College to give county land for connector road

The Board of Visitors convened at the Campus Center Thursday and Friday for its regular fall meeting. Among the major agenda items were approval of a new vice president for administration and finance, receipt of financial reports for various divisions of the university, a decision to cede four acres of land to James City County and a report on campus safety.

The Board's decision to give four acres of College land to the county makes possible the construction of a connector highway from Longhill Road on the east side of Kiwanis Park to Ironbound Road near the entrance to Eastern State Hospital. It is hoped the connector will relieve traffic congestion at the current intersection of Ironbound and Longhill roads in front of James Blair Intermediate School.

President Verkuil said he will meet with officials of James City County and the City of Williamsburg to complete details for the relocation and reconstruction of several athletic fields that will be displaced by the road.

The Board's committee on buildings and grounds heard status reports on various construction projects on campus, including the $3 million Swem Library addition where brick is being laid on exterior walls in anticipation of an Aug. 1987 completion. Brick is also being laid for exterior walls of the $1.39 million Phase IIB addition of the Muscarelle Museum of Art, expected to be completed by March 1987.

The buildings and grounds committee and the full Board gave approval to President Verkuil to petition the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission to designate the Gloucester Point Archaeological District (a significant portion of which is on the grounds of VIMS) as a historic landmark, placing it on the Virginia Register.

The committee on university advancement heard status reports on fund-raising, which show a 25.7 percent increase in total gifts compared to the same period last year. William and Mary received a total of $852,188 between July 1 and Oct. 7 of this year compared to $678,106 received during those three months last year. Included in this year's total is $216,432 generated by the William and Mary Annual Fund, which compares to $132,191 for the same period last year, a 63.7 percent increase.

The advancement committee also recommended the Board's approval of the establishment of the Harry E. Garner Scholarship Fund, honoring a class of 1893 alumnus. The scholarship was established from a bequest made by Garner's wife, the late Miriam Fettes Garner of McLean, Va., and the $250,000 endowment will be used to fund student aid.

The committee on athletic policy heard a report from Athletic Director John Randolph on the College's plan to begin testing athletes for drug use by early November, in anticipation of the need for athletes qualifying for post-season play to undergo mandatory tests stipulated by the NCAA.

W. Samuel Sadler, dean of student affairs, gave a report on the latest developments in the murder investigation case of Rebecca Ann Dowski and a report on campus security in the wake of an attempted assault on a William and Mary student living off campus. He also briefed the Board on new developments in substance-abuse education.

The Board also approved the following faculty appointments to fill existing vacancies:

James A. Bill, full-time Class of 1935 Professor of Government with tenure and director of the Center for International Studies, effective July 1, 1987.

Peter Alan Clark, full-time James Pinckney Harrison Professor for the 1987-88 academic session. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Joanna Bowen Gillespie, full-time visiting associate professor of religion, effective Jan. 1, 1987-May 15, 1987. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Lelia Baum Hopper, part-time lecturer in law, effective Jan. 1-Dec. 31, 1987. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Nina Yael Parker-Cohen, part-time adjunct assistant professor of psychology, effective Jan. 1-May 15, 1987. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Vaudine Fable Pedigo, part-time instructor of education, effective Aug. 16-Dec. 31, 1986. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Theresa H. Schmid, full-time reference/documents librarian in the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, effective Oct. 16, 1986-June 30, 1987. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

David Elwin Smith, part-time adjunct assistant professor of marine science, Virginia Institute of Marine Science, effective Aug. 28-Dec. 5, 1986. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

James Walvin, full-time William R. Kenan Jr. Distinguished Professor of Humanities for the 1987-88 academic session. This is a temporary, restricted appointment.

Camille Wells, part-time instructor of American studies, effective Jan. 1-May 15, 1987. This is a temporary restricted appointment.

Merck joins administration

William F. Merck II, vice president for business affairs at James Madison University, has been named vice president for administration and finance.

Merck, whose appointment was approved Oct. 24 by the College's Board of Visitors, replaces Andrew Fogarty, who left William and Mary last summer to join Gov. Gerald Baliles as Chief of Staff. Merck will begin his duties Dec. 1.

"We are extremely fortunate to have attracted a person with the depth and breadth of experience of Bill Merck," said President Paul R. Verkuil in announcing Merck's appointment. "He will be an integral part of the leadership team which will guide William and Mary as it strives for its ambitious goals."

Merck, 42, will share responsibility for universitywide budget planning with the provost and will lead development of planning systems, financial operations, personnel administration, facilities management, business functions, administrative computing and telecommunications.

A member of the JMU administration since 1972, Merck has served as vice president for business affairs since 1981.

Business School endowment named for Quinn

Over one third of the business school's John S. Quinn Accounting Faculty Endowment has been received in pledges from three national accounting firms.

At a recent dinner honoring John S. Quinn, who retired this year, John C. Jamison, dean of the School of Business Administration, announced that pledges of $75,000 had been received from Arthur Andersen & Company; Coopers & Lybrand; and Peat, Marwick Mitchell & Company. The goal of the endowment is $620,000.

Andrew W. Horrocks, president of the Wayne F. Gibbs Sr. Accounting Society, welcomed approximately 170 to the dinner at the Cascades honoring Quinn.

Accounting firms sponsoring tables included Arthur Andersen & Company; Arthur Young; Coopers & Lybrand; Deloitte, Haskins & Sells; Ernst & Whinney; McGladrey, Hendrickson & Pullen; Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Company; Price Waterhouse; Touche Ross & Company; and the national consulting firm of Peterson & Company.

Officially the second annual Wayne F. Gibbs Sr. Accounting Society dinner, it was a night to honor John Quinn. During his 36-year career at William and Mary, Quinn has taught virtually every accounting course offered at the College and was senior accounting professor in the School of Business Administration at the time of his retirement.

William C. Morrison Jr., partner in the accounting firm of Eggleston, Smith & Company, vice president of the Virginia Society of CPAs and a 1964 graduate of the William and Mary accounting program, presented Quinn with the initial Virginia Society of CPAs Distinguished Career in Accounting Education Award for his contributions in the accounting field.

Quinn was also honored by several of his former students who came forward to toast and roast their former teacher.

All echoed the sentiments of the citation issued by the Board of Visitors at the time of his retirement: "His reputation as a teacher and contributor to William and Mary earned him its highest faculty recognition, the Thomas Jefferson Award. As successor in accounting to the late Wayne F. Gibbs Sr., Professor Quinn is a man of uncompromising personal and professional integrity and a stern but loving task master. He confesses that his greatest satisfaction

Tech honors Mitchell Byrd

Mitchell A. Byrd, professor of biology, was recently honored at his alma mater, Virginia Tech.

Tech's Ag Alumni Association presented him with a citation for distinguished service to agriculture during the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences' homecoming.

The citation recognizes Byrd's three decades of service to wildlife management, particularly his efforts to save the American bald eagle, peregrine falcon, red-cockaded woodpecker, osprey and colonial bird groups, all endangered species.

His research has resulted in national recognition of a major bald eagle feeding and roosting area on the Potomac in King George County where 65 active nests produced 82 young this year.

He has been responsible for the reintroduction of the peregrine falcon to Virginia, resulting in five nests in the wild this year. His research efforts on behalf of the red-cockaded woodpecker have resulted in the establishment of a 200-acre reserve of forest land in Sussex County.

Osprey reproduction in the Commonwealth was practically zero when Byrd persuaded the U.S. Coast Guard to redesign channel markers so osprey nests did not have to be destroyed in the interest of navigational safety. Now Virginia provides osprey young to reintroduction efforts in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Byrd earned his B.S. degree in forestry and wildlife conservation, master's in wildlife conservation and Ph.D. in wildlife management at Virginia Tech. He chaired the biology department here from 1962 to 1976.

Byrd has raised $750,000 in support of his research, served on many bodies in support of his interests and received numerous honors and awards.

An article by R. Merritt Cox, professor of Spanish, appeared recently in Studies for I. L. McClelland. The article is titled "Impressions: Casanova's Spain, 1767-1768."

James D. Tabor, assistant professor of religion, recently presented a paper titled "Returning to the Divinity: Josephus's Accounts of the Departures of Enoch, Elijah and Moses," to the fall meeting of SCRAM (Study of the Culture and Religion of the Ancient Mediterranean) held at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. The paper was developed from an NEH-sponsored Summer Seminar in 1985 at Yeshiva University.

Kelly G. Shaver, professor of psychology, participated in an invited symposium on "Responsibility and Blaming," at the annual meeting of the Society of Experimental Social Psychology held at Tempe, Ariz. Shaver also organized and chaired a half-day conference on "Responsibility and Justice," on the day preceding the SESP meeting.

Bruce Grant, professor of biology, presented three talks in July and August. The first, titled "Individual Differences in Resting Site Selection by Peppered Moths," was delivered in July at a symposium on lepidopteran behavior organized by the British Museum in London. He also delivered that lecture as a seminar at the University of Virginia's Mountain Lake Biological State in August.

"Kinship Increases Fitness in Male Wasps," co-authored by Douglas Bryant (M.A. '85) and Allen Orr (M.A. '85), was given at the meetings of the Southeastern Ecological Genetics Group held at the Mountain Lake Biological State in late August.

Business

John H. McCray, presented a paper, "A General Bayesian Risk Model for Dollar Unit Sampling and Multiple Populations," at the biennial audit symposium at the University of Illinois, Oct. 20-21.

Jean Wyer this summer completed a research report and testified for the National Commission on Fraudulent Financial Reporting. She presented a paper on fraudulent reporting at the AAA meetings in New York. Wyer also participated in case-development exercises for the Financial Executives Research Foundation at the Harvard Business School. The last issue of Decision Line included her column, "Focusing on Thinking."

John Parkany and Richard S. Reynolds attended two international economic conferences in Hungary during late August. The first conference focused on the role of smaller countries in the world economy, and the second dealt with the international monetary system. At the first conference, Parkany presented a paper titled "Lending to Smaller countries by United States Commercial Banks."

George Cole was one of three William and Mary professors selected for a consortium in central Virginia studying social and ethical issues in the use of computers, funded by the Ford Foundation.

Ronald R. Sims, recently co-authored two papers including "The Reliability and Classification Stability of the Learning Style Inventory," with John G. Veres III, Patricia Watson and Kathryn E. Buckner, all of Auburn University. "Job Security and Employee Health," with Karl W. Kuhnert and Dale R. Palmer of Auburn University, appears in the conference proceedings for the Southern Management Association.

Marine Science

Fu-Lin Chu, assistant professor, was invited to present a paper, "Humoral Defense of Oysters," at a U.S.-Spain joint conference workshop on the effects of parasites and diseases in bivalve molluscs in Virgo, Spain, in September.

Dennis A. Thoney, a VIMS graduate student in the of chemical oceanography department, presented a paper at the sixth International Congress of Parasitology in Brisbane, Australia, titled "Comparative Parasitology of Two Fishes (Sciaenidae) along the Atlantic Coast of the U.S.A." Thoney was also invited to participate in the Pre-ICOP workshop on Heron Island, Great Barrier Reef, to study parasites of coral reef fishes.

John Watkins, president of the Virginia Tech Ag Alumni Organization, presented Mitchell Byrd with a citation for his work to restore endangered bird species to Virginia. The program was held during the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences' homecoming Oct. 4.

Carl H. Hershner, associate professor, N. Bartlett Therberge, professor, and Thomas A. Barnard Jr., assistant professor, co-authored a paper titled "Regional Management Philosophy Variations Within Virginia's Local Wetlands Management Program," which was featured at the Oceans '86 conference and exposition held in Washington, D.C.

Robert J. Orth, associate professor, presented an invited paper titled "Chesapeake Bay: A State's Perspective on the Value of Transplanting Seagrasses," at a workshop held at the Army Corps of Engineers Waterways Experiment State in Vicksburg, Miss.

Gene Silberhorn, professor, has made the best-seller list with his book Common Plants of the Mid-Atlantic Coast: A Field Guide, illustrated by Mary Warinner. The book, now on the best-seller list for paperbacks at The Johns Hopkins University Press, was first published in 1982 in hard- and soft-cover and has received many favorable reviews.

Robert J. Huggett, professor and head of the division of chemistry and toxicology, Rudolf H. Bieri, professor, and Beverly Anne Weeks, associate professor, were invited to participate in the international symposium "Toxic Chemicals and Aquatic Life: Research Management," held in Seattle, Wash.

Huggett was a member of the steering committee, chaired a session on the nature and fate of aquatic pollutants and co-authored a presentation on aquatic pollution problems along the North American Atlantic coast, including the Chesapeake Bay.

Bieri gave a poster presentation "Detection of Benzo(a)pyrene Metabolites by On-Line High-Performance Liquid Chromatography."

Weeks also gave a poster presentation on the influence of toxicants on phagocytosis, pinocytosis and melanin accumulation by fish macrophages.

The papers presented will be published as proceedings by Elsevier Science Publishers, Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

Hillel programs on Soviet Jewry

Hillel has scheduled two events, focusing on the theme "Religious Freedom in the Soviet Union."

A bagel brunch and workshop is slated for Sunday, Nov. 2 at 11:30 a.m. to discuss ways in which Americans can help Soviet Jews.

Workshop leaders will talk about how to adopt a person, how to correspond, how to telephone refusenik families and how to write on behalf of Soviet Jews to both the Soviet and American officials.

Workshop leaders will be Lea and Bernard Kaplan of Richmond, Va. The Kaplans have been active on the state level and nationally in action for Soviet Jews.

Lea Kaplan is co-chairperson of the Soviet Jewry Committee in Richmond and a board member of the National Conference on Soviet Jewry.

Bernard Kaplan is co-chairperson of the committee on public affairs of the Jewish Community Federation of Richmond.

Valentina Edelman of Richmond will be speaker at a Shabbat supper Friday, Nov. 7 at 5:30 p.m. and will speak on "A Refusenik's Story: A Personal Perspective."

Edelman, a nursing administrator at the Medical College of Virginia, was a refusenik in Russia from 1979 until 1981. She will tell her story as well as the experiences of her sister, brother-in-law and nephew who have been trying to leave the Soviet Union for 14 years.

Both events will be held at the Beth El/Hillel House on Jamestown Road at Indian Springs Road.

Wetlands topic of VIMS lecture

Thomas Barnard Jr., assistant professor of marine science, will present a slide-lecture on the wetlands of Virginia at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 5, in Watermen's Hall at VIMS.

Barnard will describe the institutional structure of the shoreline permitting process on the local, state and federal levels. A discussion period will be included, and information on how to apply for permits and which activities are permissible will be available.

This lecture is part of the current Oceanography for Landlubbers series held the first Wednesday of each month.

Cajun cooking next program by Women's Club

The College Women's Club will hold a Cajun cooking demonstration and tasting Tuesday, Nov. 4 at 7:30 p.m., in the Campus Center, Sit 'n Bull room.

Members are invited to bring one guest. The cost is $7. Seating is limited to 50.

Reservations may be made by calling Linda Vahala at 564-9698.

The demonstration will be given by Lisa Kelly, special events chef for the College and a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America. She will prepare Shrimp Commander, asparagus vinaigrette and bread pudding soufflé.

The audience will be invited to sample the dishes prepared.

Cohen this year's Kenan Professor of Humanities

By Wendy Sacket
Editorial Assistant

Why is football a sport and speed-typing not? What is the significance of matching the way you dress with the way you feel? Is there a connection between graffiti and art? These unusual questions are just a few of the topics of discussion in Professor Ted Cohen's philosophy courses this fall at William and Mary.

In his course "Aesthetics Without Fine Art," Cohen chose topics such as clothing, sports, jokes, food, television and graffiti because "there isn't any very useful literature about what it would mean to think about those things philosophically." He wants the students to consider the question of why these different interests receive attention similar to that given to art but are not considered part of the artistic tradition.

"What I'm hoping is that they find out that it's not as if there is some answer to the question lying out there that you can read. The problem is to figure out how you're going to answer this question yourself."

His other course, "The Philosophy of Art," is more conventional, and he does expect students to consult the body of literature that has been produced on the subject. The course admittedly expresses Cohen's own biases by concentrating on those aspects he finds most interesting, like the problem of metaphor, representation, genre and taste and only briefly touching on topics like art criticism in which he has less interest.

Cohen, professor of philosophy at the University of Chicago, where he is also a member of the committee on general studies in the humanities and the committee on art and design, is the William R. Kenan Jr. Distinguished Professor of the Humanities for 1986-87. He has also held visiting appointments at Michigan, Cornell, Northwestern, the University of California at Santa Barbara and Harvard, but this is the first time he has taken an entire year for teaching at another institution.

He finds the change in the academic environment stimulating because it allows him to meet other scholars and to work with other students. "Seeing what students were like at Michigan, Cornell and Harvard was useful -- students at the University of Chicago are different; and I'm reminded of that again at William and Mary. I don't know if it makes me any more tolerant of my own students but it helps me to understand their peculiarities a bit better," says Cohen.

However, Cohen says that this problem bothered him "less than most people, because I'm a rather eccentric philosopher. I work in the philosophy of art, which is already a strange part of the field, and within that part of the field my work is rather peculiar. In fact my work is energized by the various kinds of things that I do in class, so it hasn't been so bad for me."

Cohen describes the other issue as "the cost to the student of dedicated amateurism on the part of the faculty." His academic training is principally in analytical philosophy, "but I also teach novels by Conrad and Melville; I teach movies, poetry and history, and I'm an amateur in those fields. . . . Those texts just don't resonate for me in the way that the books I really know do."

Cohen notes that there are advantages that tend to balance the cost of instruction by non-specialists. "It's supposed to be good for students to notice that an intelligent person who cares about a particular text can handle it. And that should lead students to realize that the texts that make up our cultural tradition are accessible to them as well. . . . They come out with this sense of enablement -- this sense that one can do these things."

Perhaps it is this ability to think intelligently about unfamiliar subjects that is the key to Cohen's course "Aesthetics Without Fine Art." The course is unique. He felt it was appropriate to offer something he had never taught before as a special opportunity for both his students and himself, "an opportunity which surely carries the risk of disastrous failure."

One characteristic common to both his courses is their size. "Because part of the idea of this Kenan professorship is to get something taught here that wouldn't normally be offered, at least not in exactly the same way, I thought that the best way to do that would be to open the classes to as many students as possible," says Cohen.

"It's different when the professor is part of the regular faculty," Cohen says. "Students have an opportunity during their four years to study with that teacher, but I won't teach these courses here again so I thought I should allow as many people as possible into the courses."

Cohen's best advice to students is never to hesitate to ask questions. As he puts it, the worst thing that can happen is that the professor will say, "I'd rather not to go into that now, but I'll be glad to see you right after class or in my office, and we'll discuss it then."

Cohen's courses are held under the auspices of the new Center for Honors and Interdisciplinary Studies at William and Mary, under the acting directorship of Professor Martha Houle. Although he is still learning about the scope of the program here, he is familiar with the interdisciplinary tradition at the University of Chicago. He sees the national resurgence of interest in the humanities as a chance to offset the danger of "having our colleges turn into trade schools."

According to Cohen, the removal of the humanities from people's education produces young executives who are "30 years old and making $80,000 a year" and one of the things they do with their money is, for example, to see a first-class performance of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman."

Cohen says, "Maybe they understand the play, and they may even somehow relate it to plays by Sophocles, but I doubt that they can grasp just how radically the world must have changed so that an ordinary salesman, indeed a failed salesman, can be tragic. This was an impossible conception for an Aristotelian Greek, yet it has become commonplace for us. What has happened?"

A person who cannot address this question may not seem especially deprived, says Cohen, but people like that are "people who probably aren't as happy as they might be and don't know as much about what's going on as they ought to know in order to defend themselves against a complicated world."

His own teaching experience is closely linked to some of the issues that are constantly debated among those involved with general, liberal studies.

One issue is the demand which interdisciplinary teaching places on instructors, since it's "not likely to be terribly congenial to a person's professional work. This is the cost of genuine interdisciplinary teaching to the faculty members who do it, especially young, untenured faculty," according to Cohen.

"It is terribly important for a college involved in this kind of program to protect these faculty members against the miserable day when the college denies tenure on the grounds that there has been inadequate publication. This kind of publication is essential for any college that has serious academic ambitions, and that means that the college must provide the opportunity for faculty who are involved in this difficult, time-consuming interdisciplinary teaching to have free time to pursue their writing."

Being embarrassed about asking questions is a mistake, "because half the class was just waiting for someone like you and needing someone like you to do the hard work of embarrassing himself. . . . The business of learning is the student's business, a hard and serious business."

Debaters win at West Point

Two William and Mary debaters, Therese Tracy, a freshman, and Laura Forester, a senior, won the novice division of the U.S. Military Academy invitational debate tournament at West Point, last weekend in which 48 teams competed.

The team was 4-2 in the preliminaries and won over Cornell in the semifinals and St. John's in the final to take the top spot.

Another William and Mary team, Sean Reilly and Richard Evonitz, both sophomores, also had a 4-2 record in the preliminaries and faced the team of Tracy and Forester in the quarterfinals. Under a coaches' rule the two teams from a school do not debate each other so the team with the higher seeding advances to the next round.

In the open division the team of Douglas Clarke and Sayoko Blodgett-Ford, both sophomores, were 4-2 in the preliminaries and lost to Cornell in the quarterfinals.

The team of Lorette Chaney, a senior, and Rod Satterwhite, a junior, had a 4-2 record in the preliminaries, beat the University of Florida in the quarterfinals and lost on a 2-1 decision to Cornell in the semifinals.

Rod Satterwhite tied for fifth-place speaker.

Debate coach Pat Micken and his associate, Wayne Cramer, accompanied the debaters to New York.

At the Miami of Ohio tournament, freshmen Ron Westfall and Joe Howard were 4-2 in the preliminary -- "a good showing for freshman," says Micken -- and just missed the quarterfinals on seeding.

Tim Dolmin, sophomore and Andy Shilling, junior, were 5-1 in the preliminaries and defeated Michigan State in the quarterfinals, but lost to McAlister College in the semifinals. Dolmin was named seventh speaker, Andy, eighth. A total of 26 teams competed.

This weekend the debaters will be busy again at Suffolk University in Boston, Appalachian State at Boone, N.C., and Bloomsburg State in Pennsylvania.

Deadline Feb. 2 for W&M Review

American Music Week

Betty E. Chmaj, professor of humanities and American studies at California State University, Sacramento, will give two lectures Nov. 13 and 14 under the joint sponsorship of the music, interdisciplinary and American studies departments.

Chmaj will give a slide lecture at 5 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 13 in Andrews 201 on "Visions and Revisions: American Studies, Women's Studies and the Challenge to See Anew."

Chmaj will use musical examples in her lecture "Ives, Emerson, and the American Double Consciousness," to be given at noon, Friday, Nov. 14 in Ewell 100.

Chmaj is widely known in American studies through the United States and Europe for her public lectures on American women, American music, American film and other forms of popular culture and the interactions of the American arts.

Her approach is one that wishes to see the American arts placed in their proper social context. She challenges the prevailing and traditional notion that art is separate from life, and by so doing stands in the vanguard of the new revisionist American cultural history.

Betty E. Chmaj

She is the author of American Women and American Studies (1971); Image, Myth and Beyond (1974); Sonata for American Studies: Perspectives on Charles Ives (1974) and The Sixties and the Seventies: An Annotated Bibliography (with F. Rademacher, 1978).

Her most recent monograph is an interdisciplinary study of Ralph Waldo Emerson's impact on American literature, architecture, painting and music, The Journey and the Mirrors: Emerson and the American Arts (1986).

Concert Oct. 30

The premiere of Joel Suben's "Academic Overture" will open the program of the William and Mary Orchestra's fall concert, Oct. 30 at 8:15 p.m. in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall. Suben will conduct.

The orchestra will also perform "Deux Marches et un Intermede" by Poulenc; "Dance Macabre" by Sant-Saens, with Raelene Canuel '87, soloist; and the Overture-Fantasy from "Romeo and Juliet" by Tchaikovsky.

The Chamber Orchestra, an ensemble of the larger group, will play Bizet's Carmen Suite No. 1.

Bond exhibit closes Nov. 1

This week is the last chance to see an exhibit of wood and bronze sculptures by John Bond, director of buildings and grounds, who is also an artist and sculptor.

The 40-piece exhibit, which closes Saturday, Nov. 1, is at the Twentieth Century Art Gallery on South Boundary St.

The show has been a successful one. All items in the exhibit have been sold.

Jobs at Busch

Busch Gardens is seeking approximately 260 singers, dancers, musicians, actors, variety artists, technicians and stage managers for positions in summer '87.

Salaries range from $185 to $487 per week. In addition, Busch Gardens offers free classes in dance, music and theatre. Three hiring periods are offered: Feb. 23 through Labor Day; May 1 through Labor Day; and June 1 through Aug. 30.

For further information contact Natalie Mahoney, Office of Career Services, Morton 140, ext. 4604.

Journalist retraces war in Cambodia

Dith Pran, the Cambodian journalist whose life and friendship with New York Times war correspondent Sydney Schanberg was portrayed in the movie The Killing Fields will speak at 8 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 13 in William and Mary Hall.

Admission is $3 for the public and free to faculty, staff and students. Pran's visit is sponsored by the William and Mary Student Association.

Pran's address, "Living in the Killing Fields," will focus on his experiences in war-torn Cambodia in the mid-1970s, including his friendship with Schanberg. Pran and Schanberg first met in Phnom Penh in 1972, two years after the war

It was nearly four years later that an emaciated Pran escaped to Thailand, and eventually was reunited with Schanberg, who had been searching for him since they were parted by the Khmer Rouge.

United Way needs $4,000 to reach goal

The United Way drive has reached the $19,000 mark, and Lawrence Wiseman, fund chairman, hopes it will continue to climb to reach the goal of $23,000.

The fund drive received a welcomed assist recently from the athletic department. One half of the $6 purchase price of an end-zone ticket for the William and Mary-Princeton game will be donated to the United Way fund drive.

The athletic department is sweetening the pot with a T-shirt give-away at 4:30 p.m., Friday, Nov. 7 on the practice field beside Cary Stadium. Between 350 and 375 Tribe shirts will be given to youngsters. If the youngsters wear the T-shirts and are accompanied to Saturday's game by an adult, they will be admitted free to the game.

If all end-zone seats are sold, the United Way fund could receive $6,000.

Wiseman has sent out two letters to members of the College community asking for donations, but if anyone has been missed or has misplaced the donor card, please call him at ext. 4212. One of his goals for the campaign is the widest possible participation this year.

BALSA invites politicians to forum Nov. 11

"Republican or Democrat: Where Do Black Americans Fit?" is the theme of a forum featuring black representatives from the two major political parties at 7 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 11, at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, room 119.

Featured speakers will include: State Senator Robert Scott D-Newport News; Newport News Mayor Jessie M. Rattley; Mrs. Eleanor Rice, chairperson of the Republican Party for the First District; and Daniel Jenkins, a member of the state central committee of the Republican Party.

The forum, which is open to the public without charge, is sponsored by the Black Law Student Association at Marshall-Wythe.

Employee Relations workshop

The Office of Employee Relations and Affirmative Action will sponsor a workshop, "The Science (Art?) of Personnel Selection," 9 a.m.-4 p.m., Friday, Nov. 14 in the Campus Center Sit 'n Bull Room.

The workshop is open to all personnel involved in the recruitment, interviewing and selection of classified and hourly employees.

Liz Jones and Debby Rorrer of the employee relations office will act as facilitators for the workshop.

Because space is limited, persons interested in attending the session are asked to register by Nov. 4.

Three exhibits up in Andrews

There are currently three exhibits in Andrews galleries - the paintings of Louis Finkelstein; a collage, construction and wall reliefs invitational; and the works of the late David Acker.

All exhibits will be up through Nov. 6. The galleries are open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Finkelstein, an established American painter whose works are included in many galleries and private collections, is also well known as a teacher. He is on the faculty of Queens College.

The invitation show includes the work of Charles Hall, Elaine Rogers, Elizabeth Kord, Alan Mintz, Alison Wishart, Jann Rosen-Queralt, Jennifer D. Crane, Ron Snapp, Anne D. Bousquet, Stephen M. Tatum and Paul Helfrich of the fine arts faculty. The artists represented have had their work shown in group and one-man shows in major galleries.

David Acker, who died in May at the age of 32, is remembered as an artist who used vibrant colors and "quick, spontaneous" brushstrokes. He had been a member of the Prince Street Gallery in New York City since 1983.

Quinn wins first CPA career award

comes from the success of his students on national accounting examinations, in their courses and in their personal lives.

The citation continued, "In large measure his reputation as an accounting educator and program leader for many years is responsible for the high national reputation of the College's accounting program."

The undergraduate program at the College is recognized by the academic and practitioner communities as one of the top 15 in the nation, says James E. Smith, professor of accounting and director of the accounting program.

Not only have graduates received the VSCPA gold medal for outstanding performance on the CPA examinations by Virginia candidates, graduates have also been recognized at the national level with the Elijah Watt Sells Award. Some 123 medals were awarded for top performances in the national field of approximately 67,000 candidates taking the May 1986 CPA examination. Two of the recipients were graduates of the William and Mary accounting program.

In his remarks to the dinner guests, Smith noted that each of the sponsored tables included at least one partner who is a graduate of the College.

Educated at Salem State College, Boston University and the Harvard Business School, Quinn has helped guide the College's accounting program through its period in the Department of Business Administration, the founding of the School of Business Administration in 1978 and the recent accreditation of the accounting program by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business in 1984.

A diner's coup

The Lafayette Educational Fund, Inc., is offering its "Tour of Excellent Restaurants."

Money raised will be used for vocational and academic scholarships for graduating seniors at Lafayette.

The $15 tour booklets offer two-for-one meals at 16 area restaurants. Coupons are valid Dec. 1-April 1.

Booklets are available Nov. 1 from branches of the United Virginia Bank, Lafayette High School and the School Board office.

Research grant awards include many disciplines

Two recent grant awards to faculty of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law will support projects concerning land use policy and natural resources management.

The Virginia Environmental Endowment has awarded $14,436 to Ronald Rosenberg for "Regionalism and Virginia Land Use Policy," a project aimed at identifying and promoting the advancement of state and regional interests in Virginia land use policies and decisions.

The Endowment has also made an award of $14,829 to Linda Butler for a study of the legal barriers to comprehensive natural resources management in Virginia.

James City County awarded Norman Barka, professor of anthropology and Marley Brown, director, Office of Archaeological Excavation and Conservation, Colonial Williamsburg, a grant of $19,564 to conduct an archaeological reconnaissance survey of the proposed Ware Creek reservoir.

Barka and Brown found some 40 Indian sites - all prehistoric from the early to late woodland period. Before final permission from the Corps of Engineers is granted for work in the area by the county, a more detailed survey will be required as phase two, followed by a data-recovery phase to determine if finds are eligible for listing on the national register.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has awarded $25,432 to William Bynum, professor of mathematics and computer science, for work on a command/response protocols and concurrent software project. This project will use the hardware of the Intelligent Systems Research Laboratory in conjunction with a software system developed by Bynum to develop command/response protocols for all the devices in the DAISIE system.

Kathryn Holliday, assistant professor of business administration, has been awarded a grant of $1,600 from the Small Business Administration for the Management Consultant Group. Graduate students will provide management counseling and technical assistance to small business concerns for four additional cases as identified by the SBA. To date, $8,400 has been awarded for this work.

Eastern State Hospital has made a grant award of $35,000 for graduate assistantships in psychology at Eastern State Hospital, which will be directed by Joseph Galano and Kelly Shaver, professors of psychology.

The assistantships will provide continued training in clinical psychology and research to students in the psychology department's M.A. degree program.

Michael Rohrbaugh and Neill Watson, associate professors of psychology, have been awarded $5,000 by the Williamsburg-James City County Public Schools for the Virginia Consortium for Professional Psychology Practicum. The practicum provides family-focused psychological services aimed at remediating and preventing school-related problems and advanced training in family therapy for a post-internship doctoral student in the William and Mary psychology program. To date, $20,000 has been received in grant awards for this program.

Eastern Virginia Medical School has made two grant awards totalling approximately $6,000 to Stanton Hoegerman, associate professor of biology, for work with Fragile X Syndrome. EVMS has awarded over $30,000 to date for Hoegerman's work on the identification of individuals with the Fragile X Syndrome.

The Peninsula Area Cooperative Education Services has awarded $26,475 for 1986-87 to the School of Education's Family Counseling Program, for which Fred Adair, professor of education, serves as faculty liaison director.

The center, located on the third floor of Jones Hall, offers free comprehensive services for children and their families from the surrounding public school divisions of Gloucester, Hampton, Newport News, Williamsburg-James City County and York.

During the past year, over 120 families were referred to the Center and 62

Psychologists open keynote talk

The ninth annual meeting of the Society of Southeastern Social Psychologists will be held Saturday, Nov. 1 at the Williamsburg Hospitality House.

Among the paper sessions are symposia on the effects of television on social behavior and methodological issues in social psychology and a general session dealing with sociological and psychological perspectives on gender.

The keynote address, titled "Social Psychology: Between Utopia and Tragedy," will be delivered by Kurt Back of Duke University, at 2:30 p.m. and is open to members of the College community. Attendance at other sessions requires registration.

Memorial held for Mrs. Gibson

A memorial service for Mary Hiden Gibson, mother of Mrs. Paul R. Verkuil, who died Saturday, was held Sunday at Bruton Parish Church. Burial was scheduled for 3 p.m., Tuesday in Arlington National Cemetery.

Mrs. Gibson, who was 65, died Saturday in Williamsburg Landing.

She attended St. Catherine's School in Richmond and was a graduate of the National Cathedral School in Washington. She received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from the College of William and Mary in 1941.

Survivors include her husband, John Aldridge Gibson Jr., of Leesburg; two other daughters, Mrs. Anne Gibson Fletcher of Annandale and Mrs. Perry Gibson Kraus of Los Angeles; and two grandchildren.

The family has requested that expressions of sympathy take the form of contributions to the Williamsburg Community Hospital.

Madec lecture Nov. 4 in Andrews

Philippe Madec, Parisian architect, will give a lecture on the architecture of Etienne L. Boullée, a radically abstract French architect of the 18th century, at 8 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 4 in Andrews 201.

Madec's lecture is being sponsored jointly by the Department of Fine Arts, the William and Mary College Lectures Committee and the Virginia Society of Architectural Historians.

families received counseling services, according to Pamela Boll, doctoral student in counseling and training coordinator for the center.

During the 1985-86 year, 10 counselors conducted 575 sessions totalling more than 475 hours of supervision and consultation.

Grants deadline

Applications for summer faculty research grants are available from the Office of the Provost, Brafferton 3, or the Office of Grants and Research Administration, James Blair 202.

Final chance to join up

The final screenings for membership in the Virginia employee health improvement program will be held Friday, Oct. 31.

Screening tests are required for membership. Anyone who wishes to join the program is asked to call the coordinator, Mary Louise Mageean, by Thursday at ext. 4214 to set up an appointment.

Membership is open to all faculty, staff and family members, 18 years or older for an annual fee of $3 for individuals, $5 per family.

In addition to medical screening, the program offers health-risk analysis, personal goal-setting, exercise programs, nutrition and weight-loss workshops, blood-pressure and cancer screening, stress-management and smoking-cessation guides, mental health seminars, glaucoma testing and CPR training.

Lady Astor, Rotary Scholars enjoy studying abroad

Sarah Maddocks of Plymouth, England, the 1986 Lady Astor Scholar on campus, is hoping her scholarship plus a year of business courses at William and Mary will give her resume the edge needed to land a position in advertising in London when she returns next year.

A graduate of St. David's University in Lampeter, Dyfed, Wales, Sarah majored in English. She wrote her senior thesis on F. Scott Fitzgerald.

She says she didn't choose her major with any career goal in mind. It was, she says, a case of academic indulgence. She chose something she enjoyed and was good at. She considered a career in journalism but opted instead for advertising and marketing.

This year she's taking courses in consumer behavior, the principles of marketing, organizational management and behavioral science.

Education American-style is all new to Sarah. She took her first multiple-choice, fill-in-the-blanks exam recently. While the English system, she explains, does not have mid-terms or similar exams, students are expected to attend lectures, participate in class and be prepared to contribute to small seminar and tutorial groups, which follow major lectures and focus on special aspects of a topic.

American students may feel they have a heavy load, she said, but an English undergraduate is expected to turn in approximately 50,000 words of written work, including a 10,000-word "dissertation" for the baccalaureate degree.

Like many students now, Sarah took a year off after high school to travel. Her year off included a "beach holiday" to Disneyland in Florida and Virginia Beach.

Sarah comes from a small college of 700 students. As a freshman she rented an old Welsh house for its quaintness. "It was a gorgeous old house," she recalls. But the ambiance wasn't enough to overcome the winter chill. It was a chore

"treking out to the coal bin to keep the fire stoked so we could keep warm."

Here Sarah lives in Ludwell. She's made a few adjustments to make it seem like home. For one thing she's bought herself some chinaware. She doesn't like the idea of throw-away plastic and putting everything "in the bin" after a meal.

Sarah is appreciative of the "superior" sports facilities on campus and "the luxury of so many tennis courts." Her game is squash and she's delighted to find a partner since most people play racketball.

Sarah says she finds the international students on campus a friendly group and enjoys their company.

The Lady Astor scholarship is named for the first woman member of parliament in England, the former Nancy Langhorne of Danville, Va. Her constituency was Plymouth.

Pierre-Eric Duqueroix of Rochefort, France, is currently studying international law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law on an international Rotary Foundation Scholarship.

Duqueroix holds a doctorate in communal law from Strasbourg University and will return next year to begin a career in government law or foreign service.

While in Williamsburg he is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Guerrant; his faculty adviser is Walter L. Williams Jr.,

a professor of law who specializes in international law.

On his first visit to the United States, Duqueroix is struck by the friendliness of Americans and the informal exchange that exists between student and professor. Mrs. Gordon B. Ringgold of Williamsburg, a native speaker and former W&M faculty member, has been helping him with the transition to an English-speaking lifestyle.

An enthusiastic photographer, Duqueroix hopes to tour California, Montana and Florida and to visit the White House and the Statue of Liberty. He also hopes to stop in Evanston, Ill., to personally thank Meg Underriner of the Rotary International office who handled much of the exchange details.

When he returns to Rochefort, Duqueroix will report on his year abroad to Rotarians there, including several who helped arrange his exchange: J. Paul Chauvet, 1984 president; Pierre Billier, the oldest member of the Rochefort Rotarians; Dr. Rene Allaune; Robert Brunteau, a past district governor for southwest France; and the local pharmacist, Mr. Prudhon.

Although Duqueroix's home is close to Bordeaux, he doesn't miss French wine; he doesn't drink wine. But he does miss the French style of cooking. Americans, he says, do not have the light touch the French have with sauces, and they put too much sugar in many dishes. Like many foreign visitors, he wishes there were fewer commercials to interrupt TV programs.

Pierre-Eric Duqueroix (c) with Walter L. Williams (l), faculty adviser, and his Williamsburg host William Guerrant.

EDITOR'S NOTE

Inadvertently last week we gave credit to one organization and withheld it from three others in two different stories. We regret the error.

Delta Sigma Theta sorority is not alone in undertaking fund-raising projects this fall as indicated in a story "Delta Sigma Theta sorority gives high schoolers a hand." A November program is planned with Alpha Kappa Alpha, Delta Sigma Theta, Zeta Phi Beta and Alpha Phi Alpha participating. We regret that the names of these organizations were omitted from the story.

The lecture by Ambassador Fritts, held Monday at 4 p.m., was sponsored by the anthropology department, specifically Anthropology 360. The International Relations Club was not, as stated, a co-sponsor. Again, we regret the error.
