Major gifts to College include scholarship fund and Inuit art

Dr. and Mrs. Bickers make gift of $600,000

Dr. and Mrs. William Bickers of Richmond have made a gift of $600,000 to the College. The gift will be used to establish the Dr. William and Annie Bickers Professorship in Middle Eastern Studies.

Dr. Bickers, a 1929 graduate of William and Mary, is the former chairman of the obstetrics/gynecology department of the University of Beirut. During his years in Beirut, he delivered three children of King Hussein of Jordan and two of the late Anwar Sadat's children. He is author of two books, a medical textbook and Harem Surgeon, his autobiography.

"As the complex and turbulent Arab world increases in significance on the international scene, students at the College have expressed strong interest in courses focusing on that region," says James A. Bill, director of the Reves Center for International Studies. "The Bickers Professorship will help to meet the need of students to better understand this crucial area of the world."

An appointment to the Bickers Professorship is expected in the fall of 1990. Income from the endowment will qualify for matching funds under the Commonwealth of Virginia's Eminent Scholars Program.

Hermans to donate works of North American art

Following the opening of the special loan exhibition Contemporary Inuit Drawings, Frederick '48 and Lucy S. Herman '47, longtime benefactors of the Muscarelle Museum of Art at the College, announced that an important collection of art work will be given to the Museum.

In a letter to Museum Director Mark M. Johnson, Mr. Herman wrote, "Lucy and I have irrevocably decided to donate our collection of Native American Art to the Muscarelle Museum of Art. This donation will consist primarily of Inuit drawings but will also include drawings by Aleuts (American Eskimos), Inuit carvings, Northwest Coast Indian drawings and carvings, American Indian drawings and carvings as well as other material from Central America. At the moment we have over two dozen drawings and a dozen or so carvings. It is our intention to substantially add to the drawings over the next few years so that the collection should be fairly representative of Inuit drawings created since approximately 1950."

Mr. Herman noted, "We feel very strongly that this collection is not only of interest from an aesthetic viewpoint but

Staff, faculty asked to sign up for telephone instruction

When Arthur Brautigam, director of the telecommunications services staff says he wants EVERYONE who has a telephone on their desk to take one of the training sessions on the new digital equipment, which is being installed he means just that — EVERYONE. Sessions will be held in the basement of Blow Memorial Hall.

Some people feel they have used a telephone for so many years and are familiar with adjustments that have been made over the years, they don't need the training; they can pick it up along the way they argue.

Arthur Brautigam wants EVERYONE. All phone users need to attend the one-and-a-half-hour instructional session, he contends

Teute named publications editor at IEAHC

Fredrika J. Teute has been named editor of publications at the Institute of Early American History and Culture.

Her primary duty is direction of the Institute's award-winning book publication program. She will also be responsible for the acquisition, review and substantive editing of manuscripts, as well as oversight of the production process.

In conjunction with the University of North Carolina Press, the Institute publishes four or five volumes annually. During the 1980s its books have won, among others, a Pulitzer Prize, a Bancroft Prize, the Francis Parkman Prize of the Society of American Historians, the Merle Curti Award of the Organization of American Historians, the Francis B. Simkins Prize of the Southern Historical Association and the John H. Dunning Prize of the American Historical Association.

Jean B. Lee, director of the Institute, appointed Teute editor after a nationwide search for qualified candidates. Teute holds three degrees in history: a B.A. from Radcliffe College, an M.A. from William and Mary and a Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University.

Before assuming her new position at the Institute, she served as associate editor of the Papers of James Madison, associate editor of the Papers of John Marshall and editor of publications at the Virginia Historical Society where her responsibilities included editing the Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Her publications include seven volumes in the Madison and Marshall series and articles and reviews in professional journals, including the William and Mary Quarterly, published at the Institute.

While at Johns Hopkins, Teute received the Butler Prize in history and has since received research and editorial support from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, the American Institute of Architects and the Virginia Women's Cultural History Project.

She is a member of the Southern Historical Association and currently serves as chair of the educational committee for the Association for Documentary Editing. Her own scholarship focuses on the early Republic, with particular attention to frontier and southern history. She is working on a book manuscript, "Land, Liberty, and Labor in the Post-Revolutionary Era: Kentucky as the Promised Land."

Henry Aceto joins VIMS/SMS as acting dean of graduate studies

Henry Aceto Jr. has joined the faculty of the Virginia Institute of Marine Science/School of Marine Science in the position of Acting Dean of Graduate Studies.

Aceto, a biology professor since 1970 and director of the College's Virginia Associated Research Campus from 1972 to 1979, assumed his duties in late August. He holds a B.S. degree from the State University of New York Albany, an M.S. degree from the University of California, Berkeley, and a Ph.D. from the University of Texas, Austin.

A paper titled "Genetic Uniformity of El Arbol Del Tule (Tule Tree)," co-authored with former students George Diggs of Austin College and Douglas Soltis of Washington State University, has been accepted for publication in the botanical journal Madroño. In August, Hall visited the major national parks in Malaya and Borneo with a group of British naturalists.

Mathematics

The department was well-represented at the inaugural meeting of the International Linear Algebra Society, which was held in Provo, Utah, Aug. 12-15. Charles Johnson, Class of 1961 Professor, was an organizer of the event. Chi-Kwong Li, assistant professor, spoke on "Linear Operators Preserving Certain Functions on singular Values of Matrices." Michael Lundquist, adjunct lecturer, gave a talk on "Matrix Completion Problems with Linear Constraints." Leiba Rodman presented a paper titled "Common Divisors and Common Multiples of Rational Matrix Functions." Hugo Woerdeman spoke on "Matrix Completion Problems." In addition, Johnson, Li and Rodman were co-authors of other papers presented at the meeting. They and David Stanford, associate professor, chaired sessions at the meeting.

Johnson, Rodman and Woerdeman presented papers at the Workshop on Matrix and Operator Theory at Erasmus University in Rotterdam in June.

This summer, Johnson also presented a talk on "Partial Orders on Collections of Subsets Associated with Determinantal Inequalities" at the Advanced Research Institute in Discrete Applied Mathematics at Rutgers in June.

He was principal lecturer at the Rocky Mountain Mathematics Consortium Regional Summer Institute, at the University of Wyoming. The three-week institute was held during July. Johnson presented a series of 15 lectures "Matrix Theory."

Douglas Shier, professor, presented five lectures on "Algebraic Network Problems" at the same institute.

Shier also organized and chaired a minisymposium on "Discrete Mathematical Structures in Reliability" for the Annual Conference of the Society for Industrial and Applied Mathematics in San Diego in July.

Chi-Kwong Li received a National Science Foundation grant in the amount of $37,750 for a two-year study of matrix theory, beginning May 1989.

Larry Rabinowitz, associate professor, was a participant in the Eastern Region meeting of the Pilot State Mathematics Coalition Project in Philadelphia in June. His review of John A. Rice's Mathematical Statistics and Data Analysis appeared in Technometrics, August, 1989.

Rex Kincaid, assistant professor, was awarded a NASA-ASEE Summer Faculty Fellowship in the amount of $8,000 for the summer of 1989. George Rublein, associate professor, was awarded a similar fellowship for $8,800.

John Shoosmith, head of the Computer Applications Branch at NASA-Langley, is a visiting professor in the department this year under the provisions of the Intergovernmental Personnel Act. He is offering courses in applied mathematics and numerical analysis and is collaborating with department faculty on a project in the numerical solution of partial differential equations.

Modern Languages & Literatures

Philosophy

James Harris, Haserot Professor, recently delivered a paper titled "In Defense of Method: Rationality and Science" at the Charles S. Peirce Sesquicentennial International Congress at Harvard University.

Sociology

Professors David Aday, Jon Kerner, Gary Kreps and John Stanfield recently attended the American Sociological Association meeting in San Francisco.

Aday's paper, "Toward a General Understanding of Deviance," was presented at the social problems roundtable session.

Kreps' paper, "Structural Codes and Sociological Theory," was presented at the theory roundtable session. Kreps was also organizer and presider of the session on theory and research on hazards and disasters. Stanfield presided over the session on micro/macro stratification.

Marshall-Wythe

Jim Moliterno, assistant professor, has just had an article, "Goodness and Humanness: Distinguishing Traits?" published in New Mexico Law Review 19: 203.

School of Education

Professor James W. Beers and Carol S. Beers, adjunct associate professor, co-chaired a preconvention institute at the International Reading Association Convention in New Orleans earlier this year. The institute, titled "Programs for At-Risk Children: Foundation for Literacy," re-examined the factors that contribute to academic failure in young children. It also explored the roles of federal, state and local governments in developing intervention programs for at-risk children.

In addition to co-chairing the institute, James Beers presented a paper titled "Who Are the At-Risk Children?" and Carol Beers presented a paper titled "Bright Beginnings: Its Creation and Preliminary Results."

Professor Stuart S. Flanagan gave three weeks of in-service training this summer to fourth- through ninth-grade teachers of King and Queen County. Flanagan is the primary consultant for the county's model project in parent and school involvement in mathematics remediation. The project was awarded Title II funding.

Later Flanagan provided in-service training for teachers of grades three, four and five in Prince William County Public Schools, focusing on the topic "How to Prevent Failure on the Literacy Passport Test." He also presented in-service training to sixth-grade teachers of Portsmouth City Schools on the topic "Remediation and Diagnosis in Mathematics."

Flanagan recently completed his second monograph, Ideas for Middle School Mathematics to Assist in Literacy Passport Testing, on instructional aids and techniques useful to classroom teachers seeking to help their low-achieving math students. The monograph will be used extensively in a number of classrooms throughout the Commonwealth this fall.

Instruction necessary for new telecommunications system

There might, however be some exceptions. If you can call him and explain non-simultaneous conversations and the ins and outs of asynchronous data interface — satisfactorily — you may get a bye, but it's doubtful.

The new system has a number of new features which can be of tremendous help and time-saving value to the user if he/she knows how to access them. At the same time, these advances can be a headache to the uninitiated. John William Watson, program director for Bell Atlantic, the vendor of the system being installed, has been quoted as saying that the system is the most sophisticated yet created and "does everything but make coffee."

A lot of managers, says Brautigam, will be tempted to send their secretaries, but he urges managers and secretaries to come and learn about the new system.

Being out of town during the week of the classes will not get anyone off the hook, adds Brautigam. Instructional sessions will be scheduled to accommodate those who have to be away on business when classes are scheduled.

Sign-up sheets have been posted in all offices. For further information, please call 221-1776.

The new phone will have the standard features of the rotary phone, but will also include call back features, the ability to allow the user to avoid telephone tag by calling unavailable numbers again, just by the touch of a button. The voice mail system includes the options of having detailed information received and protected by a password so that only the intended receiver will have access.

Users have the ability to access messages from any other phone and can access computer lines and Swem Library databases.

The system will not work, however, if the phones are unplugged. Brautigam asks that users keep their phones plugged in at all times. The system has the ability to trace a broken line and the resulting loss of service.

The hour to hour-and-a-half training session, says Brautigam, is essential for users to be able to use the new system to its potential. The College has invested $4 million in the system and the network must be used to warrant the large investment, says Brautigam.

Installers are working through the campus to complete the final installation of wiring and instruments. Over 700 residence rooms have already received instruments and they are in service. James Blair is one of the last academic buildings to get the new phones.

In order to keep regional equipment across campus in the required air-conditioned and environmentally controlled climate, equipment/service stations have been set up in Swem Library, the Computer Center, Marshall-Wythe School of Law and the Hughes-Dillard areas.

The College, says Brautigam, will service the units in the Dillard complex on Longhill Road, but will not install the new phone system in units of the Ludwell Complex because the College is using those units on a short-term lease and does not own the property. Ludwell will remain on the Centrex system.

An all-inclusive telephone directory is at the printer, a directory that combines the student and faculty/staff directories, which have been published in the past. It will take a little getting used to, says Brautigam, but he is confident that the new directory, with updated formats, will be much handier for the user than the two old ones.

Once the new system is up and running, Brautigam says, plans are being made to hire full-time professional op-and forbearance of everyone during the installation of the system," says Brautigam. He added that a special system of precise underground wiring was used in particularly sensitive areas of the campus and across Richmond Road and Jamestown Road where the usual excavations erators with students filling in part time. The students have done a good job, he adds, but future plans call for operators to handle a detailed information system to serve the many inquires that come into the College.

"We have appreciated the patience were not possible.

"If your new phone has not yet been installed, don't worry; you will be included, you haven't been forgotten" says Brautigam.

His final word, however is, COME TO CLASS.

HACE award winner

Betty Greene collects unusual antiques in her spare time

When the auctioneer's gavel came down and he announced "Sold to Mr. and Mrs. Greene," Mr. Greene responded, "No, sold to Mrs. Greene."

A recent winner of the HACE Employee of the Month Award, Betty Greene, production control supervisor at the Computer Center, is an antiques collector and often gets some good-natured ribbing from her husband.

The item in question this time was no small item — an old grocery store/post office, circa 1904 in Charles City County. Betty bought the building for the beautiful wood in it, and with the help of her husband and friends is tearing it down. It sits on property bought by a church for a parking lot.

About five years ago Kenny, accounting manager in the Treasurer's Office, and Betty bought an old farm house in Charles City County in the Holdcroft area and have been systematically restoring it. For the first three years they lived without a heating system and never thought they would be able to chop enough wood to keep the stove going. Friends Paul and Carole Hinkle have helped them put in new ceilings, sand floors and put up wallpaper.

Betty Greene

But Betty had some training in making do on the job. When she first came to work at the College, her office was in the basement of Old Dominion, which was then a men's residence. There was no heat, and the nearest bathroom was in James Blair Hall.

A native of Toano, Betty started working at the College in 1968, after being employed at Eastern State Hospital for six years. She began as a data entry clerk and recalls the days of mountains of cards and sorters, all now surpassed by more modern equipment.

Over 600 jobs are processed by the production control office, including reports for local customers and state offices in Richmond, such as the State Council for Higher Education in Virginia (SCHEV). Once the new telecommunications system is up and running, billing for that will be handled through the Computer Center. Currently, payrolls, transcripts, class rolls, employee leave reports, student billing, including meal tickets, and questionnaires for faculty evaluations and statistical reports based on those evaluation forms are all processed through the production control office. One of the last conversions from the old-style data entry will be payroll. This office is phasing in an HRS system, which will bring another user office online. The office operates 24 hours a day, five days a week.

Betty gets many requests for reports that are tied to faculty research. She enjoyed working with Robert Fehrenbach in the English department on a project involving Shakespeare's use of language and appreciates the fact that she is included in the list of acknowledgements in the book that resulted from the study.

When she is not on the job, Betty likes to go to auctions and antique shows and is a member of The Friendly Indians who bowl on Monday evenings. She also has a kiln at her home and enjoys making ceramics.

Mr. and Mrs. Greene have three children: Deborah Lynne, a third-year student at Christopher Newport College; Donna Raye Amory of Williamsburg, an employee at the Virginia Gazette; and Steven who is stationed with the U.S. Navy in the Pacific. The Greens also have one grandchild, John Michael Amory whose picture had a prominent place on his grandmother's desk.

that Inuit drawings, which only evolved over the last 40 years, will give the college students and other Museum visitors a chance to see a nomadic society evolve to a settlement society as shown in their art."

In acknowledging this promised gift, Johnson said, "The Museum is tremendously pleased with the continuing commitment of Fred and Lucy Herman. They were among the founding benefactors of the unique College facility and have continued their support and interest ever since. In addition to a number of individual donations, the Hermans founded the Marian Herman Lania Collection at the Museum which has grown to include approximately 60 contemporary German prints, and the Herman Foundation has committed to the future placement of a distinguished and large Old Master drawing collection at the Muscarelle Museum of Art."

The Contemporary Inuit Drawings exhibition will continue on display through Oct. 29. Complementing this exhibition is a selection of Eskimo sculptures from the Hermans' collection.

"The Canterbury Tales" will be presented Oct. 6, 7, 8, 13 and 14 at 8:15 p.m. in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall, and at 2 p.m. on Oct. 15.

Tickets are $6. The box office in PBK Hall will be open Monday through Friday from 1 to 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 1 to 4 p.m. through the run of the show. For further information, please call the box office at ext. 4272.

Based on Chaucer's medieval classic "The Canterbury Tales," the production maintains the character of the original work but adds a modern dimension through music. Written in Great Britain during the late 1960s, the music contains the humor and social satire of the late '60s pop music, according to Leslie Muchmore, the director. An orchestra will provide music for the William and Mary production. The music was written by Richard Hill and John Hawkins, the book by Martin Starke and Neville Coghill who also wrote the lyrics.

The production, says Muchmore, includes four of the Chaucer tales, as told cast of "The Canterbury Tales," the lively musical that opens the William and Mary Theatre season on Oct. 6.

He adds that the universal themes of human frailties and foibles that Chaucer wrote about in the Middle Ages, are as interesting today as they were then. Muchmore, who has been artistic director for the Virginia Shakespeare Festival, likens the play's appeal to that of Shakespeare's work, which continues to entertain modern audiences.

New Prints and Paintings Open at Andrews Hall Galleries

The exhibit season continues at the Andrews Hall galleries with the opening Oct. 2 of the prints and drawings of Jim Lee and the still life paintings of Lynn Kotula.

Lee's limited-edition prints, primarily linocuts or wood, are inspired by either the imaginary world of literature or by the real world of everyday life. In each case, the result is a mysterious environment of dark whimsy.

A professor at the Hartford Art School of the University of Hartford, Jim Lee also operates a private press called the Blue Moon Press, that uses hand-set types and letterpress.

Kotula's work is painted directly from life, from which she endeavors to bring a three-dimensional world onto a two-dimensional canvas. She lives and paints in New York City where she is a member of the Prince Street Gallery. She is also represented by the Contemporary Realist Gallery in San Francisco.

Both exhibits will continue until Nov. 2.

The Andrews galleries are located in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall and are open to the public Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

For further information, please contact the department of fine arts, ext. 4385.

'Perspectives on Abortion' topic for Wesley Foundation series

"Perspectives on Abortion," a series of five lunchtime seminars sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, will begin Friday, Oct. 6 from noon to 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Sit'n'Bull room.

Exploring various aspects of this volatile subject, the presentations will focus on abortion in relation to the recent Supreme Court ruling, medical issues, ethical issues, responses of faith communities and political implications of public opinion on this issue.

The first speaker will be Rodney Smolla, Cutler Professor of Constitutional Law and director of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. He will speak on "Webster v. Reproductive Health Services: Abortion and the Supreme Court."

Faculty members, including Rodney Smolla, Hans Tiefel, and Ronald Rapoport; Dr. Camilla Buchanan, a local physician; and a panel of campus ministers will also participate in the leadership of the series.

According to David M. Hindman, United Methodist campus minister and director of the Wesley Foundation, the series is intended to broaden and update the community's knowledge of the current status of this issue in light of the recent Supreme Court ruling and its apparent significance in the pending gubernatorial election; and to provide a forum for reflection on the ethical and moral dimensions of abortion.

In explaining the reason for developing the series, Hindman said, "For 16 years, since Roe v. Wade, Americans have struggled with this topic. Now seemed like a good time to reopen the discussion among persons for whom this is still not a clear cut or black-and-white issue."

The presentations are open to the entire College community. Participants are urged to secure their food by noon so each resource person will have maximum presentation time.

The series, which continues each Friday through Nov. 3, will meet at the Sit'n'Bull room each time, except Oct. 13 when it will meet at the Wesley Foundation, 526 Jamestown Road and Nov. 3, when the meeting will be held in the CC Little Theatre.

For more information, call David Hindman at the Wesley Foundation, 229-6832.

Political satirists to highlight Parents Weekend program

The Steering Committee of the Association of Parents has asked that a special invitation be extended to the faculty and staff of the College to attend the President's Reception on Friday, Oct. 6, from 4 to 5:30 p.m. in the Wren Yard, and the Continental Breakfast on Saturday, Oct. 7, at 8 a.m. during Parents Weekend. The parents have asked that there be a time in the program when they could meet members of the administrative staff on a personal basis. The breakfast time on Saturday has been set aside for that purpose, and should be over by 9 a.m.

This troupe of political satirists, based in Washington, D.C., performs song parodies poking fun at current events. The "Capitol Steps," a lively bunch of former Capitol Hill staffers, have performed several times for President Bush and former President Reagan, and have been frequently featured on National Public Radio.

Students receive free admission with a W&M I.D. Faculty and staff can purchase tickets at W&M Hall the night of the show for only $3. Members of the Williamsburg community can also purchase tickets the night of the performance for $5. For more information, contact the Student Affairs Office, at ext. 4387.

Dr. J. Kenneth Bradford, state department of education, will be presenter and Mark G. Gulesian, professor of education and director of the Eastern Virginia Writing Project, will be presenter for the session on writing.

The sessions on reading, writing and mathematics will analyze past LPT results to determine specific areas of instructional weaknesses and specific strategies for improving student achievement. All three presenters have had extensive experience with LPT and will share their instructional suggestions.

A question-and-answer session at the conclusion of the conference will feature a panel of members of the Virginia State Department of Education, who will react to questions, problems and issues presented by conference participants.

Panel members will include Dr. J. Kenneth Bradford, associate director, English Language Arts/Reading; Dr. Helen Edens, director, Division of Instructional Media and Technology; Edgar L. Edwards, Jr., associate director, Mathematics; and Mrs. Elaine P. Grainger, supervisor, Minimum Competency and Literacy Testing.

The College is embarking on a $150 million fund-raising campaign, which will culminate on the College's 300th anniversary in 1993. Atlanta is the first of 35 planned sites nationally for the campaign. The Atlanta effort will conclude with a celebration Thursday, Dec. 7 at the Atlanta Botanical Garden.

Alembik, an alumnus, will lead a committee of alumni volunteers who are organizing the university's campaign activities in the Atlanta area.

A native of France, Alembik earned his undergraduate degree from William and Mary in 1958 and a law degree from the Marshall-Wythe School of Law in 1961, where he was associate editor of the Law Review. He also attended the University of Exeter, England, and received a master of laws degree in 1962 from Harvard University.

He is a fellow of the American College of Probate Counsel and a member of the Atlanta and American Bar Association, the Atlanta Tax Forum, the Atlanta Lawyers Club and the Atlanta Estate Planning Council, where he serves on the board of directors.

Business interns tackle assignments at Williamsburg Pottery

The Williamsburg Pottery Factory, a 200-acre complex at nearby Lightfoot, will soon have computerized registration and reservations at its campground. Additionally, the Pottery has a new personnel manual, revised benefits package and a new standard cost system for monitoring the operation of its ceramics factory, thanks in part to three second-year students in the master's program at the School of Business Administration. The students are putting the finishing touches on these systems this fall, closing out profitable summer internships for both themselves and their employer.

Felicia Spady went out and visited other camping facilities to get ideas for how the reservations at the Pottery's Fair Oaks campground could be streamlined. Felicia knew that part of her job was to tailor the new system, not only to the needs of the campground guests, but also to the time restraints and work patterns of the staff. She wrote an operations manual so the transition for the campground staff would go smoothly. The variety of accommodations available to campers far exceeds the choices given hotel guests so Felicia's program required a complex system, formatted to allow easy access for those on the registration and reservations desks.

"It was a case study from start to finish," says Felicia. "I saw the problem, sought solutions and put those solutions in place." She adds that the opportunity for on-the-job training was particularly valuable to her because she came to business school after graduating from Virginia Tech, without any on-the-job experience. Felicia received her baccalaureate degree in management science. She started out as a computer science major, but found she was more intrigued with the business applications she was working with than the programming of it so switched to business and management science. Felicia is a Virginian from Machipongo.

Stuart Payne spent the first week on the job learning how ceramic items at the Pottery are made. His assignment was to put in a standard cost system for the ceramics factory so that all aspects of the operation from the purchase of raw materials through production and inventory control could be computerized.

"I've enjoyed working here," says Stuart. "It has been a unique experience. This is the first time I have had a major impact on the way things happen. I feel very confident that what I have done is right and will contribute to the Pottery."

"I have really benefited in a couple of ways: first by being able to tackle a problem and follow through to the solution; and I have had the opportunity to relate to people at the factory, which is one of the largest units at the Pottery complex."

every job a megadose of enthusiasm and vitality and an enviable record of volunteerism. This summer at the Pottery she worked with Director of Human Resources Susan Fyock to rewrite the employee handbook and revamp the employee benefits package; handled the hiring of temporary workers; and, when she saw the need, did some career counseling to encourage young workers to make the most of their career options.

A volunteer for several years, Mary has had many responsible assignments, including managing a grant from the Department of Energy for the State of Cali-

nia. Living in Williamsburg has narrowed the venue for adventure but not her love of the outdoors. She finds time to get in a five-mile jog with Millie West, associate director of athletics at the College, and arrive at work by 8 a.m.

The enthusiasm of the interns for their jobs is matched by the reaction of the CEO of the Pottery, Glenn Irelan, who is delighted with the first year of a program he hopes can be continued in the future.

"They have accomplished as much as I wanted, and it has been a very productive project for us in all three areas. We had definite objectives we wanted to accomplish, and they did exactly what we wanted them to do. The fruits of their labors are going to be very beneficial to the Pottery for many years."

The internships, said Irelan, gave the students the opportunity to go beyond the textbook case study and put into practice the solutions they would be required to find for class.

"They have encountered some things at the Pottery that people would never encounter because of the uniqueness of the Pottery and the fact that we are at a unique stage in our operations. The Pottery is one of the few—maybe only—major retail destinations, and people come here by bus from all over the country to go shopping. In a classroom situation you don't have to live with your decisions; here you do. It is an opportunity to make mistakes. I am a firm believer that sometimes the only way you are going to learn is by making mistakes and learning from those experiences."

Irelan had high praise for the caliber of students from the Business School and the work of its dean, John Jamison. Irelan says there are many projects at the Pottery still waiting to be tackled. "There is always a need here for problem-solvers. I have a number of things I need to have addressed. I would have no problem finding meaningful work that can be beneficial to a student who can learn from it by applying the management skills and business philosophies learned in the classroom."

Stuart came to Williamsburg from Lovingson, Va. He is a graduate of Virginia Military Institute with a double major in economics and French. He served four years in the U.S. Army in the Field Artillery and was stationed at Fort Sill and Fort Hood.

Mary Sinclair describes herself as the "old lady of the pack." A Californian and graduate of the University of California at Davis, Mary is someone who brings to formia, working with the League of Women Voters and doing basic chemistry research at a lab at the University of Washington.

Mary is an adventurer. She has found time to spend off the job in some exotic locales. In 1983, she was among the first group of westerners to travel into Outer Mongolia on bicycles. She has climbed up erupting volcanos and led bicycle trips through the back roads of Baja Califor-

John Waite named restoration architect for Ash Lawn-Highland

The College has selected a restoration architect for Ash Lawn-Highland, the Albemarle County home of President James Monroe. John Waite, a partner in the Albany, New York, firm of Mesick, Cohen and Waite, will conduct the next phase in the restoration of the Monroe house. Ash Lawn-Highland was bequeathed to the College by philanthropist Jay Winston Johns in late 1974.

Since 1975, the College's research has revealed substantial changes to the main house of the Monroe plantation, which Monroe call "Highland." Most of the original building remains intact. A portion of the house was altered in the mid-19th century, and many original materials were re-used in the alterations. Waite sees the investigative task ahead as a type of "detective work." His firm will review existing architectural and archaeological reports. The firm will also conduct an intensive examination of the building, the surrounding site and historic documents related to the Monroe plantation.

The culmination of Waite's work will be a historic structure report on Ash Lawn-Highland. The report will detail all evidence uncovered in the investigation and document the building's current appearance before any additional restoration work is undertaken. Says Waite, "When we develop a historic structure report, it contains not only the usual historic analysis, but also a plan for action ... practical recommendations for future work on the building. All future work that we do is based on the observations and recommendations we made while preparing the historic structure report."

Mesick, Cohen and Waite's experience with historic structures includes the state capitols in New York, Vermont, Pennsylvania and Tennessee, as well as Blair House (Washington), Mount Vernon, Monticello and the University of Virginia. The current phase of Ash Lawn-Highland's restoration is being funded by a $100,000 grant from the Virginia General Assembly, by private and corporate donations and by a portion of each visitor's admission ticket to the plantation. This phase is scheduled for completion in 1993, the 200th anniversary of Monroe's purchase of Highland and the 300th anniversary of the College of William and Mary's charter.

Ash Lawn-Highland is open to the public daily for guided tours from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Conveniently located near Interstate 64 and Route 250, Ash Lawn-Highland is 2-1/2 miles past Jefferson's Monticello on County Route 795. For further information, write Ash Lawn-Highland, Route 6, Box 37, Charlottesville, VA 22901, or call 804-293-9539.

Virginia State Library workshop prepares for book disasters

The 30 librarians and archivists barely flinched as they confronted their worst nightmare — muddy and soaked manuscripts.

Gathered behind a maintenance building at the College of William and Mary Sept. 12, they discarded piles of books in a Virginia State Library and Archives workshop on "Disaster Recovery Strategies and Techniques."

"After you work in a library long enough you get a little hard-hearted about books," said Brooks M. Barnes of the Eastern Shore Public Library system. "You have to discard them sometimes. You get used to it."

State Archivist Louis H. Manarin said the program is "part of a statewide effort ... to develop a network of trained people out there in the event of a disaster."

Manarin will carry his seminar to five other areas of the state in the next four weeks, with a professional trainer, Lisa Fox, demonstrating how to save books or documents that meet watery dates. Ms. Fox works in Atlanta for the Southeastern Library Network, a regional confederation of libraries and archives. She is being paid out of $100,000 in grant money—half from the federal government and half from the General Assembly—won by the state archives to wage a two-year conservation campaign.

The effort was fueled by events such as the Hollins College disaster of a few years ago, in which two library floors were lost to flooding, Manarin said. Few of the librarians at the workshop had seen such carnage, but Ms. Fox provided examples. The bloated mound of discarded tomes had been watered down and left standing overnight in the mud. A sign had to be posted over the pile after passing professors and students started asking indignant questions. Anyway, organizers point out, the books were just leftovers from Richmond-area library sales.

"It's interesting, we tend to think that in the modern age nobody respects books or learning," Ms. Fox said. "But I've found when we set up piles like that, people come and give us hell. They're offended to see us deliberately destroying books. ... And it's even worse when they find out we're archivists and librarians."

Ms. Fox showed her students—all from eastern Virginia—how to rinse muddy economics books, air-dry soggy dictionaries, blot manuscripts and even save photos and microfilm.

Manarin said that without an overall concept of how to salvage books, the next hurricane could be a real disaster for Tidewater area libraries and clerk's offices.

Rena Hudgins, head librarian for Norfolk's Chrysler Museum, was one of the few who had firsthand disaster experience. She was in Florence, Italy, during a flood in 1986, she said. "I volunteered at the national library as part of a human chain ferrying priceless soaked documents from the library to cargo trucks. Now I'm worried about my own library. If there should be a hurricane, we would be very, very vulnerable."
