Kingsmill Plantation is Site of Study

Industry and education go hand in hand near here to provide a classroom for a study of pre-historic man in Virginia.

Through the cooperation of Busch Properties, Inc., the Anthropology Department is conducting field studies in an area which was once the site of Kingsmill Plantation and may have been the home of settlers long before English pioneers reached the New World.

The purpose of the present study is to locate areas of significant archaeological value before a large scale building program is undertaken by Busch Properties, Inc.

Theodore R. Reinhart, who is heading the current study, is delighted with the opportunity of studying a relatively untouched area. A farm until recently, the land has only been disturbed near the surface and thus still retains valuable clues to earlier man.

Private lands, explained Mr. Reinhart, are not subject to any pre-building restrictions with regard to archaeological remains and so salvage archaeology such as that being undertaken by the field class is not always possible unless land owners are willing to allow surveys before construction begins.

Mr. Reinhart and the students will be working at the Kingsmill site along the James River until May when they plan to assess the archaeological potential of the area from their findings. Projectile points and stone tools have already been found and the tedious work of sorting, washing and labelling is already underway back at an Anthropology Department laboratory.

Mr. Reinhart meets weekly with his students for a lecture session and makes the trip to Kingsmill each Saturday. He acquired a school bus driver's license recently to be able to transport his class on a College bus. The group meets at the College post office around 9 a.m. and takes lunch to be eaten "on the job."

"It is just about seven miles from the city and it is a beautiful, peaceful area," said Reinhart. "It's an opportunity for us to see what is there and to get students out into the field to participate in ongoing research. We are concerned with who lived in the area during the past 10,000 years, prior to contact with the English settlers. There's a long history of Virginia before that time."

While the College group is concerned with pre-historic sites, the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission has teams working under their archaeological historian, William M. Kelso, uncovering the foundations of what they believe is the 18th century Bray family plantation known as Utopia. The work of the Commission is expected to take five years.

The objective of the work of the Commission is to salvage and record significant archaeological information and artifacts from the historic sites in areas earmarked for construction and to advise and cooperate with Busch Properties, Inc., in integrating the tract's archaeological resources with development plans, and to provide a comprehensive, scholarly archaeological report on their findings.

Theodore Reinhart

Students working with Mr. Reinhart include Deborah Gail Gammill, McLean; Cynthia Darlene Hall, Virginia Beach; David William Hess, Springfield; Laura Leanor Hillock, Montelabano, Mexico; William Thomas Langhorne, Jr., Norfolk; Jennie Dale Plott, Petersburg; Douglas Walker Sanford, Alexandria; Robin Shakshober, Yorktown; Lynda Carole Williams, Richmond; James Stafford Herstein, Norfolk; and Mary Carolyn Beaudry, a student from Newport News, who has done previous archaeological work in the Southwest and in Tidewater Virginia.

Sugar and Slaves

Institute Book Nominated for National Award

Sugar and Slaves, a book published by the Institute of Early American History and Culture, has been nominated for the National Book Award.

Sugar and Slaves, written by Richard S. Dunn, professor of history at the University of Pennsylvania and a member of the Institute Council, was published for the Institute by the University of North Carolina Press in 1972.

The book, winner of the $1,000 Jamestown Foundation award for historic research in May, 1972, is an account of the rise of the planter class in the English West Indies between 1624 and 1713. One of ten nominees for the National Book Award, it is the third book published by the Institute to receive a nomination for that award.

The Creation of the American Republic, 1776-1787, by Gordon S. Wood, also a former Fellow of the Institute and assistant professor of history at the College, was among the final nominees for the National Book Award in 1970.

The Institute, located in Swem Library, is jointly sponsored by the College and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation.

In 1969 White Over Black, by Winthrop D. Jordan, former Fellow of the Institute and assistant professor of history at W&M, won the National Book Award in the categories of history and biography.

The paper has also been accepted for publication in the Review of Regional Studies, Fall 1974.

Leonard Schifrin, chairman, and Samuel Baker, assistant professor, appeared before the Subcommittee on Monopoly (Nelson Committee), Select Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate on March 14. They presented papers on cost-benefit studies relating to the regulation of new prescription drugs by the Food and Drug Administration.

A review of Melton Alonza McLaurin's Paternalism and Protest: Southern Cotton Mill Workers and Organized Labor, 1875-1905, by Clyde Haulman, associate professor, will appear in the next volume of the Florida Historical Quarterly.

Mr. Haulman's reply to a comment on his paper, "A Structural Model of the Canadian Monetary Sector," will be published in the Southern Economic Journal in April.

Originating from a single multilith machine operation in the mailroom of James Blair Hall, the W&M Printing Office today produces between 2,500-3,000 jobs annually and has a staff of four full-time employees.

Productions range from one-page multilith letters to multi-color brochures and small booklets.

The Office was set up in August, 1970, to handle small printing requests of members of the College community, with James N. Chalkley, a printer with 21 years of experience, as supervisor.

The facility is equipped with two off-set multilith presses, an IBM typesetting unit--the MTSR (in-put unit) and the MTST (computer-composer unit), a mimeograph machine, bindery and other small pieces of equipment. Complete cold-type service, as well as art work, is offered, according to Mr. Chalkley. A study is now underway on the feasibility of offering decentralized quick-copy duplicating and enlarging the central printing Office.

A 1951 graduate of Matthew Whaley High School, Mr. Chalkley is married to the former Nancy E. Mitchell of Portsmouth, an employee of Nick's Seafood Pavilion in Yorktown. The Chalkleys have three daughters: Barbara Faye, a sophomore music concentrator at W&M who is an accomplished pianist; Anne, 9; and Susan, 1.

Assistant supervisor Freddie L. Wallace, a 1955 graduate of Bruton Heights High School, came to the College sixteen years ago and has been a member of the printing staff for the past four years. He and his wife, Rosa, an attendant at Eastern State Hospital, are the parents of three children: Aaron, 10; Zelda, 8; and Lisa, 7.

Newcomers to the printing staff are Susan Wilson, clerk-typist and typesetter, a graduate of Hampton High School, and John Harris, multilith pressman, a graduate of James Blair High School.

Student employees are Lorna Shopland, '75, of Richmond, and Willie George Webb, '76, of Skippers.

VEC to Assist June Graduates Seeking Jobs in Va.

Although job prospects for college graduates should be a little better in 1973 than they have been in recent years, Virginia is expected to follow the national trend with fewer students continuing on to graduate schools and instead joining the job search.

For many Virginia graduates, finding a good job will be a competitive and time-consuming effort, according to the Virginia Employment Commission.

To help these young people, the VEC is again offering its College Profiles program which gets the names of recent college graduates before prospective Virginia employers.

Under College Profiles, the VEC publishes a list of recent college graduates seeking work and distributes copies to about 1,000 Virginia employers. Issued monthly in May, June, July and August, the list carries the student's name, home address, college attended, and major and minor courses of study. Employers who are interested in a particular student may either contact him directly or arrange to have the VEC screen applicants and set up interviews.

Employers who would like to receive College Profiles should contact their local VEC office. No charge is made for this or any other VEC service.

WCWM Wins Award

The FM radio station at the College, WCWM, has been selected for a programming prize in the ninth annual Major Armstrong Awards given by Columbia University for excellence and originality in FM broadcasting.

WCWM will receive a merit certificate for being runnerup in the news category with the program, "Politics '72," a broadcast on election night, 1972, that lasted five and a half hours with the help of 33 staffers, live coverage from two remote crews, and various student and faculty commentators.

The judges said it showed "what can be done through a grand collective effort, fueled with zeal, imagination and energy."

In all, eight stations received merit certificates and another eight stations shared $4,000 in Armstrong Awards prize money for finishing first in their categories.

OFFICIAL MEMORANDA

Board Announces Tuition Hike

Date: March 23, 1973

To: The College Community

Subject: Increases in Charges for 1973-74

The Board of Visitors today approved an increase of $75 per semester in tuition for out-of-state students and $25 for in-state tuition per semester for the 1973-74 session. This action increases out-of-state tuition and general fee for 1973-74 from its present $888 to $963 per semester, and in-state tuition and general fee from $353 to $378 per semester.

Room rents for the 1973-74 session were increased an average of 15 percent, from the present range of $180 to $294 per semester to a range of $210 to $325. No increases were made in the cost of board.

In addition, the Board increased the per-semester-hour tuition cost for undergraduate part-time students from the present rate of $24 to $26, and for part-time graduate and law students from $28 to $30. The undergraduate student application fee was increased from $15 to $20, beginning with the class entering in 1974.

The increases in tuition for the 1973-74 session are necessary in order for the College to maintain and improve the calibre and scope of present educational programs.

As we have announced previously, the College will embark on an extensive renovation program of the residence halls in June of this year. Over the next two years five dormitories, in addition to Barrett Hall which was renovated during the past summer, will be renovated. As a part of the dormitory improvement program to raise the living conditions of all students, the Board established a $75 refundable damage deposit for students residing in the living halls.

Laws Changing in Favor of Consumer

An increasing number of federal and state laws are being changed in favor of the individual consumer, according to a visiting law professor at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. Richard Aaron, on semester leave from the University of Utah, is teaching a course in consumer protection. He feels that American society is at the starting point of the consumer era.

State and federal governments are now intervening to provide legislation to insure the safety and reliability of consumer products. "The 'law-jam' has been broken," attests Aaron. One may trace over the past sixty or seventy years the rise in the number of incidents where courts have made decisions favoring the individual consumer," he noted.

Aaron's views on consumer protection stem from his theory that our society, based upon a system of contracts, is changing. "We are leaving a contractual society because contracts won't solve problems," he observed.

In a large, complex, industrial society the problems of the individual often remain unsolved, Aaron maintains. "'Let the buyer beware' has been the policy in our society. Now the law is ignoring the plight of the consumer no longer. Until recently the buyer simply has not been equipped to know the total financing terms of the goods he is purchasing; they have not been made explicit in the past. The Federal Consumer Credit Protection Act, or the Truth in Lending Act, passed recently, states that one must disclose the total financing terms to the buyer," he said.

Changes in the law by United States Supreme Court decisions have also come about recently, he noted. These decisions prohibit pre-judgment garnishment or repossession by legal process without first giving the defendant notice and an opportunity to be heard in court, Aaron observed.

"What about the ability of the consumer to defend himself when he feels that he has been wronged? For the small kinds of claims that occur most often, hiring a lawyer is too costly," he pointed out.

If our system is to be resolved through court means, that is, through the legal process, protection for the individual must be assured, he emphasized. Consumer class action suits have proved an excellent solution to the consumer who cannot afford the expense of a lawyer. Class action suits occur when a large number of persons who are dissatisfied with a particular product or service, band together, pool their resources, hire a lawyer, and take their case to court. This proves a powerful weapon against large manufacturers and distributors and is becoming increasingly prevalent in our society, he noted.

Aaron graduated from Harvard College and received his J.D. from the University of Wisconsin Law School in 1962. He was engaged in private law practice from 1962-67 before joining the law faculty at the University of Utah.
