Second Volume Of Marshall Papers Documents Active Career As Lawyer

Publication of the second volume of "The Papers of John Marshall," has been announced here by the editor, Charles T. Cullen.

"This volume brings Marshall into the most active phase of his legal career and reveals much new information about his life and times," said Cullen.

The Marshall Papers are being published by the University of North Carolina Press in association with the Institute of Early American History and Culture on campus. The project, expected to include 10-12 volumes when completed, is the first publication of the collected correspondence and papers of Marshall. Herbert A. Johnson, who has since resigned, served as co-editor of this volume with Cullen.

Volume two contains all extant

Marshall documents from mid-1788 through 1795, including the second half of the future Chief Justice's account book. Marshall was 33 in 1788 and his burgeoning law practice reveals his leadership of the state bar under the reorganized court system that took effect that year. Such lawyers as John Breckinridge, Wilson Cary Nicholas, Archibald Stuart and William Branch Giles were frequent correspondents, as was George Washington, who needed Marshall's help in a difficult land case.

Later in the period covered, Marshall became deeply involved in the new Virginia Militia, leading an expedition to investigate a disturbance in Smithfield. He was also Grand Master of the Masons during the 1790's. Perhaps the most significant part of the volume is the essay and documents relating to Marshall's role in the purchase of the Fairfax lands in the Northern Neck. According to Cullen, "this purchase was so important to Marshall that he declined accepting several federal offices that were offered him by Washington, including U.S. Attorney General. Only after the purchase was secured did he finally accept an appointment, one that took him to France and the XYZ Affair."

In addition to the Fairfax case, other essays in the volume discuss such

Godwin Approves Pay Raise For 27,000 State Employees

Salary increases were authorized last week by Governor Mills E. Godwin Jr. for nearly a third of the state's 81,000 employees.

The boost is effective January 1. One-step increases, averaging 4.8 percent, were authorized for clerical workers, correctional officers, keypunch and computer operators, state troopers and other law enforcement officers, including game wardens and alcoholic beverage control inspectors.

Two-step increases were authorized for employees in custodial trades and related classes of employment, according to a statement by the governor.

Detailed information about which College employees will be eligible for the increases is not yet available from the State Personnel Office. As soon as information is received, said College Personnel Director Irving H. Robitshek, it will be made available to the College community.

According to the governor's statement, the increases were authorized in keeping with a goal set by the General Assembly to pay rates comparable to those in private industry.

The annual cost of the increases will total about $17.9 million.

Retired Marine Scientist, John Wood, Dies At Home

John L. Wood, 64, who retired last month as associate director of the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, died unexpectedly last week at his residence in Gloucester.

Death was attributed to a heart attack.

Wood started work at VIMS in 1959 in the microbiology department as a specialist in oyster pathology and microbiology.

He was promoted to senior marine scientist and named to head the Department of Microbiology-Pathology in 1961 and continued in that position until 1967, when he became associate director.

He also served as a professor in William and Mary's School of Marine Science and as an associate professor in the University of Virginia's Department of Marine Science.

Wood earned a B.S. degree in botany from Massachusetts State College. He served in the Army for ten years, and in 1947 he returned to his alma mater, which had become the University of Massachusetts, and earned an M.S. degree in botany and mycology.

He earned his doctorate at Columbia University in 1951.

Wood also taught at the University of Cincinnati, Pennsylvania State University and the Johns Hopkins hospital and medical school.

Survivors include his widow, Mrs. Kathryn King Wood of Gloucester and two sons, John L. Wood Jr. of Horton, Mich., and Arthur King Wood of Piacenza, Italy.

Schaffer Joins Business Staff

Rosemary Schaffer has begun work at the College as Assistant Director of the Budget in the Office of Business Affairs. She replaces Becky Covey, who resigned earlier this fall.

Prior to joining the William and Mary staff, Mrs. Schaffer worked for several years with a public utilities company in Washington, D.C., where she was responsible for developing rates for consumers, monitoring rates of the company's wholesale suppliers and working with the Federal Power Commission.

At the College, she will work with department heads, responding to their questions about departmental budgets, and will assist Budget Director Dennis Cogle and Vice President for Business Affairs William J. Carter in administering the budget.

Along with William T. Allen, director of purchasing, she supervises the College's photocopying accounts.

Schaffer is a 1972 graduate of Immaculata College, Philadelphia, with a degree in economics. She has also completed the requirements for the J.D. degree, which she expects to receive this winter from the George Washington University law school.

Special Programs Courses Offered

Workshops and short courses on subjects ranging from book collecting to break baking are being offered this spring through William and Mary's Office of Special Programs.

A listing of courses and application forms are available from the Office of Special Programs, College of William and Mary, Virginia Associated Research Campus, 12070 Jefferson Avenue, Newport News, VA 23606, or by calling the office of Carson H. Barnes Jr., director, at 877-9231, Ext. 200.

In the General Interest category, offerings cover such subjects as federal income tax for individuals, auto repair, speed reading and interior design.

Historic Studies courses will focus on Peninsula folk life and lore, historic site archaeology and fossils of the Lower Peninsula, among others.

Instruction is available in a variety of skills and crafts, including Chinese cooking, drawing, tatting, hand-weaving, and photography.

In the categories of Family Studies and of Personal Growth, courses are offered on such topics as buying or selling a home, dramatics for children, or religion in modern life.

English as a second language is among the Literature and Foreign/Domestic Studies courses, while writing for fun and profit, certified professional secretary preparation program, and principles of banking are included in the Careers category.

Other courses focus on topics in business, labor and technology, and a final category offers courses in gardening and horticulture.

Programs are scheduled for the convenience of participants in the evenings, on weekends, as well as during regular summer and academic sessions.

Classes are held both on the Williamsburg campus and at the College's Virginia Associated Research Campus in Newport News.

The courses allow adults who do not need credit toward a degree the opportunity to improve their skills, redirect their abilities to meet new challenges and to enjoy educational programs without being concerned about grades or examinations.

Math Puzzle Solutions Given

Mark Cochran was among the students who came up with the correct answer to the math puzzler. His response was:

"Nine doors lead from the five rooms to the outside. The other doors need not be considered. No matter how Santa tries the problem, he must pass through these nine.

"If Santa begins somewhere inside the rooms and passes through all nine doors once, then he must end up outside. The first door to the outside puts him out, the second puts him in, the third out, fourth in, fifth out, sixth in, seventh out, eighth in and the ninth must leave him out.

"It is impossible, therefore, for Santa to go through those nine doors, beginning and ending on the inside."

A student who used only the identification  came up with a unique solution. The student suggested, "If the house happens to be situated on a donut shaped asteroid as illustrated, Santa will have no trouble."

A third student, identified only as B, concluded his puzzle solution by writing: "Probably the craziest notion in this entire problem is the fact that there is no Santa Clause [sic]."

topics as the famous case of Bracken v. College of William and Mary and the Commonwealth of Virginia v. Richard Randolph, the noted bizarre murder case. Essays on Marshall's militia duty and his tenure as acting attorney general of Virginia also shed light on little known aspects of the Chief Justice's early career.

Volume three, which will be published next year, will contain a full account of the XYZ Affair which has never been fully covered in documentary fashion, said Cullen.

The first volume of "The Marshall Papers," was published in the fall of 1974 and was presented to Chief Justice Warren E. Burger at ceremonies at the Supreme Court. More than 150 guests from government, legal and academic circles were invited, including Gov. Mills E. Godwin of Virginia and Gov. James E. Holshouser of North Carolina, members of the North Carolina Congressional delegations and a number of federal and state officials.

The first volume covers Marshall's life from 1775 to 1788, and includes Marshall's service as a lieutenant of the Culpeper Minutemen encamped at Williamsburg, to the conclusion of the Virginia Convention held to ratify the present Constitution of the United States in June, 1788.

John Marshall (1755-1835) was the principal architect of the American system of constitutional law. He was a pupil of George Wythe, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and holder of the first chair of Law and Police in the United States, established at William and Mary in 1779. The Marshall-Wythe School of Law takes its name from the famous teacher and pupil.

Sponsors of "The Papers of John Marshall" include the National Historical Publication Commission, the Commonwealth of Virginia, the College of William and Mary, the Institute of Early American History and Culture and the University of North Carolina Press and its sponsoring University.

Santa Inspires Problem In Mathematics

The holiday spirit inspired the weekly "puzzler" on the mathematics department's bulletin board in Jones Hall last week.

The puzzle reads:

"The five room house pictured above has a fireplace in each room. Can Santa Claus enter the house through a chimney and sneak through the house, passing through each door exactly once, and then leave by going up a chimney?"

Holiday Stirs Memories of International Travel

Among the colorful decorations trimming the holiday "Tree of All Nations" on display at the Campus Center are scores of lacy paper snowflakes made by Jennifer Whitman.

Although the decorations she created are American in origin, contributing to the international tree brought back memories to Jenny of holidays she has celebrated during travels through many of the countries represented on the tree.

Jenny, who is a secretary in the Student Affairs Office, started life with a heritage already international. She was born in England and still maintains her British citizenship. Her father is Canadian, the son of Armenian parents, while her mother is British, born in Shanghai, China, to missionary parents.

Her family's holiday traditions, she said, were typical of those of many British families.

On Christmas Eve, the entire family had a hand in decorating the house. "When I was small," she said, "my parents trimmed the tree after I had gone to bed. Stockings were hung at the fireplace and opened first thing Christmas morning. We opened the gifts under the tree after breakfast."

Her family attended church services on Christmas day, when the children were young, and on Christmas Eve as they grew older.

Dinner on Christmas day, she recalls, was one of the highlights of the holiday season. The menu usually included turkey, bread sauce, potatoes, gravy, mince tarts with hard sauce, steamed plum pudding and a rich, dark fruitcake. At the end of the meal children were given paper party hats and noisemakers.

Boxing Day, the first weekday after Christmas, she remembers as a time when "everyone took one of their presents and put them in a box for the poor." The day is also traditionally when gifts are given to employees, postmen and other service people.

Jenny became acquainted with some of the European holiday customs when she went to northern Italy to live as an "au pair" girl with an Italian family, looking after the family's children and helping with household chores.

She was 17 years old at the time, and her parents, who had since settled in Richmond, Virginia, suggested Jenny live abroad for a year before entering college or embarking on a career.

Her intended stay of one year grew to six, and by the time she returned to Virginia in 1972, she had lived in France, Britain and Norway, as well as Italy.

Her chief memory of Italian holidays is of large family gatherings, hours spent cooking and of a Christmas dinner that lasted all afternoon. In place of the holiday turkey to which she was accustomed, were such foods as prosciutto and melon, ravioli, chicken, and panatone, a rich Christmas bread filled with citrus fruits.

In all, she spent nearly two years in Italy, working au pair with two families during that time and studying for a while at a teacher's college.

Interested in language study, Jenny moved to Paris where she studied at an Alliance Francaise for a year. Because of her studies, her time with French families was limited, and she remembers little of the traditions associated with Christmas. One of the special foods served at holiday time, she recalls, is "maron," pureed chestnuts used to make stuffing and served as a sidedish with turkey.

Her travels then took her back to England, where she spent two years working in an antique shop and attending secretarial school before joining her twin sister, Alison, in Norway.

The Scandinavian holiday customs proved to be her favorite.

Christmas trees are decorated with candles, paper Norwegian flags and ornaments made of straw and wood chips, she said.

"Visiting is a big part of the holiday, and each visitor is served coffee and cookies." Consequently, she said, housewives spend long hours baking different kinds of cookies.

On Christmas Eve, she said, families attend church and then sit down to a big meal with such dishes as spareribs, lutefisk, and a variety of cold sliced meats.

Jenny returned to Richmond after spending more than a year working as a nurse's aid in Norway.

She has lived in Williamsburg for the past three years, since marrying Mort Whitman, who is pastor of the Orthodox Presbyterian church.

How does she celebrate Christmas now, after seeing such a variety of customs?

She has combined many of her family's British traditions, and the special holiday dishes she adopted from Europe and Scandinavia, with the Dutch customs of her husband's family.

She became a Christian several years ago, she said, and has since been concerned to observe the occasion on a more Christian rather than secular basis.

She and her husband also hold an open house each year for friends and neighbors. Mort dons his grandfather's Victorian waistcoat and cutaway and reads from Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" and Dylan Thomas' "A Child's Christmas in Wales."

Williamsburg Report

A weekly five-minute interview program produced and marketed to radio stations along the East Coast by the Office of Information Services.

January 2-8

SHEPPARD TYREE, professor of chemistry, talks about a special kind of American folk art--the old fashioned western. He attempts to describe what makes a good guy so good and a bad guy so bad, and explains why he longs for the morals and basic human values of the wild west. Finally, he comments on why the western has lost much of its popularity in recent years.

January 9-15

JAMES DEETZ, professor of anthropology and one of the world's leading experts on "folk" archaeology, talks about the forgotten Americans of pre-Revolutionary times. First, he dispels some widespread myths by claiming that early Americans were not short in stature and not very friendly to strangers. He also talks about their messy homes, their poor bathing habits, their language, and their everyday eating habits.

January 16-22

JAMES LAVIN, probably the world's foremost expert on antique Spanish firearms, compares the 18th century Spanish rifle to today's Lincoln Continental. Both represent the extreme in prestige and precision, but cost a small fortune. First-rate guns may have taken up to a year to make and were usually as stylish as a gentleman's clothing and furniture. Lavin also explains why firearms were so treasured, even though they were seldom fired and used primarily for ceremonial hunting excursions.

January 23-29

A. Z. FREEMAN, professor of history, talks about the renowned Samurai sword, the extremely lethal weapon of the ancient Japanese. Samurai swords were said to be the soul of the Samurai warrior, who always carried two of the beautiful weapons tucked in his girdle. Freeman describes the care that was taken in making a sword, and the expense a nobleman would go to in order to own the best sword available.

January 30-February 5

GREGORY CAPELLI, professor of biology, talks about future food sources from the oceans which cover about two-thirds of the earth. He compares harvesting new "crops" in the sea to farming on land. Finally, he describes a small crustacean called a "crill," which may be a popular item on restaurant menus before too long.

Area radio stations that broadcast the Williamsburg Report are WDDY, Gloucester (Saturday, 9:55 a.m.); WYCS, Yorktown (Tuesday, 6 p.m.); and WMBG, Williamsburg (Sunday, 11:15 a.m.).
