Law Students Compete, Place Third

James Dickinson of Williamsburg, and James Geddis of Wilmington, Del., both students at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, placed third in the Jessup International Moot Court Regional Competition held in Charlottesville, March

Dickinson, a second year law student, tied for first place with speakers from Washington and Lee and George Washington University as best oralist in a field of nine schools. Geddis is a third year law student at Marshall-Wythe.

The Philip C. Jessup International Moot Court Competition, now in its 15th year, provides students with an opportunity to argue important and timely issues of international law. This year's competiton dealt with a dispute over the pollution of an international boundary water. The competition includes the writing of briefs and oral arguments.

Georgetown placed first in overall competition and will go on to compete in the semi-finals to be held in Washington in April. Other schools participating in the moot court were American University, Dickinson School of Law, George Washington University, University of Virginia, University of West Virginia, University of Maryland, and Washington and Lee School of resident and graduate of the. College recently completed a project to assemble a documentary history of Virginia in the 17th century

Warren M. Billings '62, who is currently a history professor at the University of New Orleans, has been working for over five years to collect nearly 200 documents in a book entitled "The Old Dominion in the Seventeenth Century." It was recently published in hard cover and paperback editions by the Institute of Early American History and Culture in conjunction with the University of North Carolina Press. The Institute is jointly sponsored by the College and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation.

The book will serve as source material for the history teacher, the professional historian, and above all the student. Yet Billings said that he "hopes it has something of a wider audience," serving the layman interested both in the history of Virginia and the complex pursuits of a professional historian.

Court records pose problems

Finding source materials relevant to the century was a difficult project, particularly because so many government and court records were destroyed when Richmond was burned in 1865. Billings was forced to use county court records for many of his sources but admits that the court records have several drawbacks, including the unique style of 17th century handwriting.

The Social Security representative is at the Williamsburg-James City County Court House on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. to answer questions and assist in filling out forms.

VSRS Beneficiary

It is extremely important that each member of the Virginia Supplemental Retirement System keep up-to-date the designation of their beneficiary. The beneficiary is the person, or persons, to whom the contributions and interest credited to the member's account, or other benefits in the Retirement System, are to be paid in the event of the member's death. Form VSRS-14, Designation of Beneficiary, is used for changing the designation of beneficiary. This form will also be used to distribute the proceeds from a member's Group Life Insurance Policy, unless a different beneficiary for only the Group Life Insurance is desired. In this case, VSRS Form 28, Designation of Group Insurance Beneficiary, is used. Both of the VSRS forms, and assistance in their completion, are available in the College Personnel Office.

Memo from the Vice President for Business Affairs

State Car Operators Reminded Not To Misuse The Privilege

The College has received a copy of a memorandum sent to "Heads of State Agencies, Departments, and Institutions" by Mr. Douglas B. Fugate in his capacity as Chairman of the Central Garage Car Pool Committee. In his message, Mr. Fugate stresses the need for special emphasis to be placed on the "proper utilization and operation of state vehicles." He reminds all operators of official vehicles of "the seriousness of vehicle misuse, the need for authorized car pooling, and a concentrated effort to reduce their travel requirements.'

We endorse Mr. Fugate's admonitions wholeheartedly and we sincerely trust that the operators of College vehicles will cooperate in every way possible in order to prevent any accusations of misuse of such vehicles. In this connection, we call to your attention the regulation which limits the use of state-owned vehicles to official state business. Expressed another way, state vehicles are not for

With your support and cooperation we are confident that the College of William and Mary will continue the impressive record compiled to date with regard to the proper use of its vehicles.

Business Students Were' Corporation Executives For Six Week Period

Although the Wall Street Journal staff may not be aware of it, the Colonial Calculator and Clock Corporation recently folded after six weeks of operation.

The "corporation" consisted of several William and Mary undergraduate business students who were participating in a business management game sponsored annually by Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.

The 25 schools competing were divided into four industry groupings. William and Mary's team was assigned to the digital clock and mini-calculator industry division, along with teams from five other southern schools.

During the six weeks of competition the College team made periodic marketing, production and financing decisions in response to the simulated economic ups and downs of the industry furnished by Emory's computer. The team's decisions were programmed into Emory's computer, along with those of the five other schools, and the relative success of each team's decisions was then calculated.

At the conclusion of the game play, each team travelled to Atlanta for the final round of competition, which included an oral presentation justifying the company's decisions and an annual report.

"Unfortunately, communication errors early in the game relegated the College's team to an 'also-ran' status," reported Jesse S. Tarleton, assistant professor of business administration and advisor to the group. "Nonetheless," Tarleton added, "the School of Business Administration, which sponsors the team, considers this an extremely valuable learning experience for the students."

Marilyn Miller, senior math major from Thornwood, N.Y., served as president of the firm. Other members of the team included Neil B. Martin '76, Virginia Beach, Vice President--Sales; B. Watkins Leigh '76, Norfolk, and Stephen D. Hancock '75, Seattle, Wash., Vice Presidents for Production; Bernard D. Marren '75, White Plains, N.Y., Vice President--Finance; and James E. Rehlaender '75, Switzerland, Corporate Counsel.

Recent Promotions Announced

The Personnel Office has received approval from the State for several promotions and a reallocation.

whole area of how a new society grew up and flourished in a new world environment." Billings has tracked down documents that comment on virtually every facet of 17th century life, from the growth of the tobacco industry to the plight of indentured servents and slaves. A final chapter, entitled "Everyday Life," describes the dress, homes, eating habits, and social life of the colonists.

Also included in the book are several drawings, some of which were prepared by the author's father, H. Warren Billings, a retired architect now living in Richmond.
