1993 Commencement Moves To Zable Stadium

Each year a number of students who are eligible to graduate in May opt for another date, but as this is the College's tercentenary commencement, students are using those options to be sure they are part of the celebration.

The promise of close to 300 more students than in any other year has prompted the Commencement Committee, headed by Vice President for Student Affairs W. Samuel Sadler, to announce that commencement exercises have been moved outside to Zable stadium to accommodate the increase in expected attendance. Usually filled to capacity, William and Mary Hall will not be able to accommodate the extra 300 students and accompanying 1,500 guests and family.

This is a one-year plan. Commencement 1994 is expected to return to William and Mary Hall.

In a letter to students, co-signed by Michael J. Murphy, president of the senior class, and Joseph B. Cartee, president of the Graduate and Professional Students, Sadler explains that the capacity of William and Mary Hall will not allow for each student to have the promised five tickets. In the event of rain, however, the ceremony will be moved

At 9:30 p.m., members of the William & Mary Ballroom Dance Club will give 15-minutes of instruction in ballroom dancing. Music throughout the evening will be provided by the Smith Wade Band.

Campus Police Search For Man Who Tried To Abduct Student On Landrum Drive

Police are currently looking for a man involved in an incident on Landrum Drive March 25. The following has been released by W. Samuel Sadler, vice president for student affairs.

At approximately 4:45, a woman student walking along Landrum Drive near Barrett Hall was approached by a man who stopped her and asked for a light for his cigarette. After failing at an attempt to entice her to his car, the man grabbed the woman and tried to pull her to it. She was able to pull away and escaped by running through campus. While she was frightened by the incident, fortunately she was not injured.

The assailant is described as a white male, approximately 30 years old, 5' 11" and of a thin build. He has long, wavy, chocolate brown hair worn straight back, a pale complexion and a beard which is slightly lighter in color than his hair. The man is further described as having full or bushy eyebrows, a raspy deep voice and was last seen wearing a red tee shirt and dark blue jeans. The car he was driving was a dull brown four-door compact to mid-size, '70s or '80s vintage, which was rusted in places and had torn upholstery.

Anyone who might have information about this attempted abduction or who sees a vehicle or person fitting the above description is asked to contact the Campus Police at ext. 14596. Under the circumstances, all members of the campus community are advised to take extra care.

Ruybitski's paper, titled "Comparison of organochlorine pollutants in Atlantic loggerheads (Caretta caretta) and Hawaiian green turtles (Chelonia mydas)," was co-authored by George H. Balazs, National Marine Fisheries Service, Honolulu, Hawaii; Robert C. Hale, assistant professor, department of environmental sciences, VIMS; and John A. Musick, professor, department of fisheries, VIMS.

Weber; "Where Are All the Hickories in the Piedmont Oak-Hickory Forest?" in Castanea 57: 4-12; "A Comparison of Piedmont and Coastal Plain Upland Hardwood Forests in Virginia," in Virginia Journal of Science, 42: 401-410. This article is a follow-up of an article co-authored with former student John D. Farrell, titled "Edaphic Factors and Forest Vegetation in the Piedmont of Virginia," published in the Bulletin of the Torrey Botanical Club, 118: 162-169.

Comments were given by Richard Brown, history department, University of Connecticut.

Music

Paul Griffiths, in a lengthy review of The New Grove Dictionary of Opera in a recent issue of The New Yorker, compliments Katherine K. Preston's "careful survey of what is known about traveling troupes in America," in citing information which should have been, but was not included in the new opera book. Preston is the author of Opera on the Road: Traveling Opera Troupes in the United States, 1825-1860, published by the University of Illinois Press for the Music in American Life Series.

Traveling troupes were the subject of Preston's recent presentation at the 19th annual conference of The Sionneck Society for American Music in Pacific Grove, Calif., where she spoke on "San Francisco to Timbuctoo: The Amazing Adventures of the Lyster and Durand English Opera Company in California, 1859."

Marshall-Wythe School of Law

Ball Professor John Donaldson has just completed a busy speaking schedule. In January he participated in the 27th annual Heckerling Institute on Estate Planning at the University of Miami. He was a panelist on professional responsibility issues. Also in January, he addressed a program of the Virginia State Bar on "Models of Unsupervised Administration of Decedents Estates—Are Audited Accounts Necessary?"

In March Donaldson spoke to the Tidewater Estate Planning Council in Norfolk on legislation in the 1993 General Assembly affecting estate planning.

He spoke to the Tennessee Estate Planning Council on "Ethical Considerations in Advising and Representing the Elderly" and has participated in two Virginia CLE programs, in McLean and Norfolk, on the same topic.

"Criminal Conspiracy Law: Time to Turn Back From an Ever Expanding, Ever More Troubling Area" by Haynes Professor Paul Marcus, appeared recently in the Criminal Practice Law Report published by Clark Boardman Callaghan. In his article, Marcus explores recent developments in conspiracy law, including mega-trials of large numbers of co-conspirators and its recent reincarnation in the form of RICO prosecutions. He argues for a refocusing of attention in the underlying principle that gave rise to the conspiracy offense—the grave dangers posed by joint or group criminal conduct.

"Information, Imagery and the First Amendment: A Case for Expansive Protection of Commercial Speech" by Rodney A. Smolla, Arthur B. Hanson Professor of Law and director of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law, recently appeared in the Texas Law Review. In his article Smolla takes issue with the argument advanced by Professors Collins and Skover that the harmful effects of commercial speech—specifically, advertising directed to image and fantasy—may justify regulation of some forms of expression.

Just out is a new book Wire Transfers: A Guide to U.S. and International Laws Governing Funds Transfers authored by Ernest T. Patrikis, Thomas C. Baxter Jr. and Raj K. Bhala who will join the faculty of the law school July 1.

The aim is to find a well-rounded student, having a good standing in all three of these respects, and withal carrying a spirit of willingness to sacrifice and give oneself to a cause."

The Sullivan Awards are given annually "to not more than one man and one woman in the graduating class, and to one other person who has a close relationship to the College. This lecture is named in honor of George Wythe who held the first academic chair of law in America at William and Mary from 1779-1790. Established in 1976, the initial lectures of the series marked the 250th anniversary of the birth of George Wythe.

Boyer Selected For Education Lecture

Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and Commissioner of Education in the Carter Administration, will give the 1993 Higher Education Lecture at the College at 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 12. A reception will follow.

This lecture is open to the public as well as the campus community.

Boyer has selected as his topic, "In the Spirit of Jefferson: Renewing Higher Education to Serve a Changing World."

His title notes the 250th anniversary of the birth of Jefferson, a William and Mary alumnus, which is being celebrated concurrently with the tercentenary of the College.

In 1779 Thomas Jefferson, then Governor of Virginia, took bold steps to develop and expand the curriculum of his alma mater to meet the needs of the times. By evoking the Jeffersonian tradition, Boyer is expected to propose ways in which higher education today can respond to the changing needs of a dynamic society.

A recognized educational reformer, Boyer has focused national attention on education problems from elementary school through graduate education. His numerous books and reports propose innovative solutions that recognize the interconnectedness of all sectors of education and the need for greater cooperation among all educational levels. His most recent publications include College: The Undergraduate Experience in America, Scholarship Reconsidered: Priorities of the Professoriate, and Ready to Learn: A Mandate for the Nation.

East Asian Studies Sponsors Drummers

Ondekoza, the world-famous drummers of Japan, will return to Williamsburg on April 10 for a 7:30 p.m. performance at Matthew Whaley Elementary School, sponsored by the East Asian Studies Association. Admission is $7. Checks should be made payable to the sponsoring organization.

The "Demon Drummers" seek to create new dimensions from Japanese traditional festival music. Ondekoza finds inspiration in the sounds of nature, the whispering and sighing of the wind, the cracking of thunder and the pounding of surf as well as the sounds of daily life in old and modern Japan.

The music of Ondekoza is meant to be a visual experience as well as an emotional one.

Commonwealth Center Programs

Rhonda Cobham-Sander

Rhonda Cobham-Sander, departments of English and black studies, Amherst College, will give a seminar on "Jekyll and Claude: The Erotics of Patronage in McKay's Banana Bottom" at 5 p.m., Thursday, April 1, in the Botetourt Theatre of Swem Library.

In this discussion of Banana Bottom, Cobham-Sander will argue that Claude McKay's confident assertions about the distinctions between the forms of patronage he encountered in Jamaica and America belie a real anxiety about the power dynamics within his relationship with one of his own mentors, Walter Jekyll, as well as a fierce identification with his patron's role and access to power.

Kamau Brathwaite

Caribbean poet and historian Kamau Brathwaite will deliver a public lecture on the relationship between Caribbean and American studies at 5 p.m., Thursday, April 8, in Washington 201.

This lecture was arranged in cooperation with Christopher L. Bongie, assistant professor of English.

Brathwaite is expected to pay particular attention to the influence of Caribbean music and literature on the development of American culture.

Since the publication of his first collection of poetry, Rights of Passage, in 1967, Brathwaite has emerged, alongside Derek, as the poetic voice of the Caribbean and, indeed, "one of the finest living poets of the Western hemisphere."

For many years a professor of history at the University of the West Indies, Brathwaite was recently appointed professor of comparative literature at New York University.

Designer To Be At Folk Art Show

Tercentenary Tile By Carmona Available

A limited edition tercentenary tile, commissioned by the Commission on Tercentenary Observances and designed by ceramicist Carmona, is now on sale at the College Bookstore ($15 each), and the artist will be in Williamsburg April 2, 3 and 4 as an exhibitor at the Folk Art Show at William and Mary Hall.

The Folk Art Show will be open Friday and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is $4.

Featured in the current issue of Ceramics Monthly, Carmona is an opera singer turned designer/painter, who turned to her new career with the enthusiasm of a zealous convert. In the first year she turned out about 600 decorated pots.

She finds inspiration for her designs from the art of the world, including China and the Middle East.

From her studio in Moscow, Pa., she has produced museum quality work for the White House, the National Trust for Historic Preservation, the United Nations Cooperative and the Philadelphia Museum of Art. The Southeast Asian Ceramic Society of Singapore elected Carmona to its exclusive membership.

The tile Carmona has designed for the College's tercentenary features the three ancient buildings of the campus, the Sir Christopher Wren Building, the Brafferton and the President's House. In order to achieve the effect of 1690's

Delftware, Carmona drew the design with cobalt blue pigment ("underglaze") and fired each tile twice. Only 350 of the tiles have been made.

A Letter to the Editor:

Go Goronwy!

A correspondent from Anglesey, an island off the coast of North Wales that was the capital of Welsh Bardism and the birthplace of an 18th-century "Master" at the College Goronwy Owen, has offered for the Anglesey Eisteddfod (public poetry competition) a prize for the best ballad on their "esteemed poet." President Sullivan has presented, in the name of the College, modest support.

There is already at the College an annual undergraduate poetry prize in the name of the Welsh bard, sponsored by the Society of the Alumni, during the College's annual spring writers' festival.

Because much has been made of cultural diversity and ethnic minorities, there is a danger of losing sight of, or even knowledge of, these ethnic and cultural threads of the College's past. Who was this remote Welsh figure and why do the Welsh show him this attention?

While the Welsh American Society in Pennsylvania is attempting to celebrate Thomas Jefferson's Welsh ancestry, those of us here are attempting to reinstate a Welsh Bard who crossed paths with Jefferson in 1760 —Goronwy leaving, and Jefferson arriving. It is not safe or comfortable to champion this paradoxical character. Lewis Morris, of the influential Welsh circle in 18th-century London, characterized him as having both an angel and a devil in him. It was the devil which prompted him to write the satirical ode which (some say) put Lewis in the role of a devil!

One critic recently spoke of him as having a "rum" reputation in more ways than one! A former student in Alexandria recalled Goronwy's leading with Jacob Rowe, professor of moral philosophy, a riot of the boys of the grammar school against the town apprentices, and the witness cited "rum which has been the downfall of many a man" as the cause of Goronwy's trouble.

Although Goronwy tried the patience of the Morris brothers, his patrons, the historian of the London Welsh Society noted that Lewis Morris and the others never faltered in their high opinion of him as a poet, "...yet when he is sober, his good angel returns and he writes verses sweeter than honey and stronger than wine."

The College has a steady stream of visitors who search out traces of the bard at the College or in Brunswick County, south of Petersburg, where Owen spent his last years writing the complex verses to his patron, Lewis Morris. One of the pilgrims was the chief bard of the National Bardic Circle, Professor Bedyr Lewis Jones, who lectured on Welsh Arthurian tradition at the College in

Judge Bedjaoui Is Reves Lecturer

A leading advocate of the Southern perspective in the North-South international dialogue, Judge Bedjaoui will draw upon more than 40 years of international public experience to address his topic.

During a career that has included service as legal adviser to the Provisional Government of the Algerian Republic during the struggle for independence, Minister of Justice and Keeper of the Seals of Algeria, ambassador to France and to the United Nations and co-chair of the Group of 77 developing nations, Judge Bedjaoui has established a formidable record as an effective voice for the interests of his nation and of other developing countries.

"It would in some degree be fair to describe Judge Bedjaoui as the Thurgood Marshall of the World Court," said Michael Clark, assistant professor of government and organizer of the Reves Lecture.

"While generally known in the West as a forceful and sometimes blunt critic of the ways in which the wealthier and more powerful states have exploited their strengths for national advantage, Judge Bedjaoui's labors have served to strengthen and develop international institutions. In particular, he has shown in various ways how international law can be used as a flexible and pragmatic instrument to restrain the pretensions of the powerful."

Men Acting For Change Tackling Assault Issues

There's a small, earnest organization on campus working quietly on an issue that often blares forth from the covers of national magazines and newspaper headlines. The issue is sexual assault and harassment of women.

Men Acting for Change was officially recognized last year and has about 10 members on its roster. It has no plans for a huge enrollment or the importation of high powered speakers. Working student to student the group hopes to effect change.

Jason McCray, a sophomore, heads Men Acting for Change. Members, he says, are currently working on presentations about communication and respect between the sexes. Some programs offered to students don't always fill the bill, says McCray. "They often portray men as evil and women as naive or stupid and seldom present a male viewpoint."

"Students come away thinking they don't fit the stereotypes, so they don't have to concern themselves with the issue. Acquaintance rape occurs more often than people imagine. Sometimes it might not even be classified as rape, but any sex act without consent is rape," says McCray. "There is also the issue of how sexual assault affects men and women who interact with women who have been assaulted. We're saying let's just talk about these issues person-to-person." Last semester two-member teams held programs in residence halls and tried to raise awareness of the statistics on sexual assault with a poster campaign on campus.

"We're not saying there's anything wrong with sexuality, as long as it's a reciprocal situation with equal respect," he recently told AP reporter Jon Marcus, who wrote a story on Men Acting for Change and similar groups across the country.

Men Acting for Change feel they have the edge on getting the word out to students because they are students themselves and they have taken time to be informed. All charter members have completed the sexual assault education course offered by AVALON, the women's shelter, and have also worked with campus programs on alcoholism.

McCray decided to form a group after taking a women's studies course. With three friends, Men Acting for Change began. The campus group, however, is not alone, but rather part of a widening partnership of college men.

Men on other campuses like Brandeis University are sporting plain white ribbons in a quiet symbol of dissent against sexual assault. Gray says he took the name of the campus organization from a similar group at Duke University.

The Associated Press describes how college men, are working for change:

"While many of their peers spend spring break ogling women on tropic beaches, some Brandeis University men will be sporting plain white ribbons in a quiet symbol of dissent.

"The ribbons represent opposition to sexual harassment and assault, and are part of a new crusade among some men on college campuses.

"It will be a long time before the spring break-type of behavior is gone," said Brian Ammons, a sophomore at North Carolina State University, where he helped to organize a lecture series for men on gender issues. "But there's really a movement that's saying it's not quite as cool as it used to be."

"The ribbons first appeared in Canada after 24 women were gunned down at the University of Montreal in 1989 by a man who then took his own life. Their message has spread south.

"Whether it's men's organizations, men's pro-feminist study groups or white ribbon campaigns, things have really started to pick up," said Steve Patten, a graduate student at York University who coordinates activities on 40 Canadian campuses for the White Ribbon Campaign, based in Toronto.

"Men are taking more of a role in these issues," said Brendan Cohen, a sophomore who is spearheading the campaign at Brandeis.

"On certain campuses there's a real sort of fraternity attitude," said Mike Magee, coordinator of the Canadian white ribbon campaign. "There's a subculture that propagates the idea that there's nothing wrong with this."

"Colleges and universities are probably the most prevalent place where that kind of problem exists right now," said Sean Foxley, a junior at the University of Oregon and director of that school's student organization Men Against Rape. "We've just attained this freedom of being away from our parents and doing what we want, but there's still this lack of maturity. It's on every campus I've seen."

"Nearly 1,000 rapes were reported in 1991 to security officials at the nation's universities and colleges, according to figures released under new federal disclosure laws. Officials who deal with sexual assaults said the real number probably is higher.

"It was when a woman friend was raped that Jason Schultz, a senior at Duke University, became involved in the student organization Men Acting for Change.

"I was very confused," Schultz said. "I had not been prepared to deal with that. There wasn't a male voice talking about violence."

"Ammons said he also acted in response to incidents of rape.

"I just saw on campus that the way the rape education had been handled really alienated men," he said. "Every time you hear discussions of rape issues, it's always women as survivors and men as perpetrators. There's never any place for men to have a positive role in dealing with this problem."

"The lecture series Ammons helped to organize for men has covered issues such as dating a rape survivor.

"Male students that I work with have been sensitized in some ways that I wasn't," said Bob Haynor, a residence coordinator at the University of New Hampshire who plans a course for men on gender roles this summer. Members of some UNH fraternities also plan to don white ribbons.

"Some of it is also the fact that a lot of men in my generation have become used to feminism and the idea that violence against women is not something that is okay or natural," Schultz said."

Former Law Dean Receives Virginia Bar Association Service Award

This column by Guy Friddell, a Merlin with words, appeared in the March 1 issue of the Norfolk-Virginian Pilot about the former dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, another exceptional wordsmith.

The Virginia Bar Association gave William B. Spong Jr. its Distinguished Service Award recently for being "a go-to kind of player" in public service.

William B. Spong Jr.

"That's the sort that football teams 'go to' when it's third and long or when you need a few yards to keep a touch-down drive going," said Thomas C. Brown Jr., a former association president.

His readiness to "go to" stems from civic-minded parents. Portsmouth named a school for Emily Spong, his mother. She strove 13 years as School Board chairman.

And, on a cold day, when Emily saw a seedy stranger wearing a familiar overcoat, she knew her husband had given away another wrap.

Spong Sr. was advertising manager for The Portsmouth Star. His son edited sports at Wilson High; worked at Hampden-Sydney College's news bureau, and, after World War II service, was torn between journalism and law.

Acceptance to the University of Virginia Law School arrived first. He entered public life in 1954 as a delegate in the General Assembly and became a state senator in 1956. A committee chairman set him to correcting other members' bills.

Quizzical Spong is a poultice in drawing out facts. He headed a study of Virginia's schools that is yet a guide for upgrading education.

Humor helps. As when he tells of a judge offering to appoint Spong or a friend, John A. MacKenzie, to represent an indigent defendant.

The man looked at Spong (or MacKenzie) and said, "Judge, if it's all the same to you, I'd just as soon have the one I ain't seen yet."

After 10 years in the State Senate, Spong challenged U.S. Sen. A. Willis Robertson in the 1966 Democratic primary. Robertson's friends said the veteran had hunted and fished with enough folks to win any race. Spong won by 611 votes to become Virginia's first moderate senator in a century.

Sens. Mike Mansfield, Henry Jackson and Edmund Muskie welcomed studious, objective Spong.

He won a seat on the foreign relations committee, where he probed international drug traffic. A survey in The University of Texas Law Review concluded that his career "offers hope that the bond of law to reason may yet endure."

Voting on Nixon nominees to the U.S. Supreme Court, Spong irked liberals by backing Clement Haynsworth after determining that he was not guilty of conflict of interest nor hostile to civil rights.

And he enraged conservatives by voting against G. Harrold Carswell. Years later, Sen. Thomas Eagleton told the Senate how Spong studied Carswell's record and decided he was not fit.

In opposing Carswell, "he know he was committing political suicide," Eagleton said. "Bill Spong's vote was the highest profile in political courage I have ever seen."

Other factors also helped Rep. William L. Scott defeat Spong in 1972. Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern left a disastrous wake for Democrats.

With $200,000 from Georgian J.

Stetson Coleman, Republicans indulged in Virginia's first negative TV blitz, distorting Spong's record on fiscal issues and gun control. Absorbed in guiding to passage an absent colleague's bills on clean air and endangered species, Spong began campaigning late for himself.

"I was working to protect endangered species," he drawled later, "and come to find out I was one." On a bleak election night, his wife reminded him, "When one door closes, another opens." He became counsel to the foreign relations committee, then taught in four Virginia law schools.

Then came an SOS from the College of William and Mary. The American Bar Association threatened to ban its Marshall-Wythe Law School.

Spong became dean July 1, 1976.

"Under his leadership, a drive for a new building took a great leap forward," said Tim Sullivan, now president of the College.

In nine years he led in bolstering the faculty, doubling the library, establishing an endowment foundation. He brought Marshall-Wythe from the brink of disaster to the top rank of the nation's law schools.

And he taught a class in ethics.

"You couldn't get out of there without having my class," Spong said. "I even taught it in summer schools, I caught everybody."

"He is an incredible reader of people," Sullivan summed up. "He would have made a great Supreme Court justice."

Then Old Dominion University asked him in 1988 to fill its presidency, left vacant by the sudden resignation of Joseph M. Marchello to return to teaching.

"Bill Spong established instant credibility in the president's office," said former Rector Richard F. Barry III. "An interim president is by definition a lame duck; yet he kept the university advancing. He achieved a great deal in a short time."

"He established a good rapport with the General Assembly, the governor's office and the State Council of Higher Education," Barry said. "He brought to ODU a sense that its standards would continue to rise. He fought successfully to obtain for the university, the establishment of a state-funded center for excellence in oceanography."

That "go-to" job done, he went back to practicing law

But that door there, opening ...

Estuarine Reserve Seeks Volunteers

The Chesapeake Bay National Estuarine Reserve System, the nation's largest estuary, is seeking both group and individual volunteers. The Reserve System, managed by the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, has four sites on the York River that are preserved for research and education about estuaries.

Organizations are invited to join Reserve staffers on reserve site cleanups. Usually held on Saturdays, these estuarine debris cleanups make excellent service projects for organizations as varied as scout troops, college sailing and biology clubs, and groups of retired citizens. A committed team of about 16 volunteers is needed for each cleanup. The events are held every three months on two reserve sites, the Goodwin Islands in York County and the Catlett Islands in Gloucester County.

If an estuarine debris cleanup sounds like a suitable activity for your club or organization, or if you would consider volunteering to illustrate "Species Watch," please contact Bland Crowder for more information. Write Chesapeake Bay Research Reserves, VIMS, P.O. Box 1346, Gloucester Point, VA 23602, or call 642-7135.

Commencement Tickets Available April 26-May 5

back into William and Mary Hall and tickets will be cut from five to four.

Commencement tickets will be available on the second floor of James Blair Hall 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., beginning Monday, April 26 through Wednesday, May 5.

Each graduate is entitled to five tickets—four tickets that will permit attendance to both the outdoor or indoor locations and one that permits admittance to Zable Stadium only. In addition, each graduate will be required to have a processional ticket to participate in the ceremony. There are not expected to be any additional tickets available.

Because of the change to Zable Stadium, Sadler has asked that requests for special needs for people with disabilities who need special seating, access to American Sign Language interpretation or other services, be made by Monday, May 3. After that, said Sadler, it will be difficult to fill these requests.

The conferral of degrees ceremony, however, is the only portion of the commencement weekend that is undergoing any major change this year, said Sadler.

The traditional Senior Class Dance will be held Friday, May 14 in Trinkle Hall. Tickets will be $5 each and can be purchased when candidates pick up Commencement tickets, or at the door the night of the event.

The picnic lunch on Saturday is $6 per person. Senior students with a meal card will be admitted free, but a lunch ticket is still required. Students are reminded that lunch tickets must be bought by Friday, May 7; they will not be sold at the event.

Friday afternoon, May 15, President and Mrs. Sullivan will hold a reception for graduates and their parents and the 1993 honorary degree recipients in the Campus Yard at the President's House. The William and Mary Choir will offer two short concerts in the Wren Chapel during the reception.

At the Candlelight Ceremony at the Wren Building on Saturday night, brief comments will be made by the president of the senior class and by a selected student, faculty member and administrator. The ceremony concludes with the singing of the Alma Mater by the choir and the audience and the lighting of candles by the graduates. A reception for graduates and their parents will follow in the Wren Courtyard.

On Sunday, seniors will gather in front of the Wren Building at 11:45 a.m. for the walk across campus. Class officers will introduce the three honorary marshals who will lead the procession to Zable Stadium (or W&M Hall in the event of rain).

The academic procession for the exercises of conferring degrees will form on the baseball field (or on the lower level of W&M Hall in the event of rain). Faculty marshals and guides will be available to direct students to their proper location. The appropriate degree will be conferred not individually, but by groups of candidates for each concentration. Diplomas will be distributed by schools and departments as published in the commencement program.

Commencement announcements are available at the College Bookstore for $6.50 for a packet of 10.

Because Commencement takes place during one of Williamsburg's busiest tourist seasons, visiting families are urged to make their reservations now and confirm any they may already have made. The Williamsburg Hotel-Motel Association has a toll-free number to assist people in arranging reservations. USAir is offering Commencement weekend guests a 5 percent discount off the lowest applicable fare or 10 percent off the discount coach fare which is the Y8 class.

Questions concerning Commencement Weekend should be addressed to the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs, James Blair 203B, ext. 11236.
