VIMS Study Of Watermen Will Include Seminars

A grant of $4,150 has been awarded to Elizabeth A. Cornell, a marine scientist in the Marine Resource Management Department at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science (VIMS).

The Virginia Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy has made the grant available for a project entitled "Virginia Watermen: Exposing Myth and Exploring Reality," to enhance understanding of watermen, one of the Chesapeake Bay's largest user groups, through interpretation of their culture and their sociology.

Other scientists involved in the project are: Dexter S. Haven, Herbert M. Austin and Robert J. Huggett from VIMS, along with Victor A. Liguori, sociologist, and James F. Harris, department of philosophy from William and Mary and representatives from the community of watermen.

The project will feature a series of seminars this fall which will be open to the public and held on the VIMS' campus. The seminars will be moderated and recorded by Mr. Chris Dickon, Programming Director of WHRO-FM Public Broadcasting Station of Norfolk. The series will result in several radio programs and a collection of essays.

Employee Courses Begin October 17

Two workshops on supervisory and leadership skills will be offered this fall. These workshops are designed for employees whose jobs involve supervisory responsibility.

The first workshop, "Fundamentals for Supervisors," will be conducted by Dr. Richard Mansfield of the Office for Personnel Development Services on Oct. 17-18. Topics to be discussed will include communication, motivation, conflict resolution, disciplines, and leadership style.

"Leadership Skills" will be conducted on Nov. 10-11 by Dr. Russell Linden of the University of Virginia. This course is focused upon developing leadership adaptability. Delegation, decision making, power, authority and influence, and leadership style are the key concepts explored.

Delegation, decision making, power, authority and influence, and leadership style are the key concepts explored.

Individuals may register for one or both of these workshops. However, participants are encouraged to register for both workshops as skills learned from the first workshop will be reinforced during the "Leadership Skills" class.

AWP Fights Writer's Block

Sprightly Madison Avenue ad copy on bright green posters around campus is being used to introduce a new Auxiliary Writing Program. All students, both undergraduates and graduates, are invited to participate.

The AWP is designed to help students review writing in an intensive way during four-week sessions offered twice each semester. The format of each session is flexible and provides both instruction and practice in writing. AWP does not carry credit, will not appear on transcripts and is offered free of charge.

Session I, Sept. 19-Oct. 14, will meet in the basement of Tucker Hall. The first class begins Sept. 19 at 7 p.m. Subsequent meeting times and places will be arranged at the initial class.

Terry Meyers, Associate Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, says the program might be considered by freshmen and transfer students who are planning to take exemption exams in English in January, as well as those completing writing requirements, or graduate students in a number of different disciplines.

Anyone who needs to improve writing skills is a candidate for the program, says Meyers. He adds that there is currently no limit on registration and space is still available in the first session. Sign up sheets are available in all department offices and students may register now for Session II later this semester or Sessions III and IV which will be scheduled next semester.

John Conlee, chairman of the English department and David Rosenwasser of the English faculty, have been planning the Auxiliary Writing Program and Jayne Lewis, a graduate student in English, will be working with student assistants in the program. The primary instructors this semester will be faculty from religion, psychology, anthropology and theatre and speech. Meyers notes that the number of departments involved evinces a broad-based commitment to writing by the faculty of arts and sciences.

The Auxiliary Writing Program is part of new writing requirements which have been developed by a committee composed of faculty from four different disciplines and chaired by Robert Fehrenbach, professor of English.

In January when the Committee's proposal was accepted by the faculty of arts and sciences, Fehrenbach said that writing programs at Harvard University and MIT, like the one at William and Mary, repre-

McArthur Sees Changes In Soviet Lifestyle

As a tour guide for a group of American visitors to Russia this summer, Gilbert McArthur, associate professor of history and a Russian scholar, had an opportunity to update his perceptions of Soviet life.

One of McArthur's objectives was to observe first hand whether there was any Cleator, ed., Letters from Baltimore: the Mencken-Cleator Correspondence (Fairleigh Dickinson, 1982) in CHOICE, February 1983, pp. 201-202; Mitzi Berger Hamovitch, ed., The Horn & Hound Letters (Georgia, 1982), in CHOICE, March 1983, pp. 186-87.

truth to predictions of a Soviet government collapse. "Politically, I saw no evidence of it," he says. "The cities appear to be safe and there were no overt signs of political unrest. People did not avoid me as a foreigner. Actually, they were quite open. In times of unrest you would not see that."

McArthur said he saw Russian families out touring the countryside, smiling school children who didn't mind being photographed by tourists, and more attempts by the government to provide Russian consumers with better quality and variety in their clothes, food and housing.

The Russians still crave Western goods such as blue jeans and automobiles, says McArthur. Although the Russians claim a classless society, influential people do seem to get consumer goods more readily as members of a privileged group, he observed.

"Living standards, by contrast to my previous visits, have improved. In terms of what they have known before, there is more diversity in dress." Russian women traditionally have been able to buy only Soviet or East European-made shoes, but when McArthur visited in May, he found women lining up to buy imported Italian shoes.

"The automobile is more in use, too," McArthur says. "In Stalin's time, only top officials had access to cars. Now the equivalent of our professional middle class can have one." He estimates that a Soviet automobile would cost about $10,000, or about 7,000 rubles.

McArthur adds that families can now build their own cooperative housing. He says that if people can build their own homes, they can make them bigger and better than Russian municipal housing. "It also helps with the housing crunch," he said.

Although Russia is the largest oil-producing nation in the world, Soviets are only beginning to "come to grips with how major an impact the car has on society," McArthur says. The highway system, he says, is still rather primitive. Public transportation, however, is generally good.

Among the ironies McArthur notes in Russia's so-called classless and atheistic society is that the people spend much time preserving their churches. McArthur says that Russians see this preservation as simply a tribute to the Russian people who built them, and as monuments and museums of Russian history and culture.

It appears, McArthur adds, that many Russians are still devoutly religious, judging by the packed church services. But the Communist state dictates that science and technology are the wave of the future, and religion is labeled a superstition that represents a look backwards rather than forward.

McArthur last visited Russia in 1976. He wrote his doctoral dissertation on 18th Century Russian history and studied at the University of Leningrad in 1965.

Dr. Perry Certified 'Diplomate' College Of Tropical Medicine

William J. Perry, staff physician at the Student Health Center, has been certified as a "Diplomate" of the American College of Tropical Medicine.

Dr. Perry has worked extensively in this area of medicine and is the author of numerous scientific articles on tropical diseases and preventative medicine. He is also a contributing author for a text on laboratory diagnosis on disease, and a laboratory manual on medical entomology and parasitology. Dr. Perry has received many honors during his career for contributions to medicine, including five Special Achievement Awards from the American Medical Association, 1969, 1972, 1975, 1979 and 1981.

Dr. Perry began his interest in tropical diseases while serving with the Navy in the Pacific Theatre during World War II as member of Admiral Halsey's staff. His Navy duty also included two years as Naval Science Attache, Office of Naval Research, at the U.S. Embassy in London.

A native of Michigan, Perry received his medical degree from Duke University. He received post-graduate training at the University of London, 1952-53, as a part-time exchange fellow. Dr. Perry is a Fellow in the American Academy of Family Physicians.

Dr. Perry joined the staff of the Student Health Center in 1982 after 17 years in private practice in Alexandria.

Dr. Perry finds his special training particularly useful because of the number of foreign students at the College and the many countries students visit during their college careers and the continuing need for identification of and experience with, diseases endemic to tropical environments.

David Leisner, guitarist and Sanford Sylvan, baritone, will present the first Sunday Series Concert this year at 3 p.m., Sept. 18 in the Campus Center ballroom. There is no admission charge.

The two artists will present a program of music by Daniel Pinkham, John Dowland, Franz Schubert and Manuel de Falla as well as a group of songs with words by Emily Dickinson which Leisner has dedicated to Sylvan, entitled "Simple Songs."

Leisner is rapidly gaining recognition as a major American guitarist. In 1975 he won second prize in the Toronto International Guitar Competition and was the first American prize-winner in the competition's history.

A graduate of Wesleyan University, he studied guitar with John Duarte, Angelo Gilardino and David Starobin. He is currently on the faculty of the New England Conservatory. A composer as well as a performer, Leisner has received commissions from the Glass House Singers, London; the Actor's Company, New York City; and Pacific Strings, Los Angeles.

Sylvan is a graduate of the Manhattan School of Music. He made his debut in 1977 with the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Pierre Boulez and his European debut the following year singing music of Theodore Antonio on French National Radio. In September, 1979, Sylvan received national recognition when he won third prize in the Kennedy Center-Rockefeller Foundation International Vocal Competition.

A resident of Boston, he is one of the city's most active soloists, appearing with the Cantata Singers, the Harvard Bach Society, Alea III and annually with the Handel & Haydn Society. Most recently he performed in the Handel & Haydn Society's "St. Matthew's Passion," in the Opera Company of Somerville's "Soiree de Gala" at Harvard University and in the Pro Arte Orchestra's performance of Mahler's "Leider nach Gelichten von Friedrich Rickert."

1980 Graduate Dies in Richmond

Kathy Meador Lessin '80, died of cancer Friday, Sept. 9 in the Medical College of Virginia Hospital.

A member of Chi Omega sorority, Kathy was married to Check Lessin, her childhood sweetheart from Richmond, Va. She had struggled for three years with cancer which was first discovered when she was a senior. Kathy majored in anthropology and religious studies toward a career in biblical archaeology. She played hockey and was a member of the anthropology club.

Funeral services were held Sunday and burial Monday at Westhampton Cemetery in Richmond.

In a tribute to her indomitable spirit Paula C. Squires, staff writer for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, wrote on Sunday: "A blonde with big, brown eyes who took care of her appearance, Kathy said she felt beautiful and alive on the outside, 'but on the inside is a 90-year-old woman who is tired,' she wrote her doctor.

But Kathy wasn't ready to die. She had just been named godmother to a new niece. She became active in an American Cancer Society program, CanSurmount... She liked to visit MCV's cancer clinic where she spent time with the children who were patients there. She told them stories and helped them draw as they waited their turns for treatment.

Although Kathy's death comes as a crushing blow, family and friends are comforted by her courage, a courage they believe inspired others.

Early Wightman Ticket Sales Benefit Women's Athletics

By ordering your tickets to the 60th Anniversary Wightman Cup with the attached form, not only will you gain entry to "the most elegant competition in women's tennis," but, you will also help to ensure that the event is a success for William and Mary.

"Women's athletics will receive thirty percent of all advance ticket sales, that is, those tickets sold using the form on this page or the form in the official brochure, crediting the order to women's athletics," said Millie West, Women's Athletic Director and Wightman Cup Tournament

Chairman. Tickets purchased through the ticket office will not directly benefit women's athletics.

"So far, we have had a good response from our form in the Alumni Gazette," added West, noting that there's an excellent chance that William and Mary Hall will be filled to capacity on November 3rd, 4th and 5th.

The Wightman Cup is the longest, continuing professional women's team tennis tournament. Featuring top-ranked players from the United States and Great Britain, the event is played alternately in the U.S.

and England. U.S. Tennis Association officials are seriously considering Williamsburg as a permanent American site.

Professor of Business Administration Bill Maddocks is W&M's Faculty Chairman for the Wightman Cup. Inquiries may be directed to him at ext. 4565.

In addition to spectators, volunteers are needed for the Wightman Cup. Among the volunteer positions available throughout the week of October 30th through November 6th are drivers, ushers, program vendors and numerous other jobs. Anyone interested in being a driver should contact Pat Megel, in Adair Gym, at ext. 4750. Other enlistees should call Millie West at 253-4360.

The historic President's House, which is celebrating its 250th anniversary this year, will be the setting for the College Woman's Club annual Fall Welcome, 3-5 p.m., Friday, Sept. 16.

In addition to a brief presentation on the House itself, there will be opportunity to sign up for interest groups sponsored by the Club.

Varied Programs

The Women's Club of the College invites all women employed by the College and those with husbands employed by the College, to join its membership.

Dues are $6 per year. Call 229-5256 for details.

The club holds three general membership meetings each year including a Fall Welcome, a Holiday Coffee and a Spring Luncheon and Fashion Show. Activities for smaller groups are held throughout the year. In October a visit to Waterside and a guided tour of the Chrysler Museum in Norfolk are planned.

There are also several interest groups - book discussion, sewing, gourmet cooking, playreading and bridge - that meet regularly throughout the academic year.

The Club also supports several community projects including the Rita Welsh Adult Skills Program based on campus; a hostess corps at the President's House and Red Cross swimming classes for children of all college employees taught by William and Mary students.

USIA Institute Offers 1984-85 Grants

The United States Information Agency and Institute of International Education had opened competition for grants for 1984-85 graduate study or research abroad in academic fields and for professional training in the creative and performing arts. It is expected that approximately 500 awards to 50 countries will be available for the 1984-85 academic year.

The purpose of these grants is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills. They are provided under the terms of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (Fulbright-Hays Act) and by foreign governments, universities, corporations and private donors.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, who will generally hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, will be proficient in the language of the host country. Except for certain specific awards, candidates may not hold the Ph.D. at the time of application. Candidates for 1984-85 are ineligible for a grant to a country if they have been doing graduate work or conducting research in that country for six months or more during the academic year 1983-84.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a bachelor's degree, but they must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience. Social work applicants must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree; candidates in medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Selection is based on the academic and/or professional record of the applicant, the validity and feasibility of the proposed study plan, the applicant's language preparation and personal qualifications. Preference is given to candidates who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad.

Information and application materials may be obtained from Carolyn Blackwell, Fulbright Program Advisor, Office of International Programs, ext. 4354. Campus Deadline for applications is Oct. 12.

Davies Lauds Joint Program

Gordon K. Davies, Director of the State Council of Higher Education in Virginia, delivered the following address as commencement speaker Aug. 27 in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall for the Professional Psychology program, sponsored by The College, Eastern Virginia Medical Authority, Old Dominion University and Norfolk State University.

Since this program first enrolled students in 1978, it has been a model both in Virginia and across the nation. There is, quite simply, no other jointly administered Doctor of Psychology program anywhere. There are, as you well know, precious few examples of successful cooperation among institutions of higher education. I am especially proud that we have this fine program in our Commonwealth.

For it is indeed a fine program: not only highly selective in admissions, but also rigorous in academic standards and successful in field placements. Those whom we honor today for having completed (or almost completed) their work know far better than I what has been demanded of them. They can testify far better than I to the integrity of their experience.

The quality of this program is all the more remarkable to the legion of skeptics who stroll (or skulk) in the groves of academe because it is administered by a committee representing four separate institutions. Not only that, but one of the institutions is an independent, free-standing medical school.

But of course such arrangements can work. Not only "can work" but must work if we are to meet our society's needs and demands for higher education and still live within our budgets. The money required to let each college or university have its own, separate program is a thing of the past -- recalled nostalgically by faculty and administrators who remember a time when there was more than enough for all.

Nostalgia, however, is the original sin of memory. For there never really was a compelling argument for duplicating programs rather than cooperating to offer one like the Psy.D. There was no compelling argument then, and there is none now. The state has not enough money, the federal government has not enough money, and the students who pay tuition have not enough money, to support duplication when cooperation is possible. Our present circumstances have simply made crystal clear what has been true all along.

Just a few years ago, the Virginia Military Institute honored a retired faculty member for distinguished service throughout most of this century. The elderly gentleman sat patiently through speeches praising the glories of the past and his work, and then it was his turn to speak. He rose and said, "Things aren't what they used to be, and they never were." The growth of our colleges and universities during the last twenty years -- in enrollment, range of academic programs, staff and dollars -- simply obscured what the old man saw clearly.

Cooperative programs like the Psy.D. are likely to be developed more frequently in coming years. Indeed, given the money shortage which affects most states, including ours, there probably will be very few new graduate programs approved in the foreseeable future. Those which draw upon the resources of more than one institution will surely stand a far better chance in the competition for limited funds.

Consider the trends. Only a few years ago, the Council of Higher Education each year approved as many as fifty requests to start new academic programs. This year, however, the Council approved only 15 new programs for the next two academic years. Even more significantly, for the first time in my memory, and probably for the first time ever, the Governor's preliminary budget targets included no funds for the new programs or the students enrolled in them. Whether the General Assembly will support the Governor's decision remains to be seen. But the trend is clear.

More programs will be discontinued than started in the next several years, both because money will remain scarce and because most of the few new programs that are started will be in high cost, high tech disciplines that will consume extraordinary resources. Again, programs like yours, which combine the capacities of four institutions, will be much more attractive to the men and women who decide how to spend Virginia's tax dollars.

Let me give you two other examples of cooperative programs. Richmond industry has been asking for graduate programs in engineering, but there is no engineering school in Richmond. Instead of starting one, the Council of Higher Education proposed that three universities combine their resources to offer engineering by television from the University of Virginia and Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, with Virginia Commonwealth University hosting the program and offering support courses. The result is a set of master's degree programs starting next month with about 100 students enrolled, at minimal cost, with no brick and mortar long-range commitment, and with plans to extend the transmissions to northern Virginia and the Tidewater.

In the disciplines relating to marine science, Virginia higher education was for years thoroughly balkanized, with four competing institutions. No one was strong enough to dominate completely, but the four tended to cancel one another out in the eyes of the people in Washington who have the power to designate a Sea Grant College in Virginia.

The solution? A Graduate Marine Science Consortium which is seeking Sea Grant status on behalf of the four institutions and the other marine science interests in Virginia higher education. The competition has been reduced, or ended in some instances, and I expect we will gain a Sea Grant College designation in the coming academic year.

The responsibility of higher education, then, is to show the people who pay the bills -- Virginia's taxpayers -- and the people who appropriate the money -- the Governor and the General Assembly -- that we are as efficient and resourceful as we can be in combining our strengths to offer a program such as that from which you graduate today. The Psy.D. meets this test of responsibility, and it is therefore a model for the future of higher education.

But there is another responsibility, and that is to acknowledge that high quality education costs money. This is the responsibility of those who call for better education and who also determine the budgets of our public schools, colleges and universities. It is a serious, sobering responsibility, for it is easier to call for educational improvement than it is to pay for it, and easier still to insist that there is fat in the institutions that can be eliminated to get the needed money.

There may be some fat, but I expect there is not much left after four years of austerity. Virginia higher education can indeed become leaner, and meaner, but it will not as a result become better.

Becoming better takes money. Excellent funding does not necessarily produce excellent education, but it is certainly a necessary condition of excellent education. We can become efficient, and effective. This fine program from which you take your degrees proves that. But we must receive the money we need to do the job, or the quality we have achieved will diminish.

That is the bargain we must seek to strike: Give us what we need, and we shall cooperate with one another to produce the best possible education in the most economical way. I hope you will help us make this bargain in your roles as practicing professionals, community leaders, and citizens of the most widely education society the world has ever known. If you do, you will be making the best possible alumni gift to the four institutions which confer their degree upon you today.

A Countryman Pays Tribute to 'Ninoy' Aquino

by Mario D. Zamora

Philippine Senator Benigno A. Aquino, Jr. (popularly known as "Ninoy"), 50 years old, was murdered in cold-blood at the Manila International Airport August 21, after a three-year self-exile in the United States. Ninoy has been considered the leading rival of President Ferdinand E. Marcos. His assassination shocked the whole world. More than a million Filipinos, including the ambassadors of the U.S.A., France, Japan, and other nations attended his funeral.

Who is Benigno A. Aquino, Jr.? What does he represent? Why should Americans be concerned about his death and about Philippine-American relations?

On January 27, 1981, Senator Benigno A. Aquino, Jr., then a fellow at Harvard University, delivered the first Mahatma Gandhi Freedom Lecture at the College. This lecture was inaugurated to honor "an outstanding scholar or public figure, who, by personal example, has given meaning and substance to peace and freedom." It was a great honor and privilege to have had Benigno "Ninoy" Aquino at William and Mary. The Department of Anthropology hosted a reception in his honor at the African room in Washington Hall.

But now, Ninoy is gone. He died for peace and freedom for the Philippines, in the grand tradition of Mahatma Gandhi, John and Robert Kennedy, Martin Luther King, among others. The Philippine government under Marcos has appointed a controversial special commission to investigate the assassination. The culprits have yet to be brought to the bar of justice.

I have known Ninoy for many years. We come from the same province - Tarlac. I used to invite him to speak at programs and conferences at the University of the Philippines when he was a senator. He was born on November 27, 1932 in Concepcion, Tarlac to the late Benigno S. Aquino, Sr., nationalist, Speaker of the House and later Senator and Auror A. Aquino. His paternal grandfather was General Servillano Aquino, famed revolutionary who fought the Spaniards and later the American at the turn of the century. Ninoy studied liberal arts at Ateneo de Manila and law at the University of the Philippines. The Philippines' newest patriot and martyr was married to the former Corazon Cojuangco. They have five children, four girls and one boy, Benigno Aquino III.

At age 16, Ninoy was the Manila Times war correspondent in Korea. At 22, he was the youngest mayor of Concepcion, Tarlac and at 25, also the youngest vice-governor of the province. At 30, he became governor. In 1967, he was elected the youngest senator of the Philippines, the lone opposition Liberal Party candidate to survive the election landslide made by President Marcos' Nacionalista Party. Ninoy also became the Secretary General of the Liberal Party. In 1954, he was special assistant to President Ramon Magsaysay who conferred on him the Legion of Honor for negotiating the surrender of the number one communist in the Philippines, Huk Supremo Luis M. Taruc. Aquino was the recipient of several honors and awards from the Philippines and abroad, including two Legions of honor, ten outstanding young men of the Philippines, outstanding senator, and man of the year. He was adviser to three Philippine presidents and went abroad as chairman or member of several Philippine delegations.

When Marcos declared martial law in 1972, he arrested Aquino with hundreds of other leaders. Aquino was jailed in an 8 x 6 foot guarded cell for a year without being charged. He firmly refused to cooperate with Marcos as a condition of his release. In his Freedom Lecture at William and Mary, Aquino told his audience that all he had to do was to give Marcos a phone call (a telephone was specially installed near him). He could have had his freedom as well as power and glory for himself. Instead he chose to fight for his convictions and for freedom for his people.

In 1973, pressures from abroad led Marcos to charge Aquino of "murder, subversion and illegal use of firearms." He was tried before a military court but Aquino steadfastly refused to recognize this "kangaroo court."

"I'd rather die on my feet than on bended knees," he told the court. So, he was thrown back to his cell. In 1975, he staged a 40-day hunger strike to protest martial law. Only the timely intercession and pleadings of his wife, his doctors, and Cardinal Jaime Sin saved his life. In 1978, he ran for Parliament, directing his campaign from jail. He wanted to communicate with the Filipino people through the Marcos controlled media. One of his daughters spoke for him at rallies in Manila and in the country. He requested all those who supported him to honk their horns, make noise for five minutes at exactly 9 p.m. on the eve of the elections. It was reported that the noise reverberated throughout Metro Manila for more than three hours. He "lost" the elections to Imelda Marcos and her political machine, amidst charges of irregularities.

In 1980, he was allowed to go to the U.S. for a triple bypass heart operation. After recovery, he accepted an offer of a fellowship at Harvard University to write about democracy in the Philippines and about his life. He spent another year at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In between seminars at both Harvard and MIT, he lectured in major universities in the USA and Canada and travelled to the Middle East and Latin America, to promote plans for peace and for the restoration of democracy in his country.

What does Aquino stand for? In a prepared text (which was never delivered due to his assassination), he wrote:

I have returned to join the ranks of those struggling to restore our rights and freedoms through non-violence. I seek no confrontation. I only pray and will strive for a genuine national reconciliation founded on justice. I have returned on my own free will prepared for the worst, against the advice of my mother, my spiritual adviser, many of my tested friends and a few of my most valued political mentors. A death sentence awaits me. Two more subversion charges both calling for death penalties have been filed since I left three years ago and are now pending with the courts. I could have opted to seek political asylum in America, but I feel it is my duty, as it is the duty of every Filipino to suffer with his people especially in time of crisis. I never sought, neither have I been given any assurance or promise of leniency by the regime. I return voluntarily armed only with a clear conscience and fortified in the faith that in the end, justice will emerge triumphant. According to Gandhi, the WILLING sacrifice of the innocent is the most powerful answer to insolent tyranny that has yet been conceived by God and man.

I have known Ninoy as a champion of non-violence, freedom, and democracy. He believes in God, family, and the worth and dignity of the human personality.

What seemed to be a rejection slip was different than most of the 35 resumes she mailed out.

"Dear Mr. Norenberg," it began. "You possess some of the qualities . . ."

"'Oh, baloney,' I said. 'It's hopeless. Just another form letter.'"

There was every reason to believe it to be so, seeing, of course, Mr. Norenberg was Ms. Lynn Norenberg.

About a week after the letter arrived, an NCAA official called. Some folks will go to any length to apologize for a faux pas, but the crux of the conversation had little to do with social graces. More specifically, Norenberg was to fly from Lexington, Ky. to Shawnee Mission, Kan. for a job interview.

Six different administrators questioned her at length. "They painted a dim picture. They told me people will lie to me. They'll hate my guts. They wanted to make sure I wanted to do it." When they finished, they were convinced they made a good choice.

Lynn Norenberg shook hands and said she'd see them Sept. 1, when she will join the NCAA as its 10th investigator and second female in the enforcement division. Former U.S. Olympic cocaptain Marsha Morey is the other woman. There's one small loophole. A position won't officially come open until Sept. 1, and Norenberg has an agreement that the job is hers. The NCAA confirmed this last week.

For all these years, Norenberg personified what was right and bright about women's sports and studies. She's being hired to snoop into what's wrong with college sports. Incongruous as it seems, "Snow White Gets Tough."

If there is any question about her qualifications — one presumes she can't say more than five sentences without smiling — her willingness to believe almost táp dances on the fringes of gullibility.

The code of conduct of the NCAA — those exalted principles outlined in its constitution — are very much Norenberg's values. She applied on a whim after watching a CBS 60 Minutes segment and after talking with an investigator.

For the past two years, she's been a graduate assistant with the University of Kentucky's women's basketball program. Duties also involved recruiting. It was as if the apple of deceit were placed in Snow White's hand.

"An honest coach should be able to win by playing honest basketball," she said by telephone from her Lexington apartment. "You shouldn't be able to buy your athletes. When I talked with a couple of kids, the first thing they asked me was, 'What are you going to give me?' We gave them nothing and they wound up going somewhere else." She was stunned by the recruiting climate but felt she was on safe ground when she told the NCAA investigators during her interview, well, at least the women's programs aren't as bad as the men's. Then they told her, that's what she thought.

"I almost believe if the women don't win 20 games at Kentucky, you are going to get fired." Kentucky was 24-8 and 24-5 the past two years, drew a women's record of 10,600 for one game this season and just completed a six-game tour of Japan.

Norenberg wound up at Kentucky

Wonder Woman Lynn Norenberg Stepping Out To Challenge Evil For NCAA

to work on her master's degree and has finished three of five chapters of her thesis, Cardiorespiratory Fitness of Women Basketball Players. The school wanted to hire her, too, as did a dozen other colleges and high schools. Her two years at Kentucky exposed her to a comparison and contrast to her sheltered, undergraduate existence at William & Mary.

Even with the 4.0-plus grade-point average (honors courses) coming out of Lakewood High, her name went on the William & Mary waiting list. Once accepted, she discovered it was academics and then athletics, and still she finished with a 3.97 average and membership in Phi Beta Kappa. At Kentucky and Division I, she described it as athletics, athletics, athletics and then academics.

Certainly, Lynn Norenberg, 23, has had a few more gifts and blessings than most of us. But she has used them to the maximum. It takes a little more to be a champion, she says, and she has been willing and eager every step of the way.

In high school, they questioned her about spreading herself too thin. Her snappy reply to all of this was that the more things you have, the more time you find, the more valuable your days.

At one mid-winter crossroads, for example, and in the day of double sessions, she finished class at noon and then got started on a demanding routine: basketball practice followed by track, which was followed by tennis, which was followed and concluded with band practice at 7 p.m.

Actually, her resume to the NCAA didn't mention those things, or how she played the French horn, sang with the Lakewood Spartones, won the Junior Sungoddess title and became Miss Healthy Smile upon election by the Pinnellas County Dental Society. All that had been mentioned before, along with her 30-point scoring average in basketball one season, a state discus championship, an All-County tennis record, and her designation by impressed judges as St. Petersburg's Athlete of the Year for 1976.

She was homecoming queen at Lakewood, homecoming queen at William & Mary. During basketball practice at William & Mary, she used to write her math formulas on the sweatbands on her wrists and study them between drills. Still, despite all the academic push, she was the leading scorer in the school's history. "I gave up some fun times," she admitted. "I used to get up at 6 a.m. to study and studied every break I had. I put in so much time then I just want to reach my full potential now.

"So much credit has to go to my parents. They never told me I had to get this grade or that grade. We (she's the oldest of four bright students) were always expected to do our best in everything we tried. If I had been playing 10 sports a day and my grades were falling, I should know enough to cut back. I kept pushing myself to be better. I want my parents to be proud of me.

"Maybe someday I'll marry a rich guy and sit back and play tennis," she said lightly. "Right now I'd like to have an impact on sports and on people. . . . I joked a long time ago one day I'd like to be the president of the NCAA. . . ."

WCWM Plans Homecoming

The William & Mary campus radio station, WCWM-FM, will hold a reception for all alumni who were affiliated with the broadcast station since its inception in 1959, in the Dodge Room of Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall immediately following the Homecoming football game.

"After looking through all of our historical files, we found close to 500 names of students associated with WCWM over the years. We know that even more people were involved, but left no tangible, written evidence of their involvement," said Kevin Hall, the current station manager. Co-manager Anne E. Doyle added, "We felt it was about time that we approached these alumni, if for no other reason than to let them know how far we have progressed from that 10-watt station back in 1959."

The 1600-watt, stereo operation is spending its last academic year in its current facilities in PBK. The College is moving the station to new studios in the basement of the Campus Center. Plans also call for the purchase of state-of-the-art equipment to replace the older equipment currently in use.

In addition, over the 1983 Christmas vacation break, WCWM will change its location on the FM dial. A National Public Radio affiliate in the Norfolk area, WHRO-FM, has experienced continuing interference problems in the Williamsburg area when the student station is broadcasting. The NPR station, located at 89.5 FM, approached the College and has offered to cover any expense involved in moving WCWM from its current location at 89.1

FM to a new frequency at 90.7 FM. The NPR affiliate has also agreed to pay for all promotion used to advertise the change in frequency of the College station.

Alumni are encouraged to call WCWM-FM at 229-2600 if they plan to attend the homecoming reception.

Aquino

During our last conversation at the Hospitality House in Williamsburg, January 27, 1981, we discussed many subjects, including the rise and demise of authoritarian regimes in the third world, the post-Marcos era and the future of the Philippines, and the state of Philippine anthropology (including the origins of the Philippine world famous rice terraces). I took him to the Patrick Henry airport at about 4 a.m. the next day because he had another meeting with a human rights group in Wahsington, D.C. which included Senator Edward M. Kennedy. One of the questions I raised that morning is how he managed to keep his sanity in the more than seven years he spent in jail. He said it was a combination of prayers, rigid physical and mental discipline, lots of readings, visits from family and friends, and faith in himself and the future of his country. He shook my hand to say goodbye and asked me to thank the wonderful and hospitable people of William and Mary and the Williamsburg community. Goodbye Ninoy. May you rest in peace. May your death restore Philippine democracy.
