Gifts to College increase by 50 percent for '86-'87

The College received a record-breaking $12.6 million in private funds for the 1986-87 fiscal year ending June 30, a nearly 50 percent increase over the $8.5 million the College received the previous year, according to preliminary figures released by the Office of University Advancement.

In announcing the results, President Paul R. Verkuil said, "When private support at an institution increases by almost 50 percent per year and for two years in a row, something is going very right. The entire College community is enthused by these results. I couldn't be more pleased or proud of our collective efforts."

Nearly 50 percent of the total came from alumni. Alumni also gave over $1 million to the William and Mary Annual Fund, which received more money than ever before. Surpassing its goal of $1.5 million, the Annual Fund received $1.7 million from all sources, including alumni, parents, other individuals and corporations. This was the first year alumni contributed over a million dollars to the fund.

The number of Annual Fund donors increased as well as the size of the average gift. There were nearly 11,700 donors of which approximately 9,200 were alumni. The average alumni gift was $114 and the overall average gift was $151.

According to Director of Development Barrett H. Carson, "the Annual Fund is a barometer of William and Mary's private financial support, both short- and long-term. I'm pleased to say that annual giving continues to grow on all fronts, for unrestricted support as well as for specific schools and programs."

SP publishes new fall catalog

Youngsters in grades two through four have a natural curiosity about their world and how it works and an eagerness for exploration.

William Orton, an elementary teacher in the Williamsburg-James City County school system, hopes to channel some of that eagerness with "Exciting Science for Kid Scientists," one of the new courses being offered this fall by the College's Office of Special Programs.

Over 30 new courses are being offered by the Special Programs office this fall.

In the wake of the Iran-Contra problems and the unrest in the Middle East, two courses, "Understanding Islam and Politics in the Middle East" and "Formulation of U.S. Foreign Policy," are expected to be of special interest to government watchers and history buffs.

Instructor for the course on foreign policy is Grant E. Mouser III, lecturer in the government department. He retired in 1985 after 35 years in the U.S. foreign service.

The course on the Middle East will be taught by E. J. Fredericks, who studied at the American University of Beirut and holds a doctorate in international relations from American University, Washington, D.C.

For everyone who has ever fantasized about breaking into publishing by writing a children's book, the one-day seminar by author John Reynolds Gardiner is made to measure.

Carson said major gifts were also up in 1986-87. "There has been a significant increase in the number of gifts in excess of $100,000 this year. Of approximately 16,700 gifts received, we had 12 gifts in six figures and three in seven figures. Those 15 gifts account for nearly $7 million."

The diversity of donors giving $100,000 or more was equaled by the diversity of programs they chose to support. Donors included a professor emeritus at the School of Marine Science funding graduate study in crustacean research; William and Mary parents funding an endowed professorship in the School of Education; a major corporation, which gave computers to the chemistry department; an alumnus supporting athletic scholarships; and a family trust supporting the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

"The largest gifts, as well as the total gift income, came from a very healthy mix of alumni, parents, other individuals, foundations and corporations," said Carson. "These donors have taken advantage of numerous means of giving: appreciated securities, real property, tangible personal property and life-income trusts, among others." In addition, realized bequests contributed over $2.4 million during the past fiscal year.

These gifts and those of thousands of others help "raise William and Mary to new levels of distinction. Private funds build on state appropriations; they not only enhance existing programs, but permit greater flexibility in new program areas. We're not seeking to replace state funds but to build on the generous base the Commonwealth provides us," he said.

"The Environmental Imperative," which will include discussion of environmental concerns in the Chesapeake Bay, will be taught by Murrel Dee Hobt who has been involved with the environmental movement for over 30 years.

Career-oriented courses include basic and advanced training in computers, desk-top publishing, editing and several aspects of management training. Financial and tax planning, investment seminars, courses in arts, skills and crafts and a series of historical studies and tours are also included in the course line-up for fall.

In response to the current interest in new-age topics, the Special Programs catalog lists "The Great Pyramid: Time Capsule from the Ancient World," "New Age Cosmology," "Visualization for Better Living" and "The After-Effects of the Near-Death Experience" as part of its personal growth offerings.

The Office of Special Programs also has a large listing of employee training and development programs that are available for in-service sessions.

A number of courses are offered tuition free or at a reduced fee for senior citizens. A complete list of fee waivers may be obtained from the Special Programs Office.

A complete catalog of fall courses will be mailed upon request by calling the SPO at ext. 4084 or 4047 during business hours, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The increased number of permanently endowed professorships qualifying for the state's Eminent Scholars matching funds is especially significant, he noted. The Eminent Scholars Program encourages the establishment of privately funded professorships by matching income generated by privately funded endowments with state money. William and Mary currently has 28 endowed professorships qualifying for Eminent Scholars funds, and Carson expects that number will rise dramatically over the coming years.

Among the recent gifts establishing Eminent Scholars professorships are those of William and Mary classes marking special reunions. The class of 1935, for instance, has raised funds to endow a professorship in the government department. James A. Bill, a nationally known authority on the Middle East and author of five scholarly books, has been appointed to the position. He is also the first director of William and Mary's Center for International Studies.

The class of 1961 recently established the first endowment in honor of a 25th class reunion. The class has endowed an Eminent Scholars-qualifying professorship in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, and Charles R. Johnson has been appointed to this position in the mathematics department. It appears that other 25th reunion classes will follow the lead with additional endowments, said Carson.

Vice President for University Advancement Edward T. Allenby noted that "much of the credit for the year's success has to be given to the host of volunteers who have given countless hours of their time in service to the university."

President Verkuil concluded: "I'm pleased with our great success, though fund-raising is just one means of measuring the vitality of an institution. When taken with other indices — admissions, placement, student retention, faculty and program distinction, good stewardship of endowments — private support confirms the existence of a strong and vibrant university."

Collegewide Faculty Meeting

The annual universitywide faculty meeting will be held on Tuesday, Sept. 8 in Millington Auditorium at 3:30 p.m.

Provost Melvyn D. Schiavelli will preside, and the academic deans will introduce new members of their respective faculties. Deans and departmental chairs are urged to extend special invitations to their new colleagues to attend this meeting. Biographical information on new faculty will be distributed in advance of the meeting to reduce the time of introductions. Mr. Hays T. Watkins, the new Rector of the College, will offer a few remarks, and I will discuss the administration's priorities for the upcoming academic year.

After the meeting you are invited to attend an informal reception in the Muscarelle Museum. I hope to see you on Tuesday, Sept. 8.

Also, please mark your calendar for Sunday, Sept. 20 at 11:30 a.m., when Mrs. Verkuil and I look forward to visiting with you at the annual Faculty Brunch in the Wren Yard.

Atwood brings many talents to work with governor's school

Ruth Atwood

Ruth Atwood, a graduate student, in the School of Education's Special Education Leadership Program has had a busy summer — hectic many would say.

Atwood directed the NASA/VIMS Governor's School for the Gifted, which entailed planning and executing afternoon and evening programs for 44 lively teenagers. Until about 4:30 each afternoon students worked on research problems, laboratory experiments or individual research projects with mentors. Once the workday was over students looked to Atwood for scheduling.

The NASA/VIMS program is one of four residential summer programs funded by the state of Virginia. Students were housed in facilities at the Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind in Hampton. Month-long programs were held at Virginia Tech, the University of Richmond and Radford University.

Planning events that would keep students interested and take advantage of area attractions called upon Atwood's powers of organization and plumbed the depth of her energy resources; programs needed to be entertaining but also educational.

Because they were housed on the campus of the School for the Deaf and Blind, Atwood felt students should learn signing. At the end of the session they had learned enough to present a program showing off their skills. Students also saw the movie "Children of a Lesser God."

Stephen Clements of the geology faculty, leader of the Friends of Appalachian Music group, had his musicians play for the students, and they taught the students folkdance steps.

Another geology faculty member, Gerald Johnson, took the students on a field trip to hunt for fossil remains.

There were also trips to the Mariner's Museum to see August Crabtree's scale models, a ball game, a performance by juggler Steve Wigley of Williamsburg and a visit to the Virginia Shakespeare Festival's "Wild Oats." Students toured Norfolk Naval Base, visited Jamestown Island, ate at a Korean restaurant, sampled local delicacies at the Pork, Peanut and Pine Festival, tried their hand at fish painting and saw some of the treasures unearthed at Flowerdew Hundred plantation. A schooner cruise and a picnic were also part of the schedule Atwood prepared.

Atwood did not overlook the fact that the students were already beginning to think about college choices. Gary Ripple, director of admission, and Ed Irish, director of the Student Financial Assistance Office came to talk to students about choices in higher education.

At college night, representatives from 25 schools came to talk with students. Atwood made sure the students were well prepared. Just visiting a booth and getting a pamphlet was not enough; she required that each student talk with at least three representatives and have prepared questions for them. Hosts and hostesses for programs throughout the six weeks were assigned to write letters of appreciation to those who gave a program.

Atwood, who will be a graduate assistant in the School of Education this fall, began her studies at the College of William and Mary-Norfolk Division. She has a bachelor's degree in sociology and a master's in reading from the University of Massachusetts. She has been a consultant to the Office for the Gifted in the Department of Education in Richmond. Atwood is planning to graduate with her daughter Gabriele who is a student here.

Atwood says she has many interests and will have to live to be as old as Methuselah to achieve them all. One of the things she would like to do is be head of a gifted program or a school for gifted and have a lot of input into curriculum and program design.

Last year she volunteered at Rita Welsh Adult Skills Program and helped a man in his 30s acquire his high school equivalency certificate.

"When he got it I was more thrilled than when I passed my orals for the doctorate," she said. Atwood feels that there should be a commitment on the part of college students to share their talents through activities such as the Rita Welsh program, even a requirement. It is the moral obligation of the gifted to make the world a better place she contends. The gifts they have, she asserts were given for a purpose and need to be shared.

HACE makes two July awards

HACE, the Hourly and Classified Employees Association, made two employee awards in July — one to Wanda Carter, secretary for the Office of Graduate Studies, Arts and Sciences; and one to Edward Martin, buildings and grounds.

Wanda Carter

Edward Martin

Alan Ward, acting dean of graduate arts and sciences, nominated Wanda Carter, his secretary, for the HACE award.

After listing the six major areas of Carter's work, Ward added, "Wanda supervises the activities of the graduate directors and secretaries of the 13 graduate departments or programs. She is incredibly efficient, but only the graduate dean can know the range of the tasks she pulls together in one place and what the departments and graduate students owe her."

According to Ward, "The graduate dean's office is a two-person shop with only the dean and the secretary. Because the dean is part time, the great burden of work falls on the secretary."

Although she has a heavy workload, Carter is happy with her job and delighted to be an award winner. She has been on the job about five years and was a member of the business office staff before that.

She is a graduate of Gloucester High School and earned an associate degree from Rappahannock Community College.

Her husband, Gregory, is a commercial sign painter. The Carters have two children, Christopher, 10, and Candace, 8. They live in Gloucester, and, despite the long commute, Carter loves that area.

The Carters are members of the Rising Valley Baptist Church in Gloucester, where she is also a member of the Fellowship Choir and the Young Adult Choir.

Although she doesn't have much spare time, Carter likes to work in the garden. She also likes bicycle riding and has participated in the CommonHealth exercise program.

Carter is delighted with her award and thinks the program is an excellent idea. "It helps build morale," she says. "People like to know how much they are appreciated."

A lot of people on campus work hard, she contends, and often take on more duties than are reflected in their paychecks. "You can't change the pay scale," she says, "but you can let people know their work is appreciated" through this award.

The HACE program she adds, "is one of the best things anyone's ever done on campus," and it gives people a chance to meet co-workers who were just a voice on the telephone.

Edward B. Martin has been a plumber-steamfitter on campus for almost 10 years. A private plumbing contractor before that, he came to the College to pursue his profession without the load of paperwork with which private businesses have to contend.

A native of New Kent County, he has lived in James City County most of his life and completed his apprenticeship in plumbing with Hugh Haynes. He operated Martin Plumbing in James City County for seven years but, he complains, "there was too much paperwork." He likes working at the College, and cooling and heating jobs keep him busy year round.

Martin's specialty is heating. His detailed knowledge of the layout of College systems makes him a very important employee. During the heating season, from fall to spring, he is often called back to campus to remedy heating problems.

John Bond, director of buildings and grounds, characterizes Martin as very flexible. He is an accurate, no-nonsense person, who won't tolerate shoddy workmanship," says Bond, who nominated Martin for the award. "He is a very good manager of men and demands a lot from them."

Martin and his wife, Barbara, live in James City County and are members of Liberty Baptist Church. They have two daughters, Mickie Hawkins of James City County and Sharon Willis of Saluda.

Martin is a hunter and manages to take his vacation to coincide with the deer season in November.

Martin says he was very pleased with the HACE award and plans to have his wife share with him the free dinners at the Marketplace, which are a part of the award.

HACE meets Thursday

The W&M Hourly and Classified Employees Association cordially invites staff members to a salad luncheon/business meeting, Thursday, Aug. 13, at noon in the Sit 'n Bull room of the Campus Center.

Bob Jeffrey of the College's Special Programs Office will highlight events coming up this fall.

The Employee of the Month award will be presented.

Journalists offer tips to students

Five professional journalists will offer writing and photography advice to high school and college writers and editors at Richard Bland College's Journalism Seminar, Wednesday, Aug. 19, sponsored by the student newspaper, the Bon Homme Richard.

The program will include the following speakers and their topics: Vonda Paige, Progress-Index, mass communications as a major and summer internships; LeeNora Everett, Times-Dispatch, working on a state staff and organization of a news bureau; Sonja Weakley, Good Neighbors section of Times-Dispatch, feature writing; Margot Jones, Hopewell News, beat reporting and news writing; and Bob Brown, photographer, Times-Dispatch, taking great photos and using them effectively in a newspaper.

Ushers Needed

Staff members interested in attending events at William and Mary Hall as a member of the ushering staff should call Betty Adams, director, at ext. 4492.

IDs Necessary for Library Automation

For the automated circulation system, the libraries of the College of William and Mary will need to identify each borrower with a numerical code, preferably the borrower's social security number.

For the manual system, staff have provided social security numbers on a form at the circulation desk. With your permission, the College can provide a tape of these numbers that can be loaded into the database where they will be protected from unauthorized use.

In compliance with Virginia Code, Section 2.1-1985, we request permission to use your social security number within our database. If this is not acceptable to you, please notify the William and Mary libraries in writing. Address correspondence to Linda Adams, Circulation Coordinator, Swem Library.

If we do not hear from you by Sept. 15, we will assume that we have your permission. Thank you.
