PROJECT PLUS OPEN HOUSE

Students interested in applying for next year's Project Plus program are invited to attend an open house Thursday, January 26, in Botetourt Unit 7, at 7 p.m. Originally planned for January 19, the Open House has been moved to the January 26 date, due to scheduling conflicts.

Faculty members will discuss tutorials and programs for the 1978-79 program, which will be based on the theme "Creativity."

FILMS TO BE SHOWN AT ASIA HOUSE

Two films will be shown this week at the Asia House unit of the fraternity complex. On Thursday, Jan. 19, "Reshma aur Shera" will be shown at 7 p.m. A Hindi movie with English subtitles, the movie has won many international awards. "Red Storm Over China" will be shown on Sunday, January 22, at 7:30 p.m. at Asia House. The public is invited to attend both programs.

PHYSICS COLLOQUIUM

Edward P. Tryon of CUNY and the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University will discuss the "Origin of the Universe," in the physics colloquium, Friday, January 20, in 109 Small Hall at 4:30 p.m. Coffee will be served preceding the colloquium, at 4 p.m. in the conference room in Small Hall.

"SANTA" SCOTT HAD W&M-UNC GAME IN THE BAG

William and Mary has been making the pages of Sports Illustrated frequently in recent weeks. The January 9 issue carried the following anecdote in its "Scorecard" section:

"When Bill Scott, a William and Mary football player, dressed up as Santa Claus for the basketball game against North Carolina and handed out candy canes to the Tar Heel players and their coach, Dean Smith, Smith asked if Santa had anything else in his bag of goodies. 'Yes,' replied Scott. 'I have three points for William and Mary.' Final score: William and Mary 78, North Carolina 75."

Snow Scenes

A light snowfall greeted students returning for second semester classes on Sunday.

Project Plus Slates Film, Lecture

An award-winning documentary film will be shown in the Project Plus Forum, Wednesday, January 18, in Millington Hall at 7:30 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

"Hearts and Minds" examines the American consciousness that led to involvement in Vietnam. According to director Peter Davis, "The film is more psychological than political, and it is not a chronology of the war so much as a study of people's feelings."

Immediately after the film showing, a discussion will be held for those interested in the Project Plus building, Botetourt Unit 7.

The program is being co-sponsored by the History Department, Asia House and Project Plus.

In the following week's forum, James M. Buchanan, Jr., will discuss "Prospects for a Constitutional Revolution."

Buchanan is professor of economics and Director of the Center for Public Choice at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. His lecture will be given Wednesday, January 25, at 7:30 p.m. in Millington Hall.

Buchanan is the author of a recent book, "The Limits of Liberty: Between Anarchy and Leviathan," and co-author of an earlier volume, "The Calculus of Consent: Logical Foundations of Constitutional Democracy." He has also written several books and numerous articles on public finance.

Prior to joining the VPI&SU faculty in 1969, he was for 13 years a member of the University of Virginia faculty.

He holds a doctoral degree from the University of Chicago.

The Project Plus Forum this year is based on the theme "Revolution." History Professor Carlyle Beyer is director of both Project Plus and the Forum programs.

For Seminar, Demonstration and Sunday Series Concert

Programs In Computer Music Set

Computer-generated music will be featured in a Sunday Series concert and will be the topic of two programs here, January 20-22. All of the programs are open to the public.

"Rotations," a quadrasonic tape presentation by Colgate University Professor Dexter Morrill, will be given in the January 22 Sunday Series in the Campus Center Ballroom at 3 p.m. There is no admission charge, although a silver collection is taken following the concert.

Morrill, who is associate professor of music and director of the Computer and Electronic Music Studios at Colgate, will give a seminar on computer music, Friday, January 20, at 4 p.m. in 211 Millington Hall. Morrill will demonstrate his computer trumpet instrument, with taped examples of the trumpet sounds. During the past three years, he has worked on the synthesis of trumpet tones using the Colgate computer.

The seminar is sponsored jointly by the departments of computer science, music, physics and psychology.

On Saturday, Morrill will give a series of presentations, from 1 to 4 p.m. in the lobby of Millington Hall. His talks will explain how the computer produces sound and how the composer uses programs to create musical compositions.

The music for Sunday's feature, "Rotations," was composed by Morrill, and by John Chowning, Tracy Petersen, John Grey and Canadian composer Bruce Pennycook.

The hour-long taped program was produced directly from the computer, using the machine itself as a new instrument, with no processing between the "instrument" and the tape recorder. Unlike more traditional instruments, the computer is highly flexible and has no real preference for the sounds and styles of music that it produces.

Dexter Morrill, Composer of Computer Music

"Rotations" features works with some instrument-like sounds that often evolve into different and unnatural sounds. A number of the works simulate moving sound sources in the quadrasonic listening area, a technique first developed by John Chowning at Stanford University.

Computer music is not a recent discovery, although musicians and audiences are now rapidly becoming aware of its potential. As early as 1958, at the Bell Laboratories, the computer was programmed to produce digital representations of waveforms, which were then converted to audio form for listening. Only in recent years, however, has the process become fast enough so that composers and musicians can use the computer as they would another musical instrument.

Special Concert To Feature Ragtime

The New Orleans Ragtime Orchestra will perform in a special concert at the College, Thursday, January 19 at 8:15 p.m. in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall.

Tickets are $4 for general admission and $2 for Concert Series season ticket holders. They may be purchased at the Campus Center, weekdays from 8 a.m.-

4 p.m. Ticket information is also available by calling 253-4235 or 253-4236.

Critics have acclaimed the seven-piece orchestra for making "part of America's musical past a living tradition." The group's repertoire includes not only "classic rag," but also cakewalks, marches, blues, waltzes and other New Orleans jazz numbers with elements of ragtime.

Many of the arrangements were acquired from the library of violinist John Robichaux, leader of New Orleans' best known society band in the early years of the century.

The New Orleans Ragtime Orchestra was formed in 1967 under the leadership of Swedish pianist Lars Edegran. The musicians include jazz historian and writer William Russell, violin; Lionel Ferbos, trumpet; Orange Kellin, clarinet; Paul Crawford, trombone; John Robichaux, drums; and Walter Payton, Jr., bass. Their program is a blend of compositions by Scott Joplin and other great ragtime composers, and of arrangements by lesser known figures.

A New York Times critic has hailed the Preservation Hall presentation for "creating an atmosphere of stately grace that occasionally changes to jaunty heel-kicking," while a New Yorker reviewer praises the orchestra's "spooky trick of making one feel nostalgic for an era and place and way of life one has never known."

Official Memorandum

From: James C. Livingston, Dean of the Undergraduate Program
To: Heads of Administrative Offices and Departments
Subject: Change in Title of the Student Aid Office

For as many years as I can remember, the College office specifically responsible for assisting students in matters of financial aid has been called the Office of Student Aid. From time to time, persons have commented on the ambiguity in the title Student Aid and it is apparent that some persons, particularly outsiders making inquiries, are unaware of the limited function of that office. Therefore, to clarify the exact responsibilities of this administrative office, we are changing the title to the Office of Student Financial Aid and the Director's title to Director of Student Financial Aid.

These titles should be used in all future publications and communications.

To Be Held During 1978 Charter Day Weekend

Boyer Among Panelists For Education Conference

Howard K. Smith, commentator and public affairs analyst for the ABC Network, Lindley Stiles, Professor at Northwestern University and former dean of the University of Virginia School of Education, and Ernest L. Boyer, U.S. Commissioner of Education, will be panelists at a conference on public education which will highlight the 1978 Charter Day celebration, February 10-11.

The conference marks the 200th anniversary of the concept of free public education in America, which was proposed by alumnus Thomas Jefferson in 1778. Participants will explore how, in modern times, knowledge is influenced by the schools, government and media and how it is diffused throughout society.

Boyer will also give the principal address at Charter Day ceremonies, which will be held in Phi Beta Kappa Hall, Feb. 11. All three men will receive honorary degrees from the College at the Charter Day convocation.

In addition to the national panelists, a state panel will be made up of Dr. Gordon Davies, Director of the State Council of Higher Education; Eugene Campbell, State Superintendent of Public Instruction; and Anne Smith, Education Editor for the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

School of Education alumni have been invited to suggest topics for workshops which will be held Saturday morning.

The conference theme, "Toward the More General Diffusion of Knowledge," is taken from one of three bills drafted by Jefferson for a system of education he felt was "adapted to the condition and capacity of everyone." The bill passed the Virginia House of Delegates on the third try; it was never approved by the Senate. Although a landmark in the history of education in America, the idea of public education was not to become a reality during Jefferson's lifetime.

Jefferson's contributions on behalf of education, however, have continued to be studied, and the Commission for Constitutional Revision in 1971 incorporated the title of his bill into the constitution of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Jefferson attended William and Mary from 1760-62 and remained in Williamsburg to study law under George Wythe, later first professor of law.

In 1779 under the leadership of Jefferson, who was then governor and a member of the College's Board of Visitors, the scope of William and Mary was enlarged to the university level. Grammar and Divinity Schools were discontinued and a professorship of anatomy and medicine and the first American chairs of law and police and of modern languages were established. Jefferson's plan is also credited with establishing the first elective system of studies in the United States.

Registration For Evening Courses Still Possible

Students may register for Evening College courses prior to the second class meeting of each course, in the Evening College office, 111 James Blair Hall.

William and Mary employees registering for courses are reminded to complete the Fee Waiver Form and turn it in to the Evening College office along with registration materials. Copies of the form are available from department heads and supervisors or from the office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs.

For further information, call Ext. 4238.

College Receives Papers Of Governor Godwin

William and Mary will receive the personal papers of former governor Mills E. Godwin Jr. '36, the only two-term governor in Virginia's history.

Godwin, who served his first term from 1966 to 1970, retired from his second term in office on Jan. 14, when he was succeeded by another William and Mary alumnus, John N. Dalton '53 of Radford.

In addition to Godwin's personal papers, William and Mary will receive copies of many of his public papers, which under Virginia law go automatically to the State Library.

The gift also includes memorabilia from the Godwin years.

"In a period of eight years, the Governor has quite an accumulation of memorabilia," said Carter O. Lowance, longtime friend and aide to the former governor. "Some of it may have historical significance and possibly will be examined with the thought that those items might be useful to the College."

Lowance said Godwin has "a long-time love for William and Mary, and there was no problem in his reaching a decision to give his papers and the memorabilia to the College."

President Graves arranged the gift with the former governor. He had been in touch with Godwin several times before he retired from office and then officially wrote and asked the former governor to give the materials to the College.

The College is "pleased and grateful that Governor Godwin will give his papers and other items to William and Mary for permanent retention in the Earl Gregg Swem Library," said President Graves.

"The materials will be a rich source of knowledge for historians and other scholars now and in the future, for his unparalleled career of leadership and public service merits their special attention."

Godwin's papers will join those of several other 20th century Virginia leaders who have given their papers to William and Mary. They include former governors William M. Tuck and John Garland Pollard, U.S. Senator A. Willis Robertson, and Congressman Scheyler Otis Bland.

At the time of the transfer of the Godwin papers, which is expected to take place in about six months, a formal document of transfer will spell out the restrictions -- if any -- that will be placed on access to the papers.

A. Gordon Brooks, executive assistant to Godwin, will supervise the transfer of the papers.

Godwin first entered public service in 1948 when he was elected to the Virginia House of Delegates. In 1954, he was elected to the Senate, and in 1961 he assumed the office of Lieutenant Governor.

In 1966, the College conferred an honorary degree of doctor of laws on Godwin. In 1972, the Society of the Alumni honored Godwin with the Alumni Medallion.

Ernest L. Boyer, U.S. Commissioner of Education, will give the 1978 Charter Day address and participate in a conference on public education here, February 10-11.

Proposed State Budget For 1978-80 Includes Salary Increases For Staff

A one-step increase effective July 1 for all permanent classified employees, and larger State contributions to employee Blue Cross-Blue Shield costs, are among features of the proposed 1978-80 State budget now being reviewed by the General Assembly.

The budget gives the College, for educational and general purposes, only 86.3% of what had been requested. Unless increased by the General Assembly, the E&G budget is the tightest in recent years.

The proposed budget was offered Thursday by outgoing Governor Mills E. Godwin, Jr. It contained no proposal for a tax increase.

No funding is included for cost-of-living salary increases in 1979 for classified employees, nor for faculty. Increases that year would be reviewed at the next session of the legislature.

Among features of the budget are:

*Funding for a new physical plant complex at William and Mary, costing $928,750, for the buildings and grounds, housekeeping and maintenance, warehousing and Campus Police operations. The building, which would make use of the old laundry building, would replace the old Quonset huts.

*Maintenance and operation budgets totaling $26,494,680 for the first year and $27,214,205 for the second year. The State will fund only 49.3% of the budget for the first year, and 48.9% the second year. Income from tuition, fees, and other sources will provide more than 50% of the budget both years.

*A decline in funding for instruction of $117,700 the second year of the budget, as compared to the first. The decrease is attributable to the reduction in faculty positions which State guidelines have forecast.

In related matters, at least a one-year delay appears likely on proposed reductions in State retirement benefits. The delay was informally agreed upon following a long public hearing January 5 before a legislative subcommittee which is studying the retirement program.

The proposal to reduce benefits by about one-third was prepared after a study showed that an increasing number of covered employees were taking home more money after retirement than before. The reduction is also in response to massive increases in the State's share of Social Security contributions for its employees, under new federal plans.

After more than 50 persons testified against the benefit reductions, including Del. George Grayson of Williamsburg, the committee reportedly decided the proposal needs further study. Others attending the hearing were President Graves, Budget Director Dennis Cogle and Personnel Director Irving Robitshek.

Newsmakers

The professional appointments, lectures, achievements and publications of William and Mary faculty and staff are featured regularly in this column.

Faculty members in all schools and departments and professional staff in all offices are invited to submit written notices of appropriate professional activities to the News Office, 308 Old Chemistry Building.

It is the policy of the William and Mary News to include only activities of a professional capacity to an audience directly related to the speaker's field of expertise. Attendance at conferences will be included only if a faculty member or administrator has contributed to the program in a significant way, such as delivering a paper or address, or chairing a session.

Scott C. Whitney, professor of law, delivered a paper entitled, "The Impact of Pending Amendments to the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide (FIFRA) Act," to a Washington meeting of the Toxic Substances Control Conference, December 8-9. The conference was organized by Government Institutes, Inc. in cooperation with Pollution Engineering Magazine. Papers delivered at the conference are to be published in book form early this year.

Two recent articles by Doug Rendleman, professor of law, are "Chapters of the Civil Jury," in the Kentucky Law Journal, and "Civilizing Pornography: The Case for an Exclusive Obscenity Nuisance Statute," in the University of Chicago Law Review.

Among those attending the annual convention of the Association of American Law Schools in Atlanta in December were Dean William B. Spong, Jr., Emeric Fischer, Ron Brown, Doug Rendleman and Caroline Heriot, law librarian. Ed McConnell, director of the National Center for State Courts, and Charles Cullen, editor of the Papers of John Marshall, also participated in panels on judicial administration and legal history, while Professor Fischer participated in a panel on summer sessions abroad.

Lawrence Goodwyn, James Pinckney Visiting Professor of History, has been named one of 21 judges for the 1978 National Book Awards. The awards are presented annually for books written or translated by Americans and which have contributed significantly to human awareness, the vitality of American culture and the spirit of excellence.

Goodwyn has been named to the Book Awards panel responsible for selecting five nominees and choosing the winner in the Contemporary Thought category.

Goodwyn's own most recent publication, Democratic Promise: The Populist Moment in America, was a 1977 NBA nominee in History.

English Professor Scott Donaldson has been appointed a Visiting Fellow at Princeton University's Department of English for the spring semester. He will be conducting research there on 20th century American novelist F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Donaldson's taped review of Morley Callaghan's novel Close to the Sun Again was recently broadcast on the "Arts in Review" program of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

This spring Donaldson will serve as essay judge in the Irene Leache Memorial literary contest.

His essay, "Hemingway's Morality of Compensations," which originally appeared in American Literature, has been reprinted by the U.S. Information Agency for use in a series of seminar and lecture programs in India.

James M. Yankovich, dean of the School of Education, has been elected to the board of directors of the Virginia Association of the Colleges of Teacher Education. Association members meet monthly to discuss current issues and developments in teacher preparation and placement. As a member of the board of directors, Yankovich will be concerned with developing association programs and policies.

"The Mythical Portrait of Governor Francis Nicholson," an article by Bruce T. McCully, professor of history emeritus, was published in the October issue of the Virginia Magazine of History and Biography.

James C. Livingston, dean of the undergraduate program, attended the annual meeting of the American Academy of Religion in San Francisco, December 27-31. Livingston served as convener of a session on Culture-Protestantism and Roman Catholic Modernism: 1890-1914, and edited the printed papers for the meeting. He also presented a series of invited theses for discussion for the Consultation on Roman Catholic Modernism. Livingston will remain on the steering committee of the 19th Century Theology Group and will edit its newsletter, The Gyre.

W. L. Bynum of the mathematics and computer science department, presented a paper entitled "Normal Structure and the Banach-Mazur Distance Coefficient" at the annual winter meeting of the American Mathematical Society, held earlier this month in Atlanta.

During Early Stages of College Community Campaign

Faculty, Staff Pledges Total $239,413

Faculty, staff and faculty emeriti have pledged $239,413 in donations and testamentary gifts to the Campaign for the College, during the first weeks of the fund-raising effort among members of the College community.

A 39-member committee of faculty volunteers began the College community solicitation in early December. To date, $217,722 has been pledged by 98 members of the William and Mary faculty. The total includes a testamentary gift, reported earlier, by Mrs. Gladys Guy. The widow of William G. Guy, former chemistry department chairman, Mrs. Guy has bequeathed her home to the College.

The College Development Office has taken an early lead in staff contributions, with pledges totaling $21,691. The total represents 100 percent participation by development staff. Formal solicitation among staff members throughout the College will begin this month.

Frank A. MacDonald, professor of philosophy emeritus who heads the faculty Campaign committee, said he is pleased with the initial results of the faculty solicitation.

The committee is emphasizing 100 percent participation rather than a specific dollar goal. "Gifts to the Campaign will benefit William and Mary students and faculty for generations," said MacDonald. "We hope that faculty will contribute according to their circumstances, but our primary aim is to persuade all faculty members to make a gift. Participation by the entire faculty is a very powerful argument in soliciting outside funds," he said.

"There is a history of contribution by faculty members to scholarship funds for worthy students, and at least one

Ceramics by Marlene Jack of the Fine Arts Department were among the works chosen for display in the Virginia Museum's "Virginia Craftsmen 1977" exhibition, held in December and earlier this month. The art objects, representing trends in aesthetics and workmanship, were selected for exhibition by Lloyd E. Herman, director of the Renwick Gallery of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

"Mezentius the Isolated Hero," an article by classics professor Ward Jones, has been published in the current issue of Vergilius, the annual publication of the Vergilian Society of America.

The Virginia Gazette, its history and present state, is the subject of a 10-minute television interview with Carl Dolmetsch, professor of English, which will be televised on the program "PS23" on the Richmond PBS-TV station, WVCE, Channel 23, on Tuesday, Jan. 31, at 7 p.m. and repeated on the same channel on Saturday, Feb. 4, at 7:30 a.m. Dolmetsch has served since January 1973 as music critic and columnist for the Gazette, which is America's oldest weekly newspaper, founded in Williamsburg in 1736 by William Parks. The interview was conducted by Carlton Brooks, a 1968 graduate of the College and a member of the Channel 23 staff.

Dolmetsch served as one of three judges for the annual district auditions of the Metropolitan Opera National Council Middle Atlantic Region, held January 15 at the Chrysler Museum in Norfolk. The other judges were Peter Mark, artistic director of the Virginia Opera Association, and Florence Quivar, Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano and herself a recent auditions winner. The winner will compete in the regional semifinals in Washington, D.C. in March.

Ross Weeks, Jr., assistant to the President and director of Information Services, has received accreditation from the Public Relations Society of America, the professional organization for that field. Accreditation is granted experienced practitioners following written and oral examinations designed to test their professional competency.

Senior Ken Smith, Football Player, Wins NCAA Award

Ken Smith, a senior from Mt. Holly, N.J., and a two time Academic All American defensive halfback, is one of 15 recipients in the nation of an NCAA post-graduate scholarship.

The $1,500 scholarship is to be used for graduate study, immediately following completion of the undergraduate degree. Smith, a pre-med student, is majoring in chemistry and psychology and plans to go to medical school.

Smith led the football team in interceptions this past season with seven. He was a three year starter at cornerback, after making the squad as a walk-on his freshman year and earning a scholarship in his second season.

In addition to his outstanding accomplishments on the football field, Smith is also a starting pitcher on the baseball team.

fund, the Martin Luther King Scholarship, was entirely initiated by and has been principally supported by the faculty," said MacDonald.

The Campaign goal includes $4 million in expendable gifts, $10 million for capital purposes, and $5 million in testamentary gift commitments.

Five endowment funds have been established for gifts from the faculty--General, Arts and Sciences, School of Business Administration, School of Education and the School of Law. The income produced each year from the endowments will be allocated by the Endowment Association for purposes recommended by the dean of the program or school and endorsed by the President.

Special Exhibition To Feature College's Role In Surveying

The College's role in the history of 18th century surveying in Virginia will be featured in a special one-day exhibit, January 21, for a meeting of the Virginia Association of Surveyors, January 19-21, at the Williamsburg Conference Center.

The exhibit is being prepared by Sarah Hughes, who received her doctoral degree in history from the College in 1975, and by Margaret Cook, curator of manuscripts at Swem Library.

Hughes, who has been commissioned by the Virginia Surveyors Foundation to write a history of surveying in colonial Virginia, will also give the principal address at the Saturday luncheon meeting of the surveyors.

William and Mary's role in the history of surveying began 285 years ago.

In its charter of 1693, the College was granted the office of surveyor-general, and College officials were entitled to collect one-sixth of the surveyors' fees. The President and Masters had the power to select surveyors during much of the eighteenth century and after the Revolution publicly examined them.

On display will be the minutes for the October 14, 1773, faculty meeting at which Thomas Jefferson was appointed surveyor of Albemarle County. Also on display will be the certificate appointing John West assistant surveyor of Fairfax County in 1749, the same year the President and Masters selected George Washington surveyor of Culpeper County.

Swem Library has several important collections of 18th century surveyors in its manuscript collection, most notably the papers of Robert Preston, surveyor of Washington County, and those of three generations of the Cabell family, surveyors in Albemarle and Amherst Counties.

Items from each of the collections will be on display, illustrating the processes of surveying--from the warrant issued by the Secretary's office in Williamsburg to the patent for the land signed by the governor.

College's Adult Skills Program Tackles Problem Of Widespread Functional Illiteracy Among Adults

Ever notice the difference between a menu from a hotel dining room and one from a fast food chain--besides the prices, that is?

The difference is pictures. The hotel dining room is pretty sure that its clientele will have no trouble sorting out the entrees from the desserts. Many who stop at fast food outlets need pictures to help them order their food.

A national study has shown that an estimated 26,000-28,000 adults could not address a letter well enough so that the letter would not encounter difficulties in the postal system.

A projected 34,002,000 adults could not write a check on an account without making an error so serious that the check would be processed incorrectly by the bank or could not be processed at all.

A lone car on a winding road that parallels a new superhighway may be a driver enjoying the scenery, but it may be a driver who cannot read--someone taking a circuitous route to avoid the route instructions on a superhighway which he cannot read.

For the functionally illiterate--an estimated 20 percent of the American population--the written word is a huge stumbling block in life.

Over 3,000 people in Williamsburg and James City County are part of that 20 percent who cannot read at all or who can read only with great difficulty.

About three years ago a modest program was started on campus to help alleviate this problem locally. It doesn't pretend to tackle the national scope of the problem.

About 90 adults have been enrolled in the program since its inception, and it has helped seven to pass the high school equivalency test.

The program has the services of some 40 undergraduate students in education before they embark on student teaching and a classroom career.

Dean Yankovich of the School of Education calls it a "grand opportunity," when a university is able to fulfill its professional obligation to its students and community to the benefit of both. Such is the Adult Skills Program.

"As I see it," said Yankovich, "it is a professional obligation that the university has to provide its services to people who in some cases are not served by other institutions. We simply have the expertise, and when we can, at the same time accommodate our institutional obligations to students, it is a very appropriate expenditure of time and effort."

The hardest part for most adults is coming to the program and telling a stranger about their lack of reading skill.

Yankovich is enthusiastic in his support of the program and expresses pride in the fact that it came out of a volunteer effort and is largely sustained by volunteer help.

The Adult Skills Program is housed in a room on the first floor of Morton Hall, which looks very much like a language laboratory. Study carrels in the middle of the room are tagged with the name of each student and his or her tutor. Adults come when they can, making their study schedule fit around home and job responsibilities. Many employers show their support of the program by letting workers have time off the job to attend tutoring sessions on campus.

Participants work at their own pace. For some, it means a few months to brush up on reading and math skills in order to take the high school equivalency test. For others, it is a longer process. Adults who come to the program range in age from 16 to 64. Some have had a few years of schooling, others dropped out in junior high school, and one has never been to school.

Donald Lashinger, associate professor in the School of Education, and Rita Welsh, a former graduate student in Education, are directors of the program.

The hardest part for most adults is coming to the program and telling a stranger about their lack of reading skill. They know they have to tell the truth. They may have bluffed their way through situations in the past and never admitted their problem, but to enroll in the program, they have to end the sham.

Adults enroll for a number of reasons, but they share a common goal of seeking an improved lifestyle.

One man enrolled because he wanted to be able to write a letter to his son. Another found his third grader had progressed beyond him, and he wanted to be able to catch up and help him with his school work. A mother with a first grade education has a daughter in the sixth grade. She wants to be able to read her child's report card. She also needs to be able to read at her job, where she now relies on the pictures on cans to help her gather pantry supplies. A delivery man needed to learn how to read to be able to make his rounds. For him the ASP made a color coded map of the city until he could learn to identify the names of streets and buildings.

Several women enrolled had had babies in high school and dropped out of classes. Until recently there was not enough flexibility in high school schedules to accommodate pregnancy, so many young mothers dropped out and often did not return.

Several adults enrolled in the program are college employees; others are employed at Colonial Williamsburg and other businesses in the area; some are unemployed hoping to enhance their chances in the job market with better skills.

Participants in the program also include those for whom English is a second language. One of those enrolled is the tutor at the Spanish House on campus, a university student in Spain who would like to improve his English. His tutor is an exchange student from England. He enjoys the international aspects of the situation and is anxious to try out his British accent when he returns home.

Initial work for the Adult Skills Program began with a written proposal in the fall of 1974. Funds were obtained the following spring from the James City County Community Action Agency and the U.S. Department of Labor. Both Mrs. Welsh and Lashinger are continuing to scour the lists of public and private foundations for future funding after the current grant runs out in June.

Initial work for the program was done by Wesley Wilson, Coordinator for Minority Affairs, and the Director of the College's Personnel Office, Irving Robitshek.

A source of great pride at ASP is the newsletter produced with contributions from adults in the program. These range from information about their jobs, to recipes, to a somewhat anxious report from a student who had received a promotion and was facing new challenges.

Reports coming back to ASP from supervisors about improved skills and attitudes on the job and the loyalty of staff and students make ASP a good idea whose time has come.

Robert Engman, Noted Sculptor, To Lecture Here

Sculptor Robert Engman will give a lecture on "Art in the University Environment," Thursday, January 19, at 7:30 p.m. in 201 Andrews Hall. The public is invited to attend.

Engman is co-chairman of the Fine Arts Department at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. His lecture in Williamsburg is sponsored by the College's Fine Arts Department.

Engman's works are part of several museum collections, including the Hirshorn Museum and Sculpture Garden, Museum of Modern Art, Whitney Museum and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, as well as many private collections.

The artist has both studied and taught at Yale University. For ten years he was associated with the Stable Gallery in New York. Engman has worked with Joseph Albers, Buckminster Fuller and Louis Kahn.

His sculpture is currently being shown at Old Dominion University in Norfolk and in April will be exhibited at the Fishbach Gallery in New York.

REVISED SALARIES FOR CLASSIFIED EMPLOYEES

The Legislature previously expressed an intent to make salaries of State classified employees competitive with those of outside employers. In keeping with the intent of the Legislature, the Governor approved, effective January 1, 1978, revised salary ranges for selected classifications. Classes of employees at William and Mary are shown below. Those that are eligible for a two-step increase are indicated by an asterisk (*); all other classes listed are eligible for a one-step increase. Eligible employees will be considered for the increase to be effective January 1, 1978 contingent on satisfactory job performance as evidenced by previous service ratings.

Every effort is being made to expeditiously process the salary increase for eligible employees, and approved increases will be retroactive to January 1, 1978 without any net loss in pay to affected employees.

Paul Taylor Modern Dance Company Slates Second Performance Here

The Paul Taylor Dance Company will give a second public performance here, February 3, in addition to their scheduled Concert Series performance, February 2.

The two performances are part of a three-day residency during which the troupe will also be giving Master classes to students.

Tickets for the February 3 program, which will be held in Phi Beta Kappa Hall at 8:15 p.m., are $4 for general admission and $3 for William and Mary students, faculty and staff. Tickets will be sold in the Student Activities office in the Campus Center, weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., beginning Wednesday, January 18.

Limited seating may be available for the Thursday evening performance at 8:15 p.m. in Phi Beta Kappa Hall. Any available general admission tickets will be sold at the Phi Beta Kappa box office preceding the performance.

Taylor's company has been widely acclaimed as one of the most outstanding modern dance troupes of our time. New York Times critic Clive Barnes considers it "one of the most exciting, innovative and delightful dance companies in the entire world."

On Thursday, the company will perform four works, all choreographed by Taylor -- "Runes" with music by Gerald Busby, "Aureole" to music by Handel, "Three Epitaphs" danced to the American folk music played by country brass bands at weddings and funerals in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, and "Dust" to music by Francis Poulenc.

Friday's program will feature three different works, each choreographed by Taylor -- "Images" danced to music by Debussy, "Aphrodesiamania" with music of the Renaissance, and "Esplanade" accompanied by music by Bach.

Three of the works -- "Images," "Dust," and "Aphrodesiamania" -- were premiered only last year.

The troupe's appearance at William and Mary is made possible in part by a grant by the Virginia Commission of the Arts and Humanities from funds granted by the National Endowment for the Arts.

Since the company was formed in 1955, Paul Taylor has choreographed over 75 dances for it. He has received the Festival of Nations' International Award for Choreography and twice was the recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship for choreography. In 1967 he was selected for the Capezio Dance Award.

The Paul Taylor Dance Company has enjoyed major television exposure. Last month it was featured in a PBS "Great Performances" production with a program entitled "Dance in America." The CBS network devoted an entire "Repertoire Workshop" to the Company, and in 1971, Taylor choreographed a work for Rudolph Nureyev and Company member Bettie deJong, also shown on CBS.

"Dust," choreographed by Paul Taylor (at right) and first performed in 1977, is among the dances slated for the Company's appearance here, February 2 and 3.

Williamsburg Report

A weekly five-minute interview program produced and marketed to radio stations along the East Coast by the Office of Information Services.

January 16-22

JAMES LAVIN, probably the world's foremost expert on antique Spanish firearms, compares the 18th century Spanish rifle to today's Lincoln Continental. Both represent the extreme in prestige and precision, but cost a small fortune. First-rate guns may have taken up to a year to make and were usually as stylish as a gentleman's clothing and furniture. Lavin also explains why firearms were so treasured, even though they were seldom fired and used primarily for ceremonial hunting excursions.

January 23-29

A. Z. FREEMAN, professor of history, talks about the renowned Samurai sword, the extremely lethal weapon of the ancient Japanese. Samurai swords were said to be the soul of the Samurai warrior, who always carried two of the beautiful weapons tucked in his girdle. Freeman describes the care that was taken in making a sword, and the expense a nobleman would go to in order to own the best sword available.

January 30-February 5

GREGORY CAPELLI, professor of biology, talks about future food sources from the oceans which cover about two-thirds of the earth. He compares harvesting new "crops" in the sea to farming on land. Finally, he describes a small crustacean called a "crill," which may be a popular item on restaurant menus before too long.

Area radio stations that broadcast the Williamsburg Report are WDDY, Gloucester (Saturday, 9:55 a.m.); WYCS, Yorktown (Tuesday, 6 p.m.); and WMBC, Williamsburg (Sunday, 11:15 a.m.).
