ultra-competitive Colonial Athletic Association's Southern Division is any indication, some outside the William and Mary program see modest potential in the 2008 Tribe. But, those within the College's squad, especially its senior class, are bringing an entirely different set of expectations to the table for the coming season. Coming off a pair of difficult campaigns, the team's leadership has approached the off-season with a sense of urgency and an eye towards reestablishing the program's place among the league's elite.

With each side of the ball returning nine starters, the squad will be long on experience, and the healthy return of several key contributors will only add to the depth in the coming season. The development of young talent has always been a strength of Tribe Head Coach Jimmye Laycock, who enters his 29th season at the helm. He and his staff have never had better resources to accomplish the task than the present, as the team opened a state-of-the-art, 30,000-square foot football complex this spring. The infusion of this facility will allow the squad unprecedented access to the latest teaching technologies in vastly improved meeting environments. Look for this to have both an immediate and lasting impact in all phases of the program.

All discussions of the team's offense begin with returning all-conference quarterback Jake Phillips, who comes into the year as one of the league's most experienced players. There is no doubt Phillips has the talent to challenge for national honors, and his supporting cast, led by fellow returning all-conference talent wide receiver Elliott Mack, will only enhance his effectiveness. Phillips and Mack were two constants in an attack that averaged more than 29 points and nearly 400 yards of total offense in 2007. The squad will look to continue an upward trend that saw it improve radically over the 2006 unit (which produced 'just' 19.0 points a game and 339.4 yds/contest). Overall, the offense returns six of its top seven pass catchers from a season ago, as Mack was tops on the squad in both receptions (46) and receiving yards (849). Sophomore tailback Courtland Marriner was the top rusher from a season ago (518 yards on 115 attempts) and leads a ground game that returns all but 207 yards of the 1,299 total rushing yards from 2007.

With the wealth of skill positions coming back to the fold, much of the attention will fall on the team's offensive front to provide the power behind what promises to be an electric Tribe attack. A solid, experienced foundation is in place between the tackles, as both guards (Michael Grant and C.J. Muse) and the center (Luke Hiteshew) return from last season. The team will turn to youth on the bookends, as it will see talented redshirt freshman Jake Marcey and rising sophomore Keith Hill be the top challengers for starting duties.

The defense is in a similar scenario as the offense, as a pair of key seniors in all-conference cornerback Derek Cox and middle linebacker Josh Rutter will be crucial to the team's success. The pair will team with second-year Tribe defensive coordinator Bob Shoop to form the leadership group of the still young unit.

With one full-season in the program under his belt, Shoop and his defensive charges showed consistent improvement during the spring drills session, including a nearly dominating performance in the spring game. All signs are pointing toward a big upgrade from the unit that surrendered 427 total points in 2007. Much of the defensive unit's struggles a season ago could be attributed to growing pains, as the College's final defensive two-deep had 12 first or second-year players. Cox is the cornerstone of a secondary that returns all four starters. He ended his junior campaign with 51 total tackles and three interceptions.

Overall, the unit returns its top nine tacklers from last season, including junior safety David Caldwell, who led the defense with 107 total tackles (61 solo) and had 5.5 tackles for losses. Fellow junior defensive end Adrian Tracy had team-highs in both sacks (three) and total tackles for loss (9.5) in 2007 and should challenge for national honors this fall. Rutter is another post-season honors candidate, as he was the team's second-leading tackler last fall with 95 stops despite playing somewhat limited by a 2007 off-season surgery. He will enter the fall in arguably the best shape of his career and will be counted on to be the unit's play maker. Adding to the optimism has been the stellar spring play of rising junior defensive end C.J. Herbert. Also bolstering hopes has been the spring play of talented young defensive end Ravi Pradhanang, who would have challenged for game-action as a true freshman last season, if not slowed by injury.

Last season the College faced a total of six ranked opponents in its 11-game regular season, including four straight to end the season. The brutal finish was the first time W&M squared off against four-straight ranked opponents since first joining its current league affiliation in 1993. The College played one of the most-difficult schedules, in terms of overall combined opponent's winning percentage (.604). The slate for 2008 will bring more of the same, in terms of challenges, as the CAA figures to remain as nation's premier Football Championship Series conference. Last year the league produced a record five-playoff teams, which accounted for more than 30 percent of the 16-team championship field. Four of those squads are on the Tribe's schedule for the coming season, with only one (Richmond) making an appearance in Williamsburg. Aside from the daunting league slate, the College will once again face a Football Bowl Series opponent, as it will kick off its season with a visit to North Carolina State. The game will mark the 10th-straight season in which the Tribe has faced an FBS opponent and will be the second time in the same span the College has traveled to Raliegh to face the Wolfpack (1999 being the other appearance).

While the opposition will be challenging, one strong positive for the coming season is the Tribe will be playing six games in the friendly confines of Zable Stadium. It will mark the first time since 1988 William and Mary has hosted as many home contests. The College ended the 2007 season averaging, 10,699 fans per contest, which was the highest figure for the program since the 1997 season (when the College readjusted its capacity figure for Zable from 15,000 to 13,279 – then reduced further to its current 12,259). It was the second consecutive year the squad had reset its record under the new configuration.

The following is a brief look at the College's 2008 squad, by position:

QUARTERBACK

With Phillips coming off a career year in 2007, which saw him throw for 2,801 yards and 19 touchdowns, the quarterback position is an unquestioned strength for the College. The Tribe has a well documented great history of producing exceptional players at the position and Phillips is well on his way to creating his own legacy. Last season, he earned the 18th all-conference honor for the position since Laycock took over the program in 1980 and is poised to challenge for first-team accolades in 2008.

He comes into the fall with 22 career starts in 28 appearances and is in the school's top 10 in nearly every major career passing category, including passing yards (7th, 5128 yards) and touchdown passes (7th, 36). His 2801 passing yards is the league's leading returning total, while his 19 touchdown passes is the second-highest among returning CAA quarterbacks. His average of 272.1 yards a game is also the league's top returning figure from a season ago.

A tireless worker who is one of four team-elected captains and the recipient of the John A. Stewart Winter Warrior Award, Phillips has the athletic ability to challenge defenses with either his legs or arm. His veteran savvy and decision making ability will be an essential part of the team's successes this season.

Should Phillips be dealt a set-back, there is able help waiting just off the wings, as athletic junior R.J. Archer has emerged as the top reserve. Archer has served as one of the team's top receivers the past two seasons and finished last year with 39 catches for 451 yards. At 6-2, 218 pounds, Archer brings good size to the position, which he has spent the past three springs taking snaps. The move was an especially selfless one for the Charlottesville, Va., native, as he would have certainly been in the mix as a starter at wide out. But, his move gives the staff more options at the position and will groom him to challenge for the outright starting duties in his senior season. His spring was solid, as he showed an outstanding arm and good feel for the offense.

D.J. MCAULAY, WR
ALL-CAA CANDIDATE

RUNNING BACK

First-year running backs coach David Corley, Jr., knows a thing or two about the Tribe offense, as he was the school's last four-year starter at quarterback and earned post-season honors in four consecutive seasons. His first fall as a coach should be an interesting one, as he will be overseeing a great competition for reps at the running back position between a host of talented players.

The conversation starts with returning 2007 starter, senior DeBrien Holmes, who missed the majority of his junior season with an ankle injury. Holmes is the group's lone senior leader and will be counted on to be vocal force, both in the film room and on the playing field. His healthy return is expected for the fall and will make him the team's most complete back, as he is solid in all phases of the game. He has appeared in 25 career games and rushed for 720 yards on just 149 attempts (an average of 4.9 yards a carry). He has reliable hands and is efficient with his pass protections. The time he has missed on the playing field has been usefully spent increasing his size and strength and he will enter the year at a career-high 200 pounds.

While Holmes is currently the most complete back, sophomore Courtland Marriner is clearly the most fleet afoot and made great strides in his all-around game as the starter over the final seven games of last season. He ended the year with a team-high 518 rushing yards and averaged 4.5 yards a carry over 115 attempts. His rushing total was the second-highest mark of any freshman rusher in the conference last season, and his career-best 100m time of 10.30 marks him as one of the CAA's most explosive players. Marriner steadily improved his all-around abilities this spring, and look for him to have an increased role in passing situations this fall.

Standing at 6-1, 234-pounds, sophomore Terrence Riggins has a blend of size and speed unique to the Tribe backfield. There is no question he has the physical ability to make a significant contribution in 2007; it will only be a matter of how many touches the staff is able to bring his way. He made a tremendous personal sacrifice at the end of last season by eschewing his redshirt year during the ninth week of the season to provide much needed depth at a position that had been depleted by injury. While handling the ball just 19 times during the three games, he did produce a pair of touchdowns and gained valuable experience. As he continues to grow in confidence and gains more familiarity with the Tribe attack, he has the potential to be a game-changing back.

With the wealth of talent at the position, look for long-time Tribe offensive coordinator Zbig Kepa to find a variety of creative ways to create opportunities for some combination of the three to be on the field at the same time.

The depth at the position is increased even more by the steady presence of yet another sophomore, Thomas Schonder. He proved to be invaluable in a reserve role last year by contributing 154 yards on 35 attempts. He picked an unlikely opponent to have a career-best afternoon against when he rushed for a team-best 42 yards against Virginia Tech. A sure-handed receiver out of the backfield, Schonder was also called on to return kicks and averaged a solid 22.9 yards over 17 attempts. In the situations where the team will be featuring a fullback, the most likely option will be sophomore Jimmy Hobson. Hobson primarily saw special teams action a year ago but showed well in spring and proved to be a versatile performer. He improved in all phases of the game and will get the opportunity to contribute this fall.

RECEIVER/TIGHT END

Brendan Nugent comes into his first season as the College's receivers coach with the challenge of managing a relatively young corps. Early on, he will look for team quad-captain Elliott Mack to be the leader of the unit, as he will bring 31 games of playing experience to the field this fall. As injuries steadily depleted the depth at the position in 2007, Mack continually elevated his game and ended the year as an all-conference performer. He finished among the league's leaders in both catches (46) and receiving yards (849), while his average of 18.5 yards per reception was the second-highest figure in the CAA among the top 10 receivers. Mack is among the team's most committed players to the off-season conditioning program and has continually improved his 6-0, 195-pound frame since coming to campus. His combination of size, speed and experience will make him one the league's most difficult assignments this fall.

Making Mack even more dangerous this fall is the healthy return of D.J. McAulay. A freak fourth-quarter injury in the season opener versus Delaware cost McAulay the remainder of the 2007 season, but earned him a redshirt year, as he returns with two years of eligibility. With a lifetime best of 10.5 in the 100m dash to his credit, McAulay's return gives the College a legitimate dual deep threat this fall. In his only action last season, he gave a glimpse of what may be to come as he torched Delaware for a career-high 162 yards and one TD on seven catches before being injured. Much like Holmes, he also took advantage of the extra time in the weight room and significantly improved what already was a sturdy 5-11, 185-pound frame. He remained on campus this summer and should be poised to make a run for all-conference honors this fall.

ALL-CAA CANDIDATE

With the College likely to run a healthy amount of plays out of three-receiver sets, sophomore Cameron Dohse will figure to have plenty of opportunity to build on what was an impressive freshman debut in 2007 that saw him bring down 31 catches for 557 yards and five TDs. He owns the team's surest set of hands and has an uncanny knack for making plays down field. Despite not possessing blazing speed, he averaged a healthy 18 yards a catch and should be extremely effective working underneath coverages as Mack and McAulay stretch the defenses vertically. Junior Eric Robertson falls in a similar mold. While Dohse figures to get the majority of the reps at the third receiver position, at least early in the season, Robertson will be counted on to contribute spot reps.

With the graduation of NFL free agent signee Drew Atchison, the College enters the fall with little depth at tight end. In fact, look for several wrinkles in the team's scheming from a season ago that may see more sets that do not feature the position. When the unit is lined up with a tight end, it will likely be junior Rob Varno getting the nod. At 6-5, Varno has great height, and he is continually working to add weight to his 220-pound frame. He saw significant action a season ago and has proven to be a capable player as he recorded 11 catches for 115 yards. Varno could also see some action as an h-back, as will converted sophomore quarterback Chase Hill. Hill has good speed and strength, but will need to continue to work on his techniques, both in routes and blocking. He is versatile enough to be both a wide or covered receiver and will only improve with continued exposure to the position. Hardworking sophomore Gareth Hissong is a big (6-3, 252) and strong candidate for the tight end position. He has spent time in the program as an offensive lineman and will see action as a situational player while contributing on special teams.

OFFENSIVE LINE

The Tribe's projected starting front five features four starters standing taller than 6-4 and averages better than 300 pounds a player. But, despite the size, the unit will look to be more athletic in the coming season as it will be the key ingredient in powering what projects to be an offense that will give multiple looks and formations this fall. William and Mary offensive line coach Bob Solderitch will return the interior of his unit from a season ago, in guards Michael Grant (6-5, 296) and C.J. Muse (6-4, 315) and senior center Luke Hiteshew (6-1, 304), but faces the daunting task of trying to replace a pair of veteran tackles in Brad Stewart and Brent Cochran, who graduated the program after starting for three-plus seasons.

After starting his career as a guard, Hiteshew moved exclusively to center for last season, starting all 11 games. He is the strongest lineman on the squad and the most experienced. His continued improvement into his senior season could make him one of the squad's key players. Grant brings a wealth of physical ability to the position. His 11 games of playing experience last season positions him to be one of the offensive front's key leaders. Muse has good mobility for his size and is able to use his feet well. His potential and effectiveness continues to improve as he adds strength in the offseason.

Sophomore Keith Hill (6-4, 315) and redshirt freshman Jake Marcey (6-4, 308) emerged from the spring as the likely starters at right and left tackle, respectively. Hill turned in the most impressive spring of the group. He showed tremendous improvement this spring from last fall and a solid summer training session could position him for a solid season as the starter. Marcey also has great potential and will need to live up to it playing at the crucial left tackle position. He brings an aggressive attitude to the unit and has tremendous feet.

Though last season's unit combined to miss just one total start all season (Brad Stewart missed the last game of the season), the depth at the position will be crucial for the coming year. Versatile senior Eric O'Brien (6-1, 258) provides quality insurance at all three interior line positions. He is unquestionably one of the squad's hardest workers and will be looking to maximize any opportunity every time he steps on the field. Past O'Brien, there is no other player currently listed on the two deep who has seen any collegiate game action.

DEFENSIVE LINE

After going through years of growing pains, the College and defensive line coach Trevor Andrews is looking forward to seeing his charges be one of the team's leading units. The fiery Andrews will count on the veteran defensive end combination of Adrian Tracy (6-4, 244) and C.J. Herbert (6-3, 264) to attack the perimeter of the offense and generate pressure. The pair brings a combined 44 games of starting experience to the field and both clearly have the ability to play at an all-conference level. The tackle combination of junior Sean Lissemore (6-4, 274) and Mike Stover (6-3, 253) each played major snaps a season ago and will be active at the point of attack.

Of the linemen, Tracy has proven he has the ability to be the most explosive, as he returns with a team-high 25 career tackles for losses. He has the raw athleticism to beat tackles off the ball and has worked to improve his overall consistency. Tracy's efforts will only be improved if Herbert carries over his impressive spring into the fall. Herbert was the most improved player on the unit during the spring drills and he has always been one of the team's best leaders. A tireless worker, his continued improvement on techniques and footwork position him for his most productive season to date. Herbert can also move down to tackle, if necessary, and remain a productive player.

Lissemore is a hard-nosed player who battled through a variety of nagging injuries last season and missed the spring drills altogether. But, his healthy return may be one of the keys to the team's success, as he brings a relentless tenacity to the middle of the squad's defense. A great effort player, he is one of the team's strongest linemen. Last season he turned in 43 total tackles and four TFLs despite being physically limited. Stover may have been one of the team's most pleasant surprises last season, as he earned playing time in 10 games, including one start, after coming into the season as a true-freshman walk-on. He continued his solid play this spring and has proven to be a consistent contributor. He plays with a great motor and moves well to the football.

While the starters are long on experience, only sophomore Derek Toon (6-3, 278) has seen game action (10 games in '07) among the reserves listed on the two-deep. But, what they may be lacking in experience should be more than made up for by potential. Redshirt freshman defensive end Ravi Pradhanang (6-4, 258) would have seen game action as a true freshman had he not suffered a late summer camp ankle injury. But, a solid start to spring drills gave the staff a taste of the kind of production he has the ability to create with his physical style of play. Toon is another physical talent who has a tremendous upside. Despite being hindered by various injuries last season, he still totaled 21 tackles and three TFLs.

Redshirt freshman Marcus Hyde will make his first full-time appearance at defensive end when summer camp opens, as he played linebacker through spring. He worked hard this off-season to add weight to his 6-3, 233-pound frame and should see extensive reps this fall. His key attribute is his aggressive style of play, which the move down to line will allow him to turn loose in the pass rush.

LINEBACKERS

Another unit that will be looking to make a statement in 2008 will be coach Scott Boone's corps of linebackers. The group is lead by seniors Josh Rutter and Michael Pigram. The pair will be looking to make an all-conference caliber showing in their final season and the staff is going to heavily rely on their on-field play and off-field leadership to help elevate the play of the entire unit. Rutter, one of the team's quad captains, has recorded a team-best 224 tackles in just 25 career games (an average of nearly 9.0 start) and is coming off a solid junior season which saw him collect 95 stops. He played through some discomfort last season stemming from a knee injury sustained in 2006 but comes into this fall without a brace and moving at 100 percent, which should translate into even greater production from his middle linebacker position. Pigram is one of the team's toughest competitors and has tremendous playmaking ability as he packs significant explosiveness in his compact frame (5-11, 220). Among the strongest players on the team (425-plus pound bench, 510-plus pound squat), he is also among the most intelligent in schemes and alignments. Primarily a weak side backer, Pigram is also a plus player in terms of speed and this, in combination with his strength and experience, positions him to be one of the squad's key playmakers.

Coming into the fall, redshirt freshman Jake Trantin figures to be in the first team huddle at the strong side position. He made a strong impression on the staff this spring with his speed and physical style of play. He will be looking to continue his familiarity with the schemes in fall camp but appears to have the potential to make an immediate impact. Trantin's main competition for starting duties, sophomore Wes Steinman, also brings a great deal of talent to the field. He saw action in seven games last season, earning one start, and has the size (6-2, 226) and physical skills to be a consistent contributor this fall. A converted defensive back, he has the athleticism to play in space and also be a threat coming off the edge of the defense.

Senior Todd Reyher and sophomore Evan Francks provide depth at position. Reyher is into his fifth year in the program and is able to spot at any of the three linebacker roles, while Francks will mostly see action at the weak side position.

DEFENSIVE BACKS

Defensive coordinator and backfield coach Bob Shoop has the luxury of returning all eight players from last season's final two-deep to his secondary, including all-conference cornerback Derek Cox. Cox, a two-time team captain, is the complete package, as he brings good size (6-1, 186), experience, speed and strength to the field corner. He has the potential and work ethic to show as one of the elite players in the Football Championship Series division this season and will be counted on to be one of the leaders of the Tribe's defensive unit. Cox has played in 32 career games and produced 110 total tackles and 20 total passes defended, including a career-high three interceptions last season.

Another player looking to challenge as one of the league's elite players is junior strong safety David Caldwell. Quite possibly is the team's most gifted athlete, Caldwell brings a physical presence both at the point of attack and in coverage. He was the team's leading tackler a season ago with 107 stops, while also contributing 5.5 tackles for losses. He set the position's squat record this off-season at 550 pounds, yet has the speed and quickness to provide man coverage. The staff will look to maximize his talents and utilize his playmaking ability.

Junior free safety Robert Livingston and sophomore boundary corner Ben Cottingham provide steady compliments to Caldwell and Cox, respectively. Livingston, who transferred into the program from Western Michigan after the 2006 season, has quickly become the unit's coach on the field. He combines his great instincts for the game with a complete grasp of the team's schemes. Livingston started all 11 games a season ago and found his way to the ball carrier 76 times, while also contributing six pass break ups. Cottingham worked his way from a walk-on to the team's starter by the end of his redshirt freshman season last year. He is solid in all facets of the game and has displayed a knack for making plays. A very fundamentally sound player, he ended last season by making a pair of interceptions against Richmond and will enter his first season as a starter in 2008.

Athletic sophomore Terrell Wells will push Cottingham for playing time as the season presses on, while junior Fred Johnson will provide the depth behind Cox while being a valuable special teams contributor. The depth at the safety positions are provided by senior David Houff (strong) and junior Michael Alvarado (free). Houff has great explosion (40-plus inch vertical, 530-pound squat), while Alvarado brings a physical style of play to the field.

SPECIAL TEAMS

With the exception of graduated short snapper Brent Cochran, the Tribe returns all of its key specialists from a season ago. Junior Brian Pate was solid in his first season as the place-kicker, as he converted 40 of his 41 conversion attempts and was true on nine of his 16 placement kicks. He had a solid spring and worked on improving his strength and accuracy and ended the camp converting better than 80 percent of his attempts. Sophomore David Miller returns as the squad's punter, after averaging 35.1 yds/attempt over 43 attempts in 2007. Gradual improvement is expected as he continues to gain confidence. He averaged better than 40 yards per attempt during team situations this spring.

Either Chase Hill or Eric O'Brien will handle snapping duties, while R.J. Archer returns as the top holder on placement kicks.

The team has plenty of options where the return specialists are concerned, with David Caldwell being the most experienced kick returner (36 career returns for 851 yards, an average of 23.6 yds/att.) and Archer was the primary deep player on punts. Terrell Wells, Tommy Schonder and DeBrian Holmes are among the candidates for duty on the kick returns, while Elliot Mack, Wells and Derek Cox could also see some action as punt returners.
