USIA funds 3-year faculty exchange with Australia

Faculties to explore development of both constitutions

The U.S. Information Agency has awarded a grant of approximately $60,000 for a faculty exchange between the College of William and Mary and two Australian universities in Adelaide, which will extend over three years, beginning in 1987.

The program will coincide with the bicentennial of the American Constitution of 1787 and the bicentennial of the settlement of Australia in 1788. Participants will compare the constitutional development of the two countries.

Five academic disciplines will be involved in the exchange program including law, history, politics, economics and American studies. Activities will include teaching, public lectures, seminars and participation in meetings of professional and community organizations.

Gene Nichol, director of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law; Len Schifrin, professor of economics; Thad Tate, director of the Institute of Early American History and Culture; and J. Alan Ward, professor of government, will participate from William and Mary.

Australian participants will include Alex C. Castles, professor of Law, University of Adelaide; David Keith Round, reader in economics from the University of Adelaide and an associate of the Australian Trade Practices Commission; and Andrew Parkin, senior lecturer in political theory and institutions, Flinders University. A fourth participant from Australia will be announced later.

The terms of the exchange will vary from a semester to several weeks. The program will begin with an exchange between Nichol and Castles in the spring of 1987.

The focus of the exchange will be a comparison of the American and Australian constitutions and their different responses to the requirements of a federal state. There will be four themes - constitutional history, contemporary constitutional law, constitutional and contemporary politics and constitutions and contemporary economics.

"In general terms," says Ward, "we believe that the proposed exchange will improve understanding between Australia and the U.S. In more specific terms, we believe that each participant will benefit from studying a constitutional system, which, while similar in many ways, has dealt with the problems of constitutional federalism in different ways."

"Each participant will also bring his own expertise to the analysis of another system. In this way the participants will contribute to our understanding of how constitutional systems evolve and deal with contemporary problems of federal/state relations, economic management and policy formation," says Ward.

Participating from William and Mary in the American-Australian exchange will be (l-r): Alan J. Ward, professor of government; Leonard G. Schifrin, professor of economics; Gene R. Nichol Jr., Cutler Professor of Constitutional Law and director of the Institute for Bill of Rights Law; and Thad W. Tate Jr., William E. Pullen Professor of History and director of the Institute of Early American History and Culture.

Aspects of the programs will be presented in an interdisciplinary format by all participants, said Ward. He cited as an example Gene Nichol who will address historians and political scientists as well as discuss law. All participants, said Ward will discuss U.S. foreign policy and the U.S. Constitution as well as immigration and foreign policy, which have been problems for both countries.

As architect of the exchange program, Ward explains its value to participants on both sides, "The United States and Australia share one language and are trade and defence partners. They share much of their constitutional histories, and the Australian federation is modeled in part on American institutions.

"Exchange faculty will bring new insights to the study of their own countries, whether with respect to federal, state and urban relations, economic management, civil rights, the alleged dominance of the executive in the two systems, the constitution and foreign policy, or other issues."

The three presidents of the participating universities have expressed the hope that the exchange will open the way for a more permanent relationships between the institutions.

The University of Adelaide is a public university in the state of South Australia. Founded in 1874, the university is located in the center of Adelaide, the capital city of South Australia. It is a traditional university with a full range of departments and faculties including medicine and law. It has a student body of 6,300 full-time and 2,950 part-time students and offers bachelor's, master's and doctoral studies in most disciplines. For more than 90 years it was the only university in South Australia and trained the political, legal and economic elite of the state. The departments of law and economics, both with faculties of 24, will participate in the exchange.

Flinders University was named after the explorer Matthew Flinders. Established in 1966 as the second university in South Australia it sits on a modern site overlooking the Gulf of St. Vincent, 10 miles south of the city center and the University of Adelaide. It has 2,550 full-time and 1,550 part-time students study-

United Way
letters mailed

Lawrence L. Wiseman, chairman of this year's United Way fund drive is hoping to make his first report to campaign headquarters by the end of this week.

Individual letters have gone out and pledge cards have been mailed to each employee. Any employee who has not received a letter is asked to contact Wiseman at ext. 4212.

Goal for William and Mary is $23,000. Wiseman is hoping to reach the goal but say his prime interest is in getting as close as possible to 100 percent participation from the campus community.

NEWSMAKERS

Melvyn D. Schiavelli, provost, is one of seven De Paul University alumni who will be honored at a Distinguished Alumni Award Convocation Sunday, Sept. 28 in DePaul University's Concert Hall.

Joseph Galano and John Nezek of the psychology department were recently awarded a grant from the Better Beginnings and Virginia's Children program with the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation. The purpose of the grant is to perform statewide evaluation for the "Especially for You Human Sexuality Education Program" with special emphasis on the preventing adolescent pregnancy. The audience for this evaluation will include Virginia legislators who will consider funding for future prevention programs.

Galano and Nezek recently completed a contract with the Office of Prevention to train preventionists across the state to evaluate the impact of programs aimed at preventing mental illness, mental retardation and substance abuse. They have written "Guidebook to Evaluating Prevention Programs," which will be distributed statewide by the Office of Prevention and sent to directors of state prevention offices.

Roger Baldwin, assistant professor of education, is a member of the committee planning the statewide conference on "The Academic Profession in Virginia and the Nation." The conference, which will be held in November at the Omni in Norfolk, will consider the current status and future prospects of professors in various fields and sectors of higher education. The conference is sponsored by the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia.

Gary Kreps, associate professor of sociology, recently attended the American Sociological Association meetings in New York City, serving as organizer and presider for a panel on issues in disaster research.

William J. Hargis Jr., professor of marine science, division of chemistry and toxicology at VIMS, has received a grant of $1,380 from the Marine Science Consortium, which will enable continued participation in the Ulceration Disease Syndrome (UDS) program. This program is conducted jointly by scientists from the National Marine Fisheries Service, North Carolina State University at Raleigh, Department of Natural Resources of North Carolina and from the state of Florida. A coastwide ulcerative disease epidemic that hit mehaden and other estuarine fishes in the past several years is being studied through this program. Hargis is chairman of the ad hoc UDS committee.

Hargis attended the 11th annual Eastern Fish Health workshop at Martinsburg, W. Va., and presented a paper titled "Cataracts in Fish Eyes" co-authored by David E. Zwerner. The workshop was held jointly with the Fish Health Section of the American Fisheries Society.

Hargis was also invited to present a seminar on the "Oyster Industry of Virginia: Its Status, Problems and Promise" at Oxford Biological Laboratory of the Northeast Fisheries Center, National Marine Fisheries Service of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and to participate as a committee member to examine the need to establish a federally funded national estuarine research center. He participated in the first workshop at the request of Deputy Administrator William Gordon, head of the National Marine Fisheries Service.

John E. Olney, assistant professor of marine science, attended the annual meeting of the Early Life History Section, American Fisheries Society, held in Miami, Fla., and presented a paper titled "Ontogeny and Systematics of the Pearlfishes: Carapidae (Ophidiiformes)." He received a cash award of $150 for the best paper presented out of 93 at the meeting.

The award has been named in honor of Sally Richardson, one of the foremost researchers on fish larvae in the U.S., who died unexpectedly prior to the meeting in Miami. Richardson received her Ph.D. from VIMS in 1971 and was employed by the Harvard Museum of Comparative Zoology.

Joseph G. Loesch, professor of marine science, presented an invited paper at the international symposium "Common Strategies of Anadromous and Catadromous Fishes," in Boston. The paper, titled "Life History Aspects of Anadromous Alewife (Alosa pseudoharengus) and Blue Back Herring (A. aestivalis) in Freshwater Habitats," will be published in a special issue of Transactions of the American Fisheries Society.

Loesch, James A. Colvocoresses and William H. Kriete Jr., VIMS biological and fisheries sciences, received a $115,000 grant from the U.S. National Marine Fisheries Service to continue a study of the stock composition and year-class strength of striped bass in Virginia waters. Loesch and Kriete also received a $26,000 grant from the Virginia Marine Resources Commission to assess commercial fishing efforts in Virginia.

Carl H. Hobbs III, assistant professor of marine science, presented a paper at the annual meeting of the Biological Society of America in Memphis, Tenn. The paper, "Sandy Estuarine Fill Transported into the Mouth of Chesapeake Bay," was co-authored by Steven M. Colman, U.S. Geological Survey, and C. R. Berquist Jr., Virginia Division of Mineral Resources.

Hobbs and Berquist have completed a study, "Assessment of Economic Heavy Minerals of the Virginia Inner Continental Shelf," which provides possible locations of economic minerals offshore Virginia's Eastern Shore. The publication, Open File Report 86-1, is now available from the Division of Mineral Resources, Virginia Department of Mines, Minerals and Energy, Charlottesville, Va.

Joe Scott, professor of biology, published a paper in the Canadian Journal of Botany this summer titled "Ultrastructure of Cell Division in the Unicellular Red Alga Flintella sanguinaria." Scott was also second-author of a paper with Elizabeth Davis, biology, titled "Ultrastructure of Cell Division in the Marine Red Alga Lomentaria baileyana," published in the journal Protoplasma.

Martha M. Houle, assistant professor of French and acting director of the Center for Honors and Interdisciplinary Studies, has two articles and a book-length translation scheduled for publication this year. "La Fontaine's Fun with Casuistry in Le Cas de conscience" will appear in January's issue of Papers in French Seventeenth-Century Studies; "Serio ludere: Play at Work in Louis Marin, Perrault and La Fontaine" will appear in Actes de Banff in March; and her translation of Louis Marin's The King's Portrait will be published by the University of Minnesota Press at the end of this year. Houle will also be chairing a section in "Practice and Theory" at this year's annual meeting of the Southeast Association for Seventeenth-Century French Literature in Charleston, S.C., at the end of September. Houle will present a paper on semiotics and play theory at the annual meeting of the Semiotic Society of America in San Francisco during October.

Lisa Rogers chosen consultant for national CDR project

Lisa Rogers '81, Campus Center facilities director, volunteered at Child Development Resources as an undergraduate in psychology as part of a community-service-oriented course with Joe Galano, professor of psychology. She had no thought at the time that her involvement would later reap such benefits.

Rogers has been asked to serve as a training consultant on a one-year federal grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

She will be traveling to a number of states on behalf of the "Outreach Project: Assistance to States and Local Programs," developed by and administered through Child Development Resources, Inc. CDR is one of only 24 agencies in the country to receive federal funding for outreach.

The program seeks through community programs such as Child Check and Child Find to identify pre-school children who are handicapped or who have learning disabilities and provide services to help them prepare for school.

Informational programs to expectant mothers on nutrition, the dangers of drugs, alcohol and tobacco during pregnancy are also offered by CDR under its outreach program. CDR gives monthly programs on these topics at the Williamsburg Community Hospital to reinforce the importance of the parents as the major caretaker of pre-school children.

Robert J. Orth, associate professor of marine science, Jacques van Montfrans, marine scientist, and C. Ryer, graduate student, attended the Benthic Ecology meetings in Boston. Orth and van Montfrans presented a paper titled "Seasonal and Annual Differences in the Utilization of an Eelgrass Bed by Juvenile Blue Crabs," and Ryer and Orth co-authored a poster titled "Using Micro-wire Tags for Marking Blue Crabs: A Preliminary Field Study."

The board of directors of the National Association of College and University Business Officers recently appointed Robert H. Barnett, director of auxiliary enterprises, to the communications committee. The seven-person national committee was created in 1985 to address burgeoning developments in the communications area of higher education administration. In addition to examining all aspects of new technologies, as well as their availability to and impact on business officers, the communications program is designed to provide college and university administrators with materials that meet information needs and enlarge professional perspectives.

Rogers will use CDR as a demonstration of how similar programs can be set up in other states. A target search based on information about needed services and requests for assistance to CDR will determine her itinerary.

She will take a leave of absence from her position beginning Oct. 1 and will return in August 1987.

She received her master's in social work administration from Rutgers University and is currently enrolled in the doctoral program in higher education at William and Mary. She serves on the board of CDR, which has been designated as a pacesetter organization for the United Fund drive.

Lisa Rogers

Mario D. Zamora, professor of anthropology, read a paper co-authored by C. Owen titled "The Philippine Iglesia Ni Kristo Sect: Innovation and Response" at the international congress of anthropologists from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Iceland held in Stockholm, Sweden, June 14-17. He attended the executive committee of the International Union of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences (IUAES) on June 18-19 also in Stockholm.

Zamora also read a paper titled "Colonialisms, Acculturation and Language Change: The Philippine Case" at the World Archaeological Congress in Southampton, England, Sept. 1-7 and, as a representative of the anthropological world union, was invited to give an address before the plenary session on "The Role of the IUAES in World Anthropology."

Zamora was recently elected president of the Virginia Social Science Association (VSSA). William and Mary will host the VSSA's 60th annual meeting, March 20-21.

Assistant to the Provost for Off-Campus Program Development

Applications for the position of assistant to the provost for off-campus program development are being invited from within the university community. The primary duties of the position involve the development of resources supporting our off-campus programs. The successful applicant will possess a terminal degree in his or her discipline as well as be experienced in the conduct and operation of academic programs outside the boundaries of the United States.

Applications, including the names of at least two references, should be received in the provost's office no later than 5 p.m., Friday, Oct. 13.

Final show of the season will be Megan Terry's "Hothouse," April 9-12.

The cast of "Our Town," includes Sheri Holman as Emily; Tim Duvall as George; Bryan Tunnell as Dr. Frank Gibbs; Emily Frye as Mrs. Julie Gibbs; Kate Fleming as Myrtle Webb; and David Scott Bailey as Charles Webb.

'Hair' auditions

Auditions for the William and Mary Theatre production of "Hair" will be held Sunday, Sept. 28 and Monday, Sept. 29, with call-backs scheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 30.

All auditions will begin at 6 p.m. in the Dodge Room, Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall, unless posted otherwise.

Auditionees are asked to prepare two songs, which need not be contrasting or included in the score of "Hair."

All those auditioning are asked to be comfortably dressed and prepared to demonstrate movement and "show voice" skills. All 30 members of the cast will be expected to sing as well as act.

Instrumentalists, especially brass and woodwind musicians, are also needed for the show.

Performances of "Hair" are Nov. 14-16 and 21-23. For more information about auditions, please contact "Hair" director G. Leslie Muchmore at ext. 4377.

"Hair," with music composed by Galt MacDermot, and book and lyrics by James Rado and Jerome Ragni, explores the innocence and frustration of pre-Nixon America. The well-known score includes "Aquarius/Let the Sun Shine," "Good Morning, Starshine" and "Manchester, England."

"Hair" celebrates its 20th anniversary this year. The original production was presented by the New York Shakespeare Festival in 1966. The company included Jerome Ragni, the co-lyricist, and Paul Jabara, the composer of the soundtrack for the film "Midnight Express." The subsequent Broadway production the following year included such future luminaries as Diane Keaton and Melba Moore.

William A. Williams returns for lecture Oct. 2 in Andrews

William Appleman Williams, noted historian of American foreign relations and Harrison Professor at the College, 1980, returns to campus Oct. 2 for a lecture sponsored by the history department.

Williams will take as his topic, "The Comparative Use of Power: China on the African Rim and the United States on the Pacific Rim." He will speak at 8 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 2 in Andrews 101. The public is invited.

Williams is the author of several books including The Tragedy of American Diplomacy and The Roots of the Modern American Empire. He was a member of the history faculty at the University of Wisconsin for several years and retired recently from Oregon State University.

Andrews galleries showcase contemporary works

One of the works displayed in the Andrews Foyer as part of the Contemporary Works Invitational is this oil on canvas painting by Robert Straight titled "p 181." The exhibit will be open through Oct. 2.

Haulmans return from China

Clyde Haulman, associate professor of economics, spent last year as a Fulbright Scholar in China. He taught courses on banking, financial institutions and economic theory to first- and second-year graduate students at Wuhan University. His wife, Fredrika Teute, an associate editor for the Papers of John Marshall, used the time to pursue her own research interests in American history.

Haulman, who also conducted a number of special seminars in different cities and went on a lecture tour in northeast China, found his students to be "very curious about the United States; many had some information about it. They were much more knowledgeable about our country than a group of American students would be about China."

Haulman attributes some of the increased knowledge to the recent revival of faculty foreign travel and exchanges such as the Fulbright program. And although students were inquisitive about the U.S., they were even more eager to know what Haulman thought of the Chinese and their economic reforms.

Those reforms are readily visible throughout the country today. Haulman and Teute say they noticed a marked increase in variety and quality of goods available during their stay.

"When we arrived at Beijing we saw fleets of Toyota taxicabs everywhere," says Teute. "By the end of the year there were noticeably more Mitsubishis and Toyotas on the streets of Wuhan, too."

"But imported goods were not the only ones more plentiful," Haulman adds. "The general level of domestic economic activity increased as well."

The process of looking back on their year's experiences has just begun for Haulman and Teute, but they seemed to have found a central lesson: If you judge the Chinese by American standards, you're missing the point. "One of the aims of the Fulbright program is to promote cultural and educational exchange," says Haulman.

That means keeping an open mind. "Many things I had assumed were introduced by the communists, even the kinds of controls that exist in the society, were less a product of communism and more a reflection of the Chinese way of life," says Teute. "The more I lived there the less I felt I was living in a communist country. The Chinese culture seems to dominate the political system."

AAUW session set in Richmond

"Women's Work, Women's Worth," the Fall conference of the American Association of University Women, Virginia Division, will be held at the Richmond YWCA, 6 N. Fifth Street from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, Sept. 27.

The conference program has been planned in cooperation with the Women in Business Program at the School of Business Administration.

Reynolds seeks June grads

Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., is recruiting undergraduates graduating in June with some accounting, finance, economics course work and/or summer work experience in investment banking or related finance work. Positions are available in New York, Dallas, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta and Boston.

A detailed description of the position of corporate finance analyst and additional information on the organization can be found in the employer research files in the Career Library, Morton 140. Students who meet the qualifications and wish an interview should put a resume and letter indicating location preference in the Dean Witter envelope on the peg board in Morton 139 no later than 5 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 29.

Those students in whom Reynolds, Inc. is interested will be contacted prior to winter break about visiting the New York offices.

I.D.s required

Due to a rash of petty thefts, validated I.D.s will be required for access to Blow gymnasium effective immediately. There will be no exceptions.

State offers new health improvement plan

CommonHealth, a comprehensive employee health-improvement program is being introduced on campus for faculty and staff by the State Department of Personnel and Training.

For an annual membership fee of $5 for families or $3 for individuals, employees can participate in a program that includes medical screening, health-risk appraisal, personal goal-setting, aerobics, fitness testing, a weight-loss program, cancer screening, a smoking-cessation clinic and instruction in cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Membership meetings will be held the week of Oct. 13.

The program will also include lecture sessions on nutrition, depression/suicide, parenting (dealing with infants and teens), stress management, aging, alcohol- and drug-abuse prevention, rape prevention, spouse and child abuse and spousal communication. Glaucoma testing and blood pressure screening will also be available.

Medical screening is required for all members.

The idea for the program was conceived a year ago when a redesigning of employee benefits packages resulted in additional revenues for basic health-promotion activity. This money was recycled into a pilot health promotion program for the Department of Highways and Transportation.

The overwhelming success of the pilot has prompted the General Assembly to provide additional funding for health-promotion programs statewide. William and Mary is one of the state institutions to be invited to join CommonHealth under the expanded guidelines.

Mary Louise Mageean of Continental Health Promotion, the company hired by the state to implement the program, is on campus working out the details of the campus program.

The Office of Employee Relations and Affirmative Action is helping with the implementation of the program on campus and is working with a campuswide advisory committee, which includes Dale Robinson, director of employee relation and affirmative action; Billie Brandon, director of administrative services, Office of Business Affairs; Chris Jackson, chairman of physical education; Herbert Funsten, professor of physics; and Doris Underwood, secretary at the law library.

"Initially we will conduct a needs assessment, which will identify what the faculty and staff are in need of, what they would like to see in the way of organized health programs," says Mageean. "This confidential assessment includes an interest survey, health-risk appraisal and medical screening. The results will allow us to objectively isolate potential lifestyle problems and then design intervention programs addressing these particular areas."

"The intervention programs will take a variety of forms, all designed to educate the faculty and staff about health risks and encourage healthy lifestyles, choices. Wellness is more than not being sick; it is an approach to health aimed at reducing the risk of serious illness. Individuals must understand that the way we live has a lot to do with our health," she says.

To enhance the attractiveness of the program, employee incentives have been added to encourage participation. "Health Beat," a monthly newsletter, will be distributed.

Mageean has had a great deal of experience with the delivery of health care programs. She holds a master's degree in applied physiology from the University of Virginia and is a former health and fitness director for the New York Telephone Company. She has provided health-promotion services for the University of Virginia and Albemarle County and several businesses including American Express, Warner-Lambert,

American Cyanamid and Hoffman-LaRoche.

Additional information can be obtained by calling ext. 4214.

'Wellness' added to P.E.

This year, physical education is offering a new course, P.E. 100, which includes lecture sessions and a lab where students interested in physiological as-essment can measure cardiovascular and respiratory activity and body fat and can analyze nutritional habits.

Students can use the equipment to evaluate fitness needs or goals, whether it's to lose weight or build muscle. And although students enrolled in the class earn two hours of college credit, they haven't failed the course if they don't meet their own physical goals by the end of the semester, says Christine Jackson, chairman of the physical education department.

A large lecture class in the "wellness" curriculum fills Millington Hall auditorium. In the wellness labs, professors are aided by one or two student assistants, who are physical education majors. The health and wellness program enrolls 500 students in 33 lab sections.

Jackson hopes the state will appropriate funds next spring to purchase the rented, computerized, diagnostic equipment currently in use at Adair Hall. She envisions a wider use of the equipment by doctors and hospitals in treating patients with heart, lung or other respiratory ailments and in dietary analysis and exercise programs.

Jackson believes that to get healthy and stay healthy, people need to understand the body and how it works. "You need the scientific knowledge to help people maximize their energies," she says. As a result, physical education majors are being required to take more biology and health-related courses.

The physical education curriculum has proven so popular overall that the faculty and facilities are stretched to their limits. In addition to traditional sports such as tennis, golf, swimming and gymnastics, the department offers white-watering expeditions, ski trips, rock-climbing ventures, canoeing, kayaking, wind-surfing and adventure games.

Van Engel fellowship awarded

Eugene J. Olmi III of Charleston, S.C., has been named the first recipient of a three-year fellowship from the newly established Willard A. Van Engel Fellowship, Inc.

Olmi, who earned an M.S. from the College of Charleston, is beginning doctoral studies and research in the fisheries program at VIMS. He will receive an $8,000 stipend, which will support research on the distribution, abundance and habitat preference of juvenile stages of the blue crab of the Chesapeake Bay region.

The Willard A. Van Engel Fellowship, Inc., the first privately supported fellowship for the VIMS/School of Marine Science, is a $100,000 fellowship endowment for marine science research and education. It has been established by Willard A. Van Engel, professor emeritus of marine science, to offer an opportunity to individuals of outstanding ability to do crustacean research in the Chesapeake Bay region and to pursue a master's or doctoral degree in marine science.

Income from the endowment will support one student every three or four years. Van Engel hopes that interest in this program will encourage additional donor support so that it might be possible to award more fellowships.

Persons wishing to make tax-deductible contributions or to obtain additional information about the program may contact Professor Van Engel, VIMS, Gloucester Point, VA 23062 (Telephone: 642-7320), or Robert S. Dutro, Director of Estate Planning, Office of University Advancement, College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, VA 23185 (ext. 4391).

Review seeks new work

The William and Mary Review is now accepting works of fiction, non-fiction, art and poetry.

Deadline for submissions has been extended to spring 1987.

Material should be left at the Review Room in Trinkle Hall or at the Campus Center desk. Writers are reminded that they should enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope if they wish to have their material returned.

Barrett gets new computer lab

The Computer Center has installed a computer terminal lab in Barrett, a residence hall for freshmen women. This is the first such lab to be placed in a residence hall.

A little-used lounge area on the first floor of Barrett has been transformed to a convenient working area that can be accessed both from the interior and exterior of the building. Renovations included a new soundproof wall to provide a quiet work area for those using the lab and screen adjacent rooms from lab noises.

As the prime time for computer users on campus is between 8 p.m. and 3 a.m., the residence hall lab's advantages for students are many. It eliminates late-night treks across campus and is readily available for early-risers.

There are 28 terminals, which are hooked into the PRIME system in the Computer Center, and one printer in the lab. While this is the first in a residence hall, there are other computer labs across campus in Chancellors, Morton, Washington, Millington, Tucker and Jones halls and the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, providing approximately 250 public-access terminals and micro-computers for students and faculty.

Last year 185 faculty and 4,036 students logged computer time according to David Reed, systems administrator at the Computer Center. Computer use has been increasing each year since the PRIME system was established on campus in 1981, and the trend is expected to continue. Franklin E. Robeson, associate dean of the School of Business chairs the ad hoc committee on computer use and availability on campus.

Cathy Easter and John Dobbin take advantage of the new computer lab in Barrett dorm.

Sam Jones knows budgets

Five years in Richmond with the State Department of Planning and Budget is blue-chip experience that Samuel E. (Sam) Jones brings to his new job as director of budget for William and Mary. He assumed his new post in July.

An alumnus (B.A., 1975; M.B.A., 1980), Jones says it helps to know both sides of the budgeting process.

"Many people tend to think of the state budget process as some sort of big, black box. Money goes in and comes out but no one is really sure what makes the process work," says Jones with a smile.

"I'm going to try to improve on that," he adds, "and expand people's knowledge of both state and campus budget processes."

The budget process, he explains, can begin with the identification of needs by the individual schools, departments and offices. Essential to the development of any statement of need is the development of departmental priorities.

As information is networked throughout the campus, Jones will work with the vice president for administration and finance and the provost to develop a campuswide set of priority needs to be presented to the president. The president's budget then goes to the Board of Visitors, who will approve the version to be sent to Richmond.

The overall budget of the College for the current biennium is approximately $140 million or approximately $70 million per year. Of this, some $25 million each year comes to the College from state general funds. The remaining $45 million is made up from tuition and fees, auxiliary enterprise revenues and sponsored research programs. Within the $25 million from the state is $877,000 in student financial assistance.

Although the state budget system is set up on a biennium mode, limited adjustments can be made each year. With the prospect of about $40 million in state surplus this year, the College has prepared a preliminary list of needs.

A statewide concern is continued support for increases in the level of faculty salaries. In addition, says Jones, the College would like to have planning money to begin the complex job of renovating Blow gymnasium. Student financial aid, an academic and administrative computing/telecommunications network and an upgrade of administrative computing also rank as high priorities.

Jones' experience with how state budgets are prepared and how submissions from agencies are weighed once they get to Richmond, will be useful to him in his new job. The contacts he has made in Richmond should also be a plus, he says.

An economics and government major, Jones began working in retailing after college before moving into economic forecasting with the State Department of Taxation. His move back to William and Mary, he says, is a natural progression of his interest in finance, especially as it affects higher education.

Jones is married to the former Julie Reynolds '76, a charter member of the Botetourt Chamber Singers and a music teacher in Chesterfield County outside Richmond.

Jones has his office on the second floor of James Blair Hall.

PQ test

Students intending to take the 1986 Professional Qualification Test, the first step in qualifying for a career with the National Security Agency, are reminded that the deadline for registering is Oct. 10. The test will be administered Oct. 25.

Registration forms are available from the receptionist in Career Services, Morton 140.

Students finish GW institute

Three William and Mary students are recent graduates of the 1986 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems at Georgetown University. Christopher Bright '87, Dianne Carter '88 and Griffin Fernandez '87 were among 100 college students from the U.S., Canada and abroad who were selected to participate in this summer's six-week institute, sponsored by the Fund for American Studies in Washington, D.C.

The students lived on the campus of Georgetown University and took two courses daily - Comparative Political Systems and Comparative Economic Systems - earning a total of six academic credits. Each afternoon, they interned in the offices of the legislative, judicial or executive branch of the government or with national organizations, embassies or private-sector enterprises.

Christopher Bright, a government major from West Springfield, Va., was the Sovran Bank Scholarship recipient and interned at the U.S. Tax Court. Dianne Carter of Williamsburg, also a government major, worked at the national headquarters of Citizens for a Sound Economy. Griffin Fernandez, a double major in government and philosophy, was the intern at the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign.

Career Planning, Placement, merged for new Office of Career Services

News makers

Stanley E. Brown, former director of the placement office, has been named director of the newly formed Office of Career Services, which combines the offices of placement and career planning.

Several new faces have replaced former staff members, but the office has not expanded its staff. The combining of placement and the Office of Career Planning, formerly headed by Harriet Reid who retired this year, has been discussed for some time, says Brown, as a logical step to provide students the optimum of services.

The new organization, says Brown, "provides a thread of continuity through the steps students take toward career goals."

The Office of Career Services will retain its current location on the first floor of Morton Hall. A few offices have been relocated in the general area, but no major changes have been made. Brown hopes to create an interview waiting room in what is now a service area. During peak interview times students now have nowhere to wait except in the hall.

New staff member Pamela Ewouds, associate director who is taking over many of the duties formerly handled by Miss Reid, will handle individual counseling and advise students. She will arrange programs in residence halls, hold group-counseling and workshop sessions and supervise testing. She will also be on hand to help students use the DISCOVER computerized program, another device that helps students assess career options that match their interests, skills and abilities.

Natalie Mahoney is the new coordinator for experiential programs, which includes internships, summer jobs and part-time jobs. This phase of career exploration was formerly handled by Sharon Thelin who is now employed by Colonial Williamsburg. Externships will also be offered. These are short-term visits, usually one or two weeks, which allow students to explore a career area during the Christmas holidays or spring break without losing class time.

Under the new organizational plan, the other associate director, Bob Hunt, will continue to handle special events which will address both career exploration and job placement issues as well as alumni placement and counseling of students regarding job search strategies.

Throughout the year a number of special programs are planned, several of which rely heavily on the talents of alumni. The Alumni Career Advisory Service, the Career Speakers Program and Career Exploration Day are all programs in which alumni participate. Alumni from a variety of career fields are invited back as speakers throughout the academic year and for Career Exploration Day, to give students an idea of the scope of their work.

Through the advisory service, ACAS, alumni offer their time to students who want to know more about their particular career fields. This may involve a telephone call or an invitation to a student to visit them on the job. Government/Not-for-profit Career Day, Graduate/Professional School Day and Summer Camp Day are all programs that have been developed over the years and now provide students with a comprehensive look at a wide variety of career fields. Some 1,200 alumni are active in ACAS.

Pam Garrette has replaced Beth McGregor as coordinator of recruitment. She will make arrangements for employers and graduate/professional schools that come to campus to interview students.

Last year 189 employers and 86 graduate/professional schools made campus visits. Over 4,200 interviews were held. This number has tripled in the last five years. One reason for making a waiting room a priority item is the fact that at times students waiting for interviews and those changing classes in Morton create a traffic jam.

Sixty-eight schools came for the professional day program this year. Over 11,350 resumes were sent to employers who choose pre-selection as a way of picking students they wish to interview when they come to campus.

The Marshall-Wythe School of Law and the School of Education have specialized placement offices for their graduates.

If students find that their career choices involve more education, faculty advisers in pre-law, pre-health and pre-business are available to counsel students on what program or school best suits their needs.

Brown says he doesn't expect to see many freshmen; students don't start thinking about career choices until they have settled in to campus life, he says. They are, however, encouraged to make use of the services.

When students do begin the career exploration process - the earlier the better, says Brown - his office is equipped to help them through a systematic program aimed at putting the students in touch with careers that interest them and require the skills and talents they have.

The Library at Career Services has catalogs on microfiche from most colleges in the United States, informational files on career fields from anthropologist to zoo keeper and electronic counseling through the computer program DISCOVER. Through a computer hook-up with the College's PRIME computer students can access over 200 internships available nationally.

Students receive information on internships, externships, summer jobs and part-time jobs, all aimed at getting them in touch with the career choices that are open to them. Through Shared Experience students work with area organizations including county government part time while going to class.

During the fall semester alone, over 40 seminars are scheduled to help students wade through the complications of government job applications, make them more effective and confident in the job search, help them hone their interviewing skills. Seminars are also devoted to resume writing, assessing job offers and lifestyles in the working world.

"Placement Notes," a bi-weekly listing of available jobs is sent to alumni and "Futures," keeps students on campus abreast of opportunities for undergraduates, trends in business and hiring and general information about career search strategies.

Pamela Ewouds, a new staff member, associate director of the Office of Career Services, chats with director Stanley E. Brown in the Career library.

Library offers new film series

Shakespeare done in Russian and a Greek legend sung in German are part of an unusual film series opening at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 8 at the Williamsburg Regional Library.

Grigori Kozintsev's "King Lear" will begin the year-long series, which is a part of the College's Wednesday evening Honors Program. There is no admission charge.

Produced in the Soviet Union in 1971, the action follows the original play while introducing broader socio-political significance through visual direction.

The second film sponsored by the Honors Program will be a film version of Mozart's opera "Don Giovanni" on Oct. 22. Directed by Joseph Losey, sung by members of the Paris Opera, the film is magnificently filmed on the site of a Venetian estate. The off-stage filming adds to the dramatic impact of the grand opera.

The French-Arabic film, "The Battle of Algiers," a realistic dramatization of the Algerian rebellion against the French from 1954 to 1957, will be shown on Nov. 19. Succeeding films will be "Elektra," a film version of Richard Strauss' opera from the tragic drama by Sophocles, on Jan 28; "Marat/Sade" (The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat as Performed by the Inmates of the Asylum of Charenton Under the Direction of the Marquis de Sade) on Feb. 25; Charlie Chaplin's classic film, "Modern Times," which brought his character Charlie the tramp to film for the last time, will be shown on April 1; and Federico Fellini's "Amarcord" will complete the series on April 22.

The films are free of charge and will be shown as part of the regular Wednesday evening film program.

Carl Dolmetsch, professor emeritus of English, gave guest lectures on his recent research on Mark Twain in June at the Free University of Berlin and in early July at the University of Konstanz in West Germany. His article, "Mark Twain and the Viennese Anti-Semites: New Light on 'Concerning the Jews,'" appears in the current issue of The Mark Twain Journal, vol. 13, pp. 10-17. It explicates the background and the hitherto unexplored circumstances of Twain's composition of an essay on antisemitism first published in 1899 and until now widely misinterpreted. His essay-review of M. B. Hamovitch's The "Hound & Horn" Letters (University of Georgia Press, 1982) appears in Resources for American Literary Study, vol. 12, no. 2: 243-47.

Music of the Hutchinson Family Singers: From the Holdings of the American Antiquarian Society by Dale Cockrell, assistant professor of music, will be published by Da Capo Press next year as no. 32 in Earlier American Music. His book Excelsior!: Journals of the Hutchinson Family Singers, 1842-1846 is now in press and will be published by Pendragon Press as no. 5 in their Sociology of Music series.

An article by Cockrell, "Of Gospel Hymns, Minstrel Shows, and Jubilee Singers: Towards Some Black South African Musics," has been accepted by American Music. He read a paper with the same title at the Sonneck Society's national conference in April and at the American Musicological Society chapter conference in January. Cockrell delivered a lecture from this research at Virginia Union University last April and has been engaged to present it at Longwood College next spring in conjunction with their workshops on sub-Saharan Africa.

American Music (Summer 1986) published Cockrell's review of The Happy Journey: Early American Vocal Music, Vol. II: Shaker Songs, New England Anthems, Folk-Hymns and Fuging-Tunes and Southern Spirituals (Black and White) (performed by the Western Wind).

Cockrell is now working on editions of Ten Nights in a Barroom and Il Pescaballo, to be published by Garland Press as part of their American Musical Theater of the Nineteenth Century series. He is also chair of the program committee for next year's Sonneck Society national conference to be held in Pittsburgh in April.

Sonata recital Tuesday at 8

Well-known violinist Dora Marshall Mullins will join pianist Cary McMurrin in a sonata recital at the Arts Center Theatre of the Williamsburg Regional Library at 8 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 30. Tickets are $5 and available at the library.

The pair will perform Brahms' Sonata No. 2 in E flat major for Viola and Piano and Beethoven's Sonata No. 10 in G major. In addition Mr. McMurrin will perform the Piano Sonata No. 3 by Vincent Persichetti, and Mrs. Mullins will play the Chaconne from the Second Partita of J. S. Bach.

Mrs. Mullins, a native of Newport News, was a student of I. E. Feldman of Norfolk. She was first violinist of the Feldman String Quartet for 35 years and a member of the faculties of the Juilliard School of Music, Alfred University and ODU. She left the Feldman Quartet to become concertmaster for the Roanoke Symphony.

Cary McMurrin was for many years conductor of the Peninsula Symphony. He is now conductor emeritus of the Virginia Symphony and of the Governor's Palace Candlelight Orchestra in Williamsburg.
