In the News

BACH MUSIC--Dora Short, violin, and James S. Darling, harpsichord, will perform a program of music by Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750) in the Sunday Series recital, February 20, at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center Ballroom.

Bach's Sonata IV in C minor for violin and harpsichord will open Sunday's program. Mrs. Short will perform the Sonata in G minor in a violin solo, and Mr. Darling will play the Italian Concerto in a harpsichord solo.

The program will close with the Sonata VI in G major for violin and harpsichord.

Director of the William and Mary orchestra, Dora Short is also a member of the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music and has performed in Town Hall in New York on several occasions. James Darling is instructor in organ at the College, organist-choir-master for Bruton Parish Church, and harpsichordist and music consultant for Colonial Williamsburg.

Although there is no admission charge for Sunday Series recitals, a silver collection is taken following the performance. The public is invited to attend.

SPACE COLONIZATION--Hans von Baeyer, chairman of the physics department, will discuss "Cities in Space" at the Project Plus Forum, February 23, at 7:30 p.m. in Millington Hall.

"It now appears," says von Baeyer, "that it is technically possible to build cities in space using present technology." Professor von Baeyer will discuss the implications of such cities for society and the world, as well as point out some of the technical problems involved.

He will also show slides of projected space stations, which have been developed by National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientists and university groups who are studying space colonization.

Von Baeyer will base part of his talk on the work of Princeton physicist Gerard K. O'Neill whose book "The High Frontier: Human Colonies in Space" was published earlier this year. O'Neill, who spoke at a William and Mary physics colloquium in November 1974, is one of the leading authorities on space colonization.

Government Changes Proposed

Governor Mills E. Godwin Jr. and four former governors of Virginia joined the 1977 Charter Day audience at Phi Beta Kappa Hall Saturday in honoring Carter O. Lowance--the man who has been known for a generation as the "Little Governor."

Former governors A. Linwood Holton Jr., Albertis S. Harrison, Jr., J. Lindsay Almond Jr., and Colgate W. Darden Jr., attended the Charter Day convocation, at which Lowance received an honorary doctor of laws degree and delivered remarks reflecting on governmental affairs over the last 30 years.

On Search For Extrasolar Planets

Astronomer van de Kamp Slates Lecture Thursday

Peter van de Kamp, research astronomer at Sproul Observatory at Swarthmore College, will lecture on campus February 18 under the Visiting Scholars Program of the University Center in Virginia.

Van de Kamp will discuss the search for extrasolar planets and "Unseen Astrometric Companions of Stars" at 4:30 p.m. in 109 William Small Physical Laboratory. The public is invited to attend.

Van de Kamp is professor of astronomy and director emeritus of the observatory at Swarthmore, where he has been a member of the faculty since 1937. During his tenure there, he was granted a leave of absence to accept the position as first program director for astronomy with the National Science Foundation in 1954-55. Before joining the Swarthmore faculty, he taught for more than a decade at the University of Virginia, where he was awarded the President and Visitors prize in 1927, 1937 and again in 1938.

A recognized authority on astronomy, van de Kamp has been in demand as a visiting lecturer in France, Germany, Russia, his native Netherlands, and Mexico, as well as in the United States. He is the author of four books on astronomy and has twice been a Fulbright Professor in Europe, in Paris, 1949, and in Amsterdam in 1974.

To improve the state government, Lowance, who has been aide and confidant to governors of Virginia since 1947, proposed lengthening the governor's term to six years and returning the General Assembly to biennial sessions.

See Charter Day Address and Jefferson Award citations, pages 4-5

Also on campus to help the College honor Lowance was Lt. Gov. John N. Dalton, presiding officer of the State Senate, representing the legislative branch, and Chief Justice of the Virginia Supreme Court Lawrence W. l'Anson, representing the judiciary.

In introducing Lowance, Governor Godwin said that each of the six governors under whom Lowance had served had "learned from his predecessor that it was best to listen to the still, small voice at his side."

"It is my privilege and my personal pleasure to await once more, this time with all of you, the words of the one and only governor emeritus of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the Honorable Carter Olin Lowance," Godwin said.

In presenting Lowance for his honorary degree, President Graves said, "We of this College community have prospered exceedingly from the strength of character and richness of mind which have been your gifts to those with whom you have been associated through 30 years of public service in government and higher education. Your unbending integrity, grace, courtesy and good humor are the attributes of that legendary person, the true Virginian."

Lowance was executive vice president at William and Mary from 1970-74.

Jack D. Edwards, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences, was named recipient of the Thomas Jefferson Award, and James J. Thompson Jr., assistant professor of history, received the Thomas Jefferson Teaching Award. John R. L. Johnson Jr., rector of the board, presented the citations.

The 1977 Charter Day festivities marked the 284th anniversary of the granting of the royal charter February 8, 1693, by King William III and Queen Mary II of England.

Debaters George Butts (left) and Evan Johnson won the John Jay Pierrepont trophy for placing first in the U.S. Naval Academy Invitational Debate Tournament recently. The trophy (at left), which William and Mary will keep for a year, is a King George III cup made by London silversmith Charles Wright in 1771. It was donated by Mrs. Pierrepont in memory of her late husband, who was commander of the U.S. Navy. Johnson and Butts received cufflink replicas of the trophy. William and Mary will keep the permanent trophy at the right.

Debaters Win Pierrepont Trophy

William and Mary debaters won their first big tournament of the year, bringing back to campus the coveted John Jay Pierrepont trophy from the U.S. Naval Academy Invitational Debate Tournament in Annapolis, Feb. 3-5.

Evan Johnson, a senior from Milwaukee, Wisc., and George Butts, a junior from Sacramento, Cal., were the top team in the tournament. They had a 5-3 record in the preliminary rounds, winning over Navy, Central Michigan, West Virginia Wesleyan, Old Dominion and Duke. They lost to the University of Pennsylvania and Temple.

In the octo-final round they beat West Georgia College; Johns Hopkins in quarterfinals; Old Dominion in the semi-finals, and Kings College of Pennsylvania in the finals.

William and Mary had two other teams in the tournament. Lora Dunlop, a junior from Staunton and Mark Meyers, a junior from Livingston, N.J., were 4-4 in the preliminaries. Don Henderson, a sophomore from Springfield, Va., and Nancy Short, Hampton, were 3-5 for the preliminaries. Neither team scored high enough to continue on into the final rounds.

Some 46 teams, representing 30 schools, participated in the tournament, which is considered one of the biggest on the collegiate circuit.

Four Appointed To Faculty For Current Semester

Four new faculty appointments have been announced for the second semester.

Robert Griffith Jones, a Norfolk attorney, is teaching a course this spring at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law in the legal profession, a survey of the organized bar in America. Jones received an A.B. degree from Davidson College, B.D. from Yale University, Ph.D. from Duke University in social psychology, and J.D. from the University of Virginia. He has taught previously at the University of Virginia, Lehigh University, and Haverford College.

Alessandro di Silvio has been named acting assistant professor of modern languages and literatures, replacing Joanne Funigiello, who is on leave this semester. Di Silvio received his undergraduate degree from Italian schools, his master's in Italian from the University of Colorado and his doctoral degree from the University of North Carolina.

Andrew S. Ryan Jr. is serving as acting assistant professor of philosophy, replacing Robert Bohl, who is on leave. A graduate of Washington and Lee University, Ryan recently received his Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of Virginia.

Alumna Betsy Porter Brantley, class of 1969, has been appointed instructor in biology for the current semester. She received her master's in pathology from the Medical College of Virginia and worked as a laboratory specialist in the immunopathology laboratory at MCV for four years.

State Official Clarifies Emergency Plans Developed For Nuclear Power Plants

George L. Jones, state coordinator for the Office of Emergency Services, wrote to the College last week in response to a point raised by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader during his February 3 lecture in William and Mary Hall. Mr. Jones' response is printed below.

During his visit to the College of William and Mary campus last week, Mr. Ralph Nader was quoted as saying that "persons living near power plants should demand to know about the evacuation plans VEPCO must, under law, prepare in the event of the release of radioactive material. Such plans are kept secret. How in the world are you to know how to evacuate if you don't see the plan. . . ."

At the very least, these statements contain errors of omission. VEPCO power plants are responsible for developing plans which provide for the protection and evacuation of their on-site personnel. Local governments plan and prepare for implementation of responses to radiological emergencies that will provide maximum protection to its citizens, to include their evacuation. These plans are not secret. Local communities contiguous to the nuclear power plants, to include the counties of Spotsylvania, Louisa, Surry, and James City (jointly with the City of Williamsburg) have developed comprehensive Radiological Emergency Response Plans (RERPs). A copy of the James City County/City of Williamsburg RERP is enclosed for your review. [Editor's note: The plan is available for review in the College News Office, 308 Old Rogers Hall.]

One purpose of developing these plans is to "provide for warning the local population of a radiological emergency and to inform them of appropriate protective actions to be taken." The local jurisdiction plans have been fully coordinated with the Commonwealth of Virginia's RERP.

Training exercises designed to test the plans and to involve the officials and citizens of the local communities were conducted in the counties of Spotsylvania, Louisa, and Surry during 1976. These training exercises were well publicized and were covered by both the press and television. Participants included state and local government representatives, as well as a number of local volunteer organizations and individual citizens, i.e., volunteer rescue squads, fire departments, welfare department, health department, and school system.

The Commonwealth of Virginia and the local governments located in close proximity to the nuclear power plants, working together, will continue to take whatever actions are necessary to protect the public in event of a radiological emergency. These actions include: informing the public, delineation of responsibilities, developing appropriate warning systems, and specifying appropriate responses based on specific radiological response levels.

to a program on interview techniques at a meeting of the Student Education Association, February 15, at 8 p.m. in Millington Auditorium. Mr. W. Waters, assistant director of personnel for Newport News Public Schools, and Mr. E. Carr will conduct a mock interview.

BADMINTON TOURNAMENT--February 18 is the deadline for entering the William and Mary Invitational Badminton Tournament. The tournament is open to all students and faculty, and will include both individual and team competition. Interested persons should contact Catharine Scheibner, 400 Adair Gym, Ext. 4360.

sponsoring a coffee house, Feb. 19, in the Yates lounge at 8 p.m. Bill Mulrone will play the guitar; other interested entertainers are asked to call Ext. 4248. Refreshments will be served. All members of the campus community are welcome.

FOLK DANCING--A Student Association Free University course on folk dancing, taught by Jean Sandos, begins Feb. 20 at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Ballroom. Classes will be held each Sunday night thereafter; beginners are welcome. For further information, call David Herndon at Ext. 4671.

Harris Receives ACLS Fellowship

A fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies has been awarded to James F. Harris, associate professor of philosophy, to complete the first book-length study of John L. Austin's theory of language.

Austin, a contemporary British philosopher who died in 1960, advanced a new theory of language and the world in which it is used, rejecting the traditional approach.

Traditionally the philosophy of language has distinguished between "language" on the one hand, and "the world" or "reality" on the other. Austin, however, believed language should be viewed as an integral part of its setting, rather than analysed apart from it.

Austin, explained Harris, rejected the customary division of language and reality and used a broader view, advancing his theory of "speech-acts."

The theory of speech-acts, said Harris, takes into account not only the make-up of the language, but to whom it is spoken, when and for what purpose. When viewed in this way, said Harris, language is not something distinct from reality but a part of it.

"To commit a speech-act is always to do something as well as to say something," explained Harris.

Professor Harris has already written several major portions for his book on Austin's theory and hopes to complete it at Oxford University, England, where he will go to study Austin Manuscripts. Harris previously worked with the Austin manuscripts during a semester of research at Oxford in the fall, 1973.

Since becoming interested in Austin's philosophy of language several years ago, Harris has taught a special seminar on Austin and read papers on his work at professional meetings. Two articles were recently published in the American Philosophical Quarterly and in Philosophy and Phenomenological Research.

The ACLS award, coupled with a semester faculty fellowship grant from the College, will enable Harris to spend the entire 1977-78 academic year at Oxford. A graduate of the University of Georgia and Vanderbilt University (Ph.D.), he joined the William and Mary faculty in 1974.

Roland Husson

French Embassy Official To Lecture

Roland Husson, cultural attaché of the French Embassy in Washington, will discuss how French writers view the United States in a lecture February 17 sponsored by the Lyon G. Tyler Historical Society.

Thursday's lecture, which will be given in English, begins at 8 p.m. in the French House, Botetourt Unit 6. The public is invited to attend.

Prior to joining the Embassy staff last year, Husson was for three years Cultural Counselor and Counselor of Technical Cooperation in Chile. From 1969-73 he was cultural attaché of the French consulate in San Francisco.

Husson's career has taken him around the world. After completing studies in the field of modern civilization in his native Paris, Husson taught for a number of years in Champigny-sur-Marne and served as director of studies for Maison-Lafitte.

He has since been visiting professor at the University of Maine, 1963-64; at Queens College, New York, in 1964-65; and at Monash University in Melbourne, Australia, in 1965-69.

While on campus, Husson will speak with several student groups, including a government class and students taking French courses. His visit to William and Mary is sponsored by the French House, Pi Delta Phi honorary French society, the French faculty, and the local chapter of the Alliance Francaise, as well as the Tyler Historical Society.

"STURGEON-EELS," 1973 etching by Gunter Grass

Grass' Etchings At Swem

Etchings by modern German novelist and artist Gunter Grass are currently on exhibit through February 25 in the Botetourt Gallery of Swem Library.

Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays, and 9 to 11:30 a.m. on Saturdays. The gallery is open to the public free of charge.

Sponsored by the department of modern languages and literatures, the exhibit features some thirty etchings completed by Grass in the period 1970-72. The exhibit is on loan through the Goethe House in New York.

Grass has earned an international reputation for his novels including "The Tin Drum" (1959), "Cat and Mouse" (1961), "Dog Years" (1963), and "Local Anaesthetic" (1969).

His talent as an artist has been, until recently, less well known. A native of Danzig, Grass began pursuing his interest in art at an early age. He spent three years studying to become a stonemason and sculptor, and another three years attending the Academy of Art in Dusseldorf. In 1953 he was a student of the Sculptor Karl Hartung.

Mary Barnes Drawings Shown At Andrews Hall

Drawings made with pencil, charcoal, spray ink and a variety of other materials are on exhibit through February 25 in Andrews Gallery. Viewing hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The artist, Mary Barnes, has combined natural forms, visual memory and imagination to create the images in her drawings.

She recently received her master's degree of fine arts in drawing from the University of Arizona, Tucson, and some of her graduate thesis drawings are included in the current show.

Barnes received her B.F.A. in printmaking from Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, and has exhibited regionally in both the midwest and the southwest.

MBA Students Organize "Meet The Presidents Day"

Students in a school of business administration can learn a great deal by talking to real-world executives, but what can experienced executives learn from students?

Quite a bit, according to Sara Bane, president of the Masters of Business Administration Association and coordinator of this year's "Meet the Presidents Day" at the College. "We think it's important that executives know how students feel about the business world," says Bane. "After all, today's business students will most likely be joining these executives in the business world sometime in the near future."

More than 25 corporate executives from a variety of businesses apparently agree—they're driving and flying to the School of Business Administration next Thursday, February 17, to spend an entire day communicating with students.

Bane admits that the students will probably benefit most from the exchange. "You can read all the theories in all the business textbooks in the world, but that's not going to tell you what the life of a business executive is really all about. Students find that the experiences of the executives help to make the textbook problems real and alive," says Bane.

The executives who make it to Williamsburg bright and early have been invited to sit in on a special telephone interview with Arab entrepreneur Adnan Khashoggi, one of the most powerful businessmen in the Middle East. Associate Professor William H. Warren initiated the interview-by-telephone technique three years ago in an effort to bring the experience of top executives into his business policy class. Since then, many of the business leaders who first talked to students by telephone have decided to travel to "Meet the Presidents Day" to meet the students in person.

Later in the morning, MBA students will chair several seminars on current business issues in a program coordinated by Colin Park, professor in the school of business administration and a nationally-recognized expert on management training and development.

Panel discussions coordinated by Professors William Maddocks and W.H. Hawthorne will look at information systems for business executives. Another group chaired by Hays T. Watkins, president of the Chessie System, and coordinated by Professor Marvin M. Stanley, will discuss the changes in the transportation industry. Dr. James Tucker, vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, will chair a third panel discussion on financial planning and the economic outlook for 1977.

The day will be capped off by a debate between members of two academic classes on policy and trade relations. The students will argue possible rulings of the Supreme Court should it reconsider Proctor and Gamble's controversial divestiture of Clorox. Robert Shetterly, president of the Clorox Corporation, will serve as special commentator in the debate of a case study coordinated by Warren and Associate Professor Henry E. Mallue.

Bane, a first-year student from Halifax, says MBA students realize that "years of experience and hard work" are sometimes the best assets a chief executive officer can possess. "Meet the Presidents Day" enables students on the verge of entering a tough business environment to benefit from the experiences of successful executives. By bringing executives "face to face with students for a mutual exchange of ideas, the MBA program becomes more relevant and innovative," says Bane.

Executives expected to attend "Meet the Presidents Day" include W. F. Mirgeut, senior vice president of First and Merchants Bank; Frederick Wedell, Hampton Hardwood Association; P. Douglas Wexler group director of operations for the Bendix Corporation; T. Parker Host of T. Parker Host Inc.; Ralph R. Crosby, Jr., resident partner of Coopers and Lybrand; Frank Bloxom, Jr., senior vice president of First and Merchants Bank; Richard Clough, vice president of Virginia Tractor Co.; J. Richard Carling, executive vice president of Metropolitan National Bank; Richard Ringeon, corporate vice president for the Ball Corporation; John Werner, vice chairman of First and Merchants Bank; Kent Klyman of Kent Klyman and Associates; John Holsinger of IBM Corporation; Robert Kurimsky, director of Process and MIS; and Howard Lewis, controller at Dow-Badische.

Also W. R. Medford, regional manager of the banking division of Electronic Data Systems; Edwin C. Luther III, executive manager for the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce; J. Thomas Vaughan, president and chief executive officer of First and Merchants National Bank of the Peninsula; Leroy M. Richey, Jr., vice president of the Bank of New York; John B. Adams, Jr., vice president of A. Smith Bowman Distillery, Inc.; S. Warner Robinson, chairman of the board, G.C. Murphy Co.; W. Brooks George, chairman of the board, Larus and Brothers Company, Inc.; W. L. Zimmer, president of A.H. Robins, Inc.; Frank Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston; and Andrew F. Kay of Non-Linear Systems.

Lowance Reflects on Virginia Government, 1947-77

Text of Charter Day Address
by Carter O. Lowance
February 12, 1977

May I say at the very beginning, I deeply appreciate the honor which the College of William and Mary has accorded me on this occasion. I particularly cherish it by reason of the several years I was privileged to spend here when I obtained firsthand confirmation of the high standing of the institution, which most Americans properly have taken for granted, and when I simultaneously became imbued with the same pride and enthusiasm that pervades its alumni and friends throughout this country and abroad.

I extend heartiest good wishes as the College enters its 285th year.

As a preface to the subsequent remarks, let me enter this immediate disclaimer: The suggestions advanced here have not been discussed with nor approved by any Governor of Virginia, past or present, nor any other governmental or political leader. I say this now in order to make certain I am not misinterpreted as speaking for anyone but myself.

It has been my good fortune to have been associated with Virginia state government in one form or another for the past 30 years, and it is on the basis of this exposure that these comments are offered in the hope they may stimulate further thought on the part of all those interested in the proper advancement of public administration.

The government of Virginia is of superior character and is so recognized throughout the United States. I am proud of having been in a position to contribute something toward maintaining that reputation. At the same time, I recognize opportunities that remain for improvement and see steps that might be taken to arrest trends which, in time, could detract from the high standing of the Commonwealth and weaken its services.

In these days of inflation and constantly expanding costs of all public services, it is essential that each of us keep informed as best we can on every facet of government and that we let our views be known, at the ballot box and in the legislative halls. I frequently am reminded of the rapid changes that have taken place since I joined the staff of the Governor's office in 1947. For example, the state's General Fund operating appropriations for the 1946-48 biennium were approximately $100,000,000; today they are $3,700,000,000. Of course, along with the increase in appropriations have been increases in agencies and employees, the source of constant concern to Governors and other responsible administrators, as well as to those who, by no choice of their own, fall into that indispensable class known as taxpaying citizens.

Governors in particular, throughout my association with state government, have been strong advocates of careful and prudent administration of the public monies and of utmost care in not going beyond the essential needs in the expansion of public services.

Their objective, without exception, has been to accommodate the true needs of the state's expanding population, provide the means of catching up in many of the lagging services--such as education, mental health, and corrections--and maintain a level of quality and efficiency commensurate with these needs and the resources available within the bounds of reasonable rates of taxation.

Thomas L. Williams

Carter Lowance addresses convocation in Phi Beta Kappa Hall

Fortunately, members of the General Assembly have fostered the same goals. As a consequence, efficiency and economy long have been the hallmarks of our state government.

Virginia instituted the executive budget as early as 1919, years before most states of the Union. As early as 1928, Virginia undertook a major reorganization of its government under the leadership of Governor Harry Flood Byrd and successfully reduced the number of independent agencies, instituted the short ballot, and made government more accountable to the people by truly vesting the chief executive authority in the Governor.

This was followed 20 years later by a further updating of the structure of government under Governor Tuck. A third major realignment in modern times began in 1966 with the support of Governors Harrison and Godwin for establishment of the Office of Administration, a prelude to the present day Cabinet system instituted under Governor Holton.

A degree of trauma has accompanied these developments from time to time. Governor Tuck, a true fundamentalist when it comes to Jeffersonian philosophy of restraint in government, stated in his inaugural address that he was convinced that "the making of grants to the states by Congress should be vigorously opposed by all the states so long as the operations of the Federal government necessitate incurring an annual deficit." His advice, had it been followed, certainly would have been reflected in a lesser Federal debt than that we are so conscious of today.

Through every succeeding administration has run a strong thread of fiscal responsibility. Governor Battle, in office from 1950 to 1954, said, "We must not allow ourselves to become impoverished through ineffective use of available funds due to governmental processes that are not designed to do the job in an efficient, business-like manner." And his successor, Governor Stanley, produced an unobligated balance at mid-point of his term of more than $53,000,000, the result of careful planning and prudent management.

We find similar themes in succeeding terms. Governor Almond urged re-evaluation of "all our activities in order to utilize more efficiently all state personnel and services rendered." Governor Harrison declared: "In considering areas of governmental services where we have the opportunity to exercise control and restraint over expenditures, we must make certain that the criterion of desirability does not supplant the criterion of established need."

And the work of Governor Godwin is so well known it would be superfluous for me to recite the record in detail. However, I might point out that his first term brought about the most significant advances in many decades, including revision of the state constitution, inauguration of the sales tax to broaden the base of support for both state and local governments, and to provide the funds to push Virginia forward in all phases of education, including inauguration of the community college system.

The Commonwealth now is wrestling with its most difficult fiscal problems since the depression of the 1930's which have required sharp cuts in spending by state agencies and institutions and which probably will demand further retrenchment on the part of both state and local governments. Meanwhile, the General Assembly debates these issues of reductions or taxes, or both. Governor Godwin, who will have a final voice in whatever legislation becomes law, has reiterated his dedication to the vital principle of the balanced budget and his firm determination to carry out this legal obligation, which he already has courageously undertaken.

The situation focuses further attention on recommendations of the Virginia Governmental Management Commission, on the two score or more agencies that have been added to the official roster during the past two decades, to the posture and powers of the Governor himself, and to the all important procedures and role of the legislature. These last two subjects are those to which I invite prime attention today in the hope that the pressures of the moment will not preclude consideration, in due course, of further steps toward strengthening the hand of the chief executive and encouraging greater legislative restraint in the enactment of laws.

I am convinced that a single six-year term for the chief executive would be a distinct step forward. The Commission on Constitutional Revision, in its findings and recommendations of 1969--most of which were enacted--made no reference to the possibility of a six-year gubernatorial term. The eyes of the public and the General Assembly were centered at that time on the question of removing the present limitation on the four-year term. As you will recall, the Commission recommended retention of the four-year term and the prohibition against an immediate successive term.

Why six years instead of four? Observations over the years produce many valid reasons. Under the present system, a Governor does not have adequate time and opportunity to develop, submit, and fully implement a broad-gauge, constructive program, often conceived long before his election. The outgoing Governor prepares and submits the biennial budget, together with other recommendations, before his successor takes office. The incoming executive thus finds a fully developed program already before the legislature, and though he may have much to offer, and different proposals to make, he usually learns that it is necessary, or expedient, to modify some of his own proposals, or to perhaps meld some of them with those of his predecessor. Even with the best of cooperation, which is traditional in Virginia, it is understandable that no two Governors' views fully coincide. Fulfillment of the new Governor's program, therefore, is clearly handicapped, and not infrequently important segments are deferred until mid-term. Thereafter, politics being such as it is, the public's attention is diverted to speculation about his successor, rather than being centered on the pending matters.

The four-year term, by reason of the mechanics of transition and the legislative process, simply is not the most viable device for carrying a constructive program to fruition. The result is that governmental policies and programs too often move by fits and starts, sometimes with major changes in direction at the four-year intervals.

The six-year term, with no succession, would retain the commendable insulation of the Governor from political influences otherwise present when he is eligible to succeed himself. He would retain the same independence of thought and action, but with the added advantage of time in which to move the state forward with a well-planned long-range program.

No state in the union now has a six-year gubernatorial term, but precedent-setting is not a new venture for the Old Dominion when change is soundly conceived and properly executed.

A six-year term together with the authority recommended by the Commission on Constitutional Revision in 1969, as well as by the present Governmental Management Commission, for the Governor to effect governmental organizational changes, subject to veto by the General Assembly, would offer the opportunity, and an added incentive, for incoming Governors to present comprehensive, well-prepared programs and contribute a greater degree of continuity to the management of government.

Incidentally, you may have noticed a comment by President Ford shortly before leaving office suggesting the six-year term for tenants of the White House. Certainly many of the same arguments would support such a change.

I make bold to suggest one other major area in state government for serious consideration. Annual legislative sessions now have been held since 1970. They were not new to Virginia much earlier. The constitution of 1776 called for sessions "once or oftener every year." The biennial session was introduced in 1851 only to give way again in 1870 to the annual meeting, a short-lived provision that was repealed in 1876. The convention of 1901-02 continued the biennial sessions and agitation for annual meetings did not muster enough support for further change until 1969-70.

The principal argument for the more frequent meetings has been the growth and complexity of government, the increase in population and the need for more frequent opportunities, and more time, to deal with the problems of the Commonwealth.

The findings of the Commission on Constitutional Revision of eight years ago did not support that view, but did recommend extension of the regular biennial sessions from 60 to 90 days.

Let's consider the results since 1970. And let us assume that the first off-year session of 1971--which was scheduled primarily to deal with statutory changes incident to the 1970 revision of the Constitution, and which had no time limitation--can properly be classed as one of the "annual" sessions. And let us assume further that the so-called "short session" of 1977 will enact the same percentage of bills introduced as the 1975 "short session."

The four "short sessions", after this year's meeting, will have considered 3,923 measures and enacted 2,225, or about 57 per cent of those offered. (These figures include only freshly introduced measures and therefore do not take into account the approximately 800 "carry-over" bills from the biennial to the "short" sessions since 1972.) And it is well to remember that for the four off-year sessions since 1970, the Assembly will have been in Richmond a total of 194 days, or an average of 48 1/2 days each time. This is assuming the 1977 session will continue at least until March 4, as is now indicated--almost double the originally contemplated 30 days.

The four biennial sessions beginning with 1970 considered 6,749 bills and passed 3,232, or approximately 48 per cent of those introduced.

To summarize, during the eight sessions since 1970 (including this year's 1266 bills introduced as of January 24) Virginia legislators will have considered 10,672 bills and passed 5,458, or an annual average of more than 680.

Many might point to that one fact alone as full justification for further consideration of a return to biennial meetings on the ground that no state needs 680 new laws every year. Furthermore, the annual sessions have not as yet demonstrated the restraint some expected of the "short sessions" nor have they dealt solely with emergency measures or budgetary amendments, but rather have become general legislative sessions of unpredictable duration.

And because they come every year, more and more budget revision is inevitable, and state agencies and institutions are required to give more and more time to preparations, particularly in the fiscal area, for the legislative sessions. The costs in time and personnel within the executive branch are difficult to estimate but obviously are of major dimensions. And the trend toward year-around legislating also entails direct costs of not inconsequential proportions.

The fact is that experience elsewhere would indicate that annual sessions often have become legislative luxuries, despite the best efforts of able and conscientious members to hold matters within bounds, and avoid each session adding more agencies, more personnel and more regulations to the taxpayers' bill.

The prescription suggested here is not advocated as a total answer to the trend toward ever expanding and ever bigger government, but the pace in Virginia and in other states might be slowed, if not arrested, by the three-way combination: the six-year gubernatorial term, added executive authority for reorganization of agencies (subject to the legislative veto), and a return to biennial legislative sessions.

As one of the many who are proud of Virginia and her achievements and who have every confidence in her future, I believe these steps could give further support to continued prudent, economical and responsible government, under capable leaders, unfettered by political inhibitions or superfluous laws.

Thomas Jefferson Award Citation

The Thomas Jefferson Award, made possible by the generosity of the Robert Earll McConnell Foundation, annually provides an opportunity for the College to express appreciation to a member of the College family for significant service through his personal activities, his influence, and his leadership. The presentation today represents the fourteenth of these awards which the College has made on the occasion of Charter Day.

As indicated by its title, the conception of the award stresses that the personal and professional character of the recipient should embody those qualities which Thomas Jefferson would have conceived as essential to the intellectual, social, and political advancement of mankind. The certificate of award to be presented today specifies that the recipient "exemplifies, through his life, his character, and his influence, the principles and ideals of Thomas Jefferson". We are thus reminded that it is not only intellectual achievement, but also strength of character and love for one's fellowman that should be fostered by an institution of higher learning.

It is my pleasure and honor to announce that the Committee has selected as recipient of the 1977 Thomas Jefferson Award, Jack D. Edwards, Professor of Government and Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences.

Dean Edwards received a B.A. degree in 1955 from Macalester College, a L.L.B. degree from the Harvard Law School in 1958, and his Ph.D. in political science from Vanderbilt University in 1966. After teaching for several years at the University of Nevada, William and Mary and Grinnel College, he returned to the College as an Associate Professor in 1966. In 1973 he was promoted to Professor.

Jack Edwards' concern for improving governance at the College and his ability to lead were quickly recognized by his colleagues. Between 1966 and 1974 he served as chairman of what is now the Educational Policy Committee,

Thomas Jefferson Teaching Award Citation

The Thomas Jefferson Teaching Award, also made possible by a generous gift from the Robert Earll McConnell Foundation, is a tribute to the several members of the faculty of the College of William and Mary who influenced and encouraged so profoundly the young Jefferson. Consequently, this Award is intended to recognize today's teachers on this faculty.

This Award is to be made annually on the occasion of the commemoration of Charter Day to a younger teaching member of the College community who has demonstrated, through concern as a teacher, through character and influence, the inspiration and stimulation of learning to the betterment of the individual and his society as exemplified by Thomas Jefferson. The selection committee for this Award is the same as that for the Thomas Jefferson Award.

It is now my pleasure to announce that the Committee has selected as the recipient of the 1977 Thomas Jefferson Teaching Award, James J. Thompson, Jr., Assistant Professor of History.

Professor Thompson graduated summa cum laude from Columbia Union College where he received a B.A. in history. He received the M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Virginia, where he was both a Danforth University Teaching Fellow and a Woodrow Wilson Dissertation Fellow. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Alpha Theta. Jim Thompson was appointed Assistant Professor of History at the College of William and Mary in 1971. His particular areas of interest are intellectual, literary, religious, and southern history.

Since his arrival in 1971 Professor Thompson has been consistently recognized as one of the truly exceptional teachers on the campus. As his students can verify, his classes have always been filled and his concern is further demonstrated by the hours he spends talking with and counselling students outside of the classroom. Over the years Jim Thompson has managed to combine high student demand for admission to his courses, excellent student evaluations, demanding work in the classroom, and high grading standards. His involvement with students, from freshmen to Ph.D. candidates, represents a significant contribution to the College. But, above all, he is a humane

Newsmakers

The professional appointments, lectures, achievements and publications of William and Mary faculty and administrators are featured regularly in this column.

Faculty members in all schools and departments and professional staff in all offices are invited to submit written notices of appropriate professional activities to the News Office, 308 Old Chemistry Building.

It is the policy of the William and Mary News to include only activities of a professional capacity to an audience directly related to the speaker's field of expertise. Attendance at conferences will be included only if a faculty member or administrator has contributed to the program in a significant way, such as delivering a paper or address, or chairing a session.

Government Professor Alan J. Ward's review of Louis Snyder, Varieties of Nationalism, was published in the January issue of Choice. On January 28 Ward lectured on contemporary British politics at the Foreign Service Institute of the State Department.

Delpha Keys, assistant professor of education, is one of 500 women chosen from among the more than 3,900 members of the American Educational Research Association (AERA) for inclusion in their select roster, "Women in AERA." The roster is circulated to educational research institutions to acquaint the institutions with the experience level of these women and thereby to increase the role of women in educational research. The women chosen for the list were nominated by their peers and selected on the basis of experience and breadth of background.

"Quality of Life in the U.S. Air Force: A Focus on the Officer Leadership/Supervision Factor with Implications for Professional Military Training," the report of a study by Professor of Education Armand Galfo, has been accepted by the National Defense University and released by the Pentagon for use at the professional military schools of the Air Force. Galfo's study highlights the interpersonal relationships between the supervisor and the supervisee as the most important aspect of leadership and a contributing factor to the degree of satisfaction expressed by personnel with organizational leadership in general.

Mary Lou Cobb, head of the Cataloging Department at Swem Library, attended several meetings of the annual American Library Association mid-winter conference in Washington, January 30-February 2, as a member of the Association of College and Research Librarians Board of Directors. She is currently serving as vice-chairman and chairman-elect of the ACRL College Section. Other Swem librarians who attended conference sessions were Sandra Peterson, documents librarian, and Robert L. Burr, circulation librarian.

"The Morality of Corporal Punishment" by Robert Bloom, of the School of Education, will become part of the American Orthopsychiatric Association's national statement on in-school use of corporal punishment. In his report, Bloom argues that corporal punishment doesn't work, causes physical and psychological harm, and actually retards the moral development of children.

The Continuing Demise of the Home Office Deduction: The Impact of the Tax Reform Act of 1976," an article by James E. Smith of the School of Business Administration, has been accepted for publication in The Tax Adviser.

CW Offers Special Tours

The Colonial Williamsburg Foundation is offering special escorted tours of the historic area for William and Mary faculty, administration and staff on Thursday, March 3, and Sunday, March 6.

Both tours will provide an "overview" of the colonial capital, emphasizing the appeals of Williamsburg: its gardens, architecture, archaeology, crafts, research, history and decorative arts. If a large enough group of children (20 or more) accompany their parents on the tour, Colonial Williamsburg is expected to open the Powell-Waller house for special craft demonstrations designed especially for children.

Interested employees should make reservations through the Office of Information Services at the College (Ext. 4226, 4331, 4371, or 4600) for either of the tour dates. Each participant must have a Colonial Williamsburg annual pass, available free to area residents at the CW Information Center. To cover Colonial Williamsburg's special costs for escorts, a $2 charge per person has been established, payable at the College's Office of Information Services in Room 309, Old Rogers Hall. Checks should be made payable to the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation.

On Thursday, March 3, participants will meet in the lobby of the Williamsburg Lodge at 10 a.m., and the tour ends at 1 p.m. On Sunday, March 6, participants meet in the Lodge lobby at 1 p.m., and the tours end at 4 p.m. Colonial Williamsburg advises participants to dress warmly and wear comfortable shoes.

During the past two months Law Professor John E. Donaldson has spoken to meetings of tax law specialists and accountants in five states. Early in December he participated in a two-day workshop on partnership taxation for the New Mexico Society of Certified Public Accountants in Albuquerque. He discussed new aspects of estate and gift taxation as one of a "circuit" of specialists explaining the Tax Reform Act of 1976, at meetings in Portland, Ore.; in Boston, Mass.; in Williamsburg at the Virginia Bar Association meeting; and in Las Vegas.

On leave for the current semester, English Professor Carl Dolmetsch is in London this month to engage in research on the Colonial Virginian writer, William Byrd of Westover, in the Egmont Papers in the British National Library (formerly British Museum). Earlier this month he spoke on "Thomas Jefferson as a Man of Letters" at a meeting of the American Studies Association of Oxford University.

Law Professor Harvey Frank was chairman of a day-long program in Williamsburg last month on lawyers and securities laws. The program was sponsored jointly by the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, the Virginia State Bar and the Virginia Bar Association.

Ron Brown, also a member of the law school faculty, presented a paper and participated on a panel in New Orleans last month in a national workshop on the realities of labor relations in government service. The conference was sponsored by the National Civil Service League and the Public Employment Relations Research Institute.

Physicist Franz Gross spoke on "Relativistic Effects in Few Body Systems" at the University of Maryland in December.

Several members of the physics department have published papers in recent weeks. The are:

"Stability and Spectra of the Bumpy Theta Pinch," by T.E. Cayton and G. Vahala; Physics of Fluids 19, 590; "Guiding Center Plasma Stability of the Bumpy Theta Pinch with Week Pressure Anisotropies," by M.J. Schmidt and G. Vahala, in Plasma Physics 18, 499; "Pressure Anisotropy Effects on Long-Wavelength Guiding Center Plasma Stability," also by Schmidt and Vahala, in Physics of Fluids 19, 1405; and "Hadronic Production of the Psi Meson," by C.E. Carlson and R. Suaya, in Physical Review D 14, 3115.

Carl Daw and Robert Scholnick were among several members of the English department faculty who attended the annual meeting of the Modern Language Association in New York in late December. Daw directed a special session on "The Sermon in England: 1650-1750," while Scholnick presented a paper on "Whitman and the 'Book Business'" at a special session on "Walt Whitman in 1876." The meeting of the Early American Literature division was devoted to a critique of the bicentennial conference on the Literature of the American Revolution held in Williamsburg and directed by Carl Dolmetsch.

John Levy, director of clinic education for the law school, has been appointed to the project policy board of the Prepaid Legal Insurance Demonstration Project in Norfolk. The project is being administered under a grant from the Federal Legal Services Corporation to test alternative methods of delivering legal services to the poor.

president of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors, chairman of the Department of Government and chairman of the self-study subcommittee on the faculty.

In 1974 after an extensive search both within and outside the College, Jack Edwards was appointed Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences. As Dean he serves on numerous faculty committees. He is Chairman of the Degrees Committee and the Long Range Planning Committee. In addition, Dean Edwards teaches a course each year on the Supreme Court and the judicial process.

His service to others and interest in government extends to the community. He was elected to the Board of Supervisors of James City County in 1971 and served as chairman in 1974. During the past six years he has worked hard on many problems associated with the rapid growth of the county. He has been active in the Virginia Association of Counties since 1971 and is currently serving as its President.

Students, faculty and members of the community can easily explain why Jack Edwards is asked to lead.

As a person he is patient, sensitive and concerned about people as individuals. His leadership is characterized by his ability to listen, the incisiveness of his reasoning, fairness in arriving at decisions and a gentle but firm exercise of authority.

Jack Edwards has dedicated himself to the intellectual and political advancement of the College and the community. Because of his character and his leadership, it is fitting that we honor him today with the Thomas Jefferson Award.

person who relates well to his students and who takes a genuine interest in them and in their goals and aspirations.

In addition to the regular courses in the curriculum, Professor Thompson has taught numerous freshman colloquia and advanced seminars on subjects such as "Southern Writers and the South", "William Faulkner", "American Literature: Twain to Bellow", "American Religious Thought Since the Late Nineteenth Century", and "The New Journalism". His service to the college community has indeed been impressive. He has been a frequent participant in such special programs as Parents' Weekend, the National Honor Society Conference, Freshman Orientation, and the Washington Program. He has served on the Phi Beta Kappa Nominating Committee, the Board of Student Affairs, the Admissions Policy Committee, the Committee on Prizes and Awards, the Interdisciplinary Committee, and the Food Service Advisory Committee. He is presently participating in an experimental program that seeks to tie academic advising more closely to the student residences. He has spoken off campus to numerous civic and church groups.

Productive research and scholarship have contributed to Jim Thompson's excellent teaching record. He has published a number of articles, the most recent of which is "Southern Baptists and the Antievolution Controversy of the 1920s." He has recently completed a book-length manuscript entitled Trial as by Fire: Southern Baptists and the Religious Controversies of the 1920s.

Professor Thompson's academic and civic achievements are impressive. Yet, on this occasion, it is for his extraordinary ability as a teacher that we honor him.

Official Memorandum

From: George R. Healy, vice president for academic affairs, and William J. Carter, vice president for business affairs

To: Deans, Directors and Department Heads
Subject: Employment of Non-Faculty Personnel

A copy of a recent memorandum from the Secretary of Education is attached for your information.

In order to implement Secretary Ramsey's memorandum, we have taken the position that any personnel action which involves dollars will affect the ability of the College to absorb any reduction in funds.

Accordingly, the following measures are to be in effect the date of this memorandum, and will continue until further notice.

1. No employee who is currently in an hourly wage capacity will be placed in a permanent position.
2. Individuals who are hired on an hourly basis should not be assured that they will be placed in a permanent position upon completion of a satisfactory trial period.
3. The filling of existing vacancies with hourly personnel should be undertaken only when deemed essential, and approved in writing by the appropriate vice president.

Your cooperation during these trying times will be appreciated by all concerned.

To: Heads of Agencies and Institutions Assigned to the Office of Education

From: Bob Ramsey, secretary of education
Subject: Establishing New Positions and Filling Vacant Positions

As you are aware, our fiscal situation continues to be the major challenge facing State government today. While we recognize that it would not be feasible to freeze all personnel actions, it is apparent that we must examine, even more closely, the need for new positions or filling vacant positions.

Nearly all of you are operating under a 5% reduction in appropriations, and each of you has advised us of the probable effect on program levels and services of possible additional reductions.

Upon receipt of this memorandum, please include the following certification on all P-3's and P-5's:

"I certify that favorable action on this personnel request will not affect this agency's (institution's) ability to absorb a total appropriation reduction of 7-1/2% during both years of the 1976-78 biennium."

Appeals will, of course, be reviewed.

Thank you for your continuing cooperation and assistance.

College Women Sponsor D.C. Trip

The College Women's Club will sponsor a bus trip to Washington on Tuesday, March 1, to view the Treasures of Tutankhamun exhibition at the National Gallery of Art.

The bus will leave the PBK parking lot at 7 a.m. and will go directly to the National Gallery. There is a possibility that exhibition tickets for specified times during the day will be available at the Gallery, but group members should be prepared to wait in line for the exhibit if these tickets are not available. The bus will meet members of the group at the National Gallery and will drive them to Hogates Seafood Restaurant for an early dinner before returning to Williamsburg at approximately 9 p.m.

The cost of the trip is $8.50 for bus fare. Each participant is responsible for his or her own expenses in Washington.

Reservations must be made by Saturday, February 19. Checks should be made payable to the College Women's Club and mailed to Julie Littlefield, 242 Christopher Wren Road.
