U.S. Postage PAID at Williamsburg, Va.

Groundbreaking ceremonies took place Nov. 2 for Phase II of the Muscarelle Museum of Art. Dr. Thomas A. Graves, Jr., hands the golden shovel to Joseph Muscarelle for the first shovelful of earth, while Mrs. Muscarelle and other prominent donors, Mrs. Gilbert Kinnamon, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Hennage, Mr. and Mrs. J.B. Hickman, Mrs. James S. Ellis, and Mrs. and Mrs. Fred Herman wait their turn. Construction will start early next year for the $1.3 million addition, funded by private contributions of generous friends of the College.

Private support for College in fiscal '84 is $5.4 million

The grand total of private financial support for the College of William and Mary for fiscal year 1983-84 reached $5.4 million, up seven percent from the previous fiscal year. This represents an all-time high that more than doubles the total of fiscal year 1980-81, according to the Report to Investors issued by the College's Office of University Advancement.

Included in that total was $2.8 million for current operations. A significant part of this came from the William and Mary Annual Fund, which topped the $1 million mark for the first time in the College's history. Annual Fund gifts from alumni, parents of students and friends of the College totaled $1,049,687, a 19 percent increase over last year.

The report also includes summary figures on gifts for capital purposes, which totaled $2.5 million. This figure includes realized bequests as well as gifts for faculty support, endowment, student scholarship endowment, facilities and gifts-in-kind.

A summary of the 60-page report points out that gifts from alumni for current operations and for capital purposes came to $1.9 million, or 36 percent of the grand total of private support for the year. "Alumni remain the most important source of voluntary support for the College," the report said.

Parents and friends accounted for 33 percent of the total voluntary support, contributing $1.7 million. Gifts from corporations rose by 44 percent, totaling $777,339. Twenty-six percent of that total came as matching gifts from companies.

Foundations gave a total of $828,620 in fiscal year 1984 to the college, an 18 percent increase.

In addition, 10 estates were paid to William and Mary this year for a total of $376,544.

Other highlights of the report include figures on gifts for student financial aid, which surpassed $600,000 in 1984. The majority of the gifts were designated for scholarship endowments, the report said. Expendable gifts for student financial aid totaled $79,454, while capital gifts for that purpose reached $545,546.

Also in fiscal 1984, major gifts and commitments have made possible the construction of a new $1.3 million, two story, 11,000-square-foot addition to the Muscarelle Museum of Art on campus. The Kresge Foundation and Joseph and Margaret Muscarelle, for whom the museum is named, agreed to provide grants of $200,000 and $150,000 respectively if the remainder needed for the addition could be raised by March 15, 1984. The challenge was met by alumni, individual and corporate friends of the College. Construction on the addition is expected to begin early in 1985.

In July 1982, a goal was set to raise $4.4 million for faculty support. In fiscal 1984, funds qualifying for faculty support totaled $495,451, bringing the overall total to $1,091,233 raised thus far toward this goal. Two endowed professorships were completed during the year and faculty were appointed to positions in recent months.

President Graves says he'll move to new job in March

President Thomas A. Graves, Jr., who had tendered his resignation as of summer, 1985, will be leaving early to take a position as director of the Henry Francis du Pont Winterthur Museum near Wilmington, Del.

He plans to assume the new post in March, 1985, and hopes to step down from the presidency early enough to allow him and Mrs. Graves "a vacation in between careers."

Dr. Graves did not speculate on when he may leave. Anne Dobie Peebles, Rector of William and Mary, says that the early departure will have no effect on the search for a new president, which is on target. "I hope to have a president-designate probably by the first of the year," she notes. Since August, the 17-member search committee has screened some 200 applicants for the job. Miss Peebles surmises that the new president will be on hand by Commencement or at the start of the new fiscal year, July 1. An acting president, probably Provost George R. Healy, may be named to assume the responsibilities of Dr. Graves after he leaves.

Thomas A. Graves, Jr.

Both President and Mrs. Graves seem pleased with the new position. In retiring from the College at the age of 60, Dr. Graves will begin a new career as head of another distinguished educational institution. The Winterthur Museum is a major center for the understanding and appreciation of American decorative arts and culture, and a resource of national importance. Winterthur is the first museum designated by the National Endowment for the Humanities as a Center for Advanced Study.

The Museum and gardens were the country estate of the late Henry Francis du Pont. Opened to the general public in 1951, today the Museum consists of 196 room settings housed in a nine-story building which contains over 70,000 American antiques made or used in America between 1640 and 1840. These include an enormous range and variety of furniture, textiles, paintings, prints, pewter, silver, ceramics, glass, brass and needlework.

The estate itself consists of 963 acres of countryside. The gardens, 200 acres of rolling hills, woods and meadows, are maintained in the style of an English natural landscape, with thousands of trees, shrubs, wild flowers, native and exotic plants, ponds, and a wide variety of wild life.

Winterthur offers a number of graduate, internship, fellowship and training programs in association with the University of Delaware, including a program in Early American Culture, and a program in Art Conservation, which is headed by Joyce Hill Stoner, '68.

The Graves family will find plenty of William and Mary companions at Winterthur. Among the trustees of the prestigious museum are J. Bruce Bredin, '36, a former member of the College's Board of Visitors and now chairman of the board of trustees of the University of Delaware; David D. Wakefield, '52, currently a trustee of William and Mary's Endowment Association; and J. Carter Brown, '84 (Honorary), director of the National Gallery of Art.

A local aspect of Dr. Graves' appointment is that he succeeds a former Williamsburg resident, Dr. James Morton Smith, who retired this year. Dr. Smith was for a number of years chairman of the Council of the Institute of Early American History and Culture, and was a professor of history at William and Mary.

Dr. and Mrs. Graves will live at Chandler Farm, a 14-room, three-story brick farm house on the estate.

"While we shall never forget our tremendously satisfying, rewarding and happy years at William and Mary," says Dr. Graves, "Zoe and I look forward to our new adventure with great anticipation. We shall greatly miss our many close friends at William and Mary, in Williamsburg and Virginia, but we hope that they will accept our invitation to visit us and Winterthur in the years ahead.

"There is no way that Zoe and I can possibly express our heartfelt thanks to the Board of Visitors, faculty, administration, staff, students and alumni of William and Mary, and to the citizens of Williamsburg and Virginia for their friendship, support and loyalty over these truly wonderful years in our lives."

Dr. Graves has been president at the College since 1971, coming here from Harvard University, where he was associate dean of the Graduate School of Business Administration.

United Way drive hits goal

The College has surpassed its United Way goal for 1984, with pledge cards still coming in, according to John R. Thelin, campaign chairman for William and Mary. The goal was $16,400, and as of Monday, $17,500 had been given or pledged.

A total of 244 of 1306 campus employees participated in the drive. Only one division, University Advancement, achieved 100 percent participation by all its employees.

Other divisions were as follows: School of Education, 42%; School of Business, 40%; Student Affairs, 27%; Arts and Sciences, 20%; Intercollegiate Athletics, 18%; Business Affairs, 13%; Academic Affairs, 10%.

Thelin expressed his thanks to all who made the 1984 campaign successful. This year's contributions represented an increase of more than 20 percent over last year.

FREE PLANTS THURSDAY

The Department of Buildings and Grounds will be giving away bloomed-out chrysanthemum plants Thursday, Nov. 8, between 1 and 3 p.m. in the area near the Campus Police station.

These are plants taken from flower beds around the campus, and when planted and cut back, they will bloom again next year. Persons should bring their own containers, according to Roy Williams, assistant director of buildings and grounds.

The chrysanthemums are being replaced by ornamental cabbages and kale for the winter months.

Newsmakers

Henry E. Coleman, associate professor of fine arts, has a one-man show of art this month at Gallery II West, St. George, Utah. The exhibition opens Nov. 10, and includes drawings, collages and oil paintings. Prizes and past competitions for Professor Coleman include a solo show at Radford College, a two-person show at Lawrence University, and works in the National Small Image Exhibition in Spokane, Wash., the Peninsula Art Center in Newport News, and the Twentieth Century Gallery in Williamsburg.

Richard H. Palmer, professor of theatre and speech has been elected to a two-year term as president of the Virginia Theatre Conference, an organization of college, university, community, professional, secondary, and children's theatre organizations. He had previously served for two years as first vice-president of the group. For the past four years, he was the Virginia state representative to the board of the Southeastern Theatre Association, a ten-state organization.

Carl E. Carlson, professor of physics, presented three invited talks recently in various parts of the world. He spoke on "Glueball Mass Spectra" at the 15th Symposium on Multiparticle Dynamics in Lund, Sweden, June 12; at M.I.T., Cambridge, Mass. in July on "Quark Hunting in Nuclear Physics;" and in Aspen, Colorado, in August on "Glueballs and the Bag Model," at the Aspen Center for Physics.

John B. Delos, professor of physics, spoke last summer at the American Conference on Theoretical Chemistry, in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. He discussed the "Trajectories of an Atomic Electron in a Magnetic Field," "Construction of a Multidimensional Potential Energy Surface from an Energy Spectrum," and "Theory of Electron Detachment in Collisions of Negative Ions with Atoms."

William J. Hargis, Jr., professor of marine science of VIMS' estuaries and coastal ecology department, attended the 1984 Interstate Seafood Seminar in Virginia Beach, Oct. 2-5. He presented two invited papers entitled: "Biological Pollution: Predators, Parasites and Diseases in Purposeful Transplantations of Estuarine and Marine Species" co-authored by Dr. John L. Dupuy, and "Marine Organisms and Human Health and Welfare."

The seminar was attended by specialists dealing with scientific and technical problems relevant to shellfish and finfish industries.

Gene M. Silberhorn, associate professor of marine science and head of the department of wetlands ecology, attended a three-day national workshop "Wetland Protection: Strengthening State Regulation" at the University of Florida, Gainesville. Silberhorn presented a paper entitled "Chesapeake Bay Wetlands: Research Needs and Information Gaps." The workshop was sponsored by the Environmental Protection Agency and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Three members of the department of history recently participated in the Carolinas Symposium on British Studies. The two-day conference, October 13-14, was sponsored by Appalachian State University at Boone, N.C.

Professor A.Z. Freeman chaired a session on "Sport and Society in Medieval and Renaissance England." Associate Professor James N. McCord, Jr. presented a paper on "The House of Lords in the Age of Reform" at a session devoted to English landed society in the nineteenth century. At another session on "Reformation Politics" Professor Dale Hoak discussed "The Secret History of the Tudor Court: Edward VI's Privy Purses."

Attending the International Conference on Particles and Nuclei at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, in August were professors M. Eckhause, J.R. Kane, C.F. Perdrisat, R.T. Siegel, R.E. Welsh and Rolf Winter of the physics department. Dr. Siegel is a member of the International Advisory Committee for the conference, which will meet next in Japan in 1987.

Anne M. Pratt, assistant to the Vice President for University Advancement, recently presented a paper in San Francisco at the 1984 Conference on Post-secondary Education. The paper, entitled "Design for Quality," was co-authored with Clifton F. Conrad of the University of Arizona and addressed the topic of institutional quality in colleges and universities. This late October conference was sponsored by the American Educational Research Association and the Association for the Study of Higher Education.

Dr. Mario D. Zamora, professor of anthropology, is editor and co-author of a special issue of South Asian Anthropologist to be published this month. Titled "Social Change in Modern South Asia," the issue is in honor of America's most eminent Indian specialist in anthropology, Dr. David G. Mandelbaum, professor emeritus of anthropology, University of California, Berkeley. Dr. Zamora wrote the biographical introduction to the life and works of Prof. Mandelbaum. One Canadian and seven American specialists on South Asia wrote scientific papers for the issue.

Dr. Zamora has been appointed international corresponding associate editor of South Asian Anthropology, in addition to his role as book review editor of the journal. Dr. Zamora's review of Mellie Lopez's "A Study of Philippine Games" appeared in the June, 1984, issue of Pilipinas, the journal of the Philippine Studies Council of the Association for Asian Studies. His review of Norbert Dannhaeuser's book "Contemporary Trade Strategies in the Philippines" will appear in Man, journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, London, England.

Elsa Nettels, professor of English, has published an essay, "Howell and Hardy," in the June, 1984, number of Colby Library Quarterly. With the support of a year-long NEH fellowship, Professor Nettels is on research leave to write a book on Howells.

Steven Mackey, assistant professor of music, is one of four winners in the 1984 League-ISCN (International Society of Contemporary Music) National Composer Competition. His winning work, String Quartet, was selected from entries nationwide. As a result of this honor, String Quartet will be performed at Carnegie Recital Hall in New York during the 1985-86 season and has been nominated to represent the U.S. in the 1985 World Music Days in Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

Douglas J. Besharov, visiting associate professor at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, has had his article "Protecting Children from Abuse and Neglect: The Need To Narrow the Grounds for State Intervention," accepted for publication by the Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy. Professor Besharov is teaching Torts and Family Law.

Hans C. von Baeyer and Carl E. Carlson, both professors of physics, attended the annual meeting of the southeastern section of the American Physical Society in Memphis recently. Dr. von Baeyer gave an invited lecture to the Society of Physics Students on the Continuous Electron Beam Accelerator Facility in Virginia, and chaired two sessions. Dr. Carlson delivered an invited lecture titled, "Quark Hunting in Nuclear Physics."

Last year's Christmas programs for children were a big hit. Here coach Al Albert is reading a Christmas story to young students, as Mary J. Dean and Chuck Holloway watch.

Volunteers are sought on campus for Christmas storytime program

Student volunteers are needed for a Christmas Story Time program for young children during the week of Dec. 3-7. Programs of one hour's length will take place in the Great Hall of the Sir Christopher Wren Building, and the children will be preschool, first and second graders from schools in the Williamsburg community.

Student musicians, dancers, jugglers, and readers of Christmas stories are desired to assist during the entertainment, which is a project of Mrs. Thomas A. Graves, Jr.

Please call Mary J. Dean, Office of University Communications, extension 4600, to volunteer.

MANAGEMENT WORKSHOP

A workshop entitled "Financial Management" is being offered to interested employees Nov. 29-30. It is designed for individuals who are involved in controlling budgets within their departments. The course gives an overview of the processes involved in appropriating funds, budgeting resources, reporting the distribution of funds, and auditing the flow of financial resources. It provides an opportunity for participants to practice several techniques for the development and maintenance of financial control.

Dr. Jerry Bennett, a faculty member from the University of Richmond, will be the facilitator for this workshop. Class will begin each day at 9 a.m. in Rooms A & B of the Campus Center. For further information and/or registration, contact Charla Cordle or Renee Berry at ext. 4214.

ACID RAIN COLLOQUIUM

Acid rain has been a subject of growing interest during the past several years. In order to provide an opportunity for business and industrial interests and individuals to learn more about various perspectives on acid rain, the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, in cooperation with the Institute for Law and Public Health Protection, is presenting a series of lectures on acid rain.

Larry B. Parker, environmental affairs analyst, Library of Congress, will talk on economic issues related to acid rain on Dec. 3. Dr. James N. Galloway, associate professor of the department of environmental science, University of Virginia, is the final speaker on Dec. 10, with his subject, "Acid Rain: Past, Present and Future."

Dr. J. Christopher Bernabo, executive director, U.S. National Acid Precipitation Assessment Program, Washington, D.C., addressed the opening of the Acid Rain Colloquium held at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science Oct. 23.

All lectures will be held from 2-3 p.m. in Watermen's Hall auditorium at VIMS, Gloucester Point campus. For further information, call 642-7102.

Lisa Storm of Hampton, daughter of College Board of Visitors member Harriet N. Storm, presented a Hampton Cup to Linda Lavin as a souvenir of Miss Lavin's visit here.

Students enjoy summer digs on island of St. Eustatius

Top, students use surveying instruments to plot the layout of the Simon Doncker House at St. Eustatius. Lower, careful excavations and sifting revealed many artifacts, duly recorded. Right, in the pits.

What could be more idyllic for a college student than spending the summer in the Caribbean sunning and snorkeling? Doing that and earning six credit hours at the same time, that's what.

For the 11 William and Mary students who participated in the 1984 Summer Field School in Historical Archaeology in St. Eustatius, the opportunity to learn about archaeological fieldwork came in the form of a tiny island in the West Indies with beautiful beaches, friendly inhabitants and even an extinct volcano called "The Quill" with a lush rain forest in its crater.

This summer was the fourth summer that Dr. Norman F. Barka, professor of anthropology and chairman of the department, conducted the field school at "Statia." William and Mary anthropology majors joined with students from all over the United States and Canada for the dig, which cost about $1700, including airfare and room and board. The project is a cooperative effort of four groups: the William and Mary anthropology department, the St. Eustatius Historical Foundation, the Government of St. Eustatius, and the Institute of Archaeology and Anthropology of the Central Government, Curacao.

Today Statia, one of the Dutch Windward Islands, has a population of 1500, most of whom live in the island's only town, Oranjestad. But Statia was a trader's (and smuggler's) paradise in the 18th century. As many as one hundred ships a day docked in the harbor, a phenomenon that earned for the island the nickname "The Golden Rock" of the Caribbean, according to Melissa Conner, a senior anthropology major from Silver Spring, Md. During the American Revolution large quantities of arms and ammunition were smuggled through Statia to help the colonists fight the redcoats.

The main focus of the summer's dig was the excavation of the brick home of a wealthy 18th-century Dutch merchant, Simon Doncker. In trash sites and in the harbor 17th- and 18th-century artifacts such as plates, glasses, bottles, buttons and beads were found in abundance.

Students stayed in a former commercial hotel now owned by the government of St. Eustatius and soon got used to cold showers, getting up early, drinking powdered milk, and eating lots of peanut butter, some of the hardships to be endured on a dig. According to George Logan, a William and Mary senior from Pulaski, Va., students were up between 5:30 and 6 in the morning, into their work clothes, mostly tee-shirts and shorts, and at the dig by 7 a.m. "It wasn't luxurious," remarked George.

Because of the heat of the summer sun, work ended each day at 2 p.m., leaving students free for the remainder of the afternoon. Snorkeling, sunbathing, and exploring the island were some of the activities students enjoyed in their free time. In the evening students attended lectures on aspects of fieldwork and anthropology.

The budding archaeologists also got to know the local islanders. "They were really friendly," recalls Tom Spong of Williamsburg, a William and Mary student who hopes to go back to St. Eustatius next summer. "They had two basketball teams, one from the town and one from the country, and we played against both teams."

A further highlight of the fieldworkers' stay was the two-week-long Carnivale. Dancing, musclemen contests, steel drum bands, reggae groups, beer stands and lots of food were featured every night, according to Tom.

Although the primary enterprise of the field school was the dig at the Doncker House, several students conducted ethnological studies. Melissa's work involved examining the language and speech of the Eustatians, whose language is English but has influences of many other European tongues. "I've made a lot of really good friends from across the country and have learned a lot about different methods of ethnography," said Melissa.

Underwater excavations in the harbor were also conducted, and although the field school participants were not qualified to scuba dive, some of them helped by snorkeling in the water above the divers to chart their positions.

Students were enthusiastic about their summer experience. Tom Spong called it an "awesome experience" and Melissa Conner echoed his sentiments, saying, "It was probably the best thing I've ever done for myself." And as George Logan put it, "Doing fieldwork in a place like Statia really spoils you."

Greenhouse tours are available

Greenery and flowering plants are on view during all seasons at the greenhouses of the College of William and Mary. Guided tours are available to groups that wish to visit the collection of unique plants atop Millington Hall.

The Williamsburg Council of Garden Clubs began a project in 1982 to offer guide service at the greenhouses and, during the spring only, for botanical tours of the campus. Tours are available Mondays through Fridays from 9 a.m.-4 p.m., and groups such as garden clubs, senior citizens, and school classes are encouraged to visit. Reservations are taken by Dr. Martin C. Mathes, department of biology, at 253-4458.

The greenhouses illustrate a progression of flowers from the bird-of-paradise to the crown-of-thorns and the night-blooming Cereus. Scented plants include a variety of fragrant geraniums and carrion flower. Visually handicapped individuals will enjoy a small section that contains Braille labels. Plants of economic importance such as the coffee, banana and camphor trees are also featured.

Josephine Jones serves as coordinator of the guide service, while Cynthia Long, Leila McConnell, Robert Russell, Molly Robbins, Fran Shepherd and Polly Bandy donate their time as guides.

Last year about 25 groups toured the greenhouses, about 400 persons in all.

STUDENT ASSOCIATION NEWS

There will be an organizational meeting Nov. 7, at 7 p.m. in New Rogers Hall, to form an Admissions Assistance Program. Members will make high school liaison visits and help the Admissions Office in other activities to recruit new students. Applications for membership will be available.

The Vice-President of Social Affairs position is open. Applications are available until Nov. 9 in the Student Association office.

Student Association bus shuttles are as follows: Nov. 7, dinner at the Surrey House, across the James River, $1.50 per person, space limited; Nov. 10, Culture Club concert, $4 per person. Sign up in the SA office.

Handicapped students at the College are encouraged to utilize the services offered through the Office of the Handicapped Student Advisor. If you have not previously introduced yourself, please stop by to see Dean Hardy, James Blair 209.

At Linda Lavin's induction as an honorary member in Alpha of Virginia chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, Howard Scammon, her theatre professor, administered the oath, while Cam Walker, right, recording secretary, held the Bible. Nathan Altshuler, vice-president, center, beamed. The ceremony was held at the President's House.

Publick Advices

Two additions have been made to the Tricentennial Committee of the College. They are Kay J. Domine, college archivist, and Dr. Bruce T. McCully, professor emeritus of history.

The committee was formed to explore ways to make the College's 300th anniversary in 1993 both memorable in impact and enduring in its influence.

H. Westcott Cunningham, executive vice-president of the Society of the Alumni, chairs the committee. The committee now numbers 28 persons, plus two observers and a recorder.

Two senior coeds were sharing news about a job search for next June, and of recent interviews on campus from corporate search teams. One young lady said to the other, "I was interviewed by Colgate-Palmolive, but was turned down." Mel Schiavelli, dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, who was passing by at the time, interjected, "What did they say, 'No soap?'"

A workshop on a Myers-Briggs Personality Inventory will be held Nov. 16 in Jones Hall, from 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Dr. Fred Babcock, director of the counseling and career center at Christopher Newport College, will be leader.

A fee of $10 for graduate students and $15 for faculty and staff will be charged. Information and registration is available from Kathy Galso, Jones 336, extension 4434, or at 229-9370 after hours.

The Williamsburg-James City County chapter, American Red Cross, will conduct the CPR-Basic Life Support course on Friday, Nov. 16, from 6 p.m.-9 p.m.; Saturday, Nov. 17 and Sunday, Nov. 18, from 2-5 p.m. All sessions must be attended. The course will be conducted in the Red Cross Conference Room at 109 Cary Street.

There is no charge for instruction. A course materials fee of $7.50 will be charged each participant.

Registration must be made in person in order to pick up the book to study prior to course date. The office is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Registration will close on Nov. 15. Class size is limited.

For further information, please call 253-0228.

A Computer Science Colloquium will take place Friday, Nov. 9, at 4 p.m. in Jones 302. The speaker is Dr. Worthy Martin, University of Virginia department of computer science, whose subject is "Dynamic Scene Analysis and Multiresolution Imagery." Refreshments will be served at 3:30 p.m.

A two-day workshop for students interested in corporate careers will be given Jan. 10 and 11 by Xerox. Topics such as time management, group interaction, delegation and communications will be discussed. Only 20 students will be selected for the seminar. Interested juniors and seniors should apply to Pam Garrett, 140 Morton Hall, before Nov. 16. Names of those selected will be posted by Nov. 27.

The Placement Office will hold an organizational meeting on Thursday, Nov. 15, to form a Job Search Club. Meeting in Morton 220, the group hopefully will aid students to find jobs, to be a support group, to share information on resources, and to share ideas on what works best. For more information, call Bob Hunt, associate director of placement, at 253-4604.

I. Bakonyi, Central Research Institute for Physics in Budapest, will speak Friday at a Physics Colloquium at 4 p.m. Coffee is at 3:30 p.m., the talk at 4 p.m.

Will A. Molineux, editorial page editor of the Times-Herald, will discuss careers in journalism Thursday at 4 p.m. in Morton 341. Interested students are invited to attend.

Ever dream of what you'd do with a $200 prize?

Well, now the undergraduate company of the Business School, Direct-Marketing of Williamsburg, Inc., gives you that chance in a special Homecoming promotion for the Village Shops at Kingsmill. It's still not too late to enter the drawing. Just turn in the bottom part of the flyer that was distributed at the Homecoming events and on page 19 of the Flat Hat by Friday, Nov. 9, to be eligible.

When an alumna of the class of 1949 visited William and Mary for Homecoming, she walked through Trinkle Hall to see what the renovation had accomplished. There was a sign up in the building which read, "Happy Hour," and she commented, "All my hours at William and Mary were happy ones!"

Dancetera, a student group, will present A Change of Pace Thursday, Nov. 15, at 9 p.m. at Tazewell. The public is invited.

Linda Lavin captures hearts at Homecoming events

Bouncy Linda Lavin, '59, came back to William and Mary as grand marshal of the Homecoming Parade, and created a real stir. She was given the V.I.P. treatment all last weekend, as she enjoyed the 25th reunion of her class, banquets, luncheons, initiations, a football game, and a press conference.

The tiny actress who is the mainstay of television's hit show, "Alice," bore little resemblance here to the pink-collar waitress on the tube. She had a very short hairdo, brushed upward, and was clad in white wool with a red coat.

While here, she was presented the Alumni Medallion for service to the College, community and nation; she was initiated into the Order of the White Jacket, an organization of alumni who earned their way through College by waiting on tables; she was initiated into Phi Beta Kappa in a ceremony at the President's House; she was the belle of the ball at her class reunion; and she led a 90-minute-long Homecoming Parade.

"If you wait long enough," she quipped at a press conference last Friday, "you'll be the Homecoming Queen."

She reminisced about her William and Mary days. A resident of Portland, Maine, in the 1950s, she went to Washington, D.C., on a visit and was told, "You must look at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg." She did, met the dean of admissions, and enrolled.

"I fell in love with the College, with the feel of it, and the look of it," she said. "A small coed college was just what I wanted."

She recalled the days of learning her craft from Howard Scammon, now professor emeritus of theatre and speech. "I had a wonderful education here, a wonderful time here, and formed my roots in the theatre here. With the William and Mary theater program, and the 18th century plays at Colonial Williamsburg, the acting opportunities are unequalled in the country."

Miss Lavin remembered when Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall opened, with its brand new facilities for the theater. The first production was Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," and she played Juliet. "We were making history and making memories," she said.

When she graduated from William and Mary, she headed for New York City to hit it big in the theater, confident, she said, of her training and ability. However, she did sell handkerchiefs at Bloomingdale's and worked as a temporary marketer to survive between acting jobs. She appeared in Broadway musicals, then moved to California when good roles became scarce in New York. She was cast in a pilot that didn't sell, but somebody at CBS saw it and offered her a development deal. "Alice" was the result, and it has been a smash for nine years.

This is her last season as the waitress at Mel's diner, however, and after the last episode is filmed in January, she'll be turning her attention to other activities. She has formed her own production company on the Warner Brothers lot, and will produce feature films. She has already directed several episodes of "Alice" and has produced four TV plays, and says she likes "working on ideas and bringing them to the screen."

She never dreamed her name would be a household word, she notes.

"Fame is ephemeral. It was not one of my fantasies to be a television star, I just wanted to be in the theater. However, I'm enjoying life, and it's rare to have good acting jobs like 'Alice' for nine years. But now I want to do other things."

Riding in the Homecoming parade with Linda Lavin was her six-year-old stepdaughter, Katy Niven. They traveled in an antique MG convertible.

Dr. Margaret McIntosh speaks on feminizing curriculums

Does the liberal arts curriculum need feminizing?

Dr. Margaret V. McIntosh, director of faculty development at the Wellesley College Center for Research on Women, will advance some ideas on the subject when she speaks at the College Nov. 12 in Rogers Hall, room 100, at 8 p.m.

Her subject is "Implications of Feminist Scholarship for Reconstructing the Liberal Arts Curriculum."

Her appearance here is sponsored by the Women's Forum and the Department of English, and the public is invited.

Dr. McIntosh was graduated summa cum laude from Radcliffe College in 1956, and was awarded a master's degree from Radcliffe and her Ph.D. from Harvard University. She has taught English at Trinity College and at the University of Denver, where she directed the American Studies Program.

At Wellesley, she directs the Andrew W. Mellon Faculty Development Program, College Programs, 19th-Century American Women's Fiction Project, and the Dodge Faculty Development Program in Women's Studies for Secondary School Teachers.

She is a popular speaker and has lectured in this country and abroad on topics concerning women and academia. She has also published extensively on women's studies.

Homecoming '84 was a blast!

From top, Dr. and Mrs. Graves ride in their last Homecoming parade; Jim Kelly tests the donuts at the President's breakfast Saturday; the class of '59 holds a merry 25th reunion with Linda Lavin.

"It was, by far, the best Homecoming ever!" says John W. Phillips, director of Alumni Affairs at William and Mary.

"We had the largest turnout, the best parade, wonderful weather, a football victory, and I don't know how we'll ever top it."

Hundreds of alumni came back for reunions and for the festivities held on the weekend of Nov. 2-4. Queen of the Homecoming was Linda Lavin, '59, television star, who brought along her dad, David Lavin of Pensacola, Fla., and her stepdaughter, Katy Niven, 6, to enjoy the events. Linda's husband, Kip Niven, an actor, was opening in a play in Illinois, and could not be here.

The 90-minute parade Saturday featured a variety of floats and marching units. Prizes were given by the Society of the Alumni as follows: best float, first, Pi Beta Phi sorority, for "Kiss my grits," $500 cash and the Lambert Trophy; second, Chi Omega sorority, "Injuneering a Tribe ambush," $250 cash; and third, William and Mary Choir for "Family Feud," $100.

Prizes for the best band performances went to: high school division, first, Hampton High School, $250; second, Bruton High; third, King William High; intermediate school division, first, Gloucester, $100; second, James Blair; third, Queens Lake.

Tracy Ann Brownlee, a Kappa Alpha Theta sorority member, was crowned Homecoming Queen at halftime of the W&M-Lehigh football game. Doing the honors for the last time was President Thomas A. Graves, Jr., who will miss such pleasant activities next year at Winterthur Museum.

Phillips says he'd like to issue a blanket thank-you to the entire College community, and to Williamsburg folks who did so much to insure a great Homecoming for 1984.

New policy announced for use of recreational facilities

The College of William and Mary's Department of Intramurals and Campus Recreation has announced its revised policy for use of campus recreational facilities, effective last Monday, October 29. A Recreational Privileges Card, including a picture ID, has been instituted in order to insure that access to recreational facilities is limited to authorized individuals. Student, faculty and permanent staff use their current William and Mary identification cards to gain access to facilities. Those affected by the new system include alumni of the College, the spouses of faculty and permanent staff and currently enrolled William and Mary students, or individuals referred by a doctor for therapy and/or rehabilitation in the swimming pool.

Individuals fitting any of the above categories may fill out an application form in the Department of Intramurals and Campus Recreation office located in Blow Gymnasium, room 9, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. A three-day processing period for verification of information is required. After three days, the applicant may return to the recreation office to pick up an identification card and then proceed to the registrar's office in James Blair to have a photograph taken and the card sealed. The registrar will take photographs Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 a.m.-12 noon and 2-5 p.m. Alumni and medical referrals will be required to pay a $5 processing fee when they pick up the ID card from the recreation office in order to cover the cost of the ID.

Those individuals not fitting into any of the categories mentioned above who believe that they have a legitimate claim to facility use may contact the director of intramurals and campus recreation, Brian Cox, to discuss individual situations.

The Recreation Privileges Card must be presented to the security guards at Blow and Adair facilities in order to gain access to the recreational facilities covered under the new policy, which are Blow Gymnasium (courts, weight room, racquetball courts, swimming pool, sauna, showers and locker rooms), Adair Gymnasium (swimming pool, tennis courts, showers and locker rooms), William and Mary Hall (tennis courts only), Lake Matoaka Boathouse (use of kayaks and canoes) and various athletic fields (intramural, fraternity, Dillard and Yates). Use of the above facilities is restricted to those times not used by classes, varsity and club sport practices, intramural events and facility rentals and reservations.

The Recreation Privileges Card must be renewed prior to the beginning of the fall semester of each successive year. Beginning with fall 1985 a fee in addition to the $5 processing fee will be charged to alumni, medical referrals and others. The amount of this additional fee is currently under study.

Objectives of the new policy include providing a safe environment for all authorized participants, minimizing security problems and locker room thefts, minimizing overcrowding of facilities and adoption of a fair policy, whereby all users bear an appropriate cost of the program.

Wythe Lectures are scheduled

Lee Bollinger, professor of law at the University of Michigan and a major contributor to the body of scholarly writing on freedom of speech and the press, will deliver the 1984 Wythe Lectures on "Tolerance and the First Amendment" at 4 p.m., Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 7 and 8, at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law of the College.

The public is invited to attend both lectures, which will be given in room 119 of the law school. There is no admission charge. Bollinger's appearance is sponsored by the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at Marshall-Wythe.

A member of the University of Michigan faculty since 1979, Bollinger is a graduate of the University of Oregon and Columbia Law School. He served clerkships with Judge Wilfred Feinberg of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and with Chief Justice Warren E. Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court.

In 1980, Bollinger received a grant from the Rockefeller Humanities Foundation which he used to further research on his forthcoming book, "The Tolerant Society, Free Speech and Extremist Speech in America." The book is based on his earlier essays, "The Skokie Legacy: Reflections on an 'Easy Case' and Free Speech Theory" and "Free Speech and Intellectual Values." These essays are the basis for the two lectures.

The Skokie case became a test of freedom of speech when a group of American Nazis demanded the right to parade and speak in Skokie, Ill., a predominantly Jewish community. The citizens of Skokie, particularly those who had survived the holocaust, found the planned pro-Nazi demonstration especially offensive, while the Nazis claimed first amendment protection.

Bollinger teaches courses on law and mass media, the first amendment, law and culture, and contracts.

The Wythe Lectures is an annual series of talks initiated at the law school in 1976 and named for the occupant of the first chair of law in America, George Wythe. Wythe was not only a law teacher at the College of William and Mary, but also one of the most distinguished lawyers and judges of the late colonial and early national periods.

"CHARLIE BROWN" PLAY

After playing last week to audiences at the Williamsburg Regional Library Theatre, the Covenant Players will be performing their production of "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown" this week at the Campus Center Little Theatre. Performances will be at 8 p.m., Thursday through Saturday, Nov. 8 to 10, and 2 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 11.

Tickets for all performances are $4 for adults, $3 for students, and $2 for children

James Mazingo, a senior accounting major from Mechanicsville, was presented a $750 Zollinger Award for leadership, made through Sigma Phi Epsilon Delta of Virginia, to honor J. Edward Zollinger. With Mazingo, center, are Henry E. Mallue, associate dean of the School of Business Administration, and John Jamison, right, dean of the School of Business Administration. Bottom, Dean Melvyn Schiavelli, right, presented a similar Zollinger Award to Brian Sirower, a senior from Twinsburg, Ohio. Mr. Zollinger has endowed a research professorship at the School of Business Administration, a post held by John F. Kottas.

Women's soccer team at W&M gets NCAA trip to Florida

A year ago, the William and Mary women's soccer team was champion of the first East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) Tournament. This year, the Tribe again reached the finals, this time for the NCAA championship. Although the team lost its first bid for top place in the newer competition, coach John Charles is nevertheless pleased about the best season ever.

"It was definitely a big thrill to qualify for the NCAA tournament," Charles said.

Charles, who just completed his fourth (and the program's fourth) varsity term, has no regrets about the Indian's 3-1 loss to Central Florida. "It was a very good game, a very fast-paced game, a well-played game."

Other than the honor of competing for the NCAA championship, the William and Mary women got a trip to Orlando, travel expenses paid by the NCAA last week.

Central Florida jumped to a 2-0 first-half lead on goals by freshman Michelle Akers and senior Jean Varas, a former All-American player. In the second half when Marsha Fishburne of William and Mary headed a crossing shot from classmate Linda Seiden into the goal, hopes began to rise for a Tribe tie. It was not to be however; Akers scored another goal near the end of the match for a final score of 3-1.

The W&M women were ranked fifth, highest rating ever, in the first '84 poll; they held 12th place for several weeks, and settled in at the 13th spot nationally. Central Florida, a two-time national runner-up, was ranked eighth in the final poll. Now holding a 10-3 record, Central Florida faces North Carolina, defending national champion, in the next round of NCAA play this weekend.

Coach Charles said the Tribe soccer team had "a grueling schedule and it's a tribute to the team that they handled it. It was a very satisfactory and satisfying season. It was a season where 22 young people who didn't know each other came together and jelled to form a formidable team. It was a season which ended on a high point."

DR. GUY LECTURES

Dr. John Guy, a noted British historian, will lecture at the College Nov. 12 on "New View of Thomas More." The lecture is scheduled for 4 p.m. in room 120 of Tucker Hall. Dr. Guy is a Reader in history at the University of Bristol, and an acknowledged authority on politics, government and law in early Tudor England. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Cambridge and is the author of numerous articles and two books, including "The Public Career of Sir Thomas More," published in 1960 by Yale University Press.

Dr. Guy is presently directing a series of seminars and colloquia on the theme of "British Political Thought, 1500-50," at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, D.C. The series is funded jointly by the Folger Library and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Dr. Guy's lecture at William and Mary is sponsored by the Department of History and the Committee on Lectures. It is open to the public.

Course on Vietnam War is added to history

Many of the students entering William and Mary these days were only in elementary school when the Vietnam War was at its height and they didn't understand what was going on.

Nevertheless, the College history department was surprised when 150 student signed up to take a new course, "America in Vietnam," last spring.

Edward P. Crapol, professor of history, devised and taught the course. He found himself lecturing to his students in an auditorium in Chancellors Hall because no classroom in Morton Hall could hold so many eager students.

Crapol conceived the idea of teaching the biennial course after reading of similar courses offered at Rutgers University and after attending a conference, "Vietnam Reconsidered," in the spring of 1983 at the University of Southern California. There scholars, former military and government officials, Vietnamese refugees and veterans had lively discussions. In addition, Crapol was looking for an alternative to his course on the Cold War.

"The course on Vietnam seemed to mesh with a need we had in the history department at the undergraduate level: larger numbers of entering freshmen had taken an Advanced Placement course in American history and weren't necessarily interested in taking the straight survey, so this was a 200-level course which would appeal to a broader number of people," says Crapol.

Crapol brought the reality of the recent conflict into the classroom not only by giving formal lectures, but also by showing several documentary films and by presenting a panel discussion.

There was a panel in which two veterans recounted their experiences and their feelings about the war; there was a woman who had participated as a student in the antiwar movement; and the last speaker had worked during the Johnson and Nixon years in public relations.

During the final week of the course, Crapol and the students tried to evaluate the lessons, if any, of Vietnam. "We sort of did that as a class," says Crapol. "The question of why American lost the war was one they tried to answer. Some students said we didn't commit ourselves; others said we didn't understand Vietnam, its history and culture."

David W. Parks, tenor

David W. Parks will present voice recital on Sunday night

David Wayne Parks, a voice instructor at the College, will present a recital at 3 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 11, in the auditorium of the Williamsburg Regional Library arts center. Admission is free and the concert is open to the public.

Parks, a lyric tenor, will be accompanied by pianist Judith Zwelling. He will sing two works by Henry Purcell, "I'll Sail upon the Dog Star" and "Sweeter than Roses"; and two pieces by Thomas Arne, "Under the Greenwood Tree" and "Preach Not Me." Four works by Gabriel Faure also will be performed: "Arpege," "Prison," "Le Parfum Impermissible" and "Mandoline."

Following intermission, he will sing "Er ist's," "Verborgenheit," "Fussreise" and "Abschied," all by Hugo Wolf. Parks will also present an East Coast premiere of American composer Richard Faith's song cycle, "Four Love Songs."

Parks has appeared in 36 operas with such performing companies as Lyric Opera of Northern Michigan, Arizona Opera Company, Chautauqua Opera, Michigan Opera Theatre, Interlochen Opera Theatre, Comic Opera Guild of Ann Arbor and the University of Arizona opera company. He also has performed four summers with the Spoleto Festival in Italy.

He received his undergraduate degree in 1977 from Westminster Choir College, a master of music degree at the University of Michigan, and a doctorate in music from the University of Arizona.

His professional operatic experience began in 1980 with the Michigan Opera Theatre. He was artist-in-residence for the Arizona Opera during 1982-83, where he performed in "The Ballad of Baby Doe" and "Carmen."

He has sung in over 48 oratorios and has presented numerous recitals throughout the United States. He was the tenor soloist in the Williamsburg Choral Guild's 1983 performances of Handel's Messiah. He also sang the role of the evangelist in Bruton Parish Church's 1983 John D. Rockefeller Concert presentation of the St. John Passion.

Parks's recital accompanist, Judith Zwelling, received her bachelor's degree from Brandeis University and a master of music degree from the New England Conservatory of Music. She is a member of the College piano faculty.

PAT ROBERTSON SPEAKS

Pat Robertson, president and chancellor of CBN, the Christian Broadcasting Network, and host of the TV show "The 700 Club" will speak on "The Role of Religion in Modern American Politics" at 3 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 15, at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, room 119.

Robertson is the son of the late A. Willis Robertson, United States senator from Virginia from 1933 to 1966, and holds a master's degree in divinity and a J.D. from Yale Law School. He was a member of the President's Task Force on Victimless Crime in 1982 and has testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the School Prayer Amendment.

The talk is open to the public and there is no admission fee.

OFFICER POYNTER

COMMENDED

Kathy A. Poynter, crime prevention officer for the Campus Police, has been commended by Richard S. Cumbee, director of Campus Police, for her programs. He says Officer Poynter has developed "the best campus crime prevention program in the state in less than two years."

The office security program was first of its kind in the nation, and the safe driving campaign is extensive, according to Cumbee. The sexual assault lectures have shown a 100% increase in attendance this year, and the recent safe Halloween party for area children was successful in its first year, attracting over 200 children to Trinkle Hall.

Officer Poynter's programs "are characterized by innovation, caring and hard work," summarized Cumbee.

Visitors from Nanjing University in China were on campus last week, and met with College officials. From left, Dean Mel Schiavelli, Nanjing University vice president Yan Xiangway, President T.A. Graves, Jr., Mrs. Huang Chenfeng, interpreter; Mrs. Shang Zhen, office of foreign affairs representative, Provost George Healy, and Mrs. Craig Canning, wife of a W&M professor who is on exchange at Nanjing this year.

Filipino lecturers will speak here on psychology and anthropology

A husband-wife team of Filipino lecturers will be on campus Nov. 19 for separate lectures.

Dr. Alfredo V. Lagmay, a prominent Filipino psychologist who teaches at the University of the Philippines, will deliver a talk on "Asian Psychology: The Philippine Case" at 4 p.m. in Millington 211. He is a Harvard graduate, and was chairman for many years of the Department of Psychology at the University of the Philippines. He has held many leadership positions in professional societies and is president-elect of the psychology and national development division, International Association of Applied Psychology.

Leticia A. Lagmay, associate professor of anthropology at the University of the Philippines, will speak on "Psychological Anthropology in the Philippines: An Overview" at 7:30 p.m. in Washington 111. She is a member of the National Research Council of the Philippines and is president-elect of the Child Psychology Association of the Philippines. She has authored a book published by the University of the Philippines Press last year, "Cruz Na Ligas: Early Socialization in an Urbanizing Community."

The public is invited to both lectures.

"Major Barbara" next Theatre offering

The William and Mary Theatre continues its 1984-85 season with the production of a George Bernard Shaw comedy opening Thursday, Nov. 15, for four performances at Phi Beta Kappa Memorial hall.

Curtain time for "Major Barbara" is 8:15 p.m. for the shows Thursday-Saturday, with a matinee at 2 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 18.

Described as one of Shaw's "brightest, slyest, most provocatively outrageous and timeless comedies," the plot focuses on a woman named Barbara, the daughter of a munitions-maker, who joins the Salvation Army and dedicates herself to helping the poor.

The show is directed by Bruce McConachie, associate professor of theatre and speech. For reservations, call the theatre box office at 253-4272 between 1-6 p.m.

ANDREWS EXHIBITION

Recent paintings by Rebecca Cross are on display until Nov. 16 in the Andrews Gallery. The artist will give a lecture next Thursday, Nov. 15, at 4 p.m. in the gallery, and the public is invited. A reception will follow at 5 p.m.

He's added color to campus

Roy A. Williams

Campus Spotlight

In only three and a half years, Roy A. Williams has made a big difference at William and Mary. He is the man who has made the campus bloom, who has tucked color spots in conspicuous places, and has created flowering beauty for all to enjoy.

He came to the College in April, 1981, as landscape superintendent, and set about to add blooming plants to the grounds. Pocket gardens were added, trees and shrubs trimmed, new plants put in beside academic buildings. All of a sudden, everyone was noticing the color.

He feels that "the first impression of a campus is a lasting one. When you see a green, living campus — a total environment — it makes the buildings look better. There's less vandalism and litter on a beautiful campus, because of concern for the pleasant surroundings."

He has made a showcase of the triangle at College Corner, the intersection of Jamestown Road with South Boundary Street. Planted with seasonal color, it displays bulbs in the spring, begonias and ageratum in the summer, chrysanthemums in the fall, and ornamental cabbages and kale in the winter.

This year he added portable gardens in the form of half-barrels of blooming things. Dotted around the campus, they are instant gardens which can be moved to sites wherever there is a need for beauty, or for special events such as Parents' Day, Homecoming, or Burgesses' Day.

But the flowers are only part of what has been accomplished under his leadership. Trees have been pruned, fertilized and treated for diseases; shrubbery has been shaped and fed; and this fall, for the first time in a decade, major reseeding and fertilizing of the grassed areas has been completed. Over two tons of Kentucky 31 fescue seed were applied to the old and new campuses to improve the turf. Roy hopes to do this task once a year from now on so the lawns are as lush as the flowers.

Beauty is not cheap, however. Flowers cost money to grow and maintain, and fertilizer and insect sprays are expensive. However, excellent management by Roy has meant accomplishments within the budget. He grows a lot of flowers, either from seeds or cuttings. He starts the seeds at the Millington Hall greenhouse, then transplants them to the old mule barn near the Population Lab, and they grow there till they're the right size to place on campus. And although the maintenance staff has been cut to 19 workers, including the trash collectors, a mechanic and growing personnel, he manages to keep the campus looking neat and attractive.

But there are still big challenges. His fondest dream is to restore Crim Dell, in the center of the campus, and make it a beauty spot unparalleled anywhere else on the College property. This would involve some opening up of the area by selective thinning of trees, more plantings, and possibly a gazebo by the water. He also wants to add further beautification to College Corner, "the front door of the College," with plantings at the Jamestown Road triangle and the Richmond Road corner. He has already put in a perennial garden and picket fence by Sorority Court, but wants additional planting, lighting, irrigation, more fencing and garden furniture. "We need a sponsor, since this isn't in the budget," he says.

He may just have a sponsor in the future, because the Williamsburg Council of Garden Clubs and the Civic Beautification Committee have started a William and Mary-Roy Williams Landscaping Fund. This is in recognition of and appreciation for his beautification of the campus during times of budget restrictions, and for the new sense of pride engendered in the campus. The initial fund will be used for the purchase of unique, colorful plants in the seasonal planting areas scattered around the campus.

Other interested persons may participate by contributing to the fund in care of Dr. Martin C. Mathes, Department of Biology, College of William and Mary.

Recently, Roy was promoted to the position of assistant director of buildings and grounds. He is a 1961 graduate of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University in ornamental horticulture, and prior to coming to the College, he was in the residential landscape business in Hampton, had worked in a wholesale nursery, and had owned three floral shops, the Garden Gallery, in Hampton, Newport News and Williamsburg.
