Dreyfus Foundation to fund teaching, research fellow

The Camille and Henry Dreyfus Foundation has awarded $45,000 for the first Dreyfus Teaching and Research Fellow on campus next year.

Nationwide, 20 awards were made by the Foundation, only one to a public institution.

Gary DeFotis

Gary C. DeFotis, associate professor of chemistry who authored the 40-page proposal for the grant, will act as mentor to the Dreyfus Fellow in the chemistry department.

The Fellow will share teaching responsibilities with DeFotis and collaborate with him in research. The grant provides for the Fellow's salary, research support costs and also a summer internship in the chemistry department for a high school science teacher.

Professor DeFotis is widely known for his work on the magnetic properties of novel insulating systems, especially lower dimensional magnets, mixed magnets and spin glasses, and for his influential work on the magnetism of solid oxygen.

Students rate his courses in physical and inorganic chemistry as among the most difficult and demanding they have taken at William and Mary, yet also comment on the clarity of his lectures and the helpfulness of the supplementary study material he provides. Following periods of undergraduate research with him in the department, 13 students have gone on to pursue doctoral work in chemistry or related fields.

The Dreyfus Foundation has long been prominent in supporting academic research and teaching. In order to encourage promising new Ph.D. chemists to consider careers in undergraduate teaching and research, the foundation has established a pilot program in which undergraduate departments may compete for the funds necessary to bring in such people for a one-year period, during which they gain experience in teaching and research with undergraduates.

Over 100 applications were received for awards; William and Mary was the only public institution to receive one of the grants. Both the department which acts as host and the faculty member who acts as mentor were required to demonstrate outstanding quality as models in teaching and research.

During the past decade trends have shown that fewer students are pursuing doctoral work in chemistry. The Dreyfus Foundation has inaugurated the current program to encourage promising new Ph.D. chemists to consider careers in undergraduate teaching and research.

Marshall papers receives grant from Virginia Law Foundation

The Virginia Law Foundation, a non-profit corporation organized for law-related charitable activities, has given $15,000 to The Papers of John Marshall.

The grant will be used to complete Volume Six of the Marshall papers and begin Volume Seven, says Charles F. Hobson, editor.

Volume Six, says Hobson, covers the first years that Marshall sat as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court — Nov. 1, 1800, to March 31, 1807. It is expected this volume will be published in late 1989 or early 1990 and will include Marshall's correspondence and selected court opinions, not only those he delivered from the Supreme Court bench but also those he given in the U.S. Circuit courts sitting in Richmond and Raleigh, N.C.

Volume Seven will include details of Marshall's law career from 1807 to 1815. Hobson says that he expects there will be 11 volumes in the completed work. The Marshall project is co-sponsored by the College of William and Mary and the Institute of Early American History and Culture. Volumes are published by the University of North Carolina Press.

For the Virginia Law Foundation, headquartered in Richmond, the grant to the Marshall papers satisfies one facet of its philanthropic work centered in law and the judicial system, the publication of materials on legal subjects. The VLF also supports efforts to provide legal services to indigent residents of Virginia through the Legal Services Corporation of Virginia and its legal aid affiliates.

American higher education today

Gary Quehl, president of CASE, speaks to Town and Gown

Gary H. Quehl, president of the Council for Advancement and Support of Education, who earlier this year wrote a comprehensive "Report to the Campus: Higher Education and the Public Interest," was guest speaker at the Town and Gown luncheon Thursday. Quehl was also a member of the National Task Force on Higher Education and the Public Interest, which published a "Special Advisory for College and University

G H. Quehl

Presidents" in June.

His campus visit was sponsored by the Society of the Alumni.

In his address, which drew one of the largest audiences to Town and Gown, Quehl talked about the relationship between American higher education and society.

"Higher education," said Quehl, "continues to be one of the great achievements in western civilization. In fact it is the envy of the world, a wholly human institution subject to the same foibles and frailties as other human institutions but compared to colleges and universities in other countries, without peer."

But, added Quehl, "higher education and the American public are marching to very different drummers today. ... Not since the Vietnam War has the estrangement been so pronounced. While the American public continues to have blind faith in American higher education as an essential part of the American dream, there is a serious polarization of views between on-campus and off-campus constituencies concerning the performance of higher education. This dichotomy between how we in higher education see ourselves and how others outside see our performance is reflected largely in unparalleled criticism of higher education and declining public confidence in it.

Circumstances are ripe, said Quehl, for higher education and the American public to once again negotiate a social contract.

In discussing some of the public concerns about higher education he stressed the issue of the quality of higher education. "Each college and university must give the quality question substance by communicating what it is actually accomplishing in its curriculum," said Quehl.

Education performance, he said, should be assessed as it happens and systematically reported on.

The cost of higher education, said Quehl, was of "unprecedented interest to the public and higher education alike."

He added, "We are constantly reminded that the cost of going to college has risen throughout the 1980s faster than the consumer price index, yet few among the general public opinion leaders outside of higher education, including corporate executives, understand how college costs differ from consumer costs — what drives institutional costs or how tuition increases are even determined."

The public, said Quehl, does not understand a range of cost issues from the fact that students almost never pay the full cost of their education to the contention that tuitions at some institutions are set for reasons of prestige or competitive position.

The pricing of education, said Quehl, is a difficult subject to explain. He terms it a "black box" for every college and university "especially as the president sits down every year to write that letter to parents explaining why tuitions must go up."

On the public side, explained Quehl, students have little interest in receiving information from colleges and universities that merely explains or justifies costs and prices. They don't want to hear it, he asserts. Instead, he suggested, they want assurances that higher education will be affordable, and they seek new alternatives on how to pay for their college education.

The price/cost issue, he said, is not going to go away, and it will increasingly occupy center stage in the public policy debates after the election. How the public regards the quality of higher education will depend in part, he suggested, on how they see the link between quality and price.

"Opportunity and choice in higher education for all qualified citizens, the unfulfilled dream, includes concern about funding for financial assistance, fundamental questions about the perceived value of higher education throughout our multi-cultured society and the adequacy of educational preparation of large numbers of minority and low-income students," said Quehl.

"The moral basis for commitment to educational opportunities and choice during the past two decades has recently been transformed into a national economic necessity as well. These people will either produce taxes or consume them."

He continued, "Future students with talent and promise must be aware of educational opportunities that are available. It is urgent that new initiatives be undertaken in these areas and that the results be regularly communicated to the public at large." He noted the recent New York Times article on minority recruitment and retention, which included William and Mary. The College, said Quehl, "has shown increased commitment, skill and expertise in this area and you are to be complimented for doing that."

Quehl also touched on the role of faculty in his

*"Faculty has been,
is, and always will be,
the heart of each

proposals for a new social contract.

"So much of what will happen or not happen in creating and fulfilling higher education's half of a new social contract is mostly in the hands of our college and university faculty. Of course colleges and universities exist to serve students, but the faculty has been, is, and always will be, the heart of each institution."

Focusing attention on curriculum alternatives alone, said Quehl, overlooks one of the public's concerns about academic life — the quality of the teaching/learning process itself. Rarely do trustees ask about that question. The quality and frequency of interactions between professor and student as between physician and patient, are of vital importance.

"Undergraduate students are keenly aware of when they are the center of faculty attention and when they are not," said Quehl. "Learning becomes alive when students are able to become personally involved with faculty in a seminar or over a cup of coffee in the student union or by way of a joint research project.

"Fortunately such student-faculty interaction readily occurs at most of the large colleges, some community colleges and some state colleges that are principally dedicated to teaching. Unfortunately such student-professor contact is infrequent in large complex universities, especially major research universities.

"Unless deliberate attempts are made to break large instructional units into bite-sized learning communities — units that stress frequent and meaningful contact between students and mature faculty, not teaching assistants, but mature faculty — little of importance can be expected of the undergraduate program in this nation. Even less can be honestly proclaimed about it. ... When students say their education is irrelevant they mean above all the absence of faculty; without them the whole enterprise is sheer phonism.

"There is an urgent need for the American public and our institutions of higher learning to establish a permanent method for engaging in two-way communication about public interest issues.

"The chief challenge facing higher education is not just the need to improve our image or to improve public understanding of us, it is for academe to want to perform better in substantive matters in order to serve the public interest more effectively.

"How long has it been since we have heard those two words mentioned, public interest? It is time that we in higher education take this seriously. This can best be done by building bridges between colleges and universities and the enormous problems that face the American society and, yes, the world. We have an urgent need to really try and construct this social contract."

We must be concerned, said Quehl, about expanding educational opportunity within our institutions and at an affordable price. We must care deeply for the kind and quality of the education our students get — "measure our words, balance our deeds against our promises ... and rededicate ourselves to renewing this oldest of humankind's professions. ... If these things are done I think we will be well along the road to creating a new social contract with the American people."

Roseberg sculptures in Muscarelle as part of current 'Elders' exhibit

Two sculptures by Carl Roseberg, nationally known painter and sculptor and professor emeritus of fine arts, are presented in conjunction with works by his fellow "elder statesmen" artists in the Muscarelle Museum of Art's current exhibit "Elders of The Tribe," which will be on display through Oct. 16. This exhibit highlights the work of 20th-century masters born prior to 1920.

Roseberg has more in common with the artists represented than age. He studied at the University of Iowa with three of the artists in the show, James Lechay, Morris Lasansky and George Rickey.

Roseberg's work has been exhibited locally, regionally and nationally. One-man exhibitions have been held at the Roanoke Fine Art Gallery, Chrysler Museum, Longwood College, and the Ashville, N.C., Gallery of Art.

A "Retrospective Exhibition" was held on campus in 1982 upon Roseberg's retirement as professor of fine arts at the College. He is represented in permanent collections at the Muscarelle

Museum of Art, the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, the Chrysler Museum and the Springfield, Mo., Museum, the University of Iowa and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation.

Roseberg has designed and created several plaques and medallions for the College as well as bronze and silver medallions for Williamsburg/James City County for the 1976 Bicentennial.

Roseberg has won several personal honors during his career. He was named Heritage Fellow at the College and received the Thomas Jefferson Award, one of the highest honors bestowed by the College. He has also received three Certificates of Distinction from the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts and a Fulbright grant for study in India.

Roseberg joined the faculty of the College in 1947. He did graduate work at the Cranbrook Academy of Art, the University of Hawaii, the University of Virginia, Ysore University in India and the Tyler School of Art at Temple University.

Grants

Arts and Sciences

W. L. Bynum, professor of computer science, will direct work on a collision detection testbed program under a grant of $55,973 awarded by the National Aeronautical and Space Administration.

The grant will support continued work on collision detection, collision avoidance and path planning with anticipated completion of the development of the collision detection testbed program. This program will be used as a basis for comparing the several promising collision detection methods for the ISRL analyzed during the current grant period.

Keith W. Miller, assistant professor of computer science, and graduate student Jacquelyn E. Long, will work for the coming year on visualization in scientific computing under a $18,000 grant from NASA.

The growing interest in using computers to collect, display and (particularly in simulation) generate scientific data, has produced many recent scholarly articles and a new acronym: VISC for "Visualization in Scientific Computations." The research will focus on two aspects of VISC that are directly related to managing VISC data: data structures for scientific measurements and data structures for images derived from those measurements.

This latest grant brings to $54,000 the total in grants awarded for this work.

Richard L. Kiefer and Robert A. Orwoll, professors of chemistry, and graduate student Eugene Canales Aquino are working on the effects of the interaction of polymeric materials with the space environment. NASA has awarded a grant of $18,000 for this research.

Polymer-matrix composites have considerable potential for use in the construction of orbiting structures such as the space station and space antennas because of their light weight, high strength and low thermal expansion. However, they can suffer surface erosion by interaction with atomic oxygen in low-earth orbit and degradation and/or embrittlement by electrons and ultraviolet radiation especially in geosynchronous orbit. The study of the effect of these environmental hazards on polymeric materials is an important step in the assessment of such materials for future use in space.

Physics

The National Science Foundation has awarded $175,000 for the second three-year period of funding for the College's Medium Energy Group

(MEG) which includes J. M. Finn, H. O. Funsten and C. F. Perdriat of the College faculty; V. Punjabi (Ph.D. W&M 1986) and P. Ulmer (Ph.D. MIT 1987), postdoctoral research associates, and C. Sun, C. Lyndon and E. Cheung, graduate students. In addition B. J. Lieb at George Mason University, Fairfax, Va., and C. Stronach at Virginia State University, Petersburg, Va., are involved with the project.

Studies of nuclear reactions with electrons, protons and pions will be conducted at accelerators at Bates, Brookhaven National Laboratory, Saclay (ALS and Saturne), SLAC/NPAS, LAMPF, TRIUMF and Illinois. Research activities will also be carried out at CEBAF where the MEG has a strong involvement.

Theatre and Speech

The Virginia Shakespeare Festival received $4,250 from the Virginia Commission of the Arts and $2,200 from James City County. The grant from the VCA was given to augment the Festival's seasonal staff structure for the 1988 season. The award from James City County was for general support of the Festival.

School of Education

The Family Counseling Program has awarded $31,000 for the Peninsula Area Cooperative

Educational Services Family Counseling Program, which allows graduate students the opportunity to provide family counseling services to the families of children enrolled in special education classes in area public schools. Director of the project is Professor Fred Adair. To date, $156,003 has been awarded in grants for this program.

Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Programs

The State Council of Higher Education for Virginia has awarded $84,000 for the state graduate fellowship award program. Dale B. Robinson, director, affirmative action, oversees the program, which provides minority students funds for tuition, books, fees and other related expenses for the 1988-89 academic year.

Ash Lawn-Highland

The Virginia Commission for the Arts awarded Ash Lawn-Highland's summer festival $3,000 for the continuing improvement of the artistic quality of the festival. The festival presents a nine-week schedule of historical arts programs in opera, educational lectures, chamber music, theatre, painting, colonial crafts and family programs. The festival is administered by Carolyn Holmes, executive director.

The team has had great success with an SAT prep course that has been in use for the past seven years.

To fill the requirements of a wide range of current business school applicants, Friedman and Zuber have planned this course as an intensive one-day workshop. It is designed to assist people in learning particular test-taking techniques and to improve their skill at handling standardized tests.

Hispanic Scholarship

The National Hispanic Scholarship Fund seeks outstanding Hispanic American students for grants. During the past year the fund awarded $1.2 million to 1,526 scholars who represented all Hispanic groups in every section of the country.

Although there are no grade point average requirements, to be competitive, a student should be in the 3.0 GPA range. There is no exclusion on fields of study; however, the number of corporate conditional grants makes it necessary to give a slight advantage to students majoring in physical science, engineering, computer science, mathematics, finance, economics, business, accounting, English and journalism.

For further details contact the NHSF, P. O. Box 748, San Francisco, CA 94101. (415) 892-9971.

Vehicle Charges

The following charge rates are now in effect for buses used in academic and department-sponsored programs: driver rate of $7.50 per hour from 6 a.m. to 3 p.m. and/or driver rate of $11.50 per hour after 3 p.m. and on Saturdays, Sundays or holidays.

Buses can be reserved through the Campus Transportation Office by submitting form WM8-1-4 "Application for the Use of State or Personal Motor Vehicle for Official College Business."

Student organizations or groups wishing to request a vehicle must first secure the approval of the Associate Dean of Students for Activities or Organizations Ken Smith, whose office is in the Campus Center. Because of the shortage of vehicles, requests should be submitted as far in advance of use as possible.

Special Programs seeking teachers, new courses

The Office of Special Programs is seeking instructors from the ranks of the faculty and staff for its spring line-up of courses.

OSP offers a wide variety of non-credit courses for adults seeking personal, professional, vocational or cultural development.

Courses are structured to provide stimulating leisure learning for adults seeking new ideas, skills, challenges and knowledge.

There are usually no specific academic requirements or prerequisites, and class sessions are relaxed and informal.

Course length varies with the subject. Some courses run several weeks, others can be completed in one all-day session or two or three meetings.

Faculty and staff members are invited to submit course suggestions to Robert Jeffrey or call him at ext. 4047 to discuss ideas for courses. Course topics need not follow the teacher's usual professional interest but may instead reflect avocational interests he or she would like to share with others.

The wide range of topics that have been offered in the past, from hotel-motel law for employees to a history of country music, reflect the many different interests of instructors.

Faculty and staff members who wish to teach for the OSP this spring are asked to contact the office at ext. 4047 before Oct. 5.

'Threepenny Opera' casting planned to overturn stereotypes

Anne Elizabeth Armstrong '89
Publicity Director, W&M Theatre

The William and Mary Theatre's first production of the season, "The Threepenny Opera," which opens Oct. 13, will not be typical of most William and Mary musical comedies.

Bruce McConachie, professor of theatre and speech, who will direct this highly political musical written by Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill, has chosen to add even more political controversy than was intended by the playwrights.

The original story line is set in the 19th century, but McConachie has changed the venue to a modern urban slum, and the actors play the roles of homeless Americans of the 1980s.

The main characters of the play, Mr. and Mrs. Peachum, are an opportunistic business couple who take advantage of the poor beggars. They will be played by Curtis Shumaker and Jennifer Piech. The melodramatic hero and heroine are Polly, played by Melyssa Hall, and Captain MacHeath, played by Mark Milhone. Other supporting characters include Lucy, played by Rachel Gardner; Jenny, played by Emily Frye; Tiger Brown, played by Peter Mantey; and Filch, played by Jeff A. R. Jones.

Director McConachie has turned the tables on two stereotypical roles. The whores will be played by men, the gang members by women. Whores in "Threepenny Opera" include include Christien Murawski, Jason Graham, Kyle Rudgers and Robert McDonough. In the other switch of stereotype roles, the gang members are played by Laurel Muchmore, Jennifer Catney, Carla Harting and Stephanie Hofeller.

Cast as the beggars, or homeless Americans, are Ann Fitzgerald, Eileen Talento, Andrews D. DeShazo, Anne Elizabeth Armstrong, Joseph Webster, Melissa Lowenstein, Eileen Lintz, Suzy Allison and John Steele.

The show will run Oct. 13-15 and Oct. 21-23 in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall. Performances will be nightly at 8:15 p.m. with a matinee at 2 p.m. on Oct. 23.
