David Holmes to Give Baccalaureate Address

David L. Holmes, professor of religion, a church historian who specializes in American religion, will give the baccalaureate sermon for the 1982 Commencement exercises.

The baccalaureate service will be held at 9:30 a.m., Saturday, May 15 in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall.

Cartoonist Gary Trudeau will speak at Commencement exercises, at 2 p.m., Sunday May 16 in William and Mary Hall.

A graduate of Michigan State University, A.B., English, and Columbia University, M.A. English; Holmes received a master's and doctorate degree in religion from Princeton University. He did additional years of study in history and theology at Columbia University and Duke University Divinity School.

He joined the William and Mary faculty in 1965. He has also taught at Carnegie-Mellon University and has been a visiting professor at the University of Virginia for three separate academic years. Holmes served in the U.S. Army both as an enlisted man and an officer.

Known as a strong classroom lecturer, Holmes has been selected on several occasions to receive the Society of the Alumni Teaching Fellowship.

An Episcopalian layman, Holmes is a member of the Editorial Board of the Historical Magazine of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1976 he wrote "The Episcopal Church and the American Revolution," as part of the bicentennial pamphlet series published by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., and wrote the chapter on the fall and revival of the Episcopal tradition in Virginia for the Bicentennial History of the Episcopal Church in Virginia.

Holmes has published articles in numerous journals including The Nation, The Christian Century and Church History. His articles on public policy have appeared on the Op. Ed. pages of the Washington Post and in Preservation News, published by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Holmes has addressed William and Mary alumni chapters in a number of states and two years ago filled in for President Jimmy Carter at the Conference of Deans of University Schools of Engineering meeting in Williamsburg. Carter had to cancel his speaking engagement due to the Iranian crisis.

He has served as secretary of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences and has been president of the William and Mary chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Joining Holmes for dialogue preaching to end the sermon, will be Cathy Michele Allen '79 of Rocky Mount, N.C., a philosophy graduate currently a student at the Duke University Medical School. A President's Aide and a member of Mortar Board while an undergraduate, Miss Allen was awarded the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award for public service at the 1979 commencement.

New Plan Set For Tickets

Tickets for commencement will be ready April 12.

A new plan has been devised this year to monitor tickets to insure the most equitable distribution.

Each graduate is entitled to seven tickets, providing the tickets are picked up by May 12. After May 12, unclaimed tickets will be available on a first-come, first-served basis in James Blair Hall 211.

A ticket table will be set up on the second floor of James Blair Hall beginning April 12, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. to dispense tickets to both graduate and undergraduates. Special arrangements have been made for law and marine science graduates to secure their tickets from their respective schools.

Candidates for degrees do not need tickets.

Commencement announcements will be available beginning April 12 at the College bookstore for 30 cents per copy.

Commencement Ball tickets may be purchased at the Office of the Dean of Students, James Blair 211. Since the capacity of the Campus Center is limited, only 1,000 tickets can be sold. Tickets will be available on a first-come first-served basis, and a limit of four tickets per family has been established by the senior class.

Tickets for the picnic lunch on Saturday, May 15, during Commencement weekend are $4 per person and must also be purchased from Dean Sadler's office. Students with a meal card will be admitted free. Tickets must be purchased by May 7. They will not be sold at the event.

All commencement activities will be accessible to the handicapped. The rear ramp at William and Mary Hall may be used for entry but not parking. Dean Sadler's Office (ext. 4387) will arrange reserved parking for the handicapped at

Official Memoranda

FROM: Thomas A. Graves, Jr.

TO: The Academic Community

RE: Further Studies Recommended by the Financial Study Group

In its November 1981 final report the ad hoc Financial Study Group recommended (I.D.) that further studies be made of four subjects considered by the Financial Study Group, but not explicitly addressed in its formal recommendations. In my acceptance of the report, I stated that "I shall be taking steps to have these four studies pursued prior to the end of this academic year."

The four studies, and the actions which I have taken to implement them, are:

1. Private Funds

Recommendation:

"Every effort should be made to increase the amount of new unrestricted private funds. . . (and) a study should be made to define, so far as is possible, objectives, goals, projections and schedules for the development of such private funds, especially those which could be allocated to Educational and General programs and activities."

Action: This study has been charged to Mr. Jeffrey Shapiro, Director of Planning and Budget in cooperation with the University Advancement Office, the Comptroller's Office, and the Planning and Priorities Committee. I have asked for a report no later than 1 August 1982.

2. Enrollment

Recommendation: "Enrollment increases are often suggested as at least a potential and partial response to financial challenges. . . very little if any fiscal benefit would come to the College in 1982-84 through increases in enrollment beyond present projections. . . (but) what can and should be done about enrollment projections for 1984-86 and beyond is an open question, deserving further study."

Action: This study has been assigned to the Planning and Priorities Committee, a report from which is due 1 July 1982.

3. Summer School Instructional Contracts

Recommendation: The present practice of awarding "firm" contracts for summer school teaching should be examined, against the alternate system of "contingent" contracts.

Action: An ad hoc committee has been established to examine this question, and to report to me by 1 June 1982. It has been directed to address only this particular issue, and not to consider its charge as extending into more general questions regarding Summer School. Its recommendations, whatever they are, will have no effect upon contracts for 1982 Summer School teaching. The ad hoc committee consists of Professors George M. Bass, John W. Conlee, Edward P. Crapol, James R. Haltiner, and Linda Collins Reilly, Chairman.

4. Graduate Assistantships

Recommendation: "Study should be made of the levels and distribution of funds allocated in support of graduate assistantships."

Action: This study has been referred to the Graduate Council with a reporting due date of June 1982. Its recommendations will not have effect on decisions regarding graduate assistantships for 1982-83.

Publishing Opportunities Widened

The Committee on Training in Publishing Procedures has decided to expand its scholarship program for summer publishing training courses, which until now has been restricted to Radcliffe College, to include other institutions.

The Committee offers two grants of up to $1500 each depending on need and the availability of funds to recent graduates of William and Mary who are admitted to one of the following programs for training in publishing procedures in the summer of 1982:

Howard University Book Publishing Program
Publishers Weekly Internship
New York University Diploma Programs in Book and Magazine Publishing
Radcliffe College Publishing Procedures Course

Stanford University Publishing Course
University of Denver Publishing Institute

The deadline for application is May 3. Application forms are available at the Office of Career Planning (Morton 140). Applicants need not be admitted to a program at the time of application, but all awards are contingent upon subsequent admission as a full-time student.

The Student Legal Forum of Marshall-Wythe School of Law will sponsor a talk by Robert F. Horan, Jr., Commonwealth's Attorney for Fairfax County, Fairfax City and Falls Church, at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, April 14, in room 124 of the law school.

Horan, whose area of jurisdiction is by far the largest in the state, will speak on "Courtroom Technique: Criminal Prosecutions."

Aubrey Diamond Selected to Give 1982 Wythe Lecture

Aubrey Diamond, director of the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies at the University of London, and presently visiting professor at the Law School of the University of Virginia, will give the 1982 Wythe Lecture at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

Diamond was born in London and studied law at the London School of Economics, graduating with an LL.B. degree in 1950. He was awarded an LL.M. degree in 1956.

He qualified as a practicing lawyer in 1951 and after some years in full-time practice in London he joined the faculty at the London School of Economics in 1957. Thereafter he remained in part-time practice, and was a partner in a firm of lawyers in Gray's Inn until 1971.

In 1966 he became a Professor of Law in the University of London, but he left the university on appointment by the Lord Chancellor as a Law Commissioner, a member of the five-person national law reform body for England and Wales. As a Law Commissioner he was primarily concerned with reforms in commercial law, contract law and conflict of laws, but he was also actively involved with reforms in criminal law, family law, torts and real property. On the expiration of his term of office as a Law Commissioner in 1976, he was appointed to his present post.

Diamond has taught law as a visiting professor at the University of East Africa, Stanford University Law School and the University of Melbourne Law School in Australia.

Diamond has been selected as the Wythe Lecturer for 1981-82 by the faculty of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

The annual lecture series was established in 1976, the 250th year following the birth of George Wythe, and the inaugural lecture for that academic year was delivered by Francis Allen, former dean of Michigan Law School and then president of the Association of American Law Schools.

Other lecturers have included the Hon. Paul C. Reardon, retired Justice of the

Government Students Poll Virginia Voters by Phone

Sixteen months after giving Ronald Reagan a decisive victory over Jimmy Carter in the 1980 presidential election and eight months before the 1982 mid-term elections, Virginia voters appear to be sharply divided in their appraisal of the Reagan administration's performance, according to a statewide telephone poll conducted by three government professors at the College.

Alan Abramowitz, John McGlennon and Ronald Rapoport of the government faculty directed students who interviewed by telephone a scientifically selected sample of 639 eligible voters throughout the state of Virginia between Feb. 23 and March 18.

Recent national polls have found a fairly even division in positive and negative evaluations of President Reagan's performance. The split also appears in Virginia: 50 percent of the respondents in the William and Mary poll rated President Reagan's performance as either "excellent" (12 percent) or "pretty good" (38 percent); while 45 percent rated the President's performance as "only fair" (29 percent) or "poor" (16 percent). Only five percent of the survey respondents had no opinion on the President's performance.

While the overall results of the poll showed that Virginians are fairly evenly divided in their evaluations of President Reagan's performance, there were sharp differences in appraisals of the President's performance along partisan, ideological, and racial lines.

Democrats gave the President much lower ratings than either Republicans or independents. Conservatives gave the President a much more favorable rating than liberals. Black Virginians, who make up 15 percent of the sample, were overwhelmingly negative in their evaluations of President Reagan: Not a single black respondent in the survey gave the President a rating of "excellent," and 43 percent of black respondents rated the President's performance as "poor."

Evaluations of President Reagan's performance were strongly influenced by public perceptions of economic conditions and trends. Fully 61 percent of respondents in the poll felt that economic conditions had deteriorated in the previous year, and these respondents had a more negative view of the President's performance than those who felt that the economy had remained stable or improved.

However, Virginians appear to be fairly optimistic about future economic trends and about the impact of the President's economic policies, according to the poll results. Some 43 percent expect the economic conditions to improve next year, while only 25 percent expect the economy to deteriorate.

In addition, 48 percent of those polled thought that the Reagan administration's economic policies would help the economy, compared with 25 percent who thought the economy would be hurt by the administration's policies, and 12 percent who thought that the President's program would have little or no impact on the economy.

Although a majority of Virginians surveyed thought that economic conditions in the nation had deteriorated during the preceding year, only 24 percent indicated that their own family's financial situation had become worse during this period. According to McGlennon, this probably reflects the fact that Virginia's economy has not been hit as hard by the recession as that of many other states.

In fact, says McGlennon, almost as many respondents indicated that their personal financial situation had improved (23 percent) as reported that it had declined. However, one respondent in five did report that someone in their immediate family was currently out of work and looking for a job.

Looking ahead to the coming year, 35 percent of those polled expected their family's financial situation to improve, while 19 percent expected it to deteriorate.

In general, those respondents who were optimistic about economic trends were much more positive in their evaluations of President Reagan's performance than those who were pessimistic. Among those expecting their family's financial situation to improve in the next year, 63 percent rated the President's performance as "excellent" or "pretty good." Among those expecting their family's situation to become worse, only 26 percent gave Mr. Reagan a rating of "excellent" or "pretty good."

Although they remain fairly optimistic about the future effects of the President's economic program, Virginians do appear to share the doubts expressed by other Americans in recent national polls about the fairness of the administration's economic policies.

Judith Ewell Wins OAS Award

Judith Ewell, associate professor of history and a scholar of South American politics, has won an essay prize offered by the Organization of American States for a treatise on Venezuelan diplomatic history. The announcement of the award was made for the OAS by Roberto Etchepareborda, director, Department of Cultural Affairs. The award includes a prize of $600 and consideration of the winning essay for publication in the Inter-American Bibliographical Review, which the OAS publishes.

"I chose four recent books on Venezuelan diplomatic history, written by Venezuelans, and argued that they—taken together—give a view of Venezuelan diplomacy from 1810 to 1939," says Ewell of her essay.

Two of the works concern Venezuelan participation in international organizations, including the League of Nations and the 1939 Inter-American Conference on the Consolidation of Peace, and suggest that even a small, weak, poor nation can exercise some degree of choice and have some degree of influence in such organizations.

"This influence can be achieved," says Ewell, "even though the international organizations generally were created more to legitimize the settlements made by the great powers than they were to afford smaller nations an opportunity to participate in multinational political decisions."

Another book on U.S.-Venezuelan relations in the 1810-1899 period was used by Ewell because, she says, "it highlights the rather low level and materialistic motivations of U.S. consuls in Venezuela in the 19th century." The author argues that U.S. diplomatic representatives were only too ready to press claims of U.S. citizens against the Venezuelan government because they often received a portion of the settlement when it was made. All of Venezuela's experience in dealing with the great powers from 1810 to 1939 provided a background against which they honed their diplomatic objectives and skills, asserts Ewell.

The four books reviewed by Ewell, all by Venezuelan authors, are: "Venezuela 1902, la crisis fiscal y el bloqueo," by Manuel Rodriguez Campos; "Historia de las relaciones diplomáticas entre Venezuela y los Estados Unidos 1810-1899," by Armando Rojas; "La Política de Venezuela en la Conferencia Interamericana de Consolidación de la Paz," by Fermín Toro Jimenez; and "Venezuela en la Sociedad de las Naciones: 1920-1939," by Freddy Vivas Gallardo.

A frequent visitor to Venezuela, Ewell received a Fulbright award to teach there in 1979-80. She is currently working on a book about Venezuela in the 20th century for a British publisher and is author of the recently published "Indictment of a Dictator," about the extradition and trial of Marcos Perez who was overthrown as dictator of Venezuela in 1958.

When asked whom they thought would benefit the most from the President's economic policies, 56 percent of those questioned by the William and Mary students said that the wealthy would receive the greatest benefit, compared with 23 percent who felt that all groups in society would benefit equally, and 7 percent who felt that the middle class would receive the greatest benefit.

Only one percent of the respondents felt that the poor would be the principal beneficiaries of the President's economic program.

If economic conditions improve in the next few months, as the President has predicted, these concerns about the fairness of the administration's policies will probably decline, says McGlennon. "However, should the economy continue to deteriorate, such concerns may well prove very damaging to the President's overall popularity," he adds.

Despite their disagreement about President Reagan's job performance, most Virginians continue to like the President personally. When asked to give an overall opinion of Mr. Reagan, 69 percent of those questioned rated him either "very" or "somewhat" favorably, compared with 24 percent who rated him "very" or "somewhat" unfavorably.

The President was given high marks by Virginians for his honesty and leadership ability -- 43 percent of respondents rated him as "outstanding" or "above average" in honesty, while 47 percent rated him as "outstanding" or "above average" in leadership ability.

In contrast, only 26 percent of these respondents rated the President as "outstanding" or "above average" in his concern about the problems of the average citizen, and only 21 percent rated him as "outstanding" or "above average" in his understanding of complex issues.

Thus Virginians appear to view the President as a strong and trustworthy leader, but they have doubts about his grasp of the issues and his concerns about ordinary citizens' problems.

All of the interviews were conducted by William and Mary students, who also helped prepare many of the questions included in the survey. Telephone numbers were chosen by random digit dialing, a technique which provides a more representative sample of the electorate than samples from telephone directories.

In the near future, McGlennon, Abramowitz and Rapoport plan to conduct polls dealing with attitudes toward current state and national issues, and with the upcoming elections for the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives in Virginia.

Russia House Hosts Mihajlo Nihajlov

The Russian House will present a lecture by the well-known author and advocate of international human rights, Mihajlo Nihajlov at 5 p.m., Friday, April 16 in the Russian House.

Mihajlov will take as his topic, "A Dissident's Life."

Born and raised by Russian parents in Yugoslavia, Mihajlov became famous as a freelance writer for magazines, newspapers and radio, after several arrests had jeopardized his career as a Professor of Modern Russian Literature at Zagreb University, 1963-65.

Currently a Visiting Professor at the Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, Mihajlov has been lecturing since 1978 in Europe, Asia and the United States, where he first became widely known through his book "Moscow Summer 1964." He has published several books and hundreds of articles in newspapers and magazines.

'Elephant Man' Challenges Costume Designer

by Sandy Nickerson '84

Have you ever been frustrated sewing on a button? Or hemming a pair of pants?

Imagine sewing for 16 people with a three-week deadline - and not minor mending but designing, patterning, cutting and assembling 19th century bustled dresses and tailored frock coats.

Lorraine Venberg, costume designer for the William and Mary Theatre, has such a task facing her. "The Elephant Man," a drama by Bernard Pomerance, will be opening April 14 in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall all too soon.

Ms. Venberg has been able to create her basic design concepts for the production by starting with many hours of research on John Merrick, the elephant man; Treeves, the doctor who takes him under his care; the society of England in the 1880's and the London social season of the time.

Once the design concepts are settled through production meetings with the directors and lighting, scenic and properties designers, the costume designer must create renderings which are usually pencil, ink or watercolor sketches of the costumes.

From these drawings the costumes are created. They are often followed so closely that even the number of buttons on the renderings are duplicated.

Also during this first phase, Ms. Venberg and her assistant designer, Mike Lazo, a theatre and government major, took the measurements of the cast. The meetings give the designer a better chance to acquaint herself with the actors and actresses and to determine the physical build, coloring and character interpretation of the cast members.

Often, seeing the actors may determine the color and style of clothing to be used. Ms. Venberg explains that adjustments sometimes have to be made to make period clothes flattering to contemporary body shapes. "Cabaret," she said, was a case in point. The dropped waistlines of the 1920s was very unflattering to most women in the cast, so Ms. Venberg raised them a little higher than was historically accurate to achieve a more pleasing affect.

After the measurements are taken, a basic bodice pattern is constructed for each character out of brown paper and then muslin. The muslin basic is then fitted on the actor, and adaptations or corrections are made. Lines are drawn on the basic pattern indicating necklines, waistlines, and any special decorative notes.

During these initial phases, the designer and assistant are shopping for materials.

While most of the material for "The Elephant Man," was purchased in Richmond, more theatrical or "glitzy" shows may require designers to make trips to New York City, where fabric can be found cheaper and in more variety. The materials chosen are selected on the basis of color, texture, pattern and draping qualities (how the fabric moves and flows). Not only must the period setting of the play be taken into consideration, the designer must also coordinate the costume with the lighting design, scenic colors, and the costumes of other actors in the same scene.

If all goes well, the costume is sewn together and fitted once more on the actor. Then the final touches are made; such as hems and trims. For the society gowns of "The Elephant Man," the elegant touches may take many hours before the costumes are finally finished.

For the first time in William and Mary Theatre history, a television commercial advertising "The Elephant Man" was videotaped to air on a local television station. The 30-second ads put even greater pressure on the costume staff to provide finished costumes of three major characters for camera close-ups.

The William and Mary Theatre is fortunate to have an extensive stock room with hundreds of costumes on the racks. Many of the men's clothes for "The Elephant Man," have been taken from this collection.

Ironically, the majority of the costume budget for "The Elephant Man," has been spent on costumes for the women in the play, although they spend only a few minutes on stage. Because these characters come from the upper strata of the social set, they had to be dressed richly and elegantly. The period dresses in the theatre's collection are considered antique "originals" and are too delicate to be used on stage again.

Since the period of the play is the late 1880s, costumes must include steel-boned corsets, also constructed in the costume shop, petticoats with miles of ruffles, bustles, and hats. Ms. Venberg describes it as a "frilly and contrived" period when there were "many flippers and do-dahs on the costumes."

Dress parade is one of the major final deadlines for the costume shop. This is an opportunity for the director, and the lighting and scenic designers to see how the colors, textures and movement of the fabrics and construction will affect the stage space.

There will be a touch of homecoming and the contribution of local talent mixed in with the rhythms of established gospel music when the Ebony Expressions present their spring concert at 6:30 p.m., Sunday, April 11 in the Campus Center Ballroom.

This concert is open to the public. There is no admission charge.

"Take Me Back," the traditional theme song of the Expressions, will be sung under the direction of former director Mitzie Keyes of Virginia Beach. A 1981 graduate of the College, Keyes is a graduate student in sociology at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond. Daisy Wallace '81 of Portsmouth, another Ebony Expressions alumna, also will be back for the concert.

The program will include "Never Alone" from the musical "Fame," as well as gospel songs made famous by James Cleveland, Andre Crouch and other prominent gospel entertainers. An original song entitled "Fire," by Gjoh John Guyton, a graduate student at Hampton Institute, will also be included on the program.

The Ebony Expressions hope to be wearing new robes for the Sunday concert. A recent drive to raise funds for robes was successfully completed and robes have been ordered.

There are currently 16 members in the Ebony Expressions who get together regularly to enjoy a sense of camaraderie as well as a fondness for gospel music.

Although the group is modest in size, 16 members, there are no plans for the group to become a large-sized choir.

The group distributes flyers on campus at the beginning of the year inviting singers to join, and explaining that the group is an opportunity for Black students to get together and learn more about the gospel music tradition which has been an important aspect of Black history.

Rhonda Gillespie of Newport News, current director of the group, says that because of the variety of backgrounds and religions of Black students on campus, the gospel tradition is not always familiar to them.

The group started in 1975 under the leadership of Timothy Almond, a music student at the College, and was known as the Black Student Organization Choir. In 1978 they broke away from the BSO to become an independent organization with a new name.

Gillespie says she doesn't know how or why the name was picked, but she guesses Miss Keyes had a hand in the decision.

"We've had our ups and downs," says Gillespie, "but we've reorganized, got back together and have been strong for the past two years."

The group is popular with local audiences and maintains a busy performance schedule. They practice each Tuesday evening in the Campus Center and double rehearsals around concert time.

They sang at the week-long Celebration, marking the opening of the new wing of the Williamsburg Regional Public Library and have sung at benefits at many churches in the Williamsburg and Newport News area. On campus they have performed for "A Change of Pace," a weekly coffee house program that has been established to provide alternative student entertainment, sans loud music, sans alcohol.

The Ebony Expressions plan a trip to perform in Washington, D.C. this fall for a special church homecoming festival.

The Ebony Expressions do not consider themselves exclusively a gospel group although gospel music dominates their repertoire. They have performed music from "The Wiz," and "Milk and Honey," but mostly they sing gospel.

Many musical directors would envy Gillespie's recruitment record. So far, she says, the Expressions haven't found anyone coming to tryout who doesn't have a good singing voice. The job is to find where their special talents will best fit into the overall tone quality of the group.

Richard Bland Hosts Diplomats

Eduardo Z. Romualdez, Philippine ambassador to this country since 1971, will be the first of three ambassadors speaking in April at Richard Bland College, a branch of the College in Petersburg as part of an International Forum Program.

He will be heard at 7:45 p.m. Wednesday, April 7, in Ernst Hall with a question-answer period to follow.

Ambassador Romualdez's appearance will be followed on April 21 by Ernesto Rivas-Gallont, ambassador from El Salvador. Concluding the Fourth International Forum on April 29 will be H.E. Chief A.Y. Eke, ambassador from Nigeria.

Originated and sponsored by Dr. John Blair, a historian with Richard Bland College since 1967, the Forum is open to the public without charge.

Lorraine Venberg

Usually, the costumers make a list during this review of all the necessary finishing touches needed on the costumes. During the final days before opening, the list seems to get longer and longer, until finally, on opening night, everything falls into place, completed and ready to go on stage.

Ms. Venberg has been designing for the William and Mary Theatre for two years. She has worked with the Utah Shakespeare Festival, the Three River Shakespeare Festival in Pittsburgh, and as designer for the premiere season and spring tour of the Virginia State Ballet. She is returning again this summer to the Virginia Shakespeare Festival as resident costumer and costume designer.

Double Endorsement for Clara Roane Brings Second Housekeeping Award

Clara B. Roane received the endorsement of her supervisor and the recommendation of the staff who work in Adair Gymnasium as winner of the Housekeeping Employee of the Month award for March.

She was praised by her supervisor, Raymond Wallace, as the type of person he can depend on when "he comes up short," and needs and extra pair of hands, he says. The Adair staff wrote in their commendation that she was an efficient and conscientious worker.

Adair poses many different types of housekeeping challenges for those who work there. There are 15 mirrors in the dance studio and five in the small dance classroom which have to be shined each day. There are 18 showers in the locker room off the pool, plus the pool deck and the training room that have to be kept spic and span.

Although there are many different housekeeping duties to be done than are encountered in an office building, Miss Roane likes her assignment. Working with Miss Roane in Adair is Bernard Edwards who replaced Melvin Jenkins, now assigned to Millington Hall.

When she leaves her worries about people tracking in mud on rainy days and concerns about vandalism in "her building," Miss Roane likes to do some cooking. Pies are her speciality and she has a recipe for rum cake she is planning to try.

Miss Roane lives with her son Chauncey and his family which includes a granddaughter, Lakisha. She has a daughter Delois living in Dallas.

Born in Charles City, Miss Roane has made it her home for her entire life. She is a member of Parrish Hill Baptist Church, and the Charles City Prayer Band and the Charles City Women's Club.

The award presented to Miss Roane Friday morning is her second citation for outstanding performance on the job. She has been an employee of the College for 11 years.

Dennis K. Cogle, assistant vice president for business affairs, poses with Clara Roane and her supervisor Raymond Wallace.

New Computer Speeds Work At VIMS

"Ten times faster and 50 times more useful than our previous model," said Dr. David Evans, pointing to the PRIME 750 computer system installed a year ago at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science.

"It also costs us $1,000 less per month than the batch-card system it replaced," he added.

The new computer presently connects with 30 terminals located throughout the Institute's laboratories at Gloucester Point, "all providing the research staff simultaneous communications with the computer," said Evans. Sixteen more terminals will be added within a month.

Its full capacity is 128 terminals, allowing a margin for future growth as the Institute's needs expand. Each terminal is an access mechanism, complete with visual screen and keyboard, all wired to the central system.

The computer is used primarily for statistical and mathematical analyses by the marine scientists, according to Evans, who heads computer services and uses at VIMS.

"It analyzes such data as fish population dynamics, fishery landings by year and locality, wave height data, distributions of salinity in Chesapeake Bay, oyster spatfall, species composition of marine life, sand analysis data, nutrient analyses and hydrological data.

"All scientific research involves monumental amounts of data which the scientist must collect, store, retrieve and analyze. The computer is an absolute necessity for this work, and the new VIMS system performs it better than any other we've seen and could afford," Evans added.

The computer has one terminal used to plot data as charts, maps or graphs. These are displayed on a visual screen, allowing the operator to make graphic changes. A pen plotter is also available, used to draw maps, charts and graphs on paper and to plot data on them.

Several brands of microcomputers are also available to VIMS scientists. These can be operated in an independent mode or used as terminals to the main computer system.

The PRIME 750 has a 682-million instant character memory, which includes 2-million in "fast memory" and 680-million in disk storage, according to Evans. Although VIMS was the first State institution to acquire the computer brand, others have since followed.

David A. Evans, associate professor of Marine Science and head of computer services and uses at VIMS, operates the Prime 750 pen plotter, assisted by data entry operator Patricia S. Hall.
