Chappell, Nettles, Willis Awarded NEH Research Grants

Three faculty members, Elsa Nettles and Jack Willis in English and Miles Chappell in fine arts, have been awarded NEH grants for research this year.

Elsa Nettles is working on a study of William Dean Howell's treatment of language, race and class society in his fiction and essays. Willis' fellowship is supporting his writing and research on the last four chapters of a book-length history of Leonard and Virginia Woolf's Hogarth Press. Chappell is working on an exhibition and catalogue of the paintings of Cristofano Allori (1577-1621).

Perhaps best known for his novel "The Rise of Silas Lapham," Howell was a late 19th century writer who was also an important literary figure as a literary critic.

Ms. Nettles is studying Howell family papers and Howell's extensive correspondence, most of which is housed at the Boughton Library at Harvard. Howell corresponded with most of the New England writers of his time including James Russell Lowell and Longfellow. She is also working at the Library of Congress and at the Cornell Library in Ithaca.

Ms. Nettles is planning a book on Howell. She has already written four articles on Howell which have been accepted for publication.

His writings, she says, reflect a conflict of ideas about his society, a society that on the one hand identified with principles of quality and unity that have been associated with American democracy. Yet Howell recognized the existence of class barriers and racial discrimination, says Ms. Nettles. "He espoused ideals of unity, equality and democratic ideals but he certainly had biases and prejudices," she adds.

"He was very generous in his recognition of writers and praised them, some of whom were less than generous in their of his work. He had the capacity to appreciate a diversity of artistic talents. He admired both Mark Twain and James. He was the first to recognize the work of Paul Lawrence Dunbar and reviewed his first volume of poetry in Harper's Weekly, a review which was instrumental in furthering his career. He also recognized and encouraged European writers who came to this country to work.

An energetic man, Howell lived to be 83 and wrote 30 volumes of literature including a dozen travel books and a number of one-act plays. He was editor of the Atlantic Monthly magazine for 10 years.

Ms. Nettles says her initial interest in Howell came from his close connection with Henry James. Ms. Nettles wrote her doctoral dissertation on the drama of consciousness in the novels of Henry James. In 1975 she was awarded the Modern Languages and Literatures Studies Award by the South Atlantic Modern Languages Association for a comparative study of the works of James and Joseph Conrad.

Ms. Nettles said she also considers Howell a "relatively normal person." Some people that you spend a great deal of research time with can be very depressing, she explains. He had a marriage that lasted, children that he was devoted to and a stability in his life that makes him an attractive person to "live" with."

A graduate of Cornell University, A.B., 1953; and the University of Wisconsin, M.A., 1955, Ph.D., 1960, Ms. Nettles joined the faculty of the College as an assistant professor of English in 1963. She came to Williamsburg from the faculty at Mount Holyoke College.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, she received the American Association of University women fellowship in 1959-60 and was awarded a postdoctoral fellowship by the University of Wisconsin in 1962-63. She has received several faculty research grants and has published widely in a number of scholarly journals.

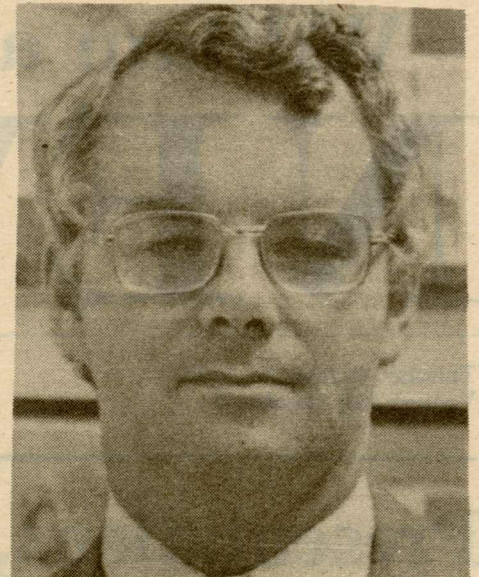

This is the second NEH grant which Willis has received for his current research project. In 1979 he was awarded a grant to complete his research. His book-length history of Leonard and Virginia Woolf's Hogarth Press will cover its establishment in 1917 to the early war years of the 1940's when a destructive air raid and Virginia Woolf's slow descent into suicide caused the Woolfs to change the nature, extent and direction of the Press.

In March 1917 Leonard and Virginia Woolf purchased a small hand press, the necessary materials and tools and an instruction manual. Back home in Hogarth House, Richmond, England, the Woolfs set up the press in their dining room and began to teach themselves how to print. Their first publication was entitled "Two Stories," one each by Virginia and Leonard. It was issued in July 1917 and 150 copies were sold by subscription. The Woolfs published 32 titles in seven years including a novel and two collections of stories by Virginia Woolf, two volumes of poems by T. S. Eliot, and other works by Clive Bell, E. M. Forster, Roger Fry and Herbert Read. The press also published first English translations of works by Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Bunin, Chekhov and Gorky.

In 1924 the Press took over the enormously significant task of publishing the books of the International Psycho-Analytical Library which included two earlier books by Sigmund Freud and his "Collecting Papers." From 1924 until Freud's death in 1939, the Hogarth Press published every work of Freud in English translation and after his death the 24-volume standard edition of his complete works.

The press also published works by the younger poets and novelists of the 1930's including Auden, Spender, Isherwood and Lewis, also the writings of Conrad Aiken, Robert Graves, Edith Sitwell and Gertrude Stein.

The object of Willis' book is to analyze the development of the Hogarth Press in England during the inter-war years and to evaluate its influence on the literary, intellectual and cultural developments of the time.

Willis, who holds degrees from the University of Virginia and Columbia University, has been a member of the English department since 1959. He also served for three years as administrative assistant to former president Davis Y. Paschall and has been Associate Dean of the College, Acting Dean of Graduate Studies and liaison officer for the Richard Bland and Christopher Newport College when both were branch colleges of William and Mary.

Miles Chappell's award is working on an exhibition and catalogue of the paintings of Cristofano Allori (1577-1621) at the Pitti Gallery in Florence next year.

The Cristofano Allori exhibit and catalogue will be organized in conjunction with the resources and director of the Pitti Gallery, Dr. Marco Chiarini. Both will focus on three principal themes says Chappell: biographical and historical context; style and iconography; and patronage. While the exhibition will consist of some 30 paintings and possibly complemented by drawings from the Uffizi gallery, the catalogue will be organized as a monographic study.

"While the painter Lodovico Cigoli (1559-1613) may be seen as widely thought of as the founder of the Florentine Baroque, it is his pupil Cristofano Allori who crystallized the combination of style and expression that is so characteristic of what is thought of as the distinctly Florentine Baroque style," says Chappell. Chappell plans through his work to clarify Allori's place in the history of 17th century Florentine Art.

In preparation for his study, Chappell has done considerable research in archives in Tuscany, the location of Allori's commissions, in the principal drawing collections of Europe, and in public and private painting collections. He has made an extensive systematic survey of the records of the Florentine Academy of Design and the Medici Archive of letters and accounts.

Chappell will be working this year both here at the National Gallery and the Frick museum and in Florence.

A specialist in Italian Renaissance and Baroque art, Chappell had concentrated much of his research and publications on paintings in Florence in the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries and in particular on the careers of Cigoli and Allori. He has made a catalogue of some 200 "missing" paintings by Cigoli. These were lost by but known paintings from inventories, drawings, prints, archival records and from other descriptive sources.

In 1979 Chappell was named a Fellow at the Harvard University Center for Italian Renaissance Studies at the Villa I Tatti in Florence. Villa I Tatti is well known among art historians and travelers as the home of the art historian and connoisseur Bernard Berenson, at whose death in 1959, it and its important library and books and photographs related to Italian art were bequeathed to Harvard University.

Chappell spent part of 1980 in Florence working on a catalogue of the paintings of Cigoli and initiated work on his present project.

Chappell holds degrees from the College and the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. He has been a member of the faculty since 1977 and has served as chairman of the department of fine arts.

Self-Study Notes

Planning for the Future

One of the most important functions of a self-study is to develop recommendations and documentation for planning the future of the institution. However, the self-study organization itself dissolves as soon as its report is finished, and therefore cannot facilitate the implementation of its own recommendations. Instead, a permanent mechanism for planning must accept this responsibility. Realizing this, the steering committee of the 1974 Self-Study singled out the planning process at W&M, or the lack thereof, as the most serious problem that it uncovered. An indication of the high priority assigned to this problem is the fact that the first eight paragraphs of the conclusions of the 1974 report deal with this single subject. In response, the Planning and Priorities Committee was established by the current administration.

The 1984 Self-Study has adopted two techniques for ensuring continued attention to its recommendations. Each committee of the Self-Study includes at least one member of the Planning and Priorities Committee. We hope that overlapping committee membership will establish direct communication. The recommendations of each committee will be shaped with the advice of the Planning and Priorities Committee, and will in turn form the basis for future deliberations of that body. Secondly, the Steering Committee has endeavored, as far as possible, to include on each committee a member from each of the relevant standing committees of the College. Thus, for example, the Self-Study Committee on Library includes members of the College Library Committee. This arrangement helps to maintain contact between the Self-Study and those who are most directly involved with setting policy during the coming decade.

Football Trainer Served The College For 32 Years

A funeral service was held Tuesday, Oct. 11 at the Williamsburg United Methodist Church for John M. "Dusty" Rhodes, a founder and first captain of the Williamsburg Medical Services. He retired in 1981 as director of the X-ray and EEG laboratory at Eastern State Hospital.

He was a resident of Williamsburg for 35 years and was a trainer for the football team at the College for 32 years. Mr. Rhodes was a past president of the American Medical Technologists Registry and served for 15 years as its judiciary counselor. He received the Registry's highest honor, the Order of the Golden Microscope.

A native of Derry, Pa., Mr. Rhodes served in the U.S. Navy during World War II as a pharmacist's mate.

He was a member of the Williamsburg United Methodist Church, an honorary member of the city EMS unit, a member of the American Registry of Radiologic Technicians and Olivet Lodge No. 607, Philadelphia, Pa.

The family has requested that expressions of sympathy be made in the form of donations to the College of William and Mary Athletic Education Foundation, P.O. Box 521, Williamsburg, Va., 23187 or to the Williamsburg Emergency Services Unit in care of the fire department.

In a tribute to Mr. Rhodes' service to the teams of the College, a Daily Press sportswriter wrote "about a hero and 'amazing grace'." He quoted his longtime associate, Monty Linkenauger, professor of physical education, who said "Dusty really cared. He had a lot of expertise where technical medicine was concerned but what made him special was that he cared about the things he was involved in."

"He lived life to its fullest," wrote Moskowitz. "Zeal, pride, energy, skill and an impish sense of humor were all part of the Rhodes legacy."
