President Sullivan Responds

Policies On Student Publications To Receive Review

Recently, a student publication was distributed on campus that contained material offensive to many in our community, myself included. Last Friday, in my absence, Vice President Sadler issued a statement reflecting the views and values of the College on this subject. Given the importance of this issue, I wish to emphasize and reaffirm the College's position and my own.

The cartoon that was published defamed and ridiculed segments of this community. Messages of this type are unworthy of this institution and an affront to the values we cherish. I am not only shocked but embarrassed that such views would be expressed in a community committed to the values of diversity, tolerance and mutual respect.

The best antidote to offensive speech is the community's expression of outrage and rejection. I am pleased that so many students, faculty and staff have spoken out to condemn the racist messages contained in the cartoon. The views expressed in the cartoon will not prevail on this campus.

As an outgrowth of the campus discussion on this matter, I have learned that our policies governing student publications have not been reviewed for nearly twenty years. I am, therefore, constituting a special committee of faculty and students to review our policies and make recommendations for any needed changes not later than Dec. 1, 1993. Jack D. Edwards, professor of government, will chair the committee. Rodney A. Smolla, Hanson Professor of Law, will serve as counsel to the committee. The committee will fulfill its mission mindful of our obligation to preserve and protect First Amendment values to their fullest extent and mindful of our special responsibility as an institution of higher education to promote and foster free and open discussion. The work of the committee will go forward at the same time the staff of the Office of Student Affairs, working with the Black Faculty/Staff Forum and a representative group of students, explores ways in which we, as a community, can better fulfill this institution's commitment to diversity.

On behalf of the College community—and I know I speak for most of you—I extend to those within and without this community who were defamed our sincere apology. We have all been hurt by what has happened on our campus. Together, we will realize our goal of a community in which all are welcomed, supported and respected.

Search Committee For Law Dean Is Named

Many Listed On Spring Honors Roster

Washington, D.C., Chapter To Hold Celebration

NEWSMAKERS

Search Committee For Law Dean

Provost Melvyn D. Schiavelli has announced the formation of a search committee for the dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, in a letter to the campus community.

Members of the committee are as follows:

James E. Moliterno, associate professor of law, chair
 Stanley G. Barr, president, Law School Foundation
 Lynda L. Butler, professor of law
 Neal E. Devins, associate professor of law
 John E. Donaldson, Ball Professor of Law
 I. Trotter Hardy, associate professor of law
 Kay P. Kindred, deputy director, Institute of Bill of Rights Law
 Jeffrey Kyle Short, president, Student Bar Association
 Dennis L. Taylor, dean, School of Marine Science.

Each of the individuals appointed to the committee was included among those individuals recommended for service on the search committee by faculty members, students and alumni of the law school.

The charge to the committee is that the national search for a dean to succeed Timothy J. Sullivan and Acting Dean Richard A. Williamson should be intensive in its scope and attention. This charge, however, does not preclude consideration of candidates from within William and Mary. I have asked the members of the committee to search for a dean who will provide strong educational and administrative leadership and direction to the school, continuing to move it forward to a position of pre-eminence in legal education, within the overall mission of and as an integral part of the College of William and Mary. In conducting its search, the committee will pay scrupulous attention to the guidelines relevant to the fact that William and Mary is an Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Employer.

Finally, I have asked the search committee to submit by Jan. 10, 1994, to the Provost and the President, the names of no less than three and no more than five candidates, unranked as to the committee's preference, any one of whom in the committee's judgment, would be acceptable as dean. The successful candidate should be in a position to undertake the responsibilities as dean on July 1, 1994.

President Sullivan and I are prepared to support the search committee as it begins its important work in any way that we appropriately can.

Catron Has New Book On Playwriting

Louis E. Catron

Louis E. Catron, professor of theatre and speech, who has published numerous articles and several books on various aspects of the creative art of playwriting, is author of a new volume, The Elements of Playwriting, published by Macmillan, which has been chosen by the Fireside Theatre Book Club as its selection for July.

Louis Catron's book is designed to serve aspiring playwrights as Strunk and White's classic Elements of Style has served other writers, according to the publisher. The book, says Catron, is aimed at the general reader and includes how to write stageworthy plays, develop a theatre sense, create theatrical characters, shape plot and dialogue and practical advice on finding the resources to get a play produced.

Catron's booklist on theatre topics begins with Writing, Producing and Selling Your Play, published in 1984 by Prentice-Hall. In 1989 Mayfield Publishing Company published The Director's Vision: Play Direction from Analysis to Production. In 1990 Waveland Press published Playwriting, and Samuel French, Inc., published Overcoming Director's Mental Blocks About Blocking. Catron has in progress a book on the monodrama, its history and development, and writing, acting and directing a one-person show.

A regular contributor to Dramatics magazine and The Writer's Digest, Catron has taken up many aspects of theatre craft, but his main theme has been to encourage good writing as well as creativity. Writer's Digest published his article "Keep Attribution Simple He ... retorted, uttered, offered, commented, cried, dared, voiced, barked, returned, greeted, demanded, snapped, observed, and muttered—but ... Seldom Said" in its March 1991 issue.

In his new book, Catron explores both how to write plays and what it means to be a playwright—from turning ideas into plays and structuring a play's action to creating dimensional characters and understanding the varying demands of monodramas, one-acts and full-length plays. Throughout he favors concrete advice over theory.

In addition to insights on what producers, directors, actors and the audience look for in plays, he includes numerous examples from classical and modern plays, exercises the budding playwright can use to sharpen and develop skills, directions for typing a script in the proper format and advice on a subject he feels is too often neglected: evaluating and revising the play.

Business Leaders Are Recent Visitors To School Of Business Administration

Todd Richter, CFA and a securities analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds, talked with BBA and MBA students about investment banking and careers in the industry. Richter, who specializes in the health care industry, told his audience that in investment banking an analyst isn't always right, but as long as the rights are bigger than the wrongs, it's good business. "You have to be willing and able to evaluate yourself in dollar-denominated ways, you need to be able to sell your opinions in writing and orally and you need to have a passion for the investment business," he told students.

Melinda Holman '93, vice president of Holman Enterprises, was on campus April 16 to participate in the BBA Friday Speaker Series. Holman Enterprises is a privately held corporation dealing primarily in the automotive industry. Headquartered in New Jersey, the company employs more than 2,100 people in 11 states.

Holman talked with students about General Motors' new car, the Saturn, and how the company has taken a revolutionary approach in everything from manufacturing to marketing to sales.

Botetourt Chamber Singers Give Final T&G Program Tomorrow

CW President Reviews Town/Gown Traditions

The Town & Gown luncheon series will close for the school year tomorrow. The program will be a performance by the Botetourt Chamber Singers.

A recent speaker at the luncheon was the President of the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation, Robert C. Wilburn, who outlined new program proposals and directions his organization was taking to market the institution and new ways to encourage people to come to Colonial Williamsburg. He also talked about the importance of the link between Colonial Williamsburg and the College.

Wilburn said he believed that change is essential and that it would be a mistake "to rest on our record. If we attempted to stand still, we would only fall behind. It is essential that we move forward."

"I believe that means starting by revisiting the institutional strengths that have been the underpinnings of Colonial Williamsburg's years of outstanding and growing attendance. I believe that we have to re-emphasize our basic mission."

"I want to re-emphasize as well our enduring relationship with the College of William and Mary. Without the College there might very well have been no Williamsburg. Without the College there might very well have been no Colonial Williamsburg."

"We sometimes forget that Dr. W.A.R. Goodwin was on the William and Mary

faculty when he attracted John D. Rockefeller's interest to Williamsburg. And it was at a campus banquet that Dr. Goodwin finally persuaded Mr. Rockefeller to make the first tentative commitment to the restoration of the city.

"The College and the Foundation share the city and its history, and a common objective—education," said Wilburn. "In 1699 Governor Nicholson, the council members of the House of Burgesses and others came to William and Mary to hear five students speak. The scholars wanted to persuade Virginia's power structure to support the development of the school."

"One of the boys made an argument that I think is as good today as it was then. He said 'the town and the college will be mutually assistant to one another. That is, that the college will be a great help towards the making of a town, and the town towards improving of the college.'

"He said more than he knew," continued Wilburn. "The list of William and Mary scholars who have enriched the life of the community would be illustrious if it contained only Jefferson's name. And the town's tradition of hospitality for, and accommodation of, William and Mary students is at least as old as the Raleigh Tavern.

"Like Colonial Williamsburg, the College last year made a transition in leadership. My good friend Dr. Timothy Sullivan and I came to our posts almost at the same time. We have enjoyed sharing our experiences; we have established a valuable working partnership; and we look forward to strengthening the close association between our two institutions. We hope to find new ways to work together to enhance both the Foundation and the College."

"The Foundation is evaluating programs, and setting directions, and we are looking for input from staff, visitors and our friends and supporters."

"An idea I've been thinking about is rebuilding the concept of Colonial Williamsburg as a working laboratory of liberty and democratic principles on an international scale. It may be a dream, but dreams are part of the Colonial Williamsburg experience. My immediate goal is to see that every visitor leaves just a bit more excited about their past and a bit more inspired about what is possible in a system like ours," said Wilburn.

Colgan Lectures For Association Of 1775

Catherine C. Colgan of the United States Naval Academy Board of Visitors and a partner in Colgan Communications, presented a lecture on "Women in the Military," April 15. This is the second guest lecture of the year hosted by the Association of 1775 of the Society of the Alumni in cooperation with the department of military science.

Colgan, a member of the Broadcast Advisory Committee, Voice of America United States Information Agency, was formerly a member of the Department of Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, 1989-92. She served as cultural affairs officer at the U.S. Embassy in Ottawa, 1981-85, and was with the United States Information Agency, 1985-88.

The Association of 1775 was established by the Society of the Alumni in 1991 to recognize those from the College who have served in the military. The name derives from the participation of William and Mary students and faculty in the military in 1775 during the Revolution. In 1777 students formed a College company with the president of the College, the Reverend James Madison, as captain.

School Of Education Holds Annual Student Awards Luncheon

School of Education award winners, their friends, families and sponsors were honored at a luncheon Wednesday in the Dodge Room of Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall.

Christopher Dale Keene, Joy Baytops and Donna-Jo Whitaker Simmons received the School of Education Award for Excellence.

These awards, established in 1983, annually honor two graduate students and one undergraduate. The awards recognize academic and professional excellence as well as outstanding citizenship.

Keene has just completed the Educational Specialist Program in professional counseling and has been accepted into the doctoral program. He received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from The Citadel, where he established a distinguished record of service as assistant counselor to the Corps of Cadets in the Student Counseling Center and as an adviser to learning disabled students.

Keene says he hopes to use his educational experience at William and Mary to work in a supervisory position at the college level and open a private practice focusing on academic problems of adult students.

Baytops is well known to many on campus and in the community as the coordinator of Project Mandala for Special Populations of Gifted Learners. In addition, she has just completed the master's program in gifted education and has been accepted into the Ed.S. program in educational administration with emphasis in gifted education.

In addition to her role as ambassador for Project Mandala, Baytops was also recognized for her contributions as a project manager and curriculum developer.

Baytops says she has a particular interest in advancing the cause of education of gifted learners. Teacher training, involvement of families of underserved populations, curriculum development and program administration are areas to which she would like to devote her skill and talents.

Donna-Jo Whitaker Simmons, who says she can never remember a time when she did not want to become a teacher, is completing the undergraduate teaching preparation program for teaching English.

Simmons has also received both the Paul Douglas Teacher Scholarship and the Delta Kappa Gamma Scholarship for senior women at the College. She has served as the student member of the School of Education curriculum committee.

The Frederick L. Hill Mathematics Teaching Scholarship was awarded to Karen McDade and Jamie Solak.

Every year since 1984, Fred Hill, a resident of Williamsburg, has contributed $1,000 to fund an annual scholarship for aspiring teachers of mathematics. With matching funds from Hill's employer, the Anheuser-Busch Corporation, the School of Education is able to award two scholarships each year.

The scholarship is presented each year to two students who are pursuing certification to teach secondary school mathematics, possess the personal qualities desirable in a teacher and are committed to teaching mathematics after completing college and/or graduate school.

McDade, a rising junior, says she hopes to dispel the notion of "I am not a math person," which many students use as an excuse to avoid math. "I would like to help students realize that math is not a gift that only some are given," she adds. McDade hopes to serve as a resident adviser for the Georgia Governor's School Summer Program.

Senior Class Surpasses Gift Goal Of $100,000

By Kelley Daspit
University Relations

Members of the class of 1993 have made an unprecedented effort for their class gift. Seniors set a goal of $100,000 to be reached by graduation, but the mark was passed in March.

Special interest has been created in this year's class gift campaign by the creation of the Tercentenary Club, made up of members who have pledged $300 or more.

"We wanted to do something new and different from what has been done in past years," said Tony Desante, senior class gift committee chair. He also said the excitement of the College's 300th anniversary has been a strong element of interest and motivation.

"Our class, being the tercentenary class, is special and has a strong identity. This campaign allows us the opportunity to contribute something unique during a very special year," said DeSante.

Senior volunteers held two leadership meetings, a campuswide phone-a-thon, and a campuswide mail appeal to all William and Mary seniors. Seniors were asked to contribute $300 or more, payable over a three-year period, with the first payment due in March of 1994.

This year's senior class gift is the creation of Crim Dell Walkway. The walkway will be created by renovating the street that is currently closed to traffic near the Crim Dell Pond. Enhancements will include brick walkways, park benches, improved lighting and decorative landscaping.

According to DeSante, "This walkway will develop the potential of this area as a common meeting place for campus organizations. It will also provide an aesthetic transition of the Wildflower Refuge, as well as enhance Crim Dell's image as a romantic spot on campus."

"The response has been phenomenal. Not only is this the largest gift ever made by a senior class, this is the first class to ever meet its goal so far in advance of graduation," said Starlette Early, associate director for annual support. According to Early, approximately 470 seniors have made pledges so far. Although the seniors have met their dollar goal, she says their focus is now on the level of class participation. "This class has the potential of having the largest participation level ever. They have done a fantastic job," said Early.

Tercentenary Club members were honored with a reception last week at the Alumni House, where they received specially designed bookmarks featuring the Sir Christopher Wren Building. President Sullivan commended the students on their hard work and their generous gifts to the College. He was surprised with a cake to honor his birthday.

Henderson Paints Grim Picture of Future In Yugoslavia

When she took the stage to talk to the Town & Gown audience last Thursday in the Campus Center ballroom, Anne Henderson, assistant professor of government, stated at the outset that her remarks would be somber and depressing, with no hope of a quick solution and little hope for any within the foreseeable future—her topic was the conflict in Bosnia and the reports of "ethnic cleansing," which has echoes of Nazi atrocities in World War II.

An Eastern European scholar and someone who has had ties to Yugoslavia for almost a lifetime, Henderson gave a very forceful account of what is going on in that country today and her pain at the loss of friends and a way of life she obviously cherished.

The fatal flaw in talk of solutions, she said, is that the civil war is being treated as exclusively a territorial or military issue rather than a human issue. Military and territorial issues can be solved relatively quickly, she said. You beat the aggressors in combat and bring the aggressor to the negotiating table where everything will be resolved.

"Unfortunately it is not just a matter of beating the Serbs or bringing them to the negotiating table because civil war has destroyed the very fabric of Yugoslav society," she said.

"It has dehumanized and degraded millions of people. It's created sharp divisions and hatreds among people who once lived together peacefully, and it has inflicted wounds that are going to take centuries to heal.

"There was a time when people in Yugoslavia did live together peacefully and relatively harmoniously. I remember that time, and I remember having friends among all the different nationalities that made up the former Yugoslavian state, and this has all been destroyed. It will take generations to rebuild even minimal levels of trust and mutual respect among the various nationalities that used to make up Yugoslavia.

"I think it is impossible to speak of resolving the Yugoslavian conflict until that mutual trust is restored. We cannot say that the Yugoslavian crisis is over until the human wound has healed, until the human hurt has been resolved. It is not just a territorial or military issue.

"The ethnic groups that are currently massacring each other will have to continue to live alongside each other after the military conflict is over. There are still going to be Serbs, Croats, Macedonians, Muslims, Montenegrans, Albanians, living in this scrap of land we used to call Yugoslavia. They are going to have to live alongside each other until the end of time. That means we cannot solve the crisis until we come to some way to deal with the human costs of war."

To illustrate her point that the human wounds being inflicted will take a long time to heal, Henderson talked about how systematic rape of women is being used by both sides as an instrument of war.

"It is clear it is a planned military strategy. In particular, Serbian commanders have explicitly ordered their troops to rape Muslim and Croatian women as part of their military campaign. They have set up special camps designed for raping women. At least 50,000 Muslim and Croatian women have been raped by Serbian soldiers in this explicitly engineered campaign of terror. I also want to mention that Bosnian and Croatian soldiers have raped Serbian women, although on a much smaller scale. There have been 15 documented accounts of rape camps set up by Bosnian and Croatian forces, whereas at least 800 Serbian women have been violated. I want to emphasize that total blame cannot be laid on the Serbs. All nationalities in the conflict have stooped to this vicious tactic, although not as systematically as the Serbs," said Henderson.

"In Yugoslavia interethnic rape has always been seen as a very serious crime. Before the civil war, the penalty for "normal" rape was 5 years; however, the penalty for raping a woman of a different nationality was 10 years. In the eyes of the Yugoslavians the seriousness was not raping a woman per se, but committing an ethnic crime. Raping a woman of another nationality was seen as doubly humiliating and destructive for the victim. Now the civil war is underway, raping women of a different nationality is no longer a crime—it is a military tactic. The Serbs, in particular, given their knowledge that interethnic rape is destructive, have turned it into an instrument of total war.

"The Serbs have taken Muslim or Croatian women prisoners, picked out young girls, 12 to 13 years of age, and forced their fathers to watch as they were raped repeatedly by large numbers of Serbian soldiers. Another Serbian tactic has been to round up female populations of captured Muslim villages, put them in barracks and let soldiers come at night and take off with the young women and rape them, returning their mutilated bodies in the morning.

Women with small children have been raped repeatedly, and their children killed before their eyes by the soldiers who had just raped them, said Henderson, who was having a hard time keeping her emotions in check as she spoke.

"Serbs have also set neighbor against neighbor by ordering Serbian neighbors to rape Croatian women who have been their neighbors. Those who refuse are shot," added Henderson. The Serbs have also set up "moral building" camps for their soldiers where captured Croatian and Muslim women are raped and later killed, reported Henderson.

"When you hear about things like this, it is hard not to ask why? The answer is that this tactic is aimed at achieving maximum humiliation of the enemy, breaking down people's spirit and will to resist and bringing them to a level of degradation from which they are unable to recover. The use of systematic rape also destroys any feelings of solidarity or friendship among different ethnic

International Anthropologist Receives 1993 Gandhi Award

"A global perspective is in the agenda of the human species. Yet it is still not clear whether such a change will lead to a more balanced world or one fraught with environmental hazards and fragmented into islands of wealth in seas of poverty both between North and South and within nations," said Lourdes Arizpe Schlosser, 1993 Gandhi lecturer.

At the 13th annual Mahatma Gandhi Freedom Lecture and International Dinner, Arizpe, president of the International Congress of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences, was presented with the Gandhi Freedom Award for her accomplishments in anthropology.

The Tercentenary observance of this award ceremony was held in Trinkle Hall Friday evening and included the presentation of distinguished service awards for contributions to the College to Edward Allenby, vice president for advancement, and James S. Kelly, assistant to the president.

Although there was no tangible presentation made, the speaker in her remarks paid tribute to the work of Mario D. Zamora, professor of anthropology, who established the lecture series and was chair of the Tercentenary session. The first speaker in the series in 1974 was Senator Benigno Aquino Jr. of the Philippines.

In the tradition of the Gandhi programs, students from many countries offered prayers in many languages. In honor of the speaker, this year's dinner was a Latin American menu, and the Mexican national anthem and the U.S. national anthem were sung.

Michael Clark, acting assistant director of international studies, made opening remarks and traced the progress of international studies on campus.

Listing some of the major problems the next decades will bring, Arizpe described the future as the first age of transition in which science will play a part.

"In the next decades, to keep pace with this transition, new forms of alliances must be developed" said Arizpe. "Firstly a new covenant between human society and nature must be drawn up.

Urban industrial society, secure in its concrete surroundings, has all but forgotten that it exists because of the life-supporting system that the biosphere and the geosphere provide. So it must go back to revise both its philosophical foundations and its technological practices. A new humanism is called for, one which will strive to understand human beings and their enterprises, in the setting of the earth's ecosystems. Clean technologies must be developed and made available to countries in the South, while recognizing that the latter's efforts at control are crucial to deter the depletion of environmental resources. This is a task for a new ecological economics and for environmentally aware technologists.

"Secondarily, new forms of alliances must be built among the peoples of the world. This seems especially urgent at a time when ethnic strife is leading to civil wars in Eastern Europe, to famines in Africa and to a resurgence of communalism in India. When I was watching the news—images of the destruction of the Ayodhya Temple by a mob of Hindu fundamentalists—I thought of Gandhi. How he would have been pained by those images. How unbearable it is to think that it was one of the followers of that same sect which killed him, and whose successors are now bent on reversing everything that Mahatma Gandhi achieved.

"Some see in such actions the signs of the coming apocalypse. And, as we are at the end of a Christian century and millenium, it is foreseeable that many, many kinds of millenarisms will rise. And sadly, we have just had an image of one such millenarism in the mass suicide at Waco.

"In the next seven years, unfortunately, a number of such incidents can be foreseen. As anthropologists we have learned with great precision the traits that characterize these sects. And yet, we still have been unable to stop such senseless deaths.

"Nor have our many rich studies of ethnicity helped in stopping ethnic violence all over the world. Why? And just asking this question, I believe, must lead us to redirect our discipline and go back to asking what the goal of anthropology is, and how its mission is changing as the world changes in ways we never imagined.

"Forming new alliances means expanding cooperation and inclusion at the international level, reversing the present trends toward the dualisation between rich and poor both within us and among nations. The trend is being reversed with regional economic units such as the CEE and the North American Free Trade Agreement. In both instances we are now witnessing a reaction of those whose short-term interests may be hurt and are unable or unwilling to understand that in the long run, we will all benefit.

"In the case of the U.S.A. and Mexico, we must remember we have the only border between the first and the third world. And also the longest. That in recent years our economics have become even more interconnected and that migration has already created binational communities on both sides of the border. NAFTA will benefit both countries, even though adjustments will have to be made on both sides in the short term and it will be greatly improved with new provisions to protect labor conditions and the environment.

"But it is important that it be carried through not only for economic, migration and political reasons, but also, in a global perspective, to go one step forward is establishing a new form of governance on a planetary scale. Mr. Gore is right when he says that it is not a question of thinking that nations must disappear, but of founding new global institutions, establishing new international legislation that will allow us to nationally manage the myriad local and national initiatives on which the future of our earthly civilization hinges."

Arizpe concluded her talk with a quote by T. S. Eliot from her first book, an ethnography of a Nahua village high up in the Sierras:

"We shall not cease in exploration, and the end of all our exploring will be to return where we started, and know the place for the first time."

A native of England, Ward received his undergraduate and doctoral degrees from the London School of Economics and Political Science of the University of London. He joined the faculty in 1967 after four years as a lecturer in politics at the University of Adelaide, South Australia. His visiting university appointments include, visiting professor of politics, University of Leicester, England, 1978; visiting professor, University of Vermont Summer Institute of Irish Studies, 1978; senior research fellow, Queens University, Belfast, 1985-86; and visiting professor of American studies, Flinders University, South Australia, 1988.

1987 to establish a national center for the study and teaching of gifted children by the State of Virginia, which recognized the need for improved services to gifted children, specialized training for teachers of the gifted and in-service and graduate level coursework in gifted education.

This year the center celebrated five years of successful education of both gifted children and their future teachers. The facility is one of only 25 centers in North America, and only one of six that offers the broadest scope of programs and services to diverse audiences, including graduate students, undergraduates, university faculty, public and private schools, precollegiate learners, parents and the community.

According to VanTassel-Baska, "The Saturday and summer sessions that are offered by the center are definitely the single biggest difference the Center has made in the lives of school children." These programs, she added, offer more than the regular gifted programs within the schools.

VanTassel-Baska earned her undergraduate and graduate degrees from Toledo University. She is author, co-author or editor of six scholarly books and over 150 monographs, journal articles, reports and curriculum publications.

the College.

Other committee members include Virginia Congressman Herbert H. Bateman '49; former CIA Director Robert M. Gates '65; and West Virginia Congressman Alan B. Mollohan '66.

Major benefactors for the event include Embassy Suites Hotels, Holman Enterprises, Fords Colony of Williamsburg, IBM and the Sony Corporation of America. Support has also been received from Arthur Andersen & Co., SC, Governor's Land at Two Rivers, and American Management Systems, Inc.

Goal for the campaign, set to conclude this year, is $150 million, which will triple the College's endowment and provide funding for academic programs, student scholarships and faculty development.

Leave Tracking System Implemented

William and Mary now has a leave tracking system that is an integrated part of the College's automated Human Resource System. The new system automates much of the data previously tracked manually. An added feature is an enhanced reporting capability. Personnel will be able to tailor information specifically needed by supervisors.

Special recognition for completing this implementation is in order for the following persons from the Office of Personnel Services: Lois Parker, data services manager and the project coordinator for the leave system; and to Cindy Guthrie, LaVonne Allen, Becky Kinnison, Carole Shaver, Debby Rorrer, and Rita Metcalfe, for hours of data entry, testing and batching.

Special thanks also goes to the rest of the Personnel staff for filling in and providing coverage while the system was coming on-line; to the Payroll Office for their participation; to the Computer Center staff in general, to George Lymbouris and Judy Ewart, in particular; and to Mike Stump, internal auditor, for his advice and participation.

Congratulations on a job well done!

Civil War In Yugoslavia

Air Drops And Embargos Only Stop-Gap Measures

groups who have previously lived together. By forcing Serbian villagers to rape their Croatian neighbors, the Serbs are trying to make it impossible for ethnically mixed communities to survive." Another goal of the campaign that Henderson finds particularly pernicious is the stated goal of impregnating Croatian women with Serbian blood to dilute non-Serbian nationalities.

Henderson concluded by suggesting that a serious political discussion take place. All discussion to date, she suggests, has skirted the hard issues of how to help bring about an end to the bloodshed. Air drops and embargos, she said, are merely stopgaps rather than solutions. These actions are politically palatable because they do not require direct involvement of U.S. citizens. In a question-and-answer period following here talk, Henderson said her response to the suggestion of lifting the embargo to arm the Bosnians echoed that of a British diplomat who said that rather than "leveling the playing field it would level the killing field" and put more weapons in the hands of people to kill other people.

Anything that is going to have an effect will require military intervention, said Henderson, and that is a hard decision that democratically elected governments make. Do American citizens feel strongly enough about human rights abuses in Yugoslavia to sacrifice the lives of our own people?

Henderson feels strongly that attempts to right wrongs after the war should include an international war crimes tribunal that all sides would agree on and an international pact to recognize systematic rape as a weapon of war which would be outlawed.

Solak is enrolled in the master's in secondary education program for the teaching of mathematics. She completed her undergraduate work at Virginia Tech in 1987, and since then has had experience in banking and computer-related training, sales and marketing. She says she feels the variety of assignments she has had in business has prepared her to be a successful teacher of mathematics.

Candice Cook-Darby received the Helen C. Hopper Memorial Award, which was established in 1986 by the Board of Visitors of the College to provide an annual scholarship to a student who is pursuing a master's degree in counseling and has demonstrated a special interest and commitment to family counseling and family life education.

Cook-Darby is enrolled in the Ed.D. program in counseling. She graduated magna cum laude from Geneva College with a B.A. in English and received an M.A. in English literature from the University of Colorado. She has taught English at both the high school and collegiate levels and is a published poet.

Catherine Anne Little received the Hornsby Family Scholarship. This award has been established by the Hornsby family of Williamsburg to be given to a new or continuing student in the School of Education, who is preparing to teach at the primary grade levels and who understands the importance of establishing and nurturing positive relations between home and school and between families and teachers. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hornsby were on hand for the presentation.

"What I hope to accomplish as an educator is first and foremost to give whatever I can of myself in service to the children of the community," said Little.

A Monroe Scholar and a National Merit Scholarship winner, Little is a member of the William and Mary Choir and the Botetourt Chamber Singers. She is tutoring a fourth-grade student through the Partnership for Kids program. She hopes to teach in the primary grades, preferably first or second grade. Her professional goals include the involvement of parents in the classroom.

The Armand J. and Mary Faust Galfo Education Research Award was presented to Tisa Mason. Professor Emeritus and Mrs. Galfo were at the luncheon for the presentation of the award they established in 1988.

This scholarship is given annually to the graduate student who has demonstrated outstanding promise in educational research and helpfulness to fellow students and/or faculty in their own research.

Mason will receive an Ed.D. in higher education administration at the May 16 commencement. Currently she is the director of student services for Christopher Newport University. President Anthony and Pat Harvey, representing the Provost's office, were on hand to see Mason receive her award.

Mason received her B.A. from Transylvania University with a major in sociology/anthropology and a master's in education with an emphasis in guidance and counseling. She has frequently made presentations at various meetings including the National Association for Campus Activities, the Association of Fraternity Advisors and the Virginia Association of School Personnel Administrators.

The Frances H. and Robert O. Nelson Memorial Scholarship was won by Meaghan Harrell. In 1990, Mrs. Nancy Nelson Diggs, daughter of Frances H. and Robert O. Nelson, established a scholarship in honor of her mother and father. This award is given annually to a deserving student in the School of Education who is pursuing a career in either teaching or educational administration and who embodies the qualities of professional competence, a true love of teaching, a genuine commitment to students and to teachers and recognized quality of character.

"I have been overjoyed with my work," she said, "and with the idea of helping others as I have been helped."

Harrell will graduate next month with a B.A. in psychology. In addition to becoming an elementary classroom teacher, Harrell also hopes to have the opportunity to sponsor athletic teams. She has taught children swimming and tennis for several summers and is herself an avid swimmer and tennis player. She has been a volunteer at Eastern State Hospital, where she worked with emotionally disturbed children. She was awarded the Marcia Childress Award for outstanding leadership and community commitment by Chi Omega sorority.

New officers of the Graduate Education Association, Katie Hayden, president; Jamie Solak, vice president; Adele Logan, secretary; and Marc Garneau, treasurer; were announced. 1993-94 officers of the Student Education Association are Jean Greeley, president; Jennifer Shapiro and Renee Krez, vice presidents for program and social events, respectively; Sarah Sodergren, secretary; and Jennifer Sensabaugh, treasurer.

Thomas Ward serves as faculty adviser to the Graduate Education Association, and James Beers advises the Student Education Association.

Byrd Latham, director of academic support services for the School of Education, gave opening remarks and introduced the award winners.

Virginia McLaughlin, assistant to the president, brought greetings from President Sullivan, who at the time of the luncheon was en route to Scotland to receive an honorary degree from the University of Aberdeen.
