Educators to make Japan visit

A team of area educators, including a professor at the College, has been chosen to visit Japan and receive a $30,000 grant as winners of a statewide competition by the Mid-Atlantic Regional Japan in the Schools (MARJIS) program of the U.S.-Japan Foundation.

Team members Ron Wheeler, associate professor of education at William and Mary; Mary Whitley, a teacher at Bruton Heights Elementary School; and Lorretta Hannum and Stephanie McConachie, curriculum supervisors with Williamsburg-James City County Schools, will tour Japan June 11-30 as the first step in a curriculum development program they designed to improve education about Japan in the public schools. Beverly Thurston, supervisor of international education for the Commonwealth of Virginia, will accompany the team as an at-large delegate.

The MARJIS program is one of a variety of projects funded by the U.S.-Japan Foundation, a philanthropic organization, which sponsors programs attempting to address greater cross-cultural contact between Japan and the U.S. In addition to visiting Japan, the team will have financial support, office support and access to MARJIS personnel when they return.

About 75 percent of the team's expenses for the Japan trip is paid by MARJIS. The remainder has come from William and Mary, Williamsburg-James City County, Canon Virginia, Inc., the Virginia Consortium for Asian Studies and the Pilot Club.

Four delegations were chosen for this year's MARJIS regional leader program: the three other teams are from West Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia. In the two years of the program's existence, the Williamsburg team is the first to be selected from Virginia, according to Elise Aadahl, program coordinator with MARJIS.

Teams were selected on the basis of how innovative their curriculum plan is, how well they develop local connections and community support and how much their plan brings together professionals from a variety of fields.

"We're going to take an interdisciplinary approach to curriculum reform," says Hannum, social studies curriculum coordinator for Williamsburg-James City County. She and McConachie, curriculum coordinator for language arts, have been actively engaged in curriculum study and reform in the school system since 1984 and have already developed methods for introducing content about Japan.

"We're not trying to saturate the curriculum with Japan studies alone. The lessons we learn can be applied to other cultures as well," says Wheeler, who heads William and Mary's student-teacher program in social studies and is a curriculum development consultant to Hannum and McConachie. "What we want to do is incorporate Japan studies at various points in the curriculum to show what can be done in foreign and international studies."

Wheeler will also relate his findings to his aspiring social studies teachers. "I feel anything we can do at William and Mary to open up the curriculum to international studies and to Asian countries will help provide the balance we need."

Eighty senior citizens from around the country will be in residence at William and Mary for the next two weeks for "Elderhostel," an annual cultural and learning event sponsored by the College. The first group of 40 participants arrived Sunday, May 31, and will spend this week with Ken Kambis, assistant professor of physical education, who is lecturing on health matters, and Thomas Heacox, associate professor of English, discussing literature. In addition, Thomas Marshall, organist and lecturer in music, will present talks on music of colonial Virginia. The program will be repeated June 7-13 when the second Elderhostel group arrives. Colonial Williamsburg has also included Elderhostel participants in some of its activities and events. Elderhostel coordinator is Nell Jones, administrative assistant in the Office of the Provost.

Law school to head fellowship program

As a teacher and expert on legal issues related to the environment at Marshall-Wythe School of Law, Ronald Rosenberg is concerned that not many students are actively pursuing careers in environmental law.

"We are finding that students are discouraged or receive no incentive to take an interest in environmental jobs during the summer," he says. Usually, law students find legally related employment during the summers between sessions.

"Environmental groups often do not have sufficient resources to offer adequate salaries to law students," Rosenberg says. "This difficulty is compounded by the fact that most environmental organizations are located in expensive areas where the high cost of living makes it impossible for students to take these jobs."

Rosenberg decided to take the problem, and his solution, to the Virginia Environmental Endowment (VEE), which awarded Marshall-Wythe a two-year, $50,000 grant to organize and administer environmental law fellowships for all five accredited law schools located in the state.

For each of the two years of the new program, the VEE grant will provide operating funds and five $4,000 stipends for students, to be awarded on a competitive basis. Law students at William and Mary's Marshall-Wythe, the University of Virginia, George Mason University, the University of Richmond and Washington and Lee University are eligible to apply.

"The stipends are not only to assist and support the students in finding jobs related to the environment in Virginia and around the Chesapeake Bay, but to assist them in completing an academic project," says Rosenberg. The $4,000 stipend will cover their expenses during the summer but also will function as a scholarship for a one-semester research project to be associated with an environmental group.

"The objectives of the program are to provide public-interest organizations with capable assistance, to permit students to have a work experience they wouldn't have had otherwise and to provide financial support for their efforts," says Rosenberg.

Alvin Duke Chandler dies

Vice Adm. Alvin Duke Chandler, president emeritus and former chancellor of the College, died Tuesday, May 26 in Virginia Beach General Hospital following a short illness. He was 85.

A Richmond native, Chandler attended William and Mary for several months before attending and graduating from the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., in 1923. His father, Julian A. C. Chandler, served as William and Mary's 19th president from 1919 to 1934.

During World War II, Chandler commanded a squadron in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and in 1945, became staff commander-in-chief of the U.S. Fleet. For three years he commanded the U.S.S. Des Moines and then became director of the logistic plans division of the Navy Department. He attained the rank of vice admiral in 1951, after graduating from the Imperial Defense College in London.

Also that year, the William and Mary Board of Visitors asked President Truman to allow Chandler to retire from the Navy in order to become 22nd president of the College.

Adm. Chandler served as president until 1960, when he became chancellor of the Colleges of William and Mary, a university system which then encompassed five campuses: the main campus in Williamsburg; the division in Norfolk (Old Dominion University); the division in Richmond (Virginia Commonwealth University); Christopher Newport College in Newport News; and Richard Bland College in Petersburg.

In 1962 when the General Assembly disbanded the system, Chandler became 19th chancellor of William and Mary, an honorary position he retained until 1974. From 1951 until 1964 he served as president of the William and Mary Endowment Association and remained a trustee until 1976.

The College awarded Adm. Chandler the Alumni Medallion in 1957 and an honorary Doctor of Laws degree in 1963.

He is survived by his wife, Louise. A private graveside service was held Friday, May 29, at Hollywood Cemetery in Richmond.

Administration

President Paul R. Verkuil spoke to a breakfast meeting of the Council of Independent Regulatory Agencies in Washington, D.C., May 12. He discussed the concept of agency independence from a constitutional perspective, which was also the topic of his article "The Status of Independent Agencies after Bowsher v. Synar," recently published in the Duke Law Journal.

The board of directors of the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO) has appointed Robert H. Barnett, director of auxiliary services, to the association's 20-member editorial board. The editorial board is responsible for reviewing materials submitted for publication as books and manuals as well as articles for NACUBO's monthly publication, Business Officer. Board members are drawn from all sections of the country and represent all types of institutions of higher education.

Biology

At the recent 50th annual meeting of the Association of Southeastern Biologists (ASB), Stewart A. Ware, professor, was honored with the ASB Meritorious Teaching Award. The award is given each year to a biology faculty member at a southeastern university or college on the basis of nomination by and letters of support from alumni of that institution. The award is based not only on classroom performance of the teacher, but also on evidence from the letters written by alumni that the faculty member has stimulated enthusiasm, intellectual curiosity and love of learning in students. The award carries with it an engraved plaque and $1,000.

Classical Studies

Linda C. Reilly, associate professor, presented a talk titled "The Ancient Dog: Hunter, Worker and Friend" on March 3 to the American School of Classical Studies in Athens.

English

Terry L. Meyers received an NEH Summer Research Grant to produce an additional volume of the letters of Victorian poet A. C. Swinburne to add to the six-volume Swinburne Letters (1959-1962) edited by Cecil Y. Lang. Lang's edition included 2,000 letters, but since its last volume 24 years ago, another 400-500 letters have been discovered. Meyers plans to present the full text of the letters in chronological order with scholarly annotations — short biographical treatments of people Swinburne wrote to and about, identification of works mentioned and of literary, artistic, political and cultural allusions. The volume will also include some unpublished letters to Swinburne and other material about his life and activities that has escaped notice.

S. George Wolf has received an NEH fellowship to College Teachers and Independent Scholars for 1987-1988. Wolf is working on a book, titled Michel Breal and "la semantique". Breal (1832-1915), a French linguist who held the chair of comparative philology at the College de France and helped found the Ecole des hautes etudes in Paris (also serving as its director), is primarily known for coining the term "la semantique" or semantics. Wolf's book will be a full-length study of both Breal and the historical intellectual context of semantics, which he hopes will open up a new perspective on linguistics and its history.

Library

Nancy H. Marshall, university librarian, attended the first joint conference of AMIGOS and SOLINET, two of the nation's largest regional library networks. Librarians from 17 states participated in the conference, held May 14-15 in New Orleans.

AMIGOS Bibliographic Council, Inc., provides resource sharing and automation services for more than 300 libraries in the southwestern U.S. and Mexico; SOLINET provides similar services to more than 480 libraries in the southeastern portion of the country. William and Mary is a member of SOLINET.

Kay Domine, college archivist, presented a paper, "Developing an Archival Program from Scratch: If Only I Had Known," at the spring meeting of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Archives Conference in Baltimore. She also presented "Records Management for Beginners" as one of four workshops at a seminar sponsored by the Tidewater chapter of the Association of Records Managers and Administrators.

Laura Parrish, assistant archivist, and Sharon Garrison, archives assistant, also attended both meetings.

Physics

Professors R. Siegel and R. Winter attended a symposium on conservation laws in physics in honor of Professor Lincoln Wolfenstien, held at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pa., May 22-23. Siegel chaired one session of the symposium.

Psychology

The third edition of Professor Kelly G. Shaver's social psychology textbook, Principles of Social Psychology, has just been published by Lawrence Erlbaum Associates, Hillsdale, N.J.

Shaver served as a discussant for a symposium on "Moral Responsibility and Causal Reasoning" presented at the biannual meeting of the Society for Research in Child Development, recently held in Baltimore.

Several current and former students in the department's predoctoral M.A. program recently participated in the annual meeting of the Eastern Psychological Association.

Nicolette M. Borek, first-year student, presented a paper titled "Openness to Marriage, Careerism and Social Interactions," which was based on her undergraduate honors research at Villanova University.

Sherry L. H. Boyle gave a talk titled "Attributions by Distressed Couples: Differences in Responsibility, Not Causality or Blame" as part of a symposium on the role of attributions in coping with stressful life events. In the fall, she will begin doctoral studies in clinical psychology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Ann Marie Carosella read a paper co-authored by Kelly G. Shaver on "The Harvey Impostor Scale: Can Employment Opportunities Create Distorted Reports?" She will enter Princeton's doctoral program in social psychology this fall.

Vicki S. Helgeson, a W&M graduate completing doctoral work in social psychology at the University of Denver, presented a paper co-authored with Shaver, titled "Presumption of Innocence: Congruence Bias Induced and Overcome."

Jean G. Slaughter and Professor Robert A. Johnson co-authored "Differential Reactions to Feedback: Social Comparison, Impression Management or Uncertainty Reduction?" This fall Slaughter will enroll in the social psychology doctoral program at the University of Missouri.

Richard P. Larrick, a W&M graduate and a doctoral student in social psychology at the University of Michigan, presented a paper he co-authored with Professor Shaver at the meeting of the Midwestern Psychological Association in Chicago. The paper, titled "The Effects of Excuses and Justifications on Attributions of Responsibility and Blame-worthiness," was based on his undergraduate honors thesis.

Richard Bland College

Russell E. Whitaker, dean of administration and finance, received his doctorate in higher education from William and Mary this spring. In his dissertation, which focused on the role of the Department of Planning and Budget in shaping higher education in Virginia, Whitaker analyzed the impact of state policies and procedures with which he deals on a daily basis as dean at RBC.

Mark Your Calendars

The annual Faculty Club seafood party will be held Friday, Sept. 11 at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science at Gloucester Point. Rain date is Friday, Sept. 18.

Healy named president of Longwood College

Former William and Mary Provost George R. Healy has been named president of Longwood College, effective July 1. He will serve for one year while the college conducts a search for a permanent president.

The rector of Longwood's board of visitors, Thomas D. Rust, said Healy was selected because of his "extensive experience in leadership positions and his knowledge of higher education in Virginia." Earlier this year Healy was acting president of Christopher Newport College.

Healy said he was "surprised and pleased" by the selection. "I look forward to working with the Longwood community. I will do my best to keep the college moving forward and to leave as clean a desk as possible for the incoming president in 1988."

Healy served as academic vice president and provost at William and Mary from 1971 until his retirement in 1986. He was acting president from January to July 1985.

Longwood's current president, Janet D. Greenwood, is leaving July 1 to become president of the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut.

Curriculum study grants awarded to 20 faculty

A total of $37,250 has been awarded to 20 faculty members for interdisciplinary curriculum and program study and development this summer. The grants are part of a $250,000 award made to William and Mary last year from the State Council of Higher Education's Funds for Excellence program to establish the new Center for Honors and Interdisciplinary Studies on campus.

"A substantial part of the funds was allocated to support curriculum and program study and development during the summers of 1987 and 1988," says Thomas M. Finn, dean of undergraduate studies. "Although specific courses and programs may develop from these studies, the grants will focus primarily on basic research on and study of interdisciplinary curriculum."

Finn says the grants will help the Center for Honors and Interdisciplinary Studies assume its role as a kind of "think tank for curriculum development." He expects the projects completed this summer to produce a set of curriculum recommendations this fall.

"We particularly want to explore the possibility of the resources available for a core curriculum in gender studies and Afro-American studies," says Finn, referring to the projects like Bettina Manzo's, which explores our library resources in women studies. "The studies look to the next year and the exploration by individuals and teams about establishing cohesive programs in those two areas."

Several of the grants will also provide preliminary groundwork for adding a semester or year on non-Western thought to the Honors Program, says Finn. "The interesting thing about the grants awarded is the wide variety of disciplines included," he says.

Faculty members and their projects are listed below.

Berhanu Abegaz (economics) — The Radical Intellectual Traditions of the Third World: A Proposal for Honors 203, $3,500.

Craig N. Canning (history) and Clyde A. Haulman (economics) — East Asian Studies: A Capstone Course, $3,500 each.

Stephen L. Field (modern languages) — Non-Western World Views: China, India, and Amerindia: A Proposal for Honors 203, $3,500.

Bettina Manzo (Swem Library) — Women's Studies: A Bibliographic Study, $1,500.

Mark C. Fowler (philosophy), Thomas L. Heacox (English), James N. McCord Jr. (history), Dale Cockrell (music), Roger W. Smith (government) — Basic Themes in Western Society: A Two-Semester Interdisciplinary Course for Underclassmen, $3,500 each.

Ismail H. Abdalla (history), Berhanu Abegaz (economics), Donald J. Baxter (government), Craig N. Canning (history), Edward P. Crapol, convener (history), David A. Dessler (government), Judith Ewell (history), Stephen L. Field (modern languages), Clyde A. Haulman (economics) and Bruce B. Roberts (economics) — International Studies Curriculum Seminar, $750 each.

Exhibit explores 'singular mind' of Robert Carter

When John R. Barden began researching his master's thesis on music and dancing in the life of prominent 18th-century Virginian Robert Carter, he never imagined he would one day organize three separate exhibits of documents relating to Carter's library.

"Reflections of a Singular Mind: The Library of Robert Carter of Virginia," on display June 3-July 10 in the Zollinger Museum of Swem Library at the College of William and Mary, is the third version of this exhibit that Barden has prepared using actual volumes from Carter's extensive library. The first was shown this spring at Duke University where Barden is a doctoral student in colonial history. Another exhibit will be on display at the Virginia Historical Society in Richmond until July 24.

Barden is also historian at Tryon Palace Restoration in Durham, N.C.

While researching his 1983 master's thesis at William and Mary, "Innocent and Necessary: Music and Dancing in the Life of Robert Carter of Nomony Hall, 1728-1804," he ran across the name of Carter, an amateur musician who had the largest collection of musical instruments in the state. It was estimated that at his death in 1804, he owned close to 3,000 volumes, which were dispersed through sales, gifts and family descent.

Barden attempted to track down the music books from the collection. Although he found several major collections of Carter's books — including more than 200 volumes still in boxes at the Oatlands estate — he had no luck with the music books. He explains, "Carter abandoned his interest in secular music after he became a Baptist."

Despite this disappointment, Barden found several interesting things about Carter's library and the man himself. By perusing the books and reading Carter's letterbooks, he has learned much about Carter's spiritual and intellectual growth.

"He was an introspective man. In the early 1770s when most people were preparing to embark on the fight for independence, he withdrew into himself and more into his plantation. One researcher called him a 'patriarch caught in a fraternalistic world,'" says Barden.

The exhibits Barden has designed show the wide variety of materials available to 18th-century British-Americans. The contents have been chosen "not for their rarity or beauty, but for their historical value and their association with Robert Carter," says Barden.

Furthermore, Barden cautions "no one should presume to take Carter's interests and selection of books to be typical of Virginians of his day. This is not the representative library of 'a Southerner,' or even of 'a Virginian,' but simply the reflections of a singular mind."

Each exhibit has been tailored for its display site — based primarily on what materials the local repository owns. For example, the collections at the Virginia Historical Society have a rich assortment of manuscripts, which do not travel well. Therefore, according to Barden, the Richmond exhibit is "manuscript heavy, with only about 40 printed volumes." On the other hand, the exhibit in the Zollinger is composed primarily of books — over 100 volumes.

The exhibit displays several thematic groupings, which reveal the range of Carter's interests. These included education, the classics, geography and travel and amusement. A major portion deals with spirituality, especially the writings of Swedish mystic Baron Swedenborg, whose impact on Carter's life is demonstrated by Carter's role in the publication of the 1792 liturgy of the New Church, says Barden.

An interesting focal point of the exhibit is a section using Carter manuscripts that include comments about specific volumes displayed. "A comparison of Carter's manuscripts with his extant library helps us to grasp the interaction of books, ideas and activities in the life of an individual," says Barden.

Over the years, Barden has established good relationships with public and private repositories, which have allowed him to borrow books for the exhibitions. In addition to Swem Library's Special Collections and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation, repositories that have loaned books are: Oatlands, a National Trust property near Leesburg; the Board of Regents of Gunston Hall, Lorton; the Bellefield Collection, a private collection; the Kenmore Association, Fredericksburg; and the Virginia State Library, Richmond.

Barden, who has handled over 500 volumes, some never before handled by researchers, is still looking for other volumes. "Many are known to have existed into the 19th century," he says. "I don't want to force the missing volumes from private ownership, but I would like an opportunity for researchers to have access to them."

Barden admits that his seven-year "relationship" with Carter reflects an empathy for the man.

"We share all sorts of interests, common searches, the love of music. I haven't quite gone his evangelical route, but it appeals to me to have found a man of that time who was not afraid to go his own way."

The Zollinger Museum is located on the ground floor of Swem Library, adjacent to the Special Collections department. Hours are Monday-Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday, 9 a.m.-1 p.m.

McCoy chosen for HACE award

Sue McCoy, secretary in the Office of University Advancement, is the Hourly and Classified Employee of the Month for May. A member of the College staff since Oct. 1984, she serves as secretary for the directors of estate planning and capital support, Robert S. Dutro and Lee Walsh, respectively. Her day-to-day duties include working with donors, grant proposals, legal documents and the myriad of other details that busy secretaries handle.

Prior to her work at William and Mary, Sue was a secretary at Ferguson Enterprises in Newport News and Hampton General Hospital.

She is a native of Enfield, Conn., a small town in the north-central part of the state near the Massachusetts border. It was there she met her husband, George, when he was a trainee and she a secretary at a dental company. From there they were transferred to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., then to Buffalo, N.Y. They have lived in the Hampton Roads area since 1980.

"Sue is an excellent secretary who possesses superior skills and is able to handle an extraordinary workload," says Bob Dutro. "She is always the first to arrive in the morning and is seldom absent. At the same time she is willing to help others and carry their workloads when they are on vacation or out because of illness. There have been times when she carried the entire office due to vacancies and illness and has been described affectionately as 'the lone eagle.' She possesses a marvelous attitude about her work as a young person who has worked since she was about 12 years old. She has a strong work ethic. This inspires all of us around her to try to emulate her."

As a working mother, Sue's days start early and end late, Dutro adds. The McCoy's have an 18-month-old daughter, Katie, and Sue is six weeks away from delivering child number two. She admits the past two years have been filled with motherhood and preparing for motherhood. "A delivery man came by the other day," she says. "He looked at me and said, 'I've been delivering here for three years; aren't you ever going to have that baby?'"

Law school grant

"Law students have many opportunities for work during the summers with government, corporations or law firms," says Rosenberg. "It's much more lucrative and thought to be much more worthwhile in terms of later career opportunities. When nonprofit groups offer jobs to law students, they cannot afford to pay them much and can offer no guarantees of future employment. It's a double disincense."

As administrator of the program, Rosenberg will be traveling to the other law schools in the state this summer to publicize the fellowships and solicit applications, which are due in Oct. 1987 for fellowships in the summer of 1988.
