World. The Senate voted on Tuesday to extend most favored nation trade status to China. The 59 to 39 vote approved a measure with several conditions, including provisions for positive steps in the areas of human rights, trade, and nuclear weapons sales. The House approved the measure last year 409 to 21. President Bush is expected to veto the measure, claiming that the added conditions will weaken diplomacy attempts and slow reform in China. The measure, with provisions, does not have sufficient support to override his veto.

Secretary of State James Baker has threatened Israel with cancellation of $10 billion in loan guarantees if it continues to have Jewish settlements in the Occupied Territories, the Washington Post reported. The U.S. is Israel's primary financial sponsor, and this week's actions are the strongest against the state since President Dwight Eisenhower threatened force during the Suez Crisis in 1956. Israel supporters in this country have said that it is very unlikely that the administration will make compromises.

Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori announced this week that he considers President Bush's drug policies which affect Peru a failure. The announcement threatened prospects of a new Latin American drug summit. The Peruvian leader claimed that insufficient financial support for Peru and civil rights violations by Drug Enforcement Administration officials have highlighted the administration effort to curb production of cocaine. Bush remained hopeful that the summit would lead to success in the drug war.

The XVI Winter Games in Albertville, France closed this week. The U.S., with 11 medals, had its most successful count since the 1980 games at Lake Placid, the Washington Post reported. Speed skater Bonnie Blair won two gold medals and became the first American woman to repeat victory in consecutive Olympics.

Nation—The Supreme Court announced on Wednesday that students who suffer sexual harassment can sue school systems for monetary damages. The expanded protection will also affect discrimination cases concerning race and disability, the Washington Post reported. Justice Byron White, writing for the majority, said that prospects for monetary damages necessarily follows right to sue in court.

General Motors reported this week that it lost $4.5 billion during 1991. The company announced 12 of the 21 plants will close, eliminating an estimated 16,000 jobs. The loss is the worst in American history, and brings the total loss for GM, Chrysler, and Ford to $7.7 billion, the Washington Post reported. The loss has put new pressure on Congress to reconsider Japanese trade policies.

After winning the South Dakota primary, Presidential candidate Bob Kerrey has moved back into strong contention for the Democratic nomination as the candidates target the south for the Super Tuesday primaries. The Senator from Nebraska challenged Bill Clinton's electability in several statements this week, saying that the governor would be vulnerable against the Republican candidate in November.

All but 27 spaces filled during voluntary bump process

By Ronan Doherty
Flat Hat Asst. Sports Editor

As the campus warms up for the annual ritual of lottery, students who wanted to live off-campus had their chance on Feb. 20 and 21 at voluntary bump. Voluntary bump is a process in which students who have paid their $100 housing deposits may withdraw from lottery with the guarantee of not being bumped should they return to lottery in the future.

This is the third year that voluntary bump has been a part of the housing process and it has been popular right from its inception. This year was no exception, as the required 122 male spots quickly disappeared and only 27 of 136 female spots went unclaimed.

"This year was pretty successful," Assistant Director of Residence Life Jerri Harris said. "We quickly reached the total for the men, which we expected, and we had an unusually high turnout from the women, which is great to see."

Voluntary bump was instituted to reduce the number of people who are randomly bumped from lottery by giving people the option of choosing which year they would like to live off-campus. The number of spots is determined exactly by the number of deposits that ORL receives and the number of spaces in the residence halls that it expects to be filled.

"It is a very calculated thing. We count the spaces exactly to see that each person in lottery will have a space, and try to do what we can with the rest," Harris said.

Students can also choose to live off campus by simply not paying the $100 lottery fee. This, however, does not guarantee that they will not be bumped should they return to lottery. If a student is bumped either voluntarily or by the computer then they are assured of a space in lottery in the future should they return.

"This is the best way to do it, any other system leaves open the possibility that the student could be bumped," Harris said.

In order to make up for the 27 excess female spots in lottery, that number will be randomly bumped from the system when lottery numbers are given out. It is, however, more than likely that these women stand a good chance of being reinstated into lottery if they so choose.

"We can almost assure these women that they will be reinstated by lottery day," Harris said. "Last year by the end of lottery we reinstated at least 190 people, so these people aren't going to have much of a problem."

Voluntary bump has been increasingly successful since it began. In this lottery season, as in the last, there will be no male bumps and the number of female bumps have gotten lower and lower.

"It has been very popular. Hopefully we will eventually get to the point where we don't have to bump anyone, but until then this is the best we can do," Harris said.

There was some initial doubt after deposits had been collected if there would even be a voluntary bump this year. There was concern that the number of deposits would not meet the number of spaces reserved for on-campus spots.

"Our deposits were down for a while and reduced overall from previous years. It's hard to say what the reason is, we had expected numbers to be down last year but I guess that the war and the economy have hit hard this year," Harris said. "With parents leaving jobs and so on it becomes tougher for students to afford to remain in school. It is cheaper to live off-campus if you can get four or five roommates."

they have been congenial and impassioned, but I have had ample opportunity to express my views."

Von Ludwig was encouraged at the results of the survey.

"I was kind of pleased," she said.

"I wasn't being pessimistic about them, and the fact that so many are listening during the semester shows that at least people are trying WCWM."

The figures obtained through the survey about the radio station indicated that 57.5 percent of the respondents had listened to WCWM in the semester during which they were questioned, but only 5.5 percent had listened to the station on that day. Over 93 percent indicated that they were familiar with WCWM, and 54 percent responded that the variety of music on the radio station interested them.

reported that while 68 out of 191 of its discipline cases in fall 1990 were alcohol-related, 84 out of 105 cases in fall 1991 involved alcohol.

"The thing that concerns me is the number of high BACs (Blood Alcohol Content) that we've taken to the Health Center and the hospital," Campus Police Chief Richard McGrew said. He cited two recent incidents in which students registered BAC levels of .45 and .26.

recreational space if [it] is developed properly, operated well, and promoted well," he said.

Edwards also said that one of the issues that had to be researched was whether the facility could be used for other activities.

"It is one of those things that is possible, maybe," he said.

Also at the meeting on Wednesday was the presentation of a Student Association report about student opinions about the proposed facility. The report, based mainly on an informal poll by the SA and the results of weekly meetings of the SA Campus Developmental Concerns committee meetings, stated students' concerns about the location of the center and any environmental effects that might come from construction of a new center, availability for use by those other than the tennis teams, and the source of funds to pay for the upkeep of the facility.

In all, the report recommended that the facility be constructed at the law school site, the same location that the committee is tentatively planning to recommend.

In presenting the report, Andrew Langer, SA executive vice president, said that students have a general interest in the facility.

"Students feel [the facility] would be a benefit for the College but do not feel that it could be built simply because of a benefit to the tennis teams," he said.

According to Ed Allenby, vice president for University Advancement, $3 million has been pledged to the College specifically for the construction of a facility such as this one.

"If the donor makes the gift, this is what it is for," Allenby said Wednesday.

"My feeling is that this individual wants to do something to help William and Mary in the long term," he said. "William and Mary will benefit beyond the Athletic Department" from this relationship, possibly growing and providing more benefits to the College in the future.

An additional $800,000 has been pledged to the College to establish an endowment for the upkeep of the facility. The endowment would pay about one-third of the cost of upkeep, and an additional question the committee faces is how to get the remaining money needed for upkeep.

According to Edwards, three current possibilities include court fees, an increase in student fees, and the selling of memberships to members of the Williamsburg community, or any combination of these.

Although no decision has been made on the funding, "no one is in favor [of increasing student fees]," Edwards said. "[This option] surely will not be recommended."

Edwards said that he hopes to have the final recommendations approved at the committee meeting on March 25.

A Spring Break to Remember

You've worked hard and now it's time to relax and have fun!
Keep these things in mind during your vacation:

- You don't have to be "drunk" to be impaired—even one or two drinks affect your driving skills.
- Drinking, drugs and driving don't mix.
- Take your turn—be a designated driver and get everyone where they are going safely.
- Respect other people's right, and your own—to choose not to drink. There's plenty of fun to be had without alcohol.
- Respect state laws and campus policies.
- Don't let your friends drive impaired—it's one of the fastest ways to end a friendship.
- Wear your seat belt—it's your best protection against an impaired driver.

Play it safe. Because memories are fond only if you have them.

Allowing existence

Intolerance has once again reared its ugly head on campus, this time in the form of the denial of the ability to use a meeting room for CROWN, an organization which espouses naturalistic religious beliefs.

Of course, the petition of the group was denied because a flaw was found in its constitution, but debate within the meeting was far removed from the technical language of constitutional validity.

While there will be no real reason to deny the group its meeting space once it corrects its constitution, in all likelihood the same groups of students will return to the Student Government Operations Committee the next time that CROWN petitions and will again work to prevent them from receiving recognition.

This is an obvious abuse of the forum of the Student Government Operations Committee, which is charged with reviewing objective criteria to decide the validity of a constitution.

While this may seem like harsh language for this particular incident, this is only one example of students attempting to impose their belief systems on others. Why is this necessary? Why is it so difficult for people on this campus to permit others to hold different beliefs?

Many will respond by saying that it is their duty to change the belief systems of others, and many schools of thought espouse this principle.

The abuse of the forum of the Student Government Operations Committee is apparent. Despite the lip service paid to the flaws in the constitution of CROWN, it is clear that a student government decision was made on religious grounds.

The pros and cons of allowing all people who are present to vote are clear. By allowing those present to vote, we allow students to have a say in their government.

Department not biased

To the Editor: Although I sympathize with Andrew Highsmith's desire for an African-American Studies major, I would like to correct a major error in his Feb. 21 letter.

In his criticism of the Classical Studies department, Mr. Highsmith is entirely off-base. He states that "Our Eurocentric curriculum would have us believe that it all [civilization] began in Europe."

what one might think a course would entail, while totally ignoring the merits of the actual course. Judging from the racial diversity of the classrooms, many students do not agree that these courses were developed solely "to satisfy the interests of white students on campus."

In a similar fashion, Mr. Highsmith states that "The ancient Europeans stole nearly all of their knowledge from the ancient black civilizations of Africa."

discover the complex route of cultural development which has brought modern man to his present level. Early Europeans did adapt much of their knowledge from ancient African civilization, but they also made significant advances of their own.

While this college needs a variety of majors (including African-American Studies) to allow students to focus on particular societies, it must also have a specific major to allow for the study of the significant contributions of the ancient Europeans.

Letter contains misunderstandings

To the Editor: This letter is a reply to Mr. Andrew Highsmith's letter in last week's Flat Hat, entitled "Bigotry Pervades Campus," in which he exaggerates that William and Mary "has wholly disregarded the interests of black students."

First, Mr. Highsmith writes that "William and Mary is one of the few universities left that does not offer an African-American studies major." According to the Black American Information Directory: 1990-1991, 138 four-year institutions have an Afro-American studies program.

Mr. Highsmith continues by saying, "millions of dollars are being wasted on a new and useless campus center while William and Mary continues to lag behind other institutions in the areas of social and academic progress."

construction only, so the College cannot use it to create a new major. I believe that before any new study programs are created, the existing departments must have the funds restored which were cut during our continuing budget crisis.

According to Mr. Highsmith, "the College established a Eurocentric curriculum to satisfy the interests of the white students on campus." I assume he is writing about such departments as English and History.

Next, Mr. Highsmith says that "the ancient Europeans stole nearly all of their knowledge from the ancient black civilizations of Africa." This is like saying that Nigerian chemists "stole" their knowledge about atoms from Europe, or that African democratic activists "stole" their ideas from the West.

civilizations" Mr. Highsmith has in mind.

Mr. Highsmith points out that the College has very few black professors, and says we should hire more. He writes "more black professors would provide black students with a positive influence," and "curb the European focus of most history and culture classes" here, and that he "resent[s] it when a white, male professor tells [him] that the roots of American history lie in Great Britain."

It may be a long, long, time before we employ even a dozen more African-American professors, not because we do not want any, but because of scarcity and cost.

BSA article misleading

To the Editor: Your lead article on the Board of Student Affairs last week addressed several important issues. However, I wish to explain the meaning of my remarks. They were not stated in entirety and I feel The Flat Hat's interpretations were inaccurate.

I am quoted as saying (with regard to nominations) that "...There is no room for debate on the issue." This is technically untrue, and my assertion does not relate this technicality.

colleagues, jeopardizing my ability to work with them in the future. Progress is not a sacrifice I wish to make. Though I cannot speak for others, I assume they would be unwilling to take such risks as well. Nevertheless, I do stand by my quote. I do think the nominating process is unfair, and I thank The Flat Hat for including my suggestion.

My second point relates to the first. I felt the article implied that I rejected the nominating process as unfair because I had not been appointed to any committees.

And in my criticism of the process I do not criticize those who were chosen to serve. I believe they are qualified and representative, and am confident in their abilities.

Lastly, The Flat Hat did not give enough emphasis to my position regarding the responsibilities I bear, although I stressed this in my interview. Let me make it clear that I understand those responsibilities.

While I understand The Flat Hat's limitations on space may mean the absence of certain quotes, it should not let those limitations substitute as the thoughts of those interviewed.

Lottery coerces students

To the Editor: On Friday, Feb. 21, shortly before 10am, I stopped by the Office of Residence Life, intending to voluntarily remove myself from the housing lottery. I was told that I had arrived too late; they had already received their desired number of male volunteers and refused to accept any more.

percentage given to African-Americans declined by 23 percent and not all recipients wanted to teach. Therefore, few professorial candidates are black. Because some colleges, such as Duke, Wellesley, and University of California-Berkeley, have programs to hire more black professors, the demand for them is high, and so are the salary offers with which William and Mary must compete.

Lastly, Mr. Highsmith has his facts either incorrect or has twisted them regarding two pictures in the 1991 Colonial Echo. He writes, "Citing a lack of black faces in the yearbook, a picture of a white man [sic] with a monkey face was printed next to a picture of a white man with his face painted black, dressed as 'mammy.'" even though I have made plans to live off campus next year, I could still get bumped from the next lottery. ORL staff members attempted to convince me that being turned away was a good thing because it meant I could live in a dorm next year, but I had already made my decision to get an apartment with a friend.

I find fault with ORL for not making it abundantly clear that only a select number of male and female students would be allowed to sign up for voluntary bump. This policy was probably outlined in the informational lottery newspaper, but I didn't see the newspaper.

The $100 investment, coupled with the risk of being bumped another year if one is not quick enough to sign up for voluntary bump, applies pressure on students to go through with lottery, whether they originally intended to or not.

If all students who make the decision to live off campus were allowed to do so at no expense, perhaps transfer students would not be automatically tossed out at Dillard, and a handful of freshmen would not be spending their first year in Ludwell.

As for myself, I have been screwed. I only hope the Office of Residence Life is finding some productive use for the $100 they extorted from me.

Policy

"It's unrealistic to think officers and students are always going to be happy," Campus Police Chief Richard McGrew said. McGrew added that he tried to find a "happy medium" between the two.

McGrew acknowledged that there were problems at first with enforcing the policy.

"There was some initial friction last fall and the fraternity council brought that forward," he said. "I've not been given any feedback since."

According to Phi Kappa Tau President Scott Lohmann, "We got killed the first three or four weeks. The police pressure was just ridiculous. It was really a lousy situation." According to Lohmann, Phi Tau parties would receive two to three Campus Police visits a night.

"So far [police presence] has kind of tapered off," he said.

Since the development of a party checklist form that officers use to ensure compliance with the policy, friction between the fraternities and Campus Police has lessened.

"Just as the student body has come to realize the implications [of the policy], so have the police," Sigma Chi President Steve Welty said. "They had to get used to it, as did we."

Although his fraternity has gotten used to the policy, Welty did not think it has had any effect on the amount of drinking at the College.

"The thing about the no kegs rule...administrators and especially legislators at the state level see the keg as the symbol of all evil," he said. "The concept of banning kegs from this campus doesn't make any sense. It's more expensive and impractical."

"People are going to drink regardless," Lohmann said. "You might not have a 'kill the keg' mentality, but you still see how many cases you can drink."

The higher cost of cases of beer has meant more two-way functions for Sigma Chi, and, according to Welty, a higher incidence of off-campus student parties.

Welty said, however, that the overall attendance at fraternity parties has remained the same.

According to Gould, enforcing the beergarden rule has been the most difficult part of the policy.

"By having to monitor the beergarden it gives us less time to do things like monitor the bar," he said. "I think restrictive door policies would be more effective."

Gould also said that it was difficult to rope off a drinking area since there is so little floor space in the party area.

"We don't have that much room," he said. "Everybody's packed in on top of each other. It's kind of a problem."

Lohmann said he would like to see Council for Fraternity Affairs officials and Office of Residence Life staff rather than Campus Police conduct the walk-through inspections of parties, calling their presence "intimidating."

As far as adhering to the policy, Lohmann is taking no chances.

"In terms of planning and attention to detail that's obviously gone up," he said. "We definitely realize that we're under the gun."

members earlier in the day, alerting them to CROWN's request.

CROWN, which numbers about 20 at the College, has been meeting sporadically since this fall, said President Jim Wilson, a freshman who says he once considered a career in Baptist ministry but became a Wiccan after an intense examination of his beliefs. The group is not requesting space to practice rituals, but a place "to meet and talk—just as any other club," he said.

Currently, there are at least 15 recognized religious organizations at the College, including Balfour-Hillel, the Campus Crusade for Christ and the Christian Science College Organization. Wilson said there are Wiccan organizations at other college campuses and that he is seeking recognition so that more people can find out about the organization.

"I was disappointed that we weren't given the same opportunities as every other religious group," he said. He said he will revise the group's constitution and resubmit it to the committee as soon as possible.

The religion of Wicca, which dates back to the days of the Celtic druids, contends that people should live in harmony with nature and celebrate goddesses and gods, according to Wilson. Wiccans perform magic in small groups for healing and spiritual development, believe in reincarnation and perform outdoor rituals, he said. Wilson said that Wiccans number about 200,000 nationwide.

The group's symbol is the pentacle and every initiate is regarded as a priest or priestess, according to Wilson. But, he said, the group is not satanic, opposes the use of drugs and does not condone prayer intended to harm others.

"Many of the followers of this religion call themselves witches, but many are now abandoning the name," he said. "In no way do we want to harm anyone—that thought appalls me."

Aaron Martin, a junior SA Council member, was one student who voiced vehement opposition to the group. He pointed to the Wiccans' rejection of the Christian belief in the divinity of Jesus and the Bible as divine revelation as reasons for his opposition.

After the meeting, some who attended said that they were horrified at the way CROWN was treated.

"I was appalled that people would project their ignorance," said sophomore Ron Fuchs. Fuchs said that after listening to Wilson describe his religion, he thought "it sounded nice—especially the worshipping nature part."

"I really do see this as being a little intolerant," said sophomore Terri Feeley, another participant who supported the group. "I'm a little ashamed."

commentary can be gleaned. Aside from his razor pieces, two works of Tavacol's sculpture seem particularly provocative.

The first piece is a steel, yellow support beam that has been sawed down the middle in almost an M shape. Hanging from one arch by a thick chain is a McDonald's sandwich box and a painted chicken nugget.

Tavacol seems to be critical of our consumer-focused society, especially in one very large work of his. A kitchen scene has been portrayed, complete with tile floor and a hanging lamp. A 1950s-style table and chair are there, flecked with spilled Frosted Flakes cereal. A bowl of the flakes is overflowing and a handgun bulges out of it.

Tavacol's works, while not always pleasant to look at, are packed with symbolism and are quite moving. They may not be pretty, but they certainly raise questions as to the nature of our world and society, indeed the nature of existence itself.

forms on the stage. Walls, stairs, and doors followed.

Production difficulties did not cease upon the set's completion. Besides the epic set, the directors and actors also have to deal with "tons of props" and sound effects that must be placed and timed just right or a whole sequence of actions can be thrown off.

During one of the last dress rehearsals, one actor became ensnared in an unruly phone cord only to leave part of it onstage, making it necessary for another actor to kick it out a door in the set.

Ali Davis stars in the play as Dotty Otley, the actress who plays the character of Mrs. Clackett in Nothing On. Lemuel Huntington plays Frederick Fellowes, who plays the character of Philip Brent.

Terence K. McLaughlin plays Selsdon Mowbray, who plays the part of the burglar. Stuart Ranson plays Garry Lejeune, who plays the character of Roger Tramplemain. Lisa Rowland plays Brooke

Ashton, who plays the part of Vicki. Betsy Torresson plays Belinda Blair, who plays the character of Flavia Brent.

Joseph Whitmore plays Lloyd Dallas, the director of Nothing On. Jamie Axtell plays Tim Allgood, the stage manager; and Beth Zins plays Poppy Norton-Taylor, the assistant stage manager.

Noises Off began Thursday and runs through Sunday at PBK. Performances will be held at 8:15pm tonight and tomorrow, and there will be a matinee at 2pm Sunday afternoon.

The SA Film Series exacts its revenge upon the student body this week by presenting The Shining at 7pm followed by The Clockwork Orange at 9:15pm. PASS THE BAKLAVA, S'IL VOUS PLAÎT. From 1 to 6pm in the Campus Center lobby, there will be a Cultural Extravaganza presented, for all to enjoy. No, we're not just talking about a pinata and maybe some bean dip—this is a full-fledged deal. There will be an art show, cultural booths, performances, and even ethnic food. Remember: there's more to life than a cheeseburger and a night of Doogie Howser reruns.

PICKET OR CHAIN-LINK? This weekend, W&M hosts the Mid-Atlantic Fencing Tournament, an annual event in which participants try to solve the growing crime problem by fencing in most of the major cities on the East Coast, so that the rest of us won't have to see what's going on. Of course, if we can't see it, it doesn't exist. Truly an American way to solve a problem.

Wayne's wacky world

Late night favorites make it to big screen

By Patrick Downes

Wayne's World is the crazy new movie featuring "Saturday Night Live" skit characters Wayne Campbell and Garth Algar. Wayne (Mike Myers) and Garth (Dana Carvey) take us into exciting Aurora, Illinois for a ride on the wild side in a full-length feature film.

The big question is whether Myers and Carvey can follow in the movie-making footsteps of previous "SNL" stars Bill Murray, Dan Akroyd, Chevy Chase, Billy Crystal and Eddie Murphy. The answer is yes.

The comical chemistry that Myers and Carvey share hasn't been seen since the early years of the Gene Wilder/Richard Pryor match-up. The satirical Myers plays goof-off Wayne whose carefree attitude allows him the luxury of cracking a joke at every breath. Carvey plays Garth, Wayne's nerdy best friend with the Buddy Holly glasses and a bully stun-gun.

The plot, which is insubstantial at best, winds around the head-banging duo who broadcast a weekly show from Wayne's basement. The late-night stars of public access cable Channel Six are approached by an obviously evil syndicator (Rob Lowe) whose only interest in the show is its money-making potential.

Given $5,000 each for the creative rights to the show, the unsuspecting pair are now shackled into a deal by the sponsor and syndicator. In the process of setting up this new show, the longtime friendship between Wayne and Garth is threatened, and Lowe's character tries to make off with Myers' hot but unlikely girlfriend (Tia Carrere).

Along the way, Wayne is pestered by his accident-prone ex-girlfriend (Lara Flynn Boyle) whom he dumped two months ago. Wayne and Garth eventually save the day in the end with an entertaining variety of endings.

The emphasis of this movie is on the comedy. The film parodies 1970s television and teen culture and then twists it to the extreme. Sent on a diversionary trip to Milwaukee, Wayne and Garth meet Alice Cooper, one of their heavy metal idols, who turns out to be more academic than they would like.

Traveling around Aurora in their Mirthmobile, Wayne and Garth hit the local heavy metal bars and the doughnut shop where they meet the women of their dreams. They respond with a "schwing" (the sound of a sword coming out of its sheath) and thrust their pelvises out.

Although not Oscar material, Wayne's World can make you relax for a couple of hours and enjoy the hilarity of being young and foolish.

The exceptional singing by Carrere, cameoed by Ed O'Neill, Donna Dixon, Cooper, and fellow "SNL" member Chris Farley combine well with the dialogue to make it well worth the price of admission.

The movie is PG-13 and is currently showing at the Carmike 4 Theaters at the Monticello Shopping Center.

Once every 4 years

The 29th: the joys of a longer February

By Kathy R. Cable

Those people who live to get the most they possibly can out of each day and those who wish they just had one more day to catch up on things will be in all their glory this weekend. The chance to have "just one more day" is coming again, as an extra day is tacked on to the end of February.

Since this leap day occurs only once every four years, special attention should be given to the activities concerning it. After asking several College students what they planned to do with their extra day, the results are out. Here's what they had to say.

For something out of the ordinary, junior Angie Bowser has interesting plans for the 29th.

"I'm going to celebrate my half-year birthday," she said. "My birthday is on August 29th, and I kind of missed celebrating it, so my friends are throwing me the half-year party to make up for it."

Then there are those who are trying to catch up on all of the things they haven't gotten done yet. When asked what he was going to be doing on leap day, sophomore John Somers answered, "It's leap year? I'll probably sleep, since it won't count anyway."

Sophomore Eric Junker felt the same way. "I'm going to be catching up on the things I should have been doing for the past four years so I'll be ready for the next four years," he said.

Sleep was also a major concern for the SA president-elect, junior Joe Price. "If I could, I'd sleep the whole day away and pretend there were only 365 like usual," he said.

Of course, leap year can also be a time to do something wild and crazy that you wouldn't normally do at any other time.

"Actually, I've always wanted to do something that would make Police Beat," junior Mark La Croix said. For instance, "Male student apprehended for public drunkenness and indecent exposure after streaking across the Sunken Gardens. His BAC was .6. The charges were later dropped."

On that same zany note, sophomore Kara Joy said, "I'll probably eat food and watch TV all day. But I'll do it naked."

It sounds like everyone pretty much has their Saturday planned out. Whatever you may have plans to do, whether it be sleeping, streaking, or eating, do it with spirit, and do it right. After all, the next chance for washing an extra day won't come again until 1996.

With geese, CCers migrate to mystery

By Ali Davis and Imani Torruella

Q: This morning at Matoaka Amphitheater, I disturbed a group of black and white geese. I'm almost sure that two of them were wearing largish white bibs or maybe cravates. Does this mean they're more important than the other water fowl?

—Kris

Gosh, Kris, you didn't give us any context for this one. When you "disturbed" the geese, what were they doing? Did it look like they were having a brunch? Were they holding little mimosas and sweet rolls? If that's the case, the one with the bibs were probably just waiters, or maybe keynote speakers—it can be difficult to tell the difference.

Assuming, however, that the geese were just engaging in their customary activity (in scientific terms, "milling around eating grubs") the role of the gussied-up geese is less clear.

Intrigued, the Confusion Corner Action Squad ("We Laugh At Death Until Our Milk Shoots Out Of Our Noses") sprang into action. We first called up the general number of the biology department and asked if there were any experiments involving the geese going on and explained the bibs.

The woman we spoke with said "No, there's no ducks supposed to be wearing things," and when we asked for a possible explanation, she said it "sounds like frat guys to me...getting drunk and tying things on the geese."

We thought this unlikely—it is well nigh impossible to catch a goose when in the best of mental states—but any rate, we were comforted that there are no experiments on the geese at William and Mary, although we have heard of several informal ones involving geosling.

We next tried the school of marine science, who in turn referred us to the US Fish and Wildlife Service—the scope was getting bigger and bigger. We have a Features editor looking over our shoulder, so we'd like to state for the record that we CERTAINLY didn't fail yet again to get a name in our calling.

We spoke to Ms. Ann Onymous, who explained that the two geese you saw were just wearing large neckbands, although she was very taken with the idea that they might be wearing little ascots.

The geese are banded at the Patuxent facility of US Fish and Wildlife, and then they are released to go on about their business. The bands are used to track migration, and they are prominent so that if a hunter shoots one of the birds, he will see the band and send it back to Patuxent whence it came.

Ms. Onymous said that the bands are "not very pretty. They're just rubber rings" with identification numbers and the Patuxent address on them.

As for whether or not the geese gain higher status from their bands, we can only speculate. We suspect, however, it's about the same status gain one might get from having Mom write your name on all your underwear for summer camp.

So anyway, Kris, the geese aren't wearing bibs. But the next time they dribble grubs on their chests, they'd better not come bitching to us.

Q: What city is that on the College's coat of arms?

—Just Wondering

Hmmmmmmmm...

We were on the verge of leaping into your question like a pack of propeller-beaned undergrads when a timely thought stayed us from the abyss of the foolhardy.

What exactly is the College seal?

Call us irresponsible, but the first thing on our minds when we get up in the morning is not memorizing what the College seal looks like, just in case we should happen to be on Jeopardy and the winning Double Jeopardy category is "Colleges established in the 17th century."

Brandishing our official Confusion Corner handy-dandy magnifying glass and screwing the little plastic handle more securely into the masking tape holding it together, we scrutinized the emblem. There was indeed a conglomeration of buildings looking suspiciously like...Confusion Corner.

No lie, the thing really does look quite a bit like our very own namesake, the intersection of Jamestown and Richmond Roads. How thoughtful of the ancient powers—that were to consider our own little column in the design.

Speaking of the ancient powers, we consulted the College archives-type people to see what buildings the seal actually portrayed. The archivists, specifically Sharon Garrison, who did the research, and Suzanne Erena, who kindly chatted with us on the phone were much, much more than helpful. These two were a virtual vat of information and willingness to serve.

Get this—we had called once and left a message. When we called back the next day, Ms. Garrison had actually left notes for us about the answer to our question. Notes. Phi Beta Kappa scholars don't take notes as thoroughly as the ones we got from her.

Our hands began to cramp as we scrambled to record everything you wanted to know about the College of William and Mary coat of arms but didn't care enough to ask. She even gave us a reference which we will graciously pass on to you to further search and ponder.

So, Volume 84 of the Virginia Magazine (April 1976) is apparently the place to go about your question. The coat of arms has gone through three design changes. In 1694, 1780, and then today's design in 1930 which was modeled after the original seal. Those crazy 18th century kids, always deviating from the norm.

There was some French stuff that was mentioned, but as we have enough trouble with English grammar, we pretty much ignored it. Not to fear though—one of the ever-enthusiastic fairies of information had the translated version ready for us. So verbatim (drum roll please), THIS IS THE COLLEGE SEAL:

In chief a sun rising o'er the hemisphere proper—stone college building or buildings in silver on a green field, with blue sky above, containing part of a golden sun.

Kind of makes you all teary-eyed and sentimental, doesn't it? Unfortunately it also reveals that the forebears who thought up the seal did not have this column in mind when they designed it. Sigh. Nor were they thinking of the actual intersection of the two roads.

Basically, they were going with the pretty safe assumption that some "stone college building or buildings" would bear a fairly lasting resemblance to the school. Go figure.

Please direct inquiries to the White House. No no, we're kidding. Just wanted to see if you people read this part. You know where you can direct your inquiries.

questions about what it was like to go away to a big-time school."

"They wanted to know what it's like to live in the South," DeMarco said. "I tell them everyone's really nice and Southern hospitality reigns."

There were, of course, the inevitable concerns about social life at William and Mary. Some of DeMarco's audience had gotten it into their heads that the College did not have much of a social scene, but DeMarco clarified it for them.

"Usually I say we have a work hard, play hard ethic," she said. "They hear that myth that we do nothing but study here, but I dispel that. Because it's not true."

O'Quinn gave the social scene a thumbs-up, and said he did not have to sell the Burg's nightlife to Grundy residents. "Probably to some people the Burg would have been a one-horse town, but to the people of Grundy it would be a metropolis."

"They didn't ask much about parties," Thompson said. "I come from a real naive area."

One of the main benefits of the program is that it allows the College to reach students in areas too remote for the admissions office to visit. According to Bruce Chamberlain, the coordinator of the program, most of their travel is in Virginia, because of budget constraints.

This lack of contact is what prompted DeMarco to participate in the program. "There isn't a lot of information on William and Mary on the West Coast," DeMarco said. "I didn't have a representative from the College come talk to me when I was applying so I was almost coming in here blind."

Although Chamberlain calls the student ambassadors "the best advertisement that we have," he instructs College students to give their young seekers of higher education all sides of the story. "You can pick up pretty quickly when somebody's sugar-coating everything they say," he said.

So in the jungle of college admissions, the College's representatives provide an oasis of trustworthy information.

"We tell students to tell the good, the bad, and the indifferent," he said. "And by and large, William and Mary has a good story to tell."

Women fry Rice at home

Gallego, Guenther lead Tribe in win vs Rice University

By Vince Vizachero
Flat Hat Staff Writer

In a dual match last Saturday in Newport News, the women's tennis team overwhelmed Rice University 5-1. By the end of the six singles matches, W&M had clinched the win. With any doubles competition rendered superfluous, the teams played only one set of exhibition doubles.

Karen Gallego, playing as the number one seed, led the Tribe on the court with a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Katie Nederveld. Karen van der Merwe won her match in three sets (6-7, 6-3, 6-3) as did Michelle Mair (6-1, 3-6, 6-3).

Fourth-seeded Katrin Guenther won her 10th straight match. Kassie Siegel won her match at number six as well. Both Guenther and Siegel are freshmen, and both are extremely promising players. Guenther's propensity to serve and volley make her something of a rarity on the W&M squad, which has tended to be dominated by baseliners. Her height, strength, and foot speed combine to make her a potent physical threat.

The Tribe lost only one match. Rice's Rene Capri stopped Deb Herring 6-3, 6-0. Seeded fifth in the match, this was Herring's first competition since recovering from a shoulder injury sustained in Arizona in January.

The victory over Rice came just five days before the team's first-round match against Duke at the National Team Indoor Championships in Madison, Wisconsin. The Tribe faced Duke yesterday, and will compete throughout the week-end.

Brown runs her way to NCAA

By John Mufti

Senior Janice Brown had another strong finish as she ran the fourth fastest college time in the nation in the 5000m this past week-end at George Mason. Although her 16:21 was a Tribe record which qualified her for NCAAs, she had been hoping to run two seconds faster, which would have automatically qualified her for NCAAs. As this time was the fourth fastest of the year, she still qualified.

Junior Sonja Friend won the 1000m with a time of 2:35.5. "I've been sick," Friend said. "This was the first time my strength was back." Next week at ECACs, Friend hopes to qualify for NCAAs in the mile, which means she must run better than 4:50; she hopes to run a 4:45 or 4:46. It will only be her fourth time racing the mile, with her best time at 4:55. Friend's strongest race is the outdoor half-mile.

Sophomore Silica Johnson ran her fastest time this year in the 3000m, 10:15. "I felt really good, as one should feel," Johnson said.

Brown's race was as challenging as she had hoped. She had looked forward to a George Mason runner pushing her, and her prediction rang true.

Overall, the team did well at George Mason. "Two-thirds of our girls ran their fastest times this year," coach Pat Van Rossum said. Many of them now will prepare for ECACs, which will begin next week as the rest of the college leaves for spring break.

Golfers flirt with clean sweep

Women's Golf

The women's golf team won their first competition of the spring season Monday. The Tribe placed first in the Virginia Collegiate Invitational with an overall score of 331, over Radford, with 443, and VCU, with a score of 482. "I was very happy with our performance," head coach Tiffany Maurycy said.

The invitational tournament, held in Williamsburg, is new this year, and was started by Maurycy. Although only two other teams attended this year, Maurycy hopes to eventually have all of the other Virginia teams attend.

W&M swept the top four places. Freshman Lesley Stracks and Vickie Linkous, a junior, took third place with an 83 for the day, and sophomore Leslie Kask placed sophomore Bridget Murphy tied for first place with scores of 80 each. Stracks scored a 40 for the first nine holes and again for the last nine. Murphy had a 43 in the first half of the competition, and her second-round score of 37 was the best of the day.

"I was very proud of our medalists. I didn't expect to do that well this early in the season, and it was raining. They really persevered, though," Maurycy said. "It's great to have such depth, especially in young golfers, because they will be with the team for several more years."

fourth with an 88. Senior Teresa Sapanaro and junior Chris Geer tied for sixth place, each scoring 91.

The spring season includes two competitions over spring break, The Rollins/Peggy Kirk Bell Invitational in Orlando on March 8 through 10, and the Northern Illinois Snowbird Intercollegiate in Tampa March 12 through 13. "These tournaments over break are larger and tougher competitions than we usually enter in the spring," Maurycy said.

Also, the Tribe will compete in the Ford's Colony Invitational at W&M March 27 through 29.

If you're not used to car trouble like this, let's talk.

Seniors and graduate students with good driving records often get stuck paying the same car insurance rates as less experienced drivers. But, if you're the kind of driver who obeys the speed limit and brakes for yellow lights, we think it's high time someone rewarded you. So we've designed a car insurance policy that's everything you deserve.

This select coverage has very reasonable rates—even for students. In fact, in a recent survey, new GEICO policyholders reported an average annual savings of over 15%.

What's more, the 2 million drivers we insure give us high marks for exceptional service. GEICO is the only major insurance company with 24-hour service, seven days a week. You speak directly to a professional every time you phone. And since we're "on call" day

Fearless Picks '92

Smiles can be umbrellas

A lot can be said for spectator sports—just ask the 17 zillion people who spent the past few weeks watching the best athletes in the world fiercely competing against one another in the Winter Olympics. But even more can be said about those sports that are not quite so spectator oriented.

I was among the 1,875 crazy people who ran in the Colonial Half-Marathon last weekend. At least from my perspective it did not seem like there would be much about the race that would be pleasing to the eye—a bunch of soggy (rain, sweat, drool, etc) people stumbling along growing soggier as each of the 13.2 miles wore on. Yet as we made our way through the neighborhoods of Williamsburg, there were a great number of people standing outside their houses in the rain cheering us on. Now, either all of those folks were confused by the name of the race and gathered to see a bunch of 200 year old men in powdered wigs and tights jog by, or they simply wanted to encourage us and offer us some support. I would say probably the latter.

The organizers of the event could learn a lesson from this group of friendly neighbors. I was thoroughly disgusted as the announcer started handing out awards and prizes before all of the runners had crossed the finish line. This is an insult—in effect, the organizers of the race were telling the slower runners that they were not even worth a simple doorprize. Not only did these runners pay the same entry fee as those who finished first, but they did the same amount of work and deserve to be treated with the same amount of respect. Those wonderful folks who were out there in the rain cheering us on knew that—they had their smiles and words of encouragement, not for just the studs, but for people who were pushing their bodies to the limit for the hell of it.

On to Fearless Picks. I was so busy taking the garbage to the dump this week that I was unable to print the latest rankings for our favorite sport this week (yes, I like to think of Fearless Picks as a sport—in sports, a participant is penalized for unsportsmanlike conduct—darn the luck! Credit where it is due, though—Shelley Cunningham bolted back up to number one this week while impressive scores were also turned in by Rob Phillipps and Chris Hearn.

I was going to attempt to get Nat King Cole as this week's guest picker but then I decided it would be wrong for me to exploit a dead guy just for publicity (it's not like he's my father or anything). Instead I scrounged up Laura Flippin, who will soon be remembered (especially after next year) as the best SA president in recent memory. So there she is up there in all of her, uh, glory.

Aerobic

The buddy system seems to work when trying to stick to an exercise regimen. As freshman Katherine

Eddy said of her friends, Andrea Adams and Leighanne Barton, "They drag me here."

"I don't like coming, but I like it afterwards," Eddy said.

Exercise is never easy, but with the Rec Sports aerobics program around, it can be a little more bearable.

As Allison Miller said, "I can concentrate on the choreography and not how much pain I'm in."

Class schedules are available at the Rec Center. Each class costs fifty cents.

Tribe steps up to plate

By Brent Singley

The "play ball" heard today on Carey field opened the W&M baseball team's 1992 regular season against the Cavaliers of UVa. The UVa game is the first in a four-game home stand that will pit the Tribe against Penn State, Norfolk State, and Mary Washington.

The baseball team brings a host of young but experienced players to the field this season. The 1992 infield remains unchanged from a year ago, and the deep pitching staff is full of strong-armed sophomores and juniors. The Tribe is coming off a 1991 season in which the team significantly improved its team batting average and team

ERA, in addition to coming through with the most wins in five years.

As the only seniors on the roster, first baseman Jimmy Adkins, right fielder Mike Sicoli, and pitcher Ed Manning will be expected to provide strong leadership for the youthful squad. The double-play combination of Brian Jenkins and Matt Dumeer, along with third baseman Alex Creighton and Adkins, gives the Tribe a sound infield. The outfield of Sicoli, Mike Ruberti, and Ryan Kuester is a solid combination of strong arms, speed, and power.

The 1992 pitching staff falls under the tutelage of former major league hurler Keith Atherton. Atherton's expertise should help improve the experienced upperclassmen, including starter Dave Backus and relief specialist Dave Fletcher, as well as develop talented freshmen like Mike Ragsdale and Chad Olms, who expect to see action early on.

This season's batteries will be rounded out by three catchers including junior starter Daryl Zaslowski, sophomore Matt Behnke, and freshman Ed Rush.

The Tribe plays at home again on Sunday at 1pm against Penn State, and will see action against Norfolk State and Mary Washington on Tuesday and Thursday respectively.

Fencing finishes at 12-8

By Ellen Maurice

Last Saturday, the varsity fencing team split a tri-meet before an impressive turnout of spectators. The Tribe swordsmen opened the day with a 16-11 victory over Lafayette College, then shared the same score with Haverford College, this time on the losing side.

The team was led by Pete Weiss, who went 5-1 for the day in epee; other standouts were Mike Paci and Joe Snodgrass, who each won 4 bouts. Ben Sokoly led the foil division with a record of 3-2 for the day.

In the first meet of the double-header sabremen Nate Dugan, Paci, and Snodgrass ruthlessly sliced up their opponents, winning all their bouts to give the team an ample margin for victory.

In the later meet against Haverford, the Tribe, led by Weiss, took all three of its epee bouts. Haverford, however, bounced back, dominating the sabre and foil divisions to win the battle.

The Tribe fencers ended their regular season with a 12-8 record. On Sunday, March 1, the swordsmen will reach their seasonal climax when they host sixteen schools at the Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Fencing Championships. Johns Hopkins University and Haverford College are among the top contenders for the title. According to team members, this will be the toughest event of the year.

Prospects this season are good, however. "Our team has no major weaknesses," captain Ted Calabia said. "Group unity is our greatest weapon, this will work strongly in our favor."

W&M has placed second overall in the last two MACFA championships. This year the Tribe hopes to place in the top quarter of the tournament, as there will be more competition than in the past.
