'Fiddler' Next on Theatre Bill

William and Mary Theatre will open the award-winning musical, "Fiddler on the Roof," Feb. 17-19, and 25-26, at 8:15 p.m., with one matinee performance at 2 p.m., Feb. 27 in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall.

The Broadway musical, based on Sholom Aleichem's stories, with the book by Joseph Stein, music by Jerry Bock and lyrics by Sheldon Harnick, is about a poor Jewish man, Tevye, his wife, Golde, and their five daughters, all of whom live in a small Jewish community in Tsarist Russia at the turn of the century.

While it played on Broadway, "Fiddler" won Tony and Drama Critics' awards. It opened in 1964 and closed in 1972 after 3,242 performances, making it the longest-running Broadway musical in history. Showtunes include "Matchmaker, Matchmaker," "If I Were A Rich Man," "Sunrise, Sunset," and "Tradition."

The William and Mary production directed by Louis Catron of the department of theatre and speech, features a cast of 51, including a chorus of 28.

George Jack, will play Tevye, and Niki Ryan, his wife Golde. The couple's five daughters are being played by Judith Clarke as Tzeitel; Alison Wood as Hodel; Joy Dibble as Chava; Vicki Ellis as Shprintze, and Nancy Lowry as Bielke.

Set designer for the show is Jerry Bledsoe, who directed the November production of "Tartuffe." Richard Palmer, artistic director of the William and Mary Theatre is lighting designer. Costumes have been designed by Kevin Bossolono.

Musical direction is by Paul Ranzini, with choreography by Denise Damon.

The Theatre box office in PBK, ext. 4272, is open Monday through Friday, 1 - 6 p.m., and will also be open one hour before curtain on performance dates.

In face of rising costs, increased demands

Governor plans for future of Education

Governor Charles S. Robb, addressing the near capacity Charter Day convocation audience in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall Saturday morning, outlined plans for finding solutions to the increasing financial demands of public education in a shrinking economy and the need for streamlining and eliminating costly duplications. (see p. 4 - 5).

The convocation was also an opportunity for presenting honors. Governor Robb received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from the College. Vinson H. Sutlive, Jr., professor of anthropology, received the Thomas Jefferson Award. Morris McCain, assistant professor of government, received the Thomas Jefferson Teaching Award.

The Rectors of the College were recognized for their contributions and several were in on the platform Saturday morning, including the present Rector, Herbert V. Kelly '40 and past Rectors, W. Brooks George '32, 1966-68; Walter Mason, 1968-70; Ernest Goodrich '35, 1970-72; and John Lee Johnson '28, 1976-78. Two past Rectors, R. Harvey Chappell, Jr., '48, 1972-76; and Edward E. Brickell '50, 1978-82, were unable to attend.

Governor Robb outlined plans for the formation of a special study committee headed by Secretary of Education John Casteen to help find immediate and long-range solutions so the state can maintain its legacy of quality education.

The committee will include among its members, Carter O. Lowance of Williamsburg, former Executive Vice President of the College and an assistant to several Virginia governors.

The committee will also include senior members of the House Appropriations and Education Committee and of the Senate Finance and Education Committee as well as representative presidents of state-supported colleges and universities.

"Our legislators, visitors and educators commit themselves anew each year to the proposition that equality and quality have a common origin," said Robb, touching on the recent agreement amending Virginia's 1978 college desegregation plan. Robb said he was "less than pleased" by certain of the federal demands. . ." He said that in his judgment "sooner or later, both the plaintiffs and the defendants in the Adams litigation will have to face a fact that educators, black and white, know in every state — the O. C. R. /L. D. F. approach simply hasn't succeeded anywhere. What has succeeded — what can succeed here — is good schools that they believe that all of their students deserve to learn and that receive adequate public support. And that is what we have promised."

In introducing the Governor, President Graves spoke of the College's future as it looks ahead to its fourth century and its continuing commitment to the value of a liberal arts education.

"We have at this university a tradition and a foundation of teaching and learning that transcends momentary trends and swings in the pendulum of the economy," said Graves.

"The fundamentals of liberal education, as taught here over the centuries offers a basis of wisdom, of values, and of skills, as

Wellness Center Receives Grant

Dr. Juliette Karow, director of the Student Health Services, received this week a check for $8,000 from the Metropolitan Life Foundation for the new Wellness Program.

The grant is one of five made to academic institutions this year through the Foundation's Student Health Grants Program. A total of $75,000 has been awarded. Evergreen State College, Olympia, Wa., the University of California at Santa Barbara, Xavier University of Louisiana, New Orleans, and Virginia Commonwealth University, Richmond were also grant recipients.

The Foundation instituted these awards in 1980 to stimulate the creation of innovative programs that encourage students to make sound health judgments.

"These grants are intended to help increase students knowledge of the importance of good health and good lifetime health habits," said Metropolitan Life Foundation President Sibyl Jacobson.

"Since college provides an environment for both academic and social life, it is a good place to sponsor programs."

The grant money, said Dr. Karow will be used to print copies of the self-help guide which has been published by the Health Services staff and to provide materials for the self-help room at the center. Dr. Karow hopes to distribute copies of the handbook this year to all students who request them and to distribute them on a regular basis to incoming freshmen in the fall.

Ski Trip to Maine Offers Good Slopes, Good Price

A good snowfall would make conditions ideal, but even without snow, the planned Ski Class to Sunday River Ski area March 5 - 12, will be a good trip for skiers promises Chris Jackson, women's physical education department.

Jackson who is arranging the trip, says that while not as well known as some ski areas, Sunday River has an extensive snow-making facility which assures good skiing. Sunday River has a vertical ascent of 1,750 feet and has been successfully operative this winter, despite the lack of snow which has closed many areas down.

Cost of the trip will range from $249 to $289 and includes transportation (by chartered bus), lessons, lifts, lodging and some meals.

Students may take the class for one P.E. credit but this is not mandatory. The class is geared to all levels of skiers, says Jackson, beginners and advanced and even non-skiers.

Jackson is also extending an invitation to faculty members to make the trip. Special faculty housing at an inexpensive rate is available.

Those planning to make the trip should sign up with Jackson in Adair 102 by Feb. 15, or call her at ext. 4577.

Jackson says similar College-sponsored trips in the past have been highly successful and a lot of fun. Although similar commercial trips this winter have not been totally satisfying to skiers because of the lack of snow, she stresses that Sunday River, because of its snow-making facilities, is able to provide good skiing this late in the season.

Food Co-op

There will be an initial meeting for any members of the college community interested in participating in a pre-order food cooperative in Williamsburg on Tuesday, Feb. 15, at 8 p.m. at the Wesley Foundation at 526 Jamestown Road.

For more information call 253-2310.

Baratin

La Maison Francaise cordially invites everyone to its next baratin on Wednesday, Feb. 9, from 4 - 6 p.m. No matter how well you speak French, come and enjoy the company and conversation.

Seniors and Alumni Plan Sessions for May Graduates

The senior class and the Society of the Alumni are co-sponsoring the third annual "Life After Dog Street," (LADS) sessions — practical "How to" workshops for May graduates, Feb. 15, 16 and 17 at the Alumni House.

Designed to give graduates useful information and help them get settled after leaving campus, LADS is a series of informal rap sessions with area alumni.

Alumni from Williamsburg, the lower Peninsula, Richmond, the Northern Neck and Norfolk will serve as resource persons.

Each evening LADS offers two sessions, one at 6 p.m. and one at 8 p.m. At each program, a panel of alumni representing a variety of fields including banking, health care, insurance and real estate will field questions about getting started as a new graduate, perhaps in a new location, in a new apartment and in a new job.

Seniors have received invitations to one of the sessions and are asked to respond to the Alumni House so adequate arrangements can be made for the sessions.

The LADS program was initiated by a member of the Society's Board of Directors and is planned in conjunction with a committee from the senior class which this year includes Terri Cartwright and Cyndy Nash. Alumni chapter president, Dave Mercer '73, from the Lower Peninsula Chapter; Steve Isaacs '70 from Richmond; Bob Johnson '67 from the Northern Neck Chapter and Randy Duval '75 from Norfolk are enlisting alumni for the program.

LADS is not career oriented but was devised to give graduates the advantage of assistance from alumni who have already successfully made the transition from campus to business and professional fields.

Alumni in banking will discuss the many investment alternatives now available, how to establish credit and the best way to set up an individualized money management program. Students may also ask about their rights as tenants and what is the best way to go about choosing a doctor or dentist. Is it better to rent or buy a car, and what is the most advantageous way of financing a car if you decide to buy one? How much insurance does a young, single person need, what if you're married? These and many other questions are apt to come up during the LADS sessions.

To respond to the LADS invitation and for further details concerning the sessions, please call the program coordinator Diane Hagemann at the Alumni House, ext. 4302, or 229-1693.

Students who come to the 6 p.m.

sessions may opt to stay through the later program if they wish, says Hagemann.

Each panel will include a banker, a lawyer, realtor, investment analyst, a physician and an automobile dealer.

Ph.D. Oral Exam

Alkesh R. Punjabi will take the final oral examination for the Ph.D. degree in physics at 2 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 10 in the conference room of Small. His dissertation topic is "Catastrophes in Elmo Bumpy Torus."

Venture Program

The College VENTURE Program offers full- and part-time paid employment in challenging positions for undergraduate students who want to spend a semester or longer away from William and Mary. Approximately 150-200 jobs are currently available, ranging from working on Martha's Vineyard to working in a public relations firm in New York City.

A VENTURE Program informational meeting will be held Wednesday, Feb. 9 at 4 p.m. in Room D of the Campus Center.

Former VENTURE participants will be featured. For more information contact Carolyn Blackwell, Office of Extramural Programs, The Brafferton, ext. 4354.

Governor charges new committee to come up with proposals to streamline higher education in Virginia

(The following has been excerpted the prepared text of Governor Robb's Charter Day Speech)

I am posing for this committee the hardest set of questions about higher education that I know --

Are our goals still attainable? Can we guarantee equality and quality while living within our means?

Are we trying to do too much? Do we really need so many graduate programs on so many different campuses, for instance? Should we follow advice from many quarters — including only this week the Southern Regional Education Board — by reducing enrollments in medicine, other health science areas, veterinary medicine — perhaps even in law — as we are proposing already to do in dentistry? Are we, in fact, producing more professionals in these fields than we can productively employ? Might strategic reductions free up resources both to assure access and to support programs for which new demands exist — for example, the regional graduate engineering programs that attract new investment dollars and spell new jobs and tax revenues?

Aside from the question of finance, how can we both meet the needs of regions where new industrial investments depend on our ability to field new academic programs and in the process, end the fighting over territory that too often has characterized forays into new areas?

How can we streamline management in our colleges and universities so that dollars needed for instruction, research and public service actually get to those activities?

Can we combine library systems — acquisitions and cataloging, for example, purchasing offices, and computer centers so as to serve from one center the needs of all the colleges and universities in the state or in a particular region? These are managerial questions, but they matter because existing resources can be put to new uses if we combine support systems and free our presidents and faculties to do what they want to do — teach, conduct research, perform vital public services. To put this question differently, how else than by streamlining and consolidating management can we protect the public against paying twice — or indeed twenty times — for one service?

What revenue sources within the General Fund or other than the General Fund and student tuition can higher education tap? And to what extent can we protect the essential principle of equity while also encouraging institutions to do the best they can for themselves?

How have state managerial innovations of recent years helped higher education, and how may they have harmed higher education? A task force of college presidents and state officials is now working on this problem. I am asking this task force to report to me at the earliest possible date.

What new initiatives can bring education and economic development into even more productive relationships than now exist?

Can our partnership with industry include specific agreements that corporations or even profit-making vocational schools will assume primary responsibility for training our citizens in a variety of technical fields, aided perhaps by student financial assistance and other incentives provided by the Commonwealth at less cost than support for students in public colleges?

I came today to talk about the future, and I want now to carry through on that purpose. If we face the issues I have outlined, if we work together as I have asked, we can choose a future that is at once consonant with the best of our past and reflective of our purposes for our Commonwealth. Let me tell you some of the futures that seem to me possible if we have the will to build them:

° We can use computers and telecommunications networks to meet the highly specialized needs of emerging industries and to augment — not to supplant — the personal interchange between teacher and student that animates learning. We have talked about this possibility for years. New technologies and new economies now available put teaching and learning telecommunications within practical reach — for the first time.

° We can use these same technologies to meet the needs of homebound students, of persons immobilized by handicaps, of persons isolated by accidents of geography or whatever.

° We can link our libraries by the same technology, and move materials and information electronically and immediately, rather than physically and slowly, and we can consolidate acquisition and cataloging systems to guarantee that we no longer duplicate functions in every college library in the Commonwealth.

° We can consolidate management systems within contiguous regions so that faculty members will no longer need to compete for vital resources with their own logistical support staffs, and our colleges can direct maximum attention toward what they are best able to do — teach, conduct research in the public interest, provide valuable public service.

° We can achieve a more unified common core curriculum for most of our baccalaureate programs, and by that development guarantee that graduate study, which is indispensable to acquiring advanced technical skills, is within reach of virtually all of our graduates.

° By the same token, we can build greater continuity between high school and college, not by assuming that every student is going to college — or that every student should — but by assuming that every student deserves to command enough academic skills to function in a world that clearly rewards those who know and know how to do.

° We can create networks of faculty members so that not every college or university must build from scratch every program — so that what we pay for once does not automatically become what we must pay for again, and again, and again, as colleges determine to have exactly the same thing.

° We can address the growing needs of older citizens, particularly of those who find themselves unemployed in mid-life because of technological change, and who need both new skills and the academic background required for new kinds of work. Indeed, we can redefine access to mean that the Commonwealth guarantee that its citizens who take advantage of what we can offer in our colleges and universities throughout their lives — which is to say, through a period of change now estimated to exceed anything imagined in the labor market — will never become technologically obsolete.

° We can emphasize competence and ability to do as the essential credentials of a college education, and even in era in which vast numbers of former students have described their educations as neither education nor training.

Sutlive and McCain Receive Awards

Vinson H. Sutlive joined the College faculty in 1972 after spending 15 years as a missionary and teacher in Sarawak, Borneo.

In 1957 Sutlive and his wife went to Sarawak at Methodist missionaries to work among the Iban who were being rapidly converted to Christianity. They took along their two young children, a son three years old and a three-month old daughter.

When the Sutlives left Borneo in 1972, their children were 18 and 15 and their youngest son, born in 1962, was 10.

Sutlive, whose missionary work took on an anthropological orientation during those years, gathered material for a doctoral thesis and many scholarly publications in the field of his new interest.

In 1978 he published a book "The Iban of Sarawak," as part of "The Worlds of Man," series. One of his most recent publications was an introduction to a 1982 issue of Studies in Third World Societies, dedicated to the long-range implications of deforestation in several parts of the world, particularly Southeast Asia. Studies in Third World Societies is published by the department of anthropology at William and Mary and Sutlive has served as one of its editors since 1976. He is also an editor for the Borneo Research Bulletin.

Sutlive is currently working on an Iban-English dictionary, hoping to preserve in written form, a language which is rapidly being lost. Iban is spoken by about 450,000 people in Malaysia and about a million other inhabitants of Southeast Asia. Sutlive has also translated seven books of the Old Testament into Iban.

Sutlive did field studies on the social change and urban migration of the Iban and Iban horticulture under a National Science Foundation Grant, 1969-72 and in 1975 received a Fulbright-Hays grant to study the urbanization in Cagayan de Oro and Dumaguette City in the Philippines. His major teaching interests include Southeast Asia, the Iban language, anthropology of religion, tropical ecology and urbanization.

Is Leland Traywick, director of the Bureau of Business Research at the School of Business Administration giving Governor Robb some optimistic economic news? Traywick (L.), President Graves and Governor Robb chat informally before the Charter Day Convocation.

Sutlive has received several honors during his tenure at William and Mary. In 1974 he was recipient of the Alpha Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa Award for Advancement of Scholarship and the Alumni Teaching Award from the Society of the Alumni, 1976-77. He received a faculty summer grant to work on his Iban-English dictionary in 1980.

An active member of the College community, Sutlive has been instrumental in organizing the Junior Year in the Philippines program. He has served as a member of the Asia House committee as well as several other college committees and has worked for several years in the Williamsburg community to expand and upgrade a youth soccer program.

THE THOMAS JEFFERSON AWARD

Vinson H. Sutlive, Jr., as missionary and ethnographer you have spent many years living among the people of Sarawak. As editor and writer for Studies in Third World Societies and the Borneo Research Bulletin you have chronicled the lives of indigenous peoples and brought their needs and attainments to the attention of the world scholarly community. As teacher you have brought your diverse skills, myriad interests, and vast experience to your students and colleagues. You have been at the forefront of the preservationist movement and protected the language and culture of the Iban and the eco-systems of the tropical rainforest. You are, and have been, a mediator between East and West, past and present, and traditional and modern societies. You have carried on your indefatigable work with unflinching good cheer, abundant enthusiasm, and, more than anything else, with genuine modesty.

Your devoted concern for the needs of others, both here and abroad, has earned you the respect of the entire community. For your exemplary inspiration to us all, the College gratefully honors you with the Jefferson Award.

THE THOMAS JEFFERSON TEACHING AWARD

Morris McCain, you are not only a superb teacher but a fine scholar, and your influence extends well beyond the classroom. You received your B.A. summa cum laude from Carleton College and were elected to Phi Beta Kappa there. The recipient of a Rhodes Scholarship, you were awarded an M.A. in Philosophy, Politics and Economics from Oxford University in 1971 and earned your Ph.D. with distinction from Yale University in 1979. Since your arrival at William and Mary in 1977 your students have evaluated your courses as "intellectually stimulating, challenging, and well organized." They have described you as one of the best, if not the best teacher, they have encountered at the College. Your standards in terms of class preparation attendance and discussion are most rigorous, and upon your return from a year abroad as an exchange professor at the University of Glasgow you were described by the Chairman of your department there as "an individual particularly gifted at involving students in discussion during lectures." While it is your teaching we honor here today, you are an impressive scholar in the field of Soviet affairs, and you have recently turned attention to arms control.

Thomas Jefferson was known for championing the cultivation of human potential, especially as it relates to the constructive solution of societal problems, and for his ability to work for those things that he considered right and not merely popular. You embody these qualities. You are a truly exceptional faculty member.

Morris McCain

Morris McCain joined the William and Mary faculty in 1977. He received his B.A. degree summa cum laude from Carleton College, and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa there. The recipient of a Rhodes Scholarship, he was awarded an M.A. in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics from Oxford University in 1971. In addition to a Rhodes Scholarship, he also received a Woodrow Wilson Honorary Fellowship following his graduation from Carleton College. He earned his Ph.D., with distinction, from Yale University in 1979.

At Yale, McCain was the recipient of an Overbrook Fellowship and an International Research and Exchange Board grant for research in the Soviet Union.

He spent the 1980-81 academic year abroad as an exchange professor at the University of Glasgow.

McCain has recently turned his attention to the subject of arms control. He spent 1981-82 at Harvard University, where he had been selected as a Ford Foundation Fellow in Arms Control and International Security. During the fall of 1982, McCain helped organize and participated in a campus-wide teach-in on arms control, presented a faculty forum on the same subject, and offered a senior-level seminar on arms control.

Charter Day

functional now as they will be in the lambent glow of the CRT computer screen.

"While we have great respect for the capabilities and potential of technology, and indeed offer many excellent courses and programs at the undergraduate, graduate and professional levels to prepare our students for useful and productive lives in the technological society, we must not forget that at heart lies man, the real soul of the new machines."

In an interview with Daily Press reporter Susan Bruno, following the convocation President Graves said that he thought Robb's proposals would work.

"I think it's something that has to be done when we have scarce resources and I'm confident that it will work and it will protect the future of higher education. It was a very courageous speech," he said.

Courage and determination will become part of chronicle of optimism and hope

"Let me express publicly, on behalf of the entire College community, our deep gratitude to the hundreds of expressions of care and concern which we have received in recent days for the safety and welfare of the 185 students of Jefferson Hall who lost their William and Mary homes and almost all of their possessions in the disastrous fire in the dark hours of Thursday, January 20th. Your generosity, in spirit and in substance, has been overwhelming, your acts of kindness have been beautiful.

The men and women of Jefferson are safe and sound, they are picking up their lives and their studies with maturity and courage, and we are doing everything possible to support and assist them. And plans are moving forward with enormous cooperation and support from the executive and legislative branches of state government, for the rebuilding of Jefferson at the earliest possible date.

I would also speak to the courage and competence of the public servants of this community who responded so magnificently — in keeping the fire from becoming even worse, in protecting the lives of our students and in allowing us to salvage much more than we otherwise would have from the ruins of Jefferson.

Finally, to the students and members of the College administration who carried out their responsibilities with such dedication and skill throughout the long night and into the days that followed, I express my admiration and thanks.

Many times in the 290-year history of William and Mary we have seen life, property and even the viability of the College itself, threatened by the disasters of accident, fire and war. Each time the courage and determination of those who have loved this ancient institution have allowed us to overcome adversity and move forward. January, 1983 will be remembered as part of that chronicle of optimism and hope.

Born in Bryn Mawr, Pa., General Becton was called to active duty in July, 1944, from the Army Air Corps Enlisted Reserve which he joined in December, 1943.

Ju is considered one of the few Chinese artists able to blend the worlds of style, technique and idiom to produce a unique form of painting which is both modern and traditionally Oriental. He believes "a Chinese artist is not only a painter, but also a poet and a philosopher."

A prize winner in graphic art, oil painting and Nanga works in various countries, a writer and a lecturer on art, Ju has held many one-man shows in Australia, Canada, China, England, Japan and the Philippines as well as the United States. He is the author of many books and numerous papers on Chinese arts.

Assembly Bills Affect Benefits

James N. McCord, Jr., chairman of the board on faculty compensation, has circulated a memo to faculty and staff concerning two bills currently under consideration in the General Assembly, House Bill 519 and Senate Bill 250 and how they affect College employees.

These bills are aimed at sheltering state and federal income taxes on VSRS contributions, increasing net pay by 2-4 percent; reducing taxable income by 5 percent; protecting VSRS retirement benefits and continuing to credit members' 5 percent contribution to the employee's portion of the VSRS package.

One objection that has been raised to this legislation, explains McCord, is the difficulty in explaining to state employees that they would have a reduction in gross salary even though take-home pay would be increased by 2-4 percent.

It might be helpful, he suggests, if faculty and staff express their appreciation to Delegate Bagley and Senator Hunter Andrews for sponsoring these bills and also note that the long-term benefits outweigh the short-term problems of explaining the effects of the legislation.

Mail should be addressed to Senator Hunter Andrews and Delegate Richard H. Bagley, General Assembly Building, 910 Capitol Street, Richmond, 23219.

Telephone Equipment Economy

Among several suggestions received from the Department of Telecommunications (DOT) in Richmond, we feel that the following merit the attention of each of us within the College:

- Remember that certain kinds of routine State business can be effected more quickly and inexpensively by telephone than through correspondence; so, analyze the demands of your message. If written copies are genuinely essential, use correspondence. If such written record is not required, however, use telephone service.
- Avoid moving and rearranging offices unless absolutely necessary. The cost of moving telephone equipment can be quite high, so it is to your advantage to get an estimate through my office before committing yourself to telephone moves.
- Resist the temptation to request multiple lines into a single instrument; "key sets" are expensive. Our Centrex equipment allows the transfer of calls without operator assistance.
- Avoid equating large telephone apparatus with rank. The DOT communications specialists can assist in making determinations as to the proper type of equipment necessary for the efficient operation of your office.
- Contact this office before deciding on specific telephone equipment lines, or services. We will call a DOT services specialist who usually can help you make better informed choices.

The above items can be consolidated into one, I believe: Proper planning for telephone services can improve operational efficiency and SAVE MONEY.

And, finally, I would remind each of you again to use the SCATS lines instead of using the direct-dial facility.

Thank you for your attention to and cooperation in these matters.

Dennis K. Cogle
Assistant Vice President for Business Affairs
