The Marshall letters: a coup in acquisitions

Swem Library recently purchased nine previously unknown autograph letters of Chief Justice John Marshall. Written between 1814 and 1821 to Bushrod Washington, Marshall's close friend and fellow justice on the Supreme Court, the letters were sold at auction by Sotheby's of London on Dec. 18.

"While it is not unusual for a stray Marshall item to surface now and then, the sudden appearance of a group of his letters is an extraordinary, even singular, occurrence in this day and age," says Charles F. Hobson, editor of The Papers of John Marshall.

At one time the letters reposed at Mount Vernon, which Bushrod Washington had inherited from his uncle, George Washington. They subsequently passed into the ownership of the family of Sir Alfred Ewing, an Englishman who married into the Washington family in the late 19th century. There they remained until the sale.

"William and Mary's purchase of the letters is a major coup in the field of manuscript acquisition and ensures their accessibility to researchers in the Earl Gregg Swem Library. The letters otherwise might have disappeared into the autograph market and have been lost to scholarship. The new accession significantly adds to Swem's existing holdings of Marshall manuscripts and more than doubles the size of its collection of Marshall-Bushrod Washington letters. Swem Library and the Library of Congress are the two largest repositories of Marshall's personal correspondence."

Hobson notes that it is particularly fitting that the College now owns these letters, if only because both correspondents are distinguished alumni. Marshall attended the first law lectures given by Professor George Wythe at the College in the spring of 1780. Washington attended the College from 1775 to 1778.

The College and the Institute of Early American History and Culture are co-sponsors of the The Papers of John Marshall, an edition of the justice's correspondence and papers, which will eventually comprise 10-12 volumes published by the University of North Carolina Press. To date four volumes have been published, covering Marshall's career to the eve of his appointment as Chief Justice in 1801. The fifth volume, scheduled for publication in 1987, is a selection of Marshall's law cases from 1784 to 1800. Subsequent volumes will document his long tenure on the bench of the Supreme Court (1801-35). A special volume, The Portraits of John Marshall, forms part of this series.

Hobson notes that the newly acquired letters will probably appear in volume seven. "They help fill a particularly large gap in Marshall's surviving correspondence," he says, "while providing new information about his professional and personal concerns. Several discuss cases pending before the Supreme Court and questions arising from cases heard in circuit courts. (In those days Supreme Court justices also rode circuit.)"

Hobson believes historians will find an 1814 letter particularly interesting. In it Marshall ponders whether a state bankruptcy law violates the clause of the Constitution prohibiting the states from enacting laws "impairing the obligation of contracts." Hobson says, "His comments foreshadow two of his notable opinions: Sturges v. Crowninshield (1819) and Ogden v. Saunders (1827)."

Another letter shows the great importance Chief Justice Marshall attached to having the justices live together during term time. After the British burned the capitol in 1814, Marshall asked Bushrod Washington to make new arrangements for their accommodation during the ensuing session to the court: "If it be practicable to keep us together you know how desirable this will be. If that be impracticable we must be as near each other as possible. Perhaps we may dine together should we even be compelled

WW hears Lavin, Knauer next

"Remember John Kennedy didn't have to have a bake sale to put a man on the moon," Linda Lavin '59 told an audience of 300 women in her keynote address for the Work of Women Program Saturday at the Fort Magruder Inn.

"Putting a man on the moon was a national priority. Pay equality could be a priority, maternity leave could be a priority, child care could be a priority, full employment could be a priority," she asserted.

A commissioner on the National Commission on Working Women, Lavin urged women to work for change and be mentors for women "for whom the system does not work, for whom sex or race or age discrimination creates insurmountable barriers." She added, "But let me give you fair warning — you will be challenged when you begin to say things people don't want to hear, so start slowly and don't get discouraged. Remember that the most passionate defense is the defense of the status quo."

A Broadway and TV actress, Lavin is perhaps best known for her portrayal of Alice the waitress at Mel's Diner in the long running weekly sitcom. She received the 1980 Grass Roots Award from the Commission on Working Women for her work as a role model to working women. The annual Broadcast Awards given by the Commission, have since, renamed the first place award the "Alice."

Lavin has portrayed working women in a number of TV movies including "The $5.20 an Hour Dream," "A Matter of Life and Death," and "Another Woman's Child," and hopes to continue through TV and movies to speak out for women's rights. She is currently setting up offices on the Warner Bros. lot and

Students enter Business test

Over the next three months college business students at 28 universities across the country, including the University of Hawaii and the School of Business Administration here, will be controlling competing multinational industries in a computerized contest of management skill and strategy.

The student teams will be playing "The Multinational Management Game," a widely used business simulation co-authored by Bernard Keys, Callaway Professor of Business at Georgia Southern College, and Al Edge and Bill Remus of the University of Hawaii.

The William and Mary team is comprised of School of Business Administration students Mark Friedman, Mark Snider and Steve Theuer and faculty advisers William H. Hawthorne, associate professor of business administration, and Henry E. Mallue Jr., associate dean of the business school.

The national competition, which climaxes with a playoff in Savannah in April, is co-hosted by Georgia Southern and the National Association for Business Simulation and Experiential Learning (ABSEL). Former ABSEL president Stanley Vance, emeritus professor of business at the University of Tennessee, will be a guest judge for the finals.

The simulation game puts each college team, composed of three students and their faculty advisers, at the computerized controls of a hypothetical U.S.-based corporation with operations in Japan and West Germany. Armed with a corporate history, starting financial statement and operating rules, the teams plan strategies and program decisions to out-manuever their competitors in management and marketing. Every two weeks the students phone their decisions to Georgia Southern for computer scoring. The results report new marketing, operating and financial positions for the teams' next moves.

The winning teams from each of the four designated industries will compete in the final round in Savannah April 17.

to lodge in different houses." Washington also apparently had responsibility for procuring the wine for each term. "The wine is in fine order," the chief wrote in 1821, "& we shall at dinner give a bumper to your better health."

In a letter of 1815 Marshall asked Washington, then holding circuit in Philadelphia, for help in placing his erring 15-year-old son, James, in a Philadelphia countinghouse. (Marshall had just learned that James had been suspended from Harvard for misbehavior.) "I am willing to bind him & to comply with the terms which those gentlemen may require," Marshall wrote. "I hope they will not be dissatisfied with my son should they take charge of him."

According to Hobson, Marshall, in several of the letters, discussed plans for an edition of George Washington's letters and a second edition of his own The Life of George Washington, which had been published in five volumes between 1804 and 1807. Because the first ponderous edition had not sold as well as Marshall had hoped, he was not eager to produce a second prematurely. "I do not think a new edition ought to be hurried," he wrote in 1816. "It cannot be pressed on the publick. We must wait till it is required." A second edition, reduced to two volumes, eventually appeared in 1832, Hobson notes.

Music students to perform in recitals at library

Two senior vocal recitals are planned at the Performing Arts Center of the Williamsburg Regional Library, Feb. 22 and 23.

Angela Castle, a student of Martha Connolly, will present a recital at 8 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 22. Elizabeth Anne Moliter, a student of Mary Eason Fletcher, will give a recital at 8 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 23.

Both performances are open to the public. There is no admission charge.

She was cast in two productions by the Sinfonicron Opera Company on campus, "Patience" and "The Gondoliers." Norma J. Nedrow, a senior will give a flute recital at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 25, at the Williamsburg Area Regional Library auditorium.

Nedrow is a business management major from Vienna, Va. She has performed in the pit orchestra for several William and Mary Theatre and Sinfonicron Opera Company productions. She has also played in the William and Mary Band and the William and Mary College/Community Orchestra, serving as manager of the orchestra during the 1984-85 season.

A member of Delta Omicron music fraternity, she has been treasurer and first vice president of the campus chapter. She studies flute with Debra Cross, instructor of music at William and Mary.

Engs returns to lecture Friday

The lecture is being sponsored by the American Studies program and the departments of theatre and speech and history.

Engs special interest is the Civil War. He is working on a book about Samuel Chapman Armstrong, founder of Hampton Institute, now Hampton University. The University of Pennsylvania Press published a work by Engs in 1979 titled Freedom's First Generation: Black Hampton, Virginia, 1861-1890, which laid the groundwork for his work on Armstrong. Engs also wrote Red, Black and White: A Study in Intellectual Inequality.

He was one of 10 chosen to write for a commemorative volume that was presented to his mentor C. Vann Woodward, the dean of southern historians, upon his retirement. Engs received his doctorate from Yale in 1972 and studied under Woodward. Engs also graduated cum laude from Princeton University, Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, in 1965.

Although he has never lived in the Williamsburg area for any long period of time, he has ties to the area. His mother, Mrs. Myrtle Engs, retired several years ago after a long and successful career as a classroom teacher in the Williamsburg-James City County school division. Engs was a guide for the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation at the Robertson Windmill the summer of 1961. His brother Michael graduated from William and Mary in 1969.

Internships

The Office of Career Planning, Morton Hall 140, has information and application materials for several internships with application deadlines in March and May.

WCVB-TV in Boston offers two internship programs for minority and disadvantaged students. The deadline for applying to either program is March 31. Five internships are available for juniors with a strong interest in some field of broadcasting. Interns obtain an overview of the television broadcasting field in news, programming, public affairs or sales and gain practical experience in the broadcasting industry.

An on-the-job training program in broadcast journalism prepares participants for entry-level positions in smaller broadcast markets. One student will be selected from this program for a nine-month internship with WCVB-TV. Applicants must have a B.A. or B.S. and a proven interest in broadcast journalism demonstrated through past jobs or extracurricular activities.

The New York office of the "MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour" offers several summer internships. The news/editorial internship involves working under the direction of the news editor, assisting at the news desk and helping reporters research stories. A graphic arts internship involves facilitating the production of daily graphics. An internship in public information is also available. Deadline for applications is March 31.

The Yankee Intern Program, open only to residents of New England or New York state, is designed to encourage projects that actively promote preservation. Students interested in historic preservation, planning, history, law and business are encouraged to apply. Interns gain experience in working with preservation organizations and public agencies in the communities in which the projects take place. Forty interns will be selected to work on a full-time basis for 12 weeks. A stipend of $2,500 is provided. Deadline for the summer session is March 15

Price, Waterhouse in Richmond offers a summer internship for computer science majors in their junior year with an interest in business consulting. Interns are involved in all aspects of systems development activities and will work on a variety of projects for several clients. Salary is competitive. Resumes should be submitted to Sharon Thelin in the Office of Career Planning by March 15.

The City of Hampton is now accepting applications for a one-year management internship position with a salary of $18,451 and regular full-time benefits. Requirements include an M.B.A. by July 1986, excellent writing skills and the ability to perform research, compile data, perform statistical analysis, prepare reports and make recommendations. Applications must be submitted by May 9.

Northfield Mount Hermon School, a co-educational boarding school for grades 9-12, provides recent graduates with the opportunity to explore their interests and gain experience in teaching through an internship. Positions are available in any of the school's departments: English, history, social sciences, languages, religion, math, science, athletics and more. Interns observe classes, help plan lessons, teach under guidance and evaluate students. By the spring term interns may teach on their own. Interns are floor parents, assistant coaches and friends to the students. Salary is $6,000. For more information check the "Current Jobs" notebook in the Career Planning Library.

Temporary Interruption of Steam/Hot Water-Power Plant

In order to implement a piping change in the Power Plant it is necessary to schedule a complete shut down of this facility for several days. A complete shut down has never been necessary and consequently deserves our best attempts to schedule routine activities with minimum interruption.

A scheduling of this shut down has been planned this spring, immediately following commencement exercises. The full installation/maintenance period will take approximately ten days to complete. This should provide adequate time to initiate a systems check and to restore steam/hot water prior to the first summer session.

Although the entire campus community will be affected, some locations will be more involved than others. During this period there will be little or no hot water except in small frame buildings with self-contained hot water heaters (this includes residence halls, Adair, Blow, William and Mary Hall, and most other campus facilities.)

This memo is intended to allow the necessary preplanning and development of alternatives in your areas of responsibility. We acknowledge the fact that there will be inconveniences, but firmly believe that this time will pose the least difficulty for the campus. We hope you will agree and you will lend your support by making any necessary adjustments in your own departmental planning as early as possible.

Further information will be made available as arrangements are finalized. Please contact me if you have any questions regarding this matter.
