Admission is $3. Students, faculty and staff of the College will be admitted free.

Ms. Gregory's topic will be "A Regulatory Update."

Ms. Gregory has covered many major stories during her years at ABC, including exclusive reports on the 1983 Environmental Protection Agency Superfund scandal, reports on the air traffic controller's strike and disasters such as the fatal Air Florida crash in Washington, D.C., the Tylenol poisoning deaths and the Three Mile Island nuclear accident. She also was co-anchor for ABC Radio's coverage of the wedding of Lady Diana Spencer and Prince Charles in 1981.

She covered the Carter presidential campaign and was a White House correspondent during the Carter Administration and reported on the Iranian hostage crisis. A military affairs correspondent during the mid-1970s, she has received many awards and has been named one of the nation's top investigative journalists.

State politics topic of forum

A forum discussion on the future of Virginia politics, sponsored by the College Republicans and the Marshall-Wythe Young Democrats at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, will be held at 4 p.m., Thursday, Jan. 29 at the law school.

This program is open to the public. There is no admission charge.

Participants will include Larry Sabato of the University of Virginia; Donald W. Huffman, chairman, Republican Party of Virginia; Tyler Whitley, political reporter, Richmond Times Dispatch; and George Stoddart, press secretary to Governor Charles S. Robb.

The discussion will be moderated by Ernie Gates, editorial page editor, Newport News Daily Press.

New center to help business pioneers

The College has received a $9,097 planning grant from the Center for Innovative Technology to launch an entrepreneurship center to provide technical assistance and research to new business pioneers on the Virginia Peninsula.

The 10-month grant, announced by President Paul R. Verkuil yesterday in a speech to the Peninsula Economic Development Council, involves eight faculty members from three divisions of the College and from the Continuous Electron Beam Accelerator Facility (CEBAF) in Newport News.

Total cost of the project will be $18,193, with half to be paid by private funds raised by William and Mary.

Co-principal investigators on the project are Kelly G. Shaver, professor of psychology; David J. Gosselin, assistant professor of business administration; P. Ronald Grulich, marine economist with VIMS; John B. Nezlek, associate professor of psychology; Richard L. Kiefer, professor of chemistry; Roy L. Pearson, director of the Bureau of Business Research; John Usher, project director of the CEBAF Technology Transfer Grant; and Robert A. Whitehorn, director of business relations in the School of Business Administration.

One of the first actions of the project's steering committee is to sponsor a series of Venture Capital Forums, the first of which will be held March 3 in Hampton.

"We are pleased to have this opportunity to use the strengths of William and Mary to address the needs of the Peninsula's business and industries," Verkuil told the Council. "I know we all agree on the special quality of life we have on the Peninsula and on the importance of maintaining and developing its economic vitality."

He said that those working under the grant anticipate formalizing the center's plans within 10 months, and that the center is expected to be established within a year.

The project contains four specific phases, according to David E. Kranbuehl, director of the grants and research administration office. The investigators will examine existing models of entrepreneurship centers, identify specific local needs and resources, develop and revise a model for the William and Mary center and create a solid financial base for implementation of the center's plans.

Melvyn D. Schiavelli, provost, said the objectives of the center will be to build on the existing academic strengths of William and Mary, to capitalize on the unique resources of the area and to match individual faculty skills with demonstrated needs of potential entrepreneurs.

The established strengths on which the center will be built, Kranbuehl said, are the university's "internationally renowned" physics department, its tradition of intellectual cooperation in applied science, chemistry, computer science and physics with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration at Langley Air Force Base and its fundamental role in CEBAF.

The unique resources on which the center will capitalize include the Marine Advisory Services of William and Mary's Virginia Institute of Marine Science (VIMS), as well as NASA and CEBAF, Kranbuehl said.

Among the individual faculty skills that could be made available to pioneering entrepreneurs, Kranbuehl said, are those of research chemists, geologists, archaeologists and biologists with applications in manufacturing processes; those of computer scientists with applications in robotics and artificial intelligence; and those of mathematicians in operations research to study distribution, allocation and inventory problems.

The model target for the new center will be the person who identifies the first business opportunity in a new market and assumes the risk of organizing, financing and managing a business with the goal of establishing a profitable venture.

Noting that support already exists for small business operators in existing markets, Roy Pearson said that "for the pioneering

Provost Appoints Ad Hoc Committees to Discuss Faculty Assembly and Student Advising and Evaluation

I am pleased to announce the formation of three ad hoc committees. The committees are as follows:

1. A committee to work on the creation of a faculty assembly
2. A committee to assess the current system of academic advising to undergraduates
3. A committee to formulate a universitywide plan to measure student achievement at William and Mary.

Faculty Assembly

To undertake the establishment of a faculty assembly is both appropriate and timely, given the challenges facing William and Mary during the final seven years of its third century of service to higher education. Such a universitywide assembly can be expected to consider matters of concern to us all. Its creation will allow for a single structure in which faculty involvement in the decision-making process can be more effective. It is hoped also that a faculty assembly will create, maintain and strengthen communication and dialogue between the faculty and the university administration. Finally, the presence of such a group should be expected to allow for the reduction of faculty committee work.

This committee is charged with making recommendations which consider the following questions:

Organizational Structure: What should be the form of this universitywide body? What constituencies should be represented in this body? What is the minimum and maximum number of representatives to the group needed for effective operation and representative membership.

Selection Process: How will the representatives of the various constituencies be nominated and selected? What will be the length of service of each representative.

Jurisdiction: What will be the function of this assembly?

The above charge is intended to be informative and guiding, not prescriptive. In forming this committee the deans of the various schools are asked to recommend individuals to serve who are highly respected by their colleagues and sensitive both to the concerns of individual schools within the university and the need to create a viable faculty assembly.

The committee will be chaired by the Associate Provost for Academic Affairs, Kathleen F. Slevin, and has been asked to report to the President and Provost in April 1987. At this time the faculty will be asked to consider implementing a faculty assembly.

The committee members are:

- David A. Evans, associate professor of marine science
- Judith Ewell, professor of history
- Martin A. Garrett Jr., professor of economics
- John F. Lavach, professor of education
- James C. Livingston, Walter G. Mason Professor of Religion
- Roy L. Pearson, professor of business administration, Director, Bureau of Business Research
- Douglas R. Rendleman, Mills E. Godwin Jr., Professor of Law
- Margaret K. Schaefer, associate professor of mathematics.

Assessment of Academic Advising

In my opinion, it is time to evaluate the effectiveness of the current system of academic advising. There are two major reasons to form this committee. First, there is a growing awareness and concern among faculty and administrators nationwide that the quality of academic advising has diminished in recent years. Second, there appears to be a discontent among students that their academic-advising needs are not met satisfactorily.

In the past decade, many universities and colleges have examined and, subsequently, reorganized academic-advising in order to deliver to the students better advising. The committee is charged with examining how academic advising takes place at William and Mary and with making recommendations about improvements that may be necessary to create an exemplary system of academic advising here.

The committee will be chaired by the Associate Provost for Academic Affairs, Kathleen F. Slevin, and has been asked to report to the President and Provost in Sept. 1987. The committee members are:

- Ruth A. Beck, assistant professor of biology
- Stephen C. Clement, professor of geology
- Randolph A. Coleman, associate professor of chemistry
- Thomas M. Finn, professor of religion and Dean Undergraduate Studies, Arts and Sciences
- William T. Geary, associate professor of business administration
- Lewis W. Leadbeater, professor of classical studies
- John J. McGlennon, associate professor of government

Student Assessment Plan

This committee will establish a plan to measure student achievement at William and Mary under a state-mandated directive to each of Virginia's public institutions of higher education to create a plan for a systematic student assessment program. Virginia's legislators and public and educational leaders are concerned that the Commonwealth's universities and colleges evaluate their effectiveness. Therefore, William and Mary has been directed by the State Council of Higher Education to present its assessment plan by June 1987.

The committee will be chaired by the Associate Provost for Academic Affairs, Kathleen F. Slevin, and has been asked to report to the President and Provost by May 15, 1987. The committee members are:

- Bradner W. Coursen, professor of biology
- Connie Galloway, associate dean for administration, Marshall-Wythe School of Law
- Satoshi Ito, associate professor of sociology
- Roger R. Ries, professor of education
- N. Bartlett Theberge Jr., professor of marine science
- Jean C. Wyer, associate professor of business administration

We are grateful to each of these individuals for their willingness to serve the university by agreeing to be members of these three important committees.

Newsmakers

Bettina Manzo, reference librarian at Swem Library, will have an article titled "A Virginian Goes Abroad: St. George Tucker in New York, 1786" published in the winter 1987 issue of Virginia Calvacade.

Judith Ewell, professor of history, attended the annual meeting of the Conference on Latin American History (CLAH), which was held concurrently with the American Historical Association meetings in Chicago, Dec. 27-30. Ewell has just completed a two-year term on the executive council of CLAH; she also serves on the CLAH committee on projects and publications and on the committee on international scholarly relations.

In September, Ewell was appointed to a three-year term on the Latin American Area Advisory Committee of the Council for International Exchange of Scholars. The advisory committee reviews applications and recommends all U.S. scholars who want to lecture or do research in Latin America and the Caribbean under the Fulbright program. The Committee also reviews the applications of Latin American scholars who wish to become Fulbright research scholars in the United States.

Donald J. Messmer, J. S. Mack Professor, School of Business Administration, presented a paper, titled "A Study of the Effects on Bus Ridership of Disseminating Service Information and Free-Ride Coupons," at the 66th annual meeting of the National Research Council, Transportation Research Board. The paper was jointly authored with Carol K. Capo. It was selected by the TRB Committee on Public Transportation and Marketing as a best paper and presented in a special session of the TRB meeting reserved for best papers.

Gary Ripple, dean of admissions, appeared as a guest on the Ask Washington telecast, Dec. 29. Lee Thornton, host of the program, interviewed Ripple who answered questions phoned in by viewers.

venture, information and knowledgeable advice will be expensive to assemble and time-consuming to obtain through primary research." These major needs of small business entrepreneurs can best be met by academia, without duplicating the services of other agencies and without competing with private businesses, he said.

Preliminary plans for the new center call for it to involve academic programs in applied science, business administration, computer science and marine science, as well as existing college resources in the Bureau of Business Research, the CEBAF advisory group, the Center for Executive Development, the Special Programs Office and faculty members from the physical and social sciences. Once established, its offices will be in Oyster Point near CEBAF and other research and development facilities expected to grow there.

Review deadline set for Feb. 2

The William and Mary Review is seeking submissions of art, poetry, fiction and non-fiction for its 1987 publication.

Deadline for submissions is Feb. 2.

Debaters win two tournaments

Debaters started off the semester in fine style with two tournament wins in Oklahoma and Virginia.

The team of John Wilson and Rod Satterwhite won the South East Oklahoma State University tournament in Durant, Okla., Jan. 7-8. Wilson and Satterwhite qualified for the final rounds with a 5-1 record in the preliminaries. Enroute to the final round, where they defeated the University of Texas at San Antonio, they beat teams from South Carolina University and Central State University in Oklahoma.

The team of Scott Stawski and Larrette Chaney were 2-4 for the preliminaries of that tournament.

At the University of Texas in Arlington, Jan. 9-11, the team of Wilson and Satterwhite beat teams from South West Missouri University and South Carolina to reach the finals where they lost to the University of Texas team they had beaten in Durant.

Stawski and Chaney were 4-2 in the preliminaries and lost in the octofinals to the University of South Carolina.

At George Mason University, Jan 16-18, Wilson and Satterwhite came home with the winner's trophy after a 6-2 record in the preliminaries and victories in the final rounds against the University of Richmond, Cornell and Syracuse.

Stawski and Chaney had a 7-1 record in the preliminaries and beat Richmond in the quarterfinals; they lost to Syracuse in the semifinals. The same Syracuse team beat the team of Douglas Clarke and Laura Forrester in the quarterfinals on a split 2-1 decision.

Satterwhite was named top speaker and Wilson was ranked fourth, Stawski, seventh, Chaney eighth and Clark, 10th.

Debate coach Pat Micken is delighted with what he calls one of the best seasons of his coaching career. This year debaters have won seven tournaments, placed second in two and third in seven. Only three of the 38 teams that have competed have not had a winning record.

Teams this year have posted a 161-74 or 69 percent win-loss record in preliminary rounds and a 31-18 or 63 percent win record in the final rounds.

Micken had 22 students debating the first semester and is starting out the second semester with a probable 21. The average school, he says, will have eight to 12 debaters, so William and Mary is considered a debating power, both in terms of depth and the quality of its debaters.

This semester debaters are using the topic: Resolved that regulations requiring the testing of employees in the United States for controlled substances are an unwarranted invasion of privacy.

Tax Liability for "Excess" Group Life Insurance (Life of Virginia-VSRS)

Consistent with Section 79 of the Internal Revenue Code and guidelines issued by the Virginia Supplemental Retirement System and the state comptroller, the university has calculated the 1986 tax liability on the Group Life Insurance Policy for certain members of the faculty and staff. Approximately 650 current and former members of the faculty and staff are affected.

The liability is derived by considering: the employee's natural death benefit (rounded up to the next highest one thousand dollars and then double the amount) in excess of $50,000; the age of the employee as of Dec. 31; and the frequency of pays at a given rate.

Faculty and staff who are affected will be notified prior to Jan. 31. Questions on individual computations should be directed to LaVerne Stott of the Office of Employee Relations and Affirmative Action, Thiemes House, Richmond Road.
