In the News

• "Enlightenment, Enrichment in Education" is the title of a new educational directory compiled by the Virginia Commission on the Status of Women. The directory lists educational programs, courses and areas of study available across Virginia. A reference copy is available in the News Office, 308 Old Rogers Hall, or contact the Commission at 1103 Eighth Street Office Building, Richmond, VA 23219.

• Gridiron fans will get their first look at the Indians 1976 football team next Thursday, August 19, during the annual "Press and Camera Day" at 2 p.m. on Cary Field. Coach Jim Root has invited the public to join the news media at the picture-taking session and tour of the locker room, training room and press box. The Indians kick-off their 1976 home schedule September 11 against conference rival VMI. Both season tickets and individual game tickets can be purchased by calling the ticket office at William and Mary Hall, 229-3396.

• In addition to the regular on-campus distribution, the William and Mary News will be mailed to the homes of all College faculty and staff who request this additional service, beginning with the Tuesday, September 7 issue. Postal practice will mean that a two or three day delay will occur between the time of on-campus distribution and the time the News reaches home addresses. A request form is provided in this issue of the News.

• Parking decals for the 1976-77 school year are now on sale at the Campus Police Office from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Students, faculty and staff are encouraged to purchase decals as soon as possible to avoid the back-to-school rush.

PLANTS are among the most popular choices for decorating rooms in College residence halls. During extended vacations, students are allowed to "board" their plants in the Millington Hall greenhouse.

Commencement To Feature Secretary of Education Ramsey

The Commonwealth's new Secretary of Education will be the guest speaker at the College's summer commencement exercises, Saturday, August 21.

Robert Russell Ramsey, Jr., who was appointed to Governor Mills Godwin's Cabinet last March, will speak to approximately 170 graduate and 100 undergraduate students who will receive diplomas at the 1:30 p.m. ceremony in Phi Beta Kappa Hall.

Ramsey took over the duties of Secretary of Education from Carter Lowance, who was serving as temporary Secretary of Education.

Ramsey brought to the Governor's cabinet a long and illustrious record in higher education. He came to Virginia from the New England Association of Schools and Colleges in Burlington, Mass., where he served as director of evaluation for the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education. From 1966-69, he was on the Commonwealth's Council of Higher Education, first as assistant director for program development and then as associate director.

He has also served as an assistant dean and assistant director for the office of Educational Research and as an assistant master of Branford College. From 1961-66, he was director of admissions and freshman scholarships at Yale.

Previously Ramsey also held the posts of assistant to the director of admissions of Harvard Law School and assistant in financial aid at Harvard College.

Ramsey is a member of the American Association for Higher Education, the American Psychological Association, the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Society for Research into Higher Education.

Quittmeyer To Receive 1976 Alumni Medallion

Dr. Charles L. Quittmeyer, founding Dean of the School of Business Administration, is one of three alumni who will receive the 1976 Alumni Medallions at Homecoming in October.

Mrs. Pam Pauly Chinnis, the first woman president of the Society of the Alumni and a current member of the Board of Visitors, and Dr. Vincent T. DeVita, Jr., Director of the Division of Cancer Research for the National Cancer Institute, will also receive the highest honor the Society of the Alumni can bestow. The medallions will be awarded Friday night, Oct. 8, at the Society's annual meeting.

Dean Quittmeyer, a 1940 graduate of the College, joined the William and Mary faculty in 1948. He left the College to teach at the University of Buffalo and the University of Virginia, but returned in 1962 to assume the leadership of the department of business administration.

Dr. Quittmeyer guided the growth of the department into a full-fledged School with an MBA program in 1968. Three years later, the School also introduced the Bachelor of Business Administration degree. In rapid order, the School achieved full accreditation--one of a relative handful of fairly new Schools of Business Administration to reach that milestone.

Mrs. Chinnis, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate in psychology, has achieved national prominence for her work with Mortar Board and in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Dr. DeVita graduated from the College in 1957 and went on to study medicine at the George Washington University. He is currently a full professor at GWU and has written more than 160 articles on cancer research and radiation.

Charlie Cook: "Following an Honored Tradition"

Charlie Cook is something of an oddity in today's technological society. He is the College's bell ringer. Each day Cook rings the bell in the Wren Building to signal the beginning and end of class periods.

Tourists, he says, are frequently surprised to see him ringing the bell and wonder why the College hasn't switched completely to an automatic system. Cook tells them the bell is part of the College's historic tradition. He points out that it was President Ewell's bell ringing at the opening and closing of the academic sessions in the 1880's that kept alive the College's royal charter.

Although he is following a time-honored tradition, Cook is probably not doing it the same way his early predecessors did. To be certain that he is accurate, Cook sets his wristwatch each morning by telephoning for the correct time.

The bell itself has changed since the original was installed in 1717. That first bell was rung every hour until the building was destroyed by fire in 1859. It was not until 1866 that a new bell was cast and installed. In 1888 the bell cracked.

Although historical accounts of the bell are incomplete, one source explains that the present bell came to the College in the 19th century from Christ Church in Norfolk. It was cast in 1889 at the Buckeye Bell Foundry, Vanduzen and Tift, Cincinnati.

In July, Cook added his own paragraph to the bell's history. He rang the bell at 2 p.m. on the Fourth of July, when bells across the nation were rung in observance of America's first two centuries.

One day each year Cook does not keep an eye on the time. On "Senior Day," graduating students take turns ringing the bell that has called them to classes for four years. Cook stands by to explain how it's done, and makes frequent trips to the cupola to right the bell when something goes wrong. "They have fun at it," he says, "and after four years, they deserve the privilege."

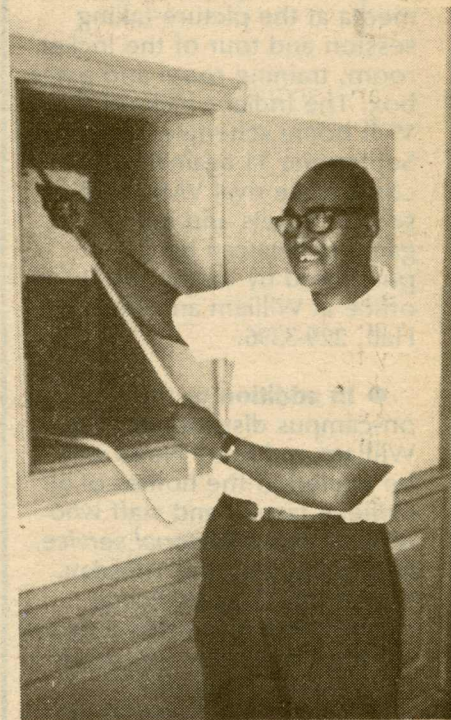

Signaling class periods is not his only concern. Along with Elenora Johnson, he is responsible for maintenance of the areas of the Wren Building used by the College, as well as for the two outbuildings near Wren.

Cook is no stranger to the William and Mary campus. He estimates he has worked here for close to two decades in buildings from James Blair Hall to Botetourt Complex. He's been at the Wren Building for the past three years.

Cook was born in York County and has lived here all his life.

Times have changed since he first went looking for a job, he said. He remembers working as a farmhand, when he was paid ten cents an hour for a ten hour day. For a time he worked in a local sawmill. He's also tried his hand as a plumber's helper and as an express truck driver.

Though times are better now, Cook has not forgotten the days when jobs were almost impossible to find, and that memory will influence his vote in the fall presidential elections. "The one who makes the most work, who keeps people busy--that's what I like," he says.

Martha Moody: "Guardian of the Greenhouse"

Martha Moody knows more about plants than she ever intended to when she came to Williamsburg three years ago from her native New England.

Looking around, acquainting herself with Virginia's landscape, preparatory to painting it, Mrs. Moody became so interested in area birds and plants in particular that she picked up a new hobby.

Studying birds was easy enough. She put out food and a small bird house made for her by a friend.

Soon she had many feathered visitors--cardinals, purple martins, Baltimore orioles and even a woodpecker regard her backyard as home.

Her foray into Virginia's plant world, however, has turned into a project that still surprises her. To learn about plants, and to fulfill her RSVP (Retired Senior Volunteer Program) requirements, she volunteered to help once a week in William and Mary's penthouse greenhouse atop Millington Hall, under the direction of biology professor Martin Mathes. That was three years ago.

"I just came in to help Dr. Mathes," she said. "He started me weeding, then mixing the dirt, and later potting and cutting."

She claims she was "not that well informed" about plants when she first came. In Newburyport, Ma., where she lived before moving to Williamsburg, she was too busy painting. Now, however, "it seems I take a look and know what to do with a plant," she says. She has begun collecting a few books on horticulture, too, so that if she doesn't know how to treat an ailing plant, she can look it up. If that doesn't work, she adds, she can always depend upon Dr. Mathes for the answer.

Since she has been working in the greenhouse, her friends have begun to turn to her frequently for advice on their plants. "The idea was to get to know birds and plants so I could do a painting," she said. "But now I'm in the business, it seems!"

She has used what she has learned at the greenhouse for her own home as well. "When I moved here, I had a backyard like a football field." Since then, she's added roses and is continually planting cuttings given her by friends.

At the greenhouse, she says, "I don't talk with the plants--I just work with them. It's my job and my pleasure."

She finds it to be a good therapy as well. "When I work with the plants, I don't think of anything else. When I leave, I feel like all the cobwebs have been swept away."

Mrs. Moody is the mother of Carl E. Moody, associate Professor of economics at William and Mary.

Active in community affairs, Mrs. Moody is a member of the local AARP (American Association of Retired Persons), is on call for visiting elderly shut-ins through RSVP services, and is vice president in charge of arts and crafts for Welcome Wagon. She is also organizing a plant study group for Welcome Wagon this fall.

Gary Fanin: "An Air Conditioner's Best Friend"

Gary Fanin likes his job, although not for the reason many might expect. Fanin heads the three-man team responsible for the College's air conditioning and refrigeration systems, which sounds like an ideal occupation in the summer. "Everyone says it must be nice working in air conditioning," he says, "But they forget that we only get to work on air conditioning when it's broken."

What Fanin does like is the puzzle-solving aspect of his job. "I've always liked to tear things apart and put them back together," he says. At the College, he and his two assistants, Mike Turnage and David Tidwell, have ample opportunity to do just that.

The three men see to it that some 20 central air conditioning systems, primarily on the new campus, and the countless window units are kept in good running order. They also handle anything having to do with refrigeration--from the six walk-in refrigerators at the Commons to the incubators and growth chambers in the life sciences building.

The larger central air systems require the most attention, said Fanin, because of their many components. Two or three times each week in the summer, Fanin, Turnage or Tidwell will check every one of the major units, replacing worn belts and greasing and oiling parts.

The size of the major units would surprise many on campus. The large "cooling towers" located outside centrally air conditioned buildings are only a small part of the whole system for each major unit. Huge air ducts, control panels, pipes and machines form a complex beneath the buildings that is many times the size of the towers. The largest unit--700 tons--cools William and Mary Hall. Most of the units average about 230 tons, said Fanin.

Although Fanin likes his work, he says it is not without its frustrations. "We try to do the most important things first," he noted, "but it's not always easy to tell what's the most important." An office may call the buildings and grounds department, he said, with a problem they consider an emergency. Fanin or one of his team will interrupt a project to deal with it, and frequently the "emergency" turns out to be a relatively minor matter. On the other hand, Fanin recalls he has put off answering a service call from an individual office on occasion, only to find the trouble involved the entire building.

He shrugs off the frustrations associated with his job, though. "I wouldn't be here if I didn't like it," he adds.

Prior to joining the College staff in June 1970, Fanin studied heating and air conditioning systems at the Peninsula VoTech in Hampton for two years. During his second year there, he also took courses in refrigeration at Old Dominion University.

Turnage began working for the College in October 1972, while Tidwell joined the staff just over a year ago.

Godwin Names CNC Board ; Year of Transition Ahead

Governor Mills E. Godwin has named the first Board of Visitors for Christopher Newport College.

The General Assembly recently approved the separation of Christopher Newport from William and Mary, effective July 1, 1977. William and Mary has maintained control over the Newport News college since it opened its doors in 1961.

Until July 1, 1977, the new board will meet with William and Mary's board during the first morning session of each scheduled meeting. During the year-long "transition period," Christopher Newport's board will observe the committee structure and operating procedures of the College's governing board. It will not assume control of Christopher Newport until the official separation takes place.

Those appointed by Governor Godwin to the new board are William E. Allaun, Jr., a Newport News attorney; Harrol A. Brauer, Jr., vice president of WVEC in Hampton; F. Hunter Creech, Secretary and General Counsel of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company; Dr. David G. Fluharty, Jr., a Newport News physician; Stephen D.
