'Our Future in the Cosmos' Series

Udall Lecture Draws Large Audience

The second series of "Our Future in the Cosmos" lectures got off to a fine start last week with over 1,000 turning out for the initial lecture by former Secretary of the Interior, Stewart L. Udall.

It was a hot night and Hampton High School auditorium was not air-conditioned, but the setting fitted perfectly what Udall had to say. He told his audience that the energy crisis was going to make some changes in the future life style of Americans. People, he predicted, would have to curtail some of the energy consuming luxuries - like air conditioning - that they had taken for granted in the past.

Udall also called for a comprehensive national policy on energy and a research effort larger than that assembled for space exploration, directed toward the problems of energy resources and production.

George R. Healy, vice president for academic affairs, introduced Udall. For Healy it was an encore presentation. Provost at Bates College before coming to William and Mary, Healy wrote the citation for Udall when he received an honorary doctor of law degree from Bates.

The next speaker in the series is William E. Cooper, an ecologist from Michigan State University who will speak Nov. 10 on economic and world food problems.

The lecture series is sponsored jointly by the College and the NASA Langley Research Center and arranged by the College's Office of Special Programs.

Witchcraft Is Next Forum Topic

"Witchcraft and the Social History of Renaissance Europe" is the topic for the Sept. 17 Project Plus Forum at 7:30 p.m. in Millington Auditorium.

the University of Virginia, and author of the award-winning book "Witch-Hunting in Southwestern Germany, 1562-1684: the Social and Intellectual Foundations" (1972), will lecture.

Concert Series Subscriptions

Subscriptions for the William and Mary Concert Series are selling well.

Warren J. Green, director, reports less than 100 season tickets remain for the 1975-76 season, which opens Oct. 16 with the Guarneri String Quartet and will include performances by the Richmond Symphony and the Winnipeg Ballet.

Students who subscribed by mail this summer and for whom the Series office has no current address should pick up their tickets at the Campus Center. These subscribers may receive their tickets by mail by providing Mr. Green with their current campus address.

Revolution Is Conference Focus

Social studies teachers from throughout Virginia and neighboring states have been invited to an unusual one-day Bicentennial conference/workshop at the College Oct. 4 to examine "Revolution in American History" and to learn about the variety of new teaching materials available to cover it.

The program is sponsored by the School of Education and Department of History, and partly funded through a grant for Bicentennial activities made to William and Mary by a publishing company.

The social studies teachers, in grades seven through 12, will be shown ways to impress on their students the full impact of the American Revolution. The use of historic sites and archeological artifacts, as well as crafts and original documents, will be emphasized in illustrating the teaching process. Williamsburg, and William and Mary, were important participants in the Revolution.

The program takes its viewpoint from Thomas Jefferson, who wrote in 1787 that "the tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time, with the blood of patriots and tyrants. It is its natural manure."

William E. Garland, Jr., assistant professor of education, is organizer of the conference/workshop in association with Edward P. Crapol, associate professor of history.

The program begins at 9 a.m. with a presentation by Crapol on the nature of the concept "revolution" and its application to American life through time.

Workshops include one on the use of picture cards to conceptualize about revolution, led by Jeanne Zeidler, education director of the Hampton Association for the Arts and Humanities; and another on the use of moral dilemmas to teach about revolution, developed by Laura Alt and Elise Emanuel, both Williamsburg-James City social studies teachers.

A third workshop, using an historic site to teach about the American Revolution, will be held by Peter V. Sterling, director of group visits and educational programs for the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation. Another topic is the use of primary source documents in teaching, developed by Crapol.

Working with crafts to teach about life in Revolutionary America will be discussed by Alice W. Sterling, a member of the Old Dominion University faculty. Garland will follow with a presentation on the use of archeological artifacts in teaching.

The final workshop will be developed by Sarah Hughes, a demographic historian, formerly on the faculty at Hampton Institute, on using demographic sources to teach about women and black people of the Revolutionary era.

President and Mrs. Thomas A. Graves, Jr.
cordially invite Sophomores and Juniors to an Open House in their honor on Sunday, the twenty-first of September from Four until Six o'clock at the President's House

Homecoming Float Entries Deadline Is Approaching

Campus interest groups, student organizations and residence halls still have an opportunity to participate in the 1975 William and Mary Homecoming Parade. # Faculty Members To Participate In Conference on Child, Family

William and Mary will be well represented at the forthcoming conference on "The Child in the Family" to be held in Norfolk Sept. 23-24 by the Tidewater Assembly on Family Life, with the co-sponsorship of the Eastern Virginia Medical School and the Junior League of Norfolk-Virginia Beach.

One of the major conference planners is Jean C. Bruce, director of the Tidewater Assembly on Family Life. Mrs. Bruce is an alumna, class of '49, and a member of the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni. Her husband, John Bruce, Jr., is president of the Norfolk Alumni Chapter for William and Mary.

Anthropologist Margaret Mead will give the keynote address for the conference, which will explore the question of whether there has been a change in the last twenty years in the way children are brought to ethical maturity, either as a result of an environment made by technological advances or changes in child rearing practices.

The Norfolk based Assembly was awarded a grant for the conference this spring from the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy.

James C. Yankovich, dean of the School of Education, will be a leader for a workshop on the influence of the public school experience on the ethical development of the child.

Ruth Mulliken, professor of education who joined the William and Mary faculty this fall from Christopher Newport College, will be one of the leaders of a workshop on the effects of teenage childbearing on the ethical development of the child and his parents.

Thomas Finn, chairman of the department of religion, will lead a workshop concerning the effects on the ethical development of the child by the movement of women away from child bearing and into careers as a means of personal fulfillment.

Alan Fuchs, professor of philosophy, will be a workshop leader on the role of the judicial system as a source of ethical authority in the lives of young people.

Fuchs has been appointed a Fellow in the National Humanities Institute at Yale University for the 1976-77 academic year. He spent the summer at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor as recipient of a summer fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Paledes Scholarship Awarded

David B. Rock of Chester has been selected as the first recipient of the Stephen P. Paledes Scholarship.

A junior, Rock is majoring in both fine arts and history and has a strong interest in music. He is a member of Delta Omicron honorary music fraternity, plays piano for the James River Baptist Church, and has sung with the College choir since his freshman year.

Last year Rock performed in the Sinfonicon Opera Company's production of "The Gondoliers," and this year he is a member of the company's "Ruddigore" cast.

The scholarship was established last spring by Mrs. Paledes for students who are concentrating in, or who show a particular interest in, music.

Paledes, who died December 28, had been a member of the College's music department faculty since 1954. He directed the "Common Glory" orchestra and was later musical director of the "Glory" from 1968 to 1973.

Pianist Fritz Jahoda will open the 1975-76 Sunday Series at William and Mary with a recital featuring works by Chopin, Beethoven and Gideon. His performance begins at 4 p.m. Sept. 21 in the Campus Center Ballroom. There is no admission charge.

Senior Citizen Participation In W&M Programs Increases

Enrollment of senior citizens at William and Mary under the fee-waiver privileges granted by the 1974 Virginia General Assembly has increased substantially this year over last.

Some 49 senior citizens, 65 or older, have already enrolled for non-credit courses offered this fall by the College's Office of Special Programs. Projections are that this figure will rise to over 100 when registrations are complete. Enrollment last year was 27 for the fall semester, 28 for the spring semester.

Carson Barnes, director of Special Programs, projects an overall senior citizen enrollment for the fall semester of between 125-150. Because courses offered from this office have a variety of registration dates, no accurate count will be available for several weeks.

To boost attendance, Barnes has been working with the Peninsula Agency on Aging at Patrick Henry Hospital to get information on educational opportunities open to the senior citizens of the area.

Barnes said that the bulletin of the Agency has carried a listing of non-credit courses that would be of particular interest to senior citizens, including estate planning, consumer economics, and home safety and personal security.

He reports that senior citizens have enrolled in courses in physical fitness, yoga, CPA examination preparation, Ikebana, writing for fun and profit, astronomy, psychology and English grammar.

The Bicentennial Colonial Series offered by the Special Programs office is particularly popular with senior citizens, said Barnes. Courses within this series include basic field archaeology, Virginia Indians, Early Homes and Buildings in Charles City County, Colonial Virginia Land Grants and Landowners, Archaeology and Historical Sites, Colonial and Revolutionary Virginia History, Colonial Gardens, and Colonial Churches in Virginia. Many of the courses include day trips and tours.

Five senior citizens are currently enrolled in day classes on the Williamsburg campus, and one is enrolled in the Evening College.

Senior citizens enrolled in non-credit Special Programs courses are admitted on a first-come-first-served basis with fee-paying students. Those enrolled in credit courses must have incomes not exceeding $5,000 to be able to qualify for a tuition waiver. Enrollment is permitted only after all tuition paying students have been accommodated. Senior citizens may audit up to three courses per semester, free of charge, regardless of income, if space is available.

Information on enrollment in credit courses is available from the Office of Admissions and the Evening College office. Inquiries regarding non-credit courses should be made to the Office of Special Programs.

Madison Letter Purchased

Swem Library recently purchased a letter by U.S. President James Madison concerning his cousin, Bishop James Madison, who was President of the College from 1777-1812. The letter, dated 15 July 1831, was written from Montpelier, Madison's home, to Robert Walsh, a journalist and lawyer of Philadelphia.

The letter reads in part: "Your letter of (sic) was duly read. Finding that I did not possess the means of complying with its request, I communicated it to Mr. Scott at Richmond who married the daughter of Bishop Madison, and was a student at Wm & Mary whilst he was President. . . . The Bishop tho' often supposed to be my father, was in the relation of second cousin only; and our careers in life, rarely brought us together, with the exception of a year or two, whilst I resided in Williamsburg as a member of the Executive Council. He was truly an excellent man in all the features of his character."

As the letter indicates, President Madison and Bishop Madison were second cousins, having had the same great-grandfather, John Madison. The Mr. Scott mentioned in the letter is Robert G. Scott, a Richmond lawyer and an alumnus of the College who attended William and Mary in 1809/10 and married the daughter of Bishop Madison, Susan Randolph.

The letter was purchased at a New York City auction with funds from the estate of John M. Presson, class of 1916. The bequest of Presson designated monies for the purchase and restoration of rare materials relating to the Commonwealth of Virginia through 1865.

British Craftsman Begins Flowerdew Windmill

A well-known English millwright arrived in Virginia this summer to begin building a working windmill near the site where archeologists believe America's first windmill was constructed in 1621.

Derek Ogden, a native of Great Oln, will construct an 18th century style windmill at Flowerdew Hundred, the historic plantation on the James that was once the home of Governor George Yeardley. He will be working for Southside Historical Sites, a foundation sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. David Harrison III that operates in conjunction with the anthropology department at the College. The erection of the windmill is the latest work to be undertaken at the 1,000-acre plantation which promises to be one of the most significant archeological finds in America.

The new windmill at Flowerdew may take as long as two years to construct and will cost more than $100,000. Ogden has patterned the mill after the typical windmill used by colonists to grind their corn in the 18th century. It will be constructed entirely from oak imported from England. Cloth for the sails has been shipped from Scotland.

The new windmill will commemorate what archeologists believe was America's first windmill, a tiny post mill shipped from England in 1621 to support the 40-odd settlers in the area. The windmill's precarious journey by ship to America was funded by Governor Yeardley.

Ogden says little evidence has been uncovered to prove how efficiently the windmill operated, although he suggests that the location of the mill was by no means ideal. The land has a high water level and there were most likely problems with the wind. The new windmill, which will be patterned after a larger, more efficient 18th century model, will be relocated on a ridge overlooking the original site, which would not support the 50-ton structure Ogden plans to build.

"The first settlers in America were entirely the wrong sort of people," said Ogden. "They were the English gentry who really didn't know how to work." The windmill, though simple and quite small compared to later versions, was the answer to the colonists' problems--or at least they hoped it would be.

America's first windmill, which Ogden described as "an extremely portable piece of equipment," probably didn't remain at the Flowerdew site for more than 30 years. "The English most likely moved it somewhere else," he said.

The new windmill promises to have a much longer and more successful existence at Flowerdew. "It should be a major attraction--particularly because it works," said Ogden.

According to Harrison, corn and wheat grown on the plantation farm will be ground on two millstones and used for cooking. He added that the ground meal would be "a very wholesome product" in comparison to meals produced in industrial mills.

An intense craftsman who shuns publicity, Ogden began "playing around with windmills around 1948." After several years of studying mills as a hobby, the electrical engineer decided to turn professional millwright. Since then Ogden says the popularity of windmill reconstructions and restorations has "snowballed." He has been called upon to repair, construct or offer advice concerning mills in Australia and South Africa as well as throughout the United Kingdom.

The Harrisons wrote Ogden more than four years ago and offered him the chance to build his first windmill in America. Since then, the Harrisons have been regular commuters to England, making the trip more than 20 times to join Ogden in his efforts to research where and when the first windmill was brought to the United States. But Harrison says the trips were well worth it and proudly claims that he's found in Ogden "a man who knows as much or more about watermills and windmills than any man in the world." Ogden, who will be assisted by apprentice millwright Pete Duncan, says the Flowerdew mill will be one of his greatest challenges, adding that no one has ever attempted to completely reconstruct "anything quite like it."

The main body of the mill will be around 40 feet high, while the sails will span 65 feet. A huge post weighing several tons will serve as the base of the structure, and the whole body of the windmill will move by manually turning a handle so the sails will always face the wind. "This windmill will have all the basic things ever put in a windmill," said Ogden, who added that the mill will be an appropriate memorial to "the quite outstanding role windmills played in the development of engineering."

"If it weren't for the development of windmills and watermills, there would be no industry. They were the first form of power other than man using his own hands. There's very little that's new in engineering today that you can't trace back to a windmill."

Ogden says the finished product will be an educational structure that will complement the other projects at Flowerdew, most of which are concerned with excavating artifacts that date from Indian occupations hundreds of years old to colonial settlements in the 17th century. Dr. Norman F. Barka, associate professor of anthropology and research director for Southside Historical Sites, is directing a crew of students digging for buried treasures that together justify claims that Flowerdew may be "the most important historical site in America."

Excavations have produced what are believed to be the oldest colonial burials to be uncovered in the nation, as well as the complete foundation for an early 17th century house. A sampling of the thousands of articles found at the site, including armor, cannon balls, cross-bow darts, a 1565 silver coin and a completely preserved leather tankard, are currently on public display in Washington Hall at William and Mary.

Both the archeological digs and Ogden's progress on the windmill will soon be observed by the public. The Harrisons plan to open the plantation as an educational historical landmark within the next year. Flowerdew is already an official landmark in Virginia, and according to an architectural historian with the state landmarks register, it's "99.9 percent sure" that it will be accepted as a national landmark in two to three months.

Ogden, who will be assisted by apprentice millwright Pete Duncan, says the Flowerdew mill will be one of his greatest challenges, adding that no one has ever attempted to completely reconstruct "anything quite like it."

Nation's Bicentennial Portrayed By De Mejo, Italian-Born Artist

Fancy and a sense of humor characterize the collection of paintings by Oscar de Mejo currently on exhibit in Botetourt Gallery.

The collection is a series of 12 "naive" paintings depicting various events in America's War for Independence, from the Boston Massacre in March, 1770, to Washington's Farewell, December, 1783. It was commissioned by Paul Foley, head of the Interpublic Group of Companies of New York as a Bicentennial tribute.

De Mejo's naive style, childlike but far from unsophisticated in color and arrangement, is a perfect medium for story-telling, which is what Bicentennial art is all about.

"When I started to paint American historical scenes in 1972, I wasn't thinking about the Bicentennial," said de Mejo. "The wish to do it was very strong in me. Naive art is the best vehicle for portraying historical events. It's not heavy and academic. It has humor."

De Mejo's works will be on display in Botetourt Gallery through October 31. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. - 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and 9 a.m. - 1 p.m. Saturday.

Born in Trieste, Italy, de Mejo is a man of many talents. In his youth he and a friend gave piano concerts as members of the Milan Jazz Hot Club. For a time he enjoyed a successful career as a composer.

To please his family, de Mejo worked for a number of years in the accounting department of an insurance company. Shortly after he was transferred by the company to Rome, however, he quit his job to become a film analyst for a motion picture company.

In 1947, de Mejo came to Hollywood hoping to pursue his career as a composer. One of his songs, "Bela Bimba," was in fact launched by Metropolitan Opera star Patrice Munsel and by Dean Martin, but that was the extent of his composing success.

After a brief and unsuccessful stint as a painter, de Mejo worked for eleven years in public relations, using his weekends and free time to continue painting.

The turning point came in 1969 when he received a fellowship that enabled him to return to Italy and to paint for a year.

Since then his work has gained increasing recognition in the art world. He has exhibited most recently in Europe in "Die Kunst der Naiven" in the museums of Munich and Zurich.

"There is nothing new in this pattern of involvement of public officials . . . in illegal activity."

Brown Studies Violence In America

The lynch mobs of the Old West and the Ku Klux Klan of the Deep South helped set the stage for illegal activities conducted by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Watergate offenders.

That's the opinion of Richard Maxwell Brown, professor of history, in "Strain of Violence," the first comprehensive historical study of violence ever to be published.

The former consultant to the Presidential Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence relates the recent epidemic of lawbreaking by public officials to America's vigilante tradition. He points out that the mobs that took the law into their own hands were invariably "law and order" conservatives.

"There is nothing new in this pattern of involvement of public officials . . . in illegal activity," Brown writes, "for the history of vigilantism reveals that, long before Watergate, leading American lawyers, judges and public officers from Presidents on down have been ardent supporters of, or participants in, illegal vigilante action."

Scheduled to be released in bookstores across the nation Sept. 18, "Strain of Violence" examines major incidents of violence from colonial times to the present. Brown pays special attention to repeated black-white racial violence. He also examines in detail two violence-prone regions: the Back Country of secession-leader South Carolina and central Texas, where the atmosphere helped form the character of the president who spearheaded massive American warfare in Vietnam.

Brown concludes his 432-page study by saying that "violence has formed a seamless web with some of the most positive events of U.S. history . . . The patriot, the humanitarian, the nationalist, the pioneer, the landholder, the farmer, and the laborer (and the capitalist) have used violence as the means to a higher end."

Published by Oxford University Press, the book is the result of years of research into violence of all sorts.

College Officials Among Judges For Third Annual Derby Day

President Graves and a host of faculty and administrators will be among the judges at Sigma Chi's Third Annual Derby Day competition on Saturday, Sept. 27.

The keen-sighted members of the administration will be called upon to decide which of the nine sororities finish first in a variety of contests designed to raise money for the fraternity's national charity. In each of the past two Derby Days, approximately a thousand spectators have gathered on the intramural fields to watch sorority members sit in buckets of ice water, chug down pitchers of beer and dive into mounds of whipped cream.

Joining President Graves in the jury box will be Ken Smith, director of student activities; Harvey Gunson, director of safety and security; George Cole, associate professor of business administration; Boyd Coyner, professor of history; and Alexander Kallos, professor of modern languages.

Derby Day festivities officially begin Friday, Sept. 26, with the unpredictable derby chase. Members of all nine

Sign of the Times?

To call attention to William and Mary's rich historical tradition, and its participation in the celebration of the nation's 200th anniversary, the plant department has added something new to signs on campus. The College was officially designated a Bicentennial Community by the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration last winter.

sororities and one independent team will try to collect as many derby hats as possible from Sigma Chi members.

The competition begins full force at 2 p.m. Saturday when the sororities gather for a series of contests to earn points towards winning the Derby Day trophy.

New events scheduled for this year's Derby Day include a modern version of cramming people into a telephone booth. Each team will be called upon to squeeze as many members as possible into a Volkswagen bug.

Finally the sororities will have their chance to give the fraternity members a taste of their own medicine when they place the Sigma Chi of their choice into stocks and bombard him with raw eggs.

Admission to Derby Day will be 50 cents, with proceeds going to Wallace Village, Colorado, a home for children with minimal brain damage. A dance is scheduled at William and Mary Hall Saturday night. At that time the winner of Derby Day will be awarded the Derby Day trophy.

Two Students Awarded Sigma Chi Scholarships

Two members of the Sigma Chi fraternity chapter at the College have been awarded Sigma Chi Foundation Scholarship Grants for the 1975-76 academic year.

Other borrowers may complete a registration form at the Swem circulation desk to receive the new plastic embossed card. The fee is $1.

Manual checkout of books will be continued only until distribution of student identification cards by the registrar is completed, approximately Oct. 1. After that time, books may only be

For the first time this year, a husband and wife team are among those who will receive Alumni Medallions from the Society of the Alumni during Homecoming festivities, Oct. 9-10.

A total of four alumni have been chosen for 1975 awards for service and loyalty to their alma mater and will be recognized at the annual meeting of the Society which will be addressed by President Thomas A. Graves, Jr.

Dorothy Baynham Wilkinson Campbell and James Campbell, Jr., class of 1925, from Aiken, S.C., will receive medallions along with Charles Eugene Stousland, Jr., class of 1941, and Paul Hawkins Gantt, law school class of 1942.

Actively involved in community and public service work in every community in which he lived, Campbell also took time to help his alma mater in fund raising work through the years and helped organize and was first president of the Philadelphia Alumni Chapter.

Mrs. Campbell has been active in church and civic work along side her husband and active for nearly 15 years with Girl Scout activities. She was a board member of the Society of the Alumni for seven years (1956-65) and served as secretary-treasurer of the Society, 1963-64.

According to existing college records Mr. and Mrs. Campbell were the first couple in the same class to marry after William and Mary became coeducational.

Paul Hawkins Gantt of Silver Springs, Md., until his retirement last year, served for 10 years as chairman of the Board of Contract Appeals, United States Atomic Energy Commission. Born in Vienna, Austria, Gantt received a J.U.D. degree in 1931 from the University of Vienna and was admitted to the Austria bar in 1935.

He came to the U.S. and received his J.D. degree from William and Mary in 1942. From 1942-43 he served in the U.S. Army and began his distinguished career in government service in 1944.

He served as an attorney with the National Housing Agency, an attorney with the Federal Bureau of Mines, was trial attorney, Chief Counsel War Crimes in Nuernberg, Germany, was attorney-advisor for the Bureau of Reclamation and from 1959 until 1964 was with the U.S. Department of Interior as Assistant Solicitor, Claims and Contracts.

He served as president of the Federal Bar Association (1966-67) and was treasurer of the association (1968-71). He is currently president of the United States section of the United Nations League of Lawyers and is a member of nearly a dozen other legal and fraternal organizations.

Gantt has always maintained strong ties with William and Mary and was president of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law Alumni Association, 1966-67, and served for many years as class agent for the William and Mary Fund Drive.

Charles Eugene Stousland, Jr., has made a national reputation in the field of architecture as Professor of Architecture and chairman of the department at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. He has served in his present post since 1952.

Prior to coming to Miami, he was assistant professor of architecture at the University of Arkansas, 1949-1952, and served for a one year stint, 1947-48, at Miami as a teacher of architectural design and history.

Registered in Ohio and Connecticut, he currently has a private architecture practice and also enjoys the unusual hobby of silversmithing. He has his own design studio and creates small sculpture and jewelry in silver.

Through the past several years he has contributed significant amounts of time and finances to the Society of the Alumni by his gifts of William and Mary cipher jewelry which is sold with all proceeds going to the Society.

He has exhibited sculpture and prints at numerous museums and printmakers throughout the nation including the Cincinnati Art Museum and Butler Art Institute.

An active member of the Cincinnati Alumni Chapter, he is a member of several important architectural associations.

His wife, Elizabeth Eddy Craighead (Stousland) is a member of the class of 1942 and a son, Michael C. Stousland, will graduate from William and Mary next June.

Compensatory Leave for Classified Employees

Rule 10.7 of the Rules for the Administration of the Virginia Personnel Act is published below for the information and guidance of all concerned:

"Compensatory leave is authorized absence hour-for-hour with full pay for hours worked on a holiday, on a rest day, or beyond those regularly scheduled on a work day when the work was required in writing by the appointing authority, or by a person authorized by him in writing to make such a requirement. When the work was required by an emergency not permitting prior direction, a written confirming authorization which includes an explanation of the emergency shall be made part of the agency record. General or blanket authorizations which provide unlimited work options to the employees concerned are not valid to establish compensatory leave credits. Additional work hours shall be required only to relieve specific occasional peak work loads and not to provide for constant requirements.

Compensatory leave may not be credited to any employee in a position in which the employee independently determines the need for the extra hours or establishes the work schedule, or is one in which administrative or professional responsibility for work accomplishment without regard for schedule is implicit. (EXCEPTION: Irrespective of the position held, compensatory leave may be credited when a holiday (a) falls on a rest day, or (b) is not observed by the employee because the unit of employment does not observe the holiday.)

Compensatory leave may be used for the purposes of and in lieu of annual and sick leave. Compensatory leave credits shall lapse twelve months following performance of the work."

If compensatory leave is granted for work performed on a regular work day (in excess of 8 hours), the compensatory leave must be used within the same work week earned; otherwise, overtime payment must be made for work above forty hours during the work week. (A work week begins on Sunday and continues through the following Saturday.)

It is incumbent on deans and department heads to furnish the Personnel Office with the name(s) of any classified employee who performs work in accordance with the above. In addition to the name(s) of each employee, the dates, exact times, and the authorization for such work must be submitted in writing to the Personnel Office the first work day of the week following the week during which the compensatory work was performed. This information will be incorporated as part of the employee's leave record, where it will be permanently filed and available for audit.

Employees must submit a leave slip (G.O. Form P-8) for any period that they have requested authorized absence for, regardless of whether or not such leave of absence is to be charged against earned compensatory leave credits or accrued annual or sick leave balances.

Coach's Neighbors

Donate Funds For Scholarship

Jim Root's neighbors gave the William and Mary coach a neighborly tribute last week - a football scholarship in his honor.

Root lives in the Kingspoint area and nine couples in the neighborhood raised $2,500 for an in-state scholarship among Kingspoint residents and members of the Kingspoint Club. The money, in donations and pledges, was turned over to the William and Mary Athletic Educational Association for the Jim Root-Kingspoint Scholarship. No specific player has been designated as the recipient.

The scholarship fund drive was headed by Norm and Kitty Beatty as a neighborly gesture of support of Jim Root and William and Mary's expanded athletic program. Many of the contributors, like the Beattys, are not graduates of the College.

Presentation of the scholarship was made last Thursday at a neighborhood gathering where Root expressed his appreciation.

Working with the Beattys on the scholarship were Jack ('58) and Mary Ann ('58) Brendel, John and Sue ('59) Donaldson, Sib and Chris Di Meglio, Lucky and Maryanne Florakis, Will ('56) and Olivia Molineux, Sterling and Dottie Nichols, Herm ('61) and Mary Ann ('64) Schmidt and Steve and Susi Turner.
