ISIS Offers New Approach To High School Science Courses

Science is not the favorite subject of every student in high school, but its popularity may be on the upswing in 1975.

A professor of education is helping mold a new approach to high school science courses designed especially for students who find science courses irrelevant to their particular interests and goals.

The Individualized Science Instructional System (ISIS), currently under field testing for general distribution by September, is designed to supplement or replace traditional methods and materials by offering more relevant, individualized and flexible science programs to the vast majority of students in grades nine through 12.

Ronald N. Giese, assistant professor of education and an author-consultant to ISIS, explains that ISIS is aimed at non-science oriented students.

"Innovative science-teaching programs of the 1960's," said Giese, "often focused on the more theoretical aspects of science.

"For students who have the interest and ability to handle abstract and often mathematical concepts and models, these programs are excellent. However, many students' careers, interests, and abilities lie in areas other than science. These students need and deserve relevant science courses," he added.

Minicourses Used

ISIS is designed to meet this need through a series of up-to-date "minicourses," each centering on a topic of high interest to some high school students. Printed in individual booklet form, the minicourses use activities, plain language, and many graphic illustrations to teach a skill or present a topic.

In the minicourse "Packaging Passengers," the emphasis is on highway safety, both for passengers and drivers. The introduction includes a further note of practicality -- "what you get out of this minicourse might someday save your life."

Appeal to student interests

Other minicourses in the first set being developed include "Getting Enough Oxygen" and "The Generation Link." Giese explained that though high school students may not be interested in respiration or genetics as such, they are often interested in aspects of these fields that they can relate to -- skin and scuba diving and birth defects. By offering limited features of a general topic in each minicourse, the developers of ISIS hope to provide workable yet engaging programs of study that appeal to a wide variety of students.

Giese also emphasizes that ISIS requires only materials found in most high school labs, and so will incur little or no additional cost other than that of the booklets themselves.

The first minicourses are now being field-tested in many centers around the country. The ISIS staff anticipates that 15 minicourses will be available for commercial distribution by September 1975, and approximately 100 by 1980.

Security Office Has New Image

It takes a real professional to approach a situation in a professional way. That's Harvey Gunson's "golden rule" in regard to the College's revitalized campus police force.

"I'm really enthusiastic about what we're doing and how we're going about doing it," said Gunson one year after taking the job as William and Mary's first director of safety and security.

Part of Gunson's enthusiasm and confidence stems from the coordinated staff of trained officers he's assembled during the last year. Eight new officers have joined the force since last July, bringing an increased vitality and youth to a staff that was already aware of "the special sensitivities" of policing a college campus.

Additions to force

One of the key newcomers is Lt. Doug Ratcliffe, who left the Williamsburg City Police force to take command of field operations at the College. "Doug has done a fabulous job for us," said Gunson, who has now been able to spend less time in the field and more time investigating new procedures and training programs.

Other new officers bringing the benefits of law enforcement experience include Peter DeMallie, a former state trooper in Delaware, Sgt. Harry Frizzell, a former member of the Newport News Police Department, and Dick Cumbee, another former officer for the City of Williamsburg.

Three more newcomers received training in the military. Allen Leach formerly worked for the Air Force Police; Jack Cromer is a 13-year veteran of the Army, and Sandi Cote is a former member of the Women's Army Corps. Mike Willders came to the campus police force from a local private security operation.

Several of the new officers are particularly suited to work with the unique problems of college students. Officers Cote, Willders and Frizzell are presently part-time students at Thomas Nelson Community College, while Cumbee is a history major at William and Mary.

New Image

It's no wonder that the blending of enthusiasm from newcomers with the on-campus experience of Chief James Pennell and his veteran staff has given the force a new image on campus.

Gunson feels he can now justify designating his men as a full-fledged police force rather than a security force. As Gunson explained, each of his officers is "trained, armed and well-disciplined, and when he's called, he can provide the services required to protect the life and property of the people in his jurisdiction."

The department is now entirely self-contained, with facilities to fingerprint and to photograph lawbreakers immediately following their arrests. The campus police recently became a part of the state's overall law enforcement scheme when it joined the Virginia Uniform Crime Reporting System.

Statistics in periodic reports published by the Uniform Crime Reporting System are used to determine whether specific crime rates are increasing or decreasing. Police chiefs can use the report to compare the crime rate in their area to the rate in localities throughout the state.

By joining the state's Uniform Crime Reporting System, the William and Mary police force has demonstrated its determination to bring all the facts about campus crime out into the open. It's also part of Gunson's attempt to communicate and to exchange ideas with police organizations throughout the state.

"Involved"

"We've really gotten involved," said Gunson. "We're now invited to almost every training program and seminar around." Individual officers participate in what Gunson calls "continuous training." By sending officers to seminars concerning arson, rape, bomb threats and drug abuse, Gunson has developed a staff well-versed in problems peculiar to campus communities.

The seminars and training courses are supplemented by Gunson's own training bulletins and continuous on-the-job supervision.

Gunson admits that it wasn't an easy task to change the image of the campus police force to one the students, faculty and administration can point to with pride. The security director, however, takes little credit for the improvement, saying that "Whatever we've achieved is a result of our people having done their jobs."

Gunson says one of the force's biggest supporters has been President Graves, who has done a lot to "set the climate" for the increased effectiveness of the force. "He hasn't once told us to slow down or hold back," said Gunson. He's really cooperated with this department all the way."

Coleman Illustrates Wilde Book

Henry Coleman, associate professor of fine arts, recently completed a series of drawings featuring whimsical rockets and life-like fireworks for a special edition of an Oscar Wilde short story.

Coleman was asked to provide the illustrations for one of Wilde's most sensitive short stories, The Remarkable Rocket. With pen and ink, he painted a visual picture of Wilde's vivid children's story that has been critically acclaimed as a meaningful commentary on life in the modern world.

"The story really has to do with fireworks," explained Coleman. "But these fireworks take on characteristics and personalities very much like people walking around today. Very pompous, very full of themselves, and yet not really bad."

The 21-page edition, which was printed in India on hand-crafted paper, is destined to become a collector's item. It is one of a series of special editions published by William and Mary alumna Martha Graham Johnston, '66.

Coleman says that although The Remarkable Rocket is "supposedly for children," it can actually be enjoyed on several different levels.

The approximately 1,500 new editions of The Remarkable Rocket will be advertised nationally and sold in selected bookstores across the nation.

Donations Made To Music Dept.

Fewer music students will have to stand in line this year to use practice pianos.

Frank Lendrim, acting chairman of the music department, reported that two grand pianos in excellent condition were recently donated to the department. The donations, he said, have somewhat alleviated the music department's pressing need for equipment during a time of an extremely tight College budget.

Roy R. Charles of Norfolk, a 1932 graduate of the College, donated a Steinway baby grand piano. Mr. Charles is a member of the President's Council, the Endowment Association, and the Business School Sponsors Board.

A Vose parlor grand piano was donated by William R. Kniegge, a resident of Williamsburg.

The gifts of the grand pianos closely followed a donation made by Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Renick which enabled the women of both the choir and the chorus to have new concert attire for the annual Christmas program.

The drive for more funds for additional and replacement equipment began last spring when parents of music students donated over $4,000. Music students added about $600 to the fund in December when the Southern Pancake House assisted the students in sponsoring a fund-raising pancake dinner.

will direct a tour of the College greenhouse, and the Virginia Institute of Marine Science faculty will teach a course on the Virginia shoreline and wetlands.

Unit To Locate In Wren Basement

William and Mary has approved the use by the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission of space in the Wren Building basement, according to Vice President for Academic Affairs George R. Healy.

The Wren Building kitchen, located under the Great Hall, will be used for archaeological office space, while adjacent rooms in the northeast corner of the basement will provide an exhibit area.

The Commission and the College are cooperating in developing plans for a center for archaeological research at the College, which was authorized by the General Assembly and the Board of Visitors in 1966.

Vice President Healy noted that the space allotment would be made beginning with the second semester of the 1974-75 academic year and would be subject to review after 1974-75, in the light of conditions at that time.

President Issues Planning Memo

Since Mr. Lowance's resignation last September as Executive Vice President, Professor Martin A. Garrett has served as Acting Chairman of the Long-Range Planning Committee, pending the appointment of a Vice President for Planning and Administrative Services. In December we decided, in view of the continuing budget cuts required by the Governor's Office, not to fill the Vice President's position at this time. Since then we have been having discussions on how best to organize the Long-Range Planning Committee on a reasonably permanent basis, so that it may continue on with its important and critical task.

Following these consultations we have decided to reorganize the Committee as follows:

The seven faculty members serving on the committee will continue, four from Arts and Sciences, one each from Business Administration, Education and Law (with Professor Liddell replacing Colin Park, Professor of Business Administration, at the latter's request).

The three vice presidents serving on the Committee will continue in an active capacity, but as non-voting members, in view of the fact that the Committee is advisory to the central administration.

The two students serving on the Committee will continue.

The five academic deans who are responsible for faculties or schools—Edwards, Hargis, Quittmeyer, Whyte, Yankovich—will be added to the Committee in view of the important inputs that these individuals should have to the discussions.

Also added to the Committee will be the Librarian of the College, Mr. William C. Pollard, in view of his responsibilities which cut across the boundaries of the several faculties and schools.

Beginning at the end of this month Professor Garrett, who has served with skill and dedication as acting Chairman of the Committee since Mr. Lowance's resignation, will become Chairman of the Department of Economics, succeeding Professor Leonard G. Schiffrin who will be preparing to be on leave of absence next academic year. In view of these new and substantial responsibilities for Professor Garrett, he will step down at this time as Chairman of the Long-Range Planning Committee, although fortunately he has agreed to remain on the Committee.

Dr. Jack Edwards, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, will assume the chairmanship of the Long-Range Planning Committee, under this reorganization, effective immediately. This new responsibility will add substantially to his administrative burdens, but I am very pleased he has agreed to take on this assignment in view of the central role he plays in the College's educational mission. Associate Dean David E. Kranbuehl will also serve as a member of the Committee.

In view of the large size of the Committee, Dean Edwards plans to use sub-committees extensively, drawing in other faculty members and administrative officers as appropriate. The Committee will focus its full attention on a few major items of critical importance to the College in its long-range planning. Its emphasis will be on overall analysis and recommendations rather than on day to day issues or decisions.

The reorganization of the Long-Range Planning Committee, as outlined above, is effective immediately. I am very grateful to Dean Edwards and his colleagues for continuing on in this major responsibility that has been carried on so ably by Professor Garrett.

The membership of the newly constituted Long-Range Planning Committee is as follows:

Richard M. Brown, Professor of History; William J. Carter, Vice President for Business Affairs (non voting); Thomas A. Collins, Professor of Law; Margaret W. Freeman, Assistant Professor of English; Martin A. Garrett, Professor of Economics; William J. Hargis, Jr., Dean of the School of Marine Science; George R. Healy, Vice President for Academic Affairs (non voting); Warren P. Heemann, Vice President for College Development (non voting); Deborah A. Kelly, Sophomore Student; James Carl Klage, Junior Student; William W. Liddell, Associate Professor of Business Administration; William C. Pollard, Librarian; Charles L. Quittmeyer, Dean of the School of Business Administration; Hans C. Von Baeyer, Associate Professor of Physics; Ronald C. Wheeler, Assistant Professor of Education; James P. Whyte, Jr., Dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law; James M. Yankovich, Dean of the School of Education; Jack D. Edwards, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, Chairman.
