Changes To Publications Council Bylaws To Be Considered At Hearing

The Publications Review Committee will hold a public hearing at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 1, in the James Room of the University Center to discuss proposed changes to the Publications Council bylaws.

President Timothy J. Sullivan established the review committee in April 1993 to examine the Publications Council's policies. The move was sparked following the publication of the controversial "Mighty Whitey" cartoon last spring in The Pillory.

Prior to the public hearing the committee will distribute drafts of the proposed bylaws and a summary report to various organizations that Members of the College community are invited to join President Timothy J. Sullivan at a farewell reception in honor of Martha Hamilton-Phillips, executive director of Tercentenary Observances, Jan. 28 from 3:30 to 5 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Wren building.

Rabies Warning

On Jan. 15, an employee took home a stray cat that lived in the area of the woods behind Swem Library. This cat (black medium-length hair with white on chest and belly) subsequently bit both the employee and his wife. The cat was taken to a veterinarian and died on Jan. 17. A lab test for rabies returned positive. The employee and his wife will be receiving treatment for rabies.

This cat also scratched one other Swem Library employee on Jan. 13. This is the only other incident we are aware of at this time.

Keep away from any stray animals. We are looking into obtaining traps to capture the remaining cats in the area. If you have had contact with anyone who has been bitten, scratched or been exposed to the saliva of one of those cats, have them contact the Health Department immediately at 253-4813.

If anyone has any additional questions or information concerning these incidents, please contact campus police at ext. 14596.

College Celebrates Opening Of University Center

After nearly three years of construction and a semester delay in opening, the $12.5 million University Center officially opened Monday, Jan. 17.

The 94,000 square foot facility features three levels housing a 450-seat theatre, two ballrooms, a 350-seat student dining room located in the turreted wing, new post office and a variety of rooms for student activities. The lower floor includes a video rental store, convenience store, auxiliary book store, game room and a café where students can hold dances and special events, and a soon-to-be-opened copy center.

The building boasts some distinctive features such as a large skylight overlooking a spiral staircase that extends through all three stories, numerous patios for outdoor dining and entertainment and state-of-the-art sound and fire-detection systems.

As a result of the post office moving out of the ground floor of Old Dominion Hall to the new center, every student may now have a box, not just those living on campus.

Alleviating some of the burden on the 33-year-old Campus Center will be one of the facility's primary functions. Once the University Center is fully operational, it is expected that there will be double the space for student offices in the Campus Center.

Since the University Center opened, its administrators have been trying to solve a number of minor glitches, which they stress are not entirely unexpected with a building of this complexity. Opening the main entry doors has been particularly challenging due to an incorrectly installed spring mechanism. The problem should be fixed this week, according to Bob Knowlton, director of the University Center.

An official dedication will not take place until the April Board of Visitors meeting, but the College scheduled a variety of activities to celebrate the opening beginning last Friday and continuing through tomorrow.

Some of the highlights of the grand opening have included an improvisation theatre, a free concert featuring

Tercentenary Hall On Target For 1995 Completion

By Kelley Daspit
University Relations

Construction of Tercentenary Hall, named in honor of the College's 300th anniversary, is on schedule for completion in 1995.

Four stories of steel framework have been constructed between Washington Hall and Crim Dell. Much progress has been made since the ground breaking last spring. The shape of the lecture hall and lobby on the first floor are already discernible with walls being erected and utilities installed. Soon roof panels will be attached and the building will be completely enclosed shielding workers from bad weather.

"The project is slightly ahead of schedule, but there is another year's worth of work to go," said Kay Van Dyke, project manager. According to Van Dyke, Tercentenary Hall should be completed by spring of 1995 as originally projected.

Tercentenary Hall is a new physical science facility that will provide up-to-date instructional laboratory space for courses in chemistry, geology, physics and computer science. Plans for the facility began taking shape in 1988 as a result of growth in science programs.

The facility will include a large introductory teaching laboratory, three smaller instructional laboratories, several research laboratories, a geology library, storage facilities and faculty offices. Labs will include modern teaching aids, such as sophisticated microscopes for examining geological specimens, computers with three-dimensional displays and state-of-the-art projection equipment.

The last science facility constructed was William Barton Rogers Hall in 1975. Since that time, there has been nearly a 40 percent increase in the number of students enrolled in geology and physics lab sections. Furthermore, the applied science program, established in 1990, alone has generated more than 600 additional credit hours requiring laboratory space.

Currently, computer science, physics, geology and chemistry are split among several other academic buildings. In each of the buildings the laboratory preparation space and storage space available to support undergraduate instruction is limited. The existing facilities also support graduate instruction, departmental and sponsored research activities, instruction of non-scientific disciplines, and academic and administrative support functions.

The movement of departments and instructional activities into Tercentenary Hall will provide much needed space and at the same time free up space in Jones, Small and Rogers halls to meet their expanding needs.

William and Mary is ranked 24th in the nation in producing bachelor's graduates who go on to earn doctorates in the sciences according to data from the National Science Foundation. In geology, William and Mary is consistently first or second among public universities in the percentage of bachelor's graduates who go on to receive doctorates in the earth sciences. In chemistry, the College consistently ranks nationally among the top 10 institutions graduating bachelor's students with American Chemical Society certification.

The national scientific community has taken notice of the quality of William and Mary's work in undergraduate science. Five consecutive Research Experiences for Undergraduates (REU) site grants have been awarded to William and Mary's physics department from the National Science Foundation; the geology department has received three such grants.

Tercentenary Hall occupies the last remaining building site along the historic Sunken Garden completing construction on the "Old Campus" as established by the College's 1925 master plan. The construction of this building, along with the renovation of James Blair Hall, will return all the buildings along the Sunken Garden to academic use.

The Tercentenary Hall project was awarded a soil conservation award last October from the Commonwealth of Virginia. The award recognizes the on-site implementation of control measures and the working relationship among the college, the contractor and the state's Division of Soil and Water Conservation in the mitigation of soil loss from the construction site.

Construction of the hall is being done by Conrad Brothers from Chesapeake, Va. The designers are Rancorn, Wildman, Krause and Brezinski Architects from Newport News in association with Allan Greenberg of Washington, D.C.

The necessary funds to construct and equip Tercentenary Hall have been allocated through the General Obligation Bond, approved by Virginia voters in the November 1992 election. This bond will finance construction and renovation on campuses across the Commonwealth.

Spencer Wins Statewide Award

Margaret Poles Spencer

Margaret Poles Spencer, associate professor at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, has been awarded the Virginia Women Attorneys Foundation Distinguished Faculty Award for 1994.

Spencer, whose recent scholarship has focused on alternatives to prosecution for women engaged in prenatal drug abuse, was recognized for her "significant achievements regarding legal issues of particular interest to women, families and women in the legal profession."

Spencer has served on the Virginia Parole Board and the Virginia Board of Corrections.

Associate Professor Susan Grover received the same award in 1991.

Felton Named Deputy State Attorney General

Walter S. Felton Jr., assistant professor of law, has been named deputy attorney general in the administration of newly elected state Attorney General James S. Gilmore.

Felton, who has served simultaneously as a member of the faculty of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law and as administrator of the Virginia Commonwealth's Attorneys' Council, will be taking a leave of absence in order to serve in the new position. He will advise Gilmore on policy and legislative matters.

Felton joined the law school faculty in 1992. In 1993, he was a recipient of the law school's fifth John Marshall Award.

LeBel Named To American Law Institute

Paul A. LeBel, James Goold Cutler Professor of Law, has been elected to membership in the American Law Institute, an organization composed of judges, academics and practicing lawyers which is engaged in the "clarification and simplification of the law and its better adaptation to social needs." LeBel, an expert in torts and products liability law, will participate in the Institute's Third Restatement of Torts project. He is the author of John Barleycorn Must Pay: Compensating the Victims of Drinking Drivers (University of Illinois Press, 1992).

LeBel was one of 68 people selected to membership this year. The Institute has no more than 2,800 members at any given time, including judges and practitioners.

Law School Announces Commencement Speaker

The Honorable Damon J. Keith, who sits on the Sixth Circuit in Detroit and is one of the most distinguished members of the federal judiciary, will serve as commencement speaker for graduating law students on Sunday, May 15.

Bey Is Speaker For First In Series Of Commonwealth Center Seminars

George Bey of the Department of Anthropology at Millsaps College will deliver the first lecture of the Commonwealth Center for the Study of American Culture spring seminar series. Bey will speak at 5 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 27, in the Botetourt Theater of Swem library.

The title of Bey's talk will be "The Archaeology of the Early Colonial Maya: Excavations at Ek Balam, Yucatan, Mexico."

He will discuss recent research in the Ek Balam region of northeast Yucatan, which identified an undisturbed Mayan community dated to A.D. 1560-1610.

Mapping and excavation of the early colonial town of Ek Balam and of its Franciscan chapel provide insight into the nature of the initial period of culture contact between Mayan and Spaniard in the New World. The archaeology of Ek Balam should reveal information about Spanish policies of territorial control, economic exploitation and social engineering, which will lead to an expanded understanding of events in Spanish America that took place as early as 1521 in the Valley of Mexico and as late as the 18th century in California and Louisiana.

Guinier Airs Views, Berates Clinton At Black Student Leadership Conference

Lani Guinier knows well the pain of alienation.

President Clinton's first nominee to head the civil right's division of the Justice Department, Guinier knew the Clintons from their days at Yale University Law School and thought that the president was familiar with her writings, especially those that talked about enhancing minority representation through a plan called "cumulative voting."

Guinier was wrong. Following a media barrage, which she claims distorted her record and beliefs, Clinton withdrew her nomination and publicly tagged her beliefs "anti-democratic."

The bitterness of last spring's experience has not dulled Guinier's resolve to improve minority representation in government. Speaking Thursday night at the eighth annual Black Student Leadership Institute, Guinier recalled her years of struggling to overcome the obstacles preventing minorities from sharing power.

"I have questioned whether 51 percent of the people should enjoy 100 percent of the power," she said. "When the rules aren't fair, I've worked to change them."

An advocate of fairness in government, Guinier believes that minorities must be allowed a share of power when the majority remains a fixed group and ignores them.

To illustrate how a fixed, intransigent majority rule can lead to the exclusion of the minority, she pointed to one survey of white voters in North Carolina. Eighty-one percent of eligible white voters said they would not vote for a black candidate even if the choice was no candidate at all.

Lani Guinier

Guinier, a tenured law professor at the University of Pennsylvania, cites James Madison as the inspiration for her ideas about minority representation and as evidence that her thinking is not radical. The tyranny of the majority, she said, requires safeguards to protect one part of society against the interests of the other.

"Cumulative voting," the target of much of the criticism aimed at Guinier, is one means that she endorses for fostering greater minority inclusion in government.

The sessions cover a broad range of issues affecting both Asian American students and the Asian community. Topics include "Asian Americans in the Workplace," "Asian Pacific American Women's Issues," "Changes in Asian Families and

Values" and "Changes in Asian Families and Values."

Alfred Page, dean of the school of business, will moderate a panel of all speakers titled "Balancing Self-Identity, Cultural Identity and American Society." Kashiwaha, an ABC News correspondent based in San Francisco, will deliver the luncheon keynote address on the topic of "Asian Americans in the Media."

Chai Ling, spokesman for the Chinese democracy movement, will give the closing keynote address.

dering, strengthens democracy. "Diversity and inclusion of multiple perspectives enriches rather than diminishes," she said, "and leads to innovative solutions to solve problems."

"I am committed to consensus, not a system that says 'I win, you lose,'" she said. "We can all win something."

According to Michael Gerhardt, professor at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, Guinier's ideas are relatively mainstream and noncontroversial in the academic world. An outcome of Clinton withdrawing her nomination may be that aspiring judicial appointees will be much more hesitant to "think out loud" about their ideas. This poses a threat, he said, to the nomination of the best people to these posts, and in the long term, stifles creative thinking in government.

The post at the Justice Department for which Clinton nominated Guinier remains vacant today.

Leader of Chinese Pro-Democracy Movement, ABC Correspondent Headline Conference

The leader of the 1989 pro-democracy demonstration in Tiananmen Square and ABC correspondent Ken Kashiwaha will highlight the sixth annual Asian American student conference to be held at the College Jan. 28-29 in the new University Center.

The sessions cover a broad range of issues affecting both Asian American students and the Asian community. Topics include "Asian Americans in the Workplace," "Asian Pacific American Women's Issues," "Changes in Asian Families and

Values" and "Changes in Asian Families and Values."

Alfred Page, dean of the school of business, will moderate a panel of all speakers titled "Balancing Self-Identity, Cultural Identity and American Society."

Kashiwaha, an ABC News correspondent based in San Francisco, will deliver the luncheon keynote address on the topic of "Asian Americans in the Media."

Chai Ling, spokesman for the Chinese democracy movement, will give the closing keynote address.

Conference registration is $30 for William and Mary students, faculty and staff. The fee includes a commemorative folder, meals, Friday night entertainment, entrance to all speaker sessions and the semi-formal dance. Members of the College community may attend all speaker sessions and keynote addresses free of charge.

Contact the office of multicultural affairs, James Blair 209, or call ext. 13166 for registration materials and information.

Hats Off To The HACE Employees Of The Month

Above, Judy Hodge of the School of Business received the July 1993 Employee of the Month Award.

Hodge began working for the College in 1963 in the personnel office. She secured a position in the School of Business in 1979. As fiscal technician senior, she pays bills, conducts ordering for the School, and prepares the budget.

Her supervisor, Kathryn Roemer, cited her for her knowledge of policies, reliability, thoroughness, dedication, willingness to go the extra mile and courteous manner. Roemer added that fellow workers often seek out Hodge for advice.

Hodge lives in Williamsburg and has one child and a 2-year-old granddaughter. In her spare time, she enjoys golfing and aerobics.

Above, Byron Simpson of the housekeeping department received the August 1993 Employee of the Month Award.

Simpson began working for the College in 1988 after 11 years at the Pottery and is currently assigned to Ewell Hall.

Describing Simpson as dedicated, congenial, and a worker who needs very little or no supervision, his supervisor, Mary Stokes, wrote in the nomination that Simpson "goes out of his way to ensure that the Ewell building is kept almost spotless. He is definitely an asset to the housekeeping department."

Simpson lives in Williamsburg, and recently left a gospel music group called "Gospel Tones," which he sang in for 17 years.

At left, Brenda Johnson, program support technician for workers' compensation and benefits in the office of personnel services, received the September 1993 Employee of the Month Award.

In the recommendation for the award, her supervisor, Rita Metcalfe, cited Johnson for her care, trustworthiness, positive attitude, humor, calmness, diligence and willingness to help others.

Johnson began working for the College in April 1992 after 12 years at Newport News Shipyard.

She lives in Newport News and has one 3-year old. In her spare time, Johnson enjoys movies and reading.

At left, Janette Butterworth, fiscal technician in general accounting, received the November 1993 Employee of the Month Award.

Employed at the College since 1987, Butterworth issues vendor checks for the College and replacement payroll checks. She also sends reminders to persons who have outstanding checks.

In her nomination, she was cited for her pride, ethics, professionalism and sense of humor. "She is an excellent model for anyone to follow when it comes to ethics," the nomination from her department read. "An aura of perfection and professionalism surrounds her."

Butterworth lives in Newport News and has three children, one is a College alumnus and another a master's candidate in education at the College. In her spare time, she enjoys reading, gardening and hiking. She also hosts foreign students in her home.

The paper was published in Ecotoxicology and Environmental Safety. The research examined the distribution of these environmental pollutants in Tabbs Creek, located on the Langley Research Center in Hampton.

In November, Gallagher, Hale, and Assistant Professor Peter Van Veld presented a paper titled "Induction of Cytochrome P4501A in the Mummichog (Fundulus heteroclitus) Caused by Exposure to Polychlorinated Terphenyls" at the 14th annual meeting of the Society of Environmental Toxicology and Chemistry in Houston, Texas. Also presented at this meeting was a paper by Hale titled "Investigation of Unusual Chlorinated Contaminants at a Federal Aerospace Facility," which examined the sources and sinks of polychlorinated terphenyls at the Langley facility. This research has contributed to a regulatory review of the environment surrounding the Langley Research Center by state and federal authorities. As a result, the facility is expected to be included on the EPA Superfund list. NASA has recently signed a cleanup agreement with the EPA, prior to this listing.

At left, Tillie Millen, administrative secretary for the Christopher Wren Association, received the December 1993 Employee of the Month Award.

Employed at the College since October 1990, Millen coordinates activities for Christopher Wren Association members. In her nomination for the award, the department of University Advancement cited her for her positive and professional attitude and effort beyond the call of duty in volunteering during her off-duty hours to help with Tercentenary programs. "Tillie is a blessing to the CWA," the nomination reads. "She is an outstanding role model for many of the employees in University Advancement."

Millen lives in Newport News and has five children and seven grandchildren. She enjoys walking, crafts and visiting with her grandchildren.

At left, Barbara Smith of the housekeeping department received the January 1994 Employee of the Month Award.

Employed at the College for seven years, Smith tends the first floor of Blow Hall. The Office of Career Services in Blow Hall nominated Smith for the distinction. In nominating Smith, career services staff noted that in the three years the office had been located in Blow Hall, "We have not had a person to care for our facilities the way that Barbara has. She is thorough, responsive, pleasant and cooperative as she industriously performs her responsibilities."

Smith lives in Charles City, and has three children and one grandchild. In her spare time, she enjoys fishing, having a good time, and spending time with her family.

Center For Gifted Education Begins Enrichment Program Feb. 5

The Center for Gifted Education will begin its Saturday Enrichment Program at the College Feb. 5 from 9 a.m. to noon. The program will run for seven consecutive Saturdays.

Students select classes based on their interest in one of the following subject areas: language arts, mathematics, natural science, social science, fine arts and technology. The spring program will host 200 students attending 19 different classes.

The purpose of the program is to offer a wide variety of learning opportunities to gifted and talented students between preschool and 10th grade educational levels. The courses emphasize the development of problem-solving skills and the application of higher level thinking skills to individual areas of inquiry and are designed to supplement rather than supplant regular school curricula.

The programs have served more than 2,000 children in more than 60 school divisions and private schools.

Registration for this session is closed, but additional information about the Saturday and Summer Enrichment commute programs is available from the Center for Gifted Education at ext. 12362.

Students Adopt Highway

College Announces WAMI

Computing Support Services and Swem library announce the availability of William and Mary Info (WAMI).

WAMI is the College's response to the need for a Campus-Wide Information System (CWIS) and is built around the Gopher program developed by the University of Minnesota. This software follows a simple protocol for tunneling through the Internet, an international computer communications network.

WAMI is also menu driven to eliminate the need to learn archaic commands or syntax. Allowing access to more than 1,000 information services, WAMI also serves as a document delivery system through Internet. For additional information, call Berna Heyman in Swem Library at ext. 13059.

William and Mary Makes the Cover Of Bell Atlantic Telephone Book

Scenes from William and Mary are pictured on the cover of Bell Atlantic's 1994 Williamsburg/Toano telephone book now being circulated to homes and businesses.

The cover features four photographs: women playing lacrosse, students mingling in front of Swem Library, another group of students surrounding the cannon in front of the Wren Building, and tortoise-shell reading glasses placed atop a stack of books.

The cover was done in honor of the College of William and Mary's 300th anniversary last year, according to James L. Griffith, area manager for Bell Atlantic.

"We're very pleased to be able to feature the College on our directory cover this year, and we'd like to salute the College for its tradition of excellence," Griffith said.

College Officials Hope University Center Will Become Campus "Living Room"

the Connells, and Step Show. Comedian Adam Sandler of "Saturday Night Live" fame will perform tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Commonwealth room.

Both the Connells and Sandler required tickets. As of Thursday, Jan. 20, when the tickets were distributed all 850 tickets were gone.

With the new operation has also come some changes in the traffic pattern around the center.

A new stop sign has been added near the building to halt inbound traffic coming from Richmond Road. Stopping traffic should help improve safety for the students as they move in and out of the new building, said William F. Merck II, vice president for administration and finance. The administration is also considering installing a crosswalk in front of the University Center across Stadium Drive.

Pedestrian safety is also the reason for closing off a section of Gooch Drive adjacent to the center and in front of the Lodges, Merck said.

As part of that operation, work crews will soon begin widening a section of Gooch Drive from the baseball field to the King Student Health Center. The newly widened area will be paved after the weather warms up in the spring, and traffic will become two-way along Gooch Drive to the University Center.

"Our primary motivation is pedestrian safety. There are thousands of people a day going in and out of the University Center," said Merck.

Use of the University Center has been brisk since its opening last week and College officials already see great potential for it as the "living room of campus." According to Sam Sadler, vice president for student affairs, the University Center provides an extraordinary variety of options for social programming. "The challenge," he said, "is to make that a reality."

The College has forbidden smoking in the University Center and, beginning this semester, restricted it to Trinkle Hall and the ballroom in the Campus Center.

Construction of the new building was supported entirely by state funds and was completed about $1 million under budget. An increase of about $272 in student fees over several years helped offset some of the cost.

Proposed State Budget For College Draws Fire From President Sullivan

monwealth must—it simply must—increase its stake in higher education.

That isn't just my opinion—it is the considered view of 760 top Virginia business leaders who in 1992 ranked higher education first among 20 factors that create a good business climate.

Virginia's system of higher education is wonderfully diverse—and in that diversity is our strength—our competitive advantage. Your wise rejection of micro-management from Richmond has permitted institutions like William and Mary to achieve national and international respect—and that is good for Virginia.

At William and Mary, the criteria for investing the Commonwealth's resources are simple and consistent. ...

First, a commitment to excellence and the result of this commitment is an educational program good enough to produce Rhodes and Marshall scholars on a regular basis.

It is that commitment to excellence and to efficiency which caused our faculty last spring to develop and approve the first complete undergraduate curriculum reform at a major state institution in a generation.

The hallmarks of that new curriculum are an emphasis on global education, the mastery of technology and a command of foreign languages—all within the context of William and Mary's emphasis on intellectual rigor and traditional values.

We have already done what others are considering.

As another example, we have sought to maximize the benefits of limited resources by opening a new collaborative relationship with Thomas Nelson Community College and by helping establish the Virginia Consortium for Engineering and Science with Virginia Tech, Old Dominion and the University of Virginia.

These are only examples of a campus-wide effort to reduce costs while maintaining quality.

This special combination of excellence and efficiency caused U.S. News and World Report to include William and Mary as one of only two Virginia institutions in the top quartile of its most competitive category—national universities.

And it is that same combination in that same survey that ranked William and Mary 4th of 205 national universities for efficiency—that means quality delivered for the dollars spent—giving our students and their parents real value for money.

Regrettably, the budget submitted to you by Governor Wilder fails in important ways to sustain excellence or to reward efficiency.

First, it seems randomly to have imposed a tuition transfer tax on the families of students at a few institutions—William and Mary among them.

The method of taxation is simple—first strip general fund support from William and Mary—second give those general funds to other institutions for undoubtedly worthy initiatives—but then raise the tuition of William and Mary students to pay for improvements at those other institutions.

That kind of economic policy was tried once in the captive nations of Eastern Europe. We all know the results. I don't think they justify a repeat of the experiment here in Virginia.

Second, at a time when the best American businesses are decentralizing, this budget reverses Virginia's long-standing and wise policy vesting fiscal responsibility in the boards of visitors and administrations of individual institutions.

The Governor's budget requires central state agency approval of 1.5 percent of our budget—even after legislative appropriation—and all in the name of restructuring and efficiency—terms which have yet to be defined.

May I ask you: How many blows in the cause of efficiency have been struck by requiring that more paperwork be sent to Richmond?

Third, this budget indiscriminately attacks—indeed eliminates—state funding for research centers at my own institution and at others. I realize that research has become a dirty word—especially after last fall's newspaper series on higher education—a series that in my view is best described as "Ross Perot looks at Virginia higher education."

The quest for new knowledge—which is simply another way of describing research—is critical to what distinguished universities do—it is not some exotic academic frill or the foolish indulgence of dreamy-eyed, pointy headed intellectuals. Quality research lies at the heart of every great university and Virginia needs great universities.

At William and Mary, Governor Wilder's budget would eliminate state support for the Institute of Early American History and Culture—which is not just the nation's but the world's most distinguished center for the study of the origins of our country. For 50 years, the Institute has been jointly funded by the Commonwealth and Colonial Williamsburg. We have also attracted significant private support—which is what I thought we were supposed to do with state support—leverage private giving.

As wonderful as I am sure the Disney version of American history will be, how is it possible to consider spending millions on that project while removing all support for a research center that sets the standard for the world?

And why does Governor Wilder's budget eliminate funding for the Commonwealth Center for Nuclear and Particle Physics—a joint project between William and Mary and the University of Virginia. The Center is designed to support CE-BAF in Newport News—one of the major magnets in Virginia for top-level economic development. The federal government has invested millions; the Commonwealth has invested much less, but the payoff will be great. Just as the accelerator is about to be turned on, we are pulling the plug on allied university-based research that has vast economic potential.

Does this make sense?

Mr. Chairman, for three centuries William and Mary has shared the fate and the fortunes of first the Colony—and then the Commonwealth—of Virginia. We are intensely proud of that partnership. Now in the second week of William and Mary's fourth century, we face a budget that will deal a crippling blow to our capacity to be the great college Virginia needs—and which I believe all of you want. That would be a tragedy—not just for those of us who have devoted our working lives to William and Mary but for every citizen of this wonderful Commonwealth.

Publications Review Committee Takes Firm Freedom Of Speech Position

will be directly affected. Copies of these reports will also be available for review at various public places around campus, including Earl Gregg Swem Library and the Marshall-Wythe School of Law library.

According to committee Chairman Jack Edwards, the new bylaws clarify the role of the Publications Council as an educational rather than a punitive or disciplinary body.

"The proposed bylaws take a very clear freedom of expression stance and state that the council can not censor publications," Edwards said. "The council instead will act as a mediator in incidents such as The Pillory affair. The idea is to sensitize organizations [before an incident occurs] and head it off."

If a publication sparks debate such as The Pillory cartoon did, the proposed bylaws give the council the authority to convene public meetings to discuss the problem.

Under the proposal, the Publications Council would continue in its role of selecting editors and determining funding for College-recognized publications and the radio station. The Publications Council could not, however, take content into consideration when determining future funding.

While the existing bylaws grant the Publications Council the power to punish or remove the editor of a publication, the proposed policies explicitly deny this power to the council.

Each publication must maintain certain guidelines that its editors set and the council accepts.

If the publication fails to live up to the non-content-based guidelines, the council gives a publication one year to improve its operation or risk loss of funding.

Now that a draft is complete, Edwards said the review committee plans to hold one or two more meetings to consider additional changes after the public hearing. The report then goes to Sullivan.

Sullivan has asked that the Publications Council submit its final report by Feb. 15.

The publications review committee includes two students, Kerri Gilmore and Melinda Seeds, and four faculty and staff members, Richard Lowry, assistant professor of English; Rodney Smolla, professor of law; Ray Betzner, director of public information and Edwards, professor of government. Associate Vice President for Student Affairs Ken Smith served in an adjunct capacity to the committee.
