Town & Gown

Town & Gown luncheons resume on Thursday, Sept. 15, when Kathleen F. Slevin, associate professor of sociology, will speak on "Women in Retirement: Are Their Experiences Different From Those of Men?"

For additional information and reservation instructions, see the luncheon listing in the Calendar on the back page of this paper.

Smith To Lecture On Rape And The Politics Of Genocide

Government Professor Roger W. Smith will present a lecture on rape and the politics of genocide Friday, Sept. 9, at 3:30 p.m. The lecture, which is an attempt to understand systematic, sustained and sanctioned rapes such as those in Bosnia, will take place in the Reves Room at the Wendy and Emery Reves Center for International Studies.

"Rape is such a pervasive aspect of the history of genocide that it is surprising that so little attention has been paid to it," said Smith. "On the other hand, there has been little recognition generally that victimization in genocide often follows lines of gender."

Throughout his talk, Smith will emphasize the political purposes of rape, and show that such behavior is part of a policy process rather than the 'excesses' of individuals. Smith will also use psychological theory to illuminate particular aspects of the politics of rape, such as rituals of degradation that endow the perpetrator with a sense of power and reduce the victim to a despised and powerless object, he said.

The lecture will conclude with a discussion of the legal status of rape within the context of genocide.

Smith, a graduate of Harvard College with master's and doctoral degrees from the University of California-Berkeley, is a leading international expert on human rights issues.

For more information about the lecture, contact Smith at ext. 13038, or Michael Clark, assistant director of the Reves Center, at ext. 13593.

Economic Growth Rapidly Transforming China

When Craig Canning visited Beijing in 1992, very few yellow taxis or miandi occupied the city's streets. When Canning returned to the Chinese city this past June, Beijing was inundated with the cars.

For Canning, the proliferation of miandi exemplifies the rapid economic transformation China has undergone not only in the last decade, but particularly in recent years.

"It is nearly impossible to fully grasp the scale and pace of change in China today without actually going there and seeing for yourself," said Canning, associate director of the Reves Center for International Studies. "The [American] media can't begin to capture the sense of dynamism that is sweeping China."

As a scholar escort for the Fulbright Summer Seminar on Chinese History and Culture, Canning accompanied 16 social studies teachers chosen from the primary, secondary, and university levels to mainland China and Hong Kong. Among other activities designed to immerse the group in China and its culture, participants attended lectures by Chinese instructors at Beijing Normal University on topics such as economic reform, population policy, women and the family, and human rights in China.

One obvious sign that the country is undergoing rapid economic development is the arrival of gridlock. "For a nation that formerly moved mainly on bicycles, gridlock was an unheard of phenomenon," Canning said. "Today it is a chronic problem in Shanghai, Beijing and other large cities."

Mass migration of millions of Chinese to the cities has helped precipitate an explosion in building development. In Shanghai, construction is occurring around the clock, and the city is literally being transformed overnight, Canning said.

Despite the stress that economic development has placed on infrastructure and housing, Canning believes that the quality of life continues to improve significantly for most Chinese.

"Stores are full of high-quality, affordable goods. People are buying color televisions, VCRs, refrigerators and air conditioners—luxuries well beyond most household budgets only a short time ago," he said.

Although many United States citizens and policymakers hold a "deep revulsion" for the Chinese government's refusal to make concessions on human rights and its continued crackdown on dissidents, Canning said most Chinese do not empathize with those who would like to push for political liberalization immediately.

"It appears that political reform is not the number one priority for most people today," he said. "Of

Archaeological Excavation At VIMS Uncovers Host Of Artifacts

Recent excavation at several construction sites on the Virginia Institute of Marine Science campus uncovered several significant finds related to historic Gloucestertown and its two forts.

Over the past few months, staff and students of the Center for Archaeological Research of the Department of Anthropology, supervised by field archaeologist Kenneth Stuck, uncovered more than 125 below-ground features. These included two relatively intact brick cellars, a house dating to the early 18th century and possibly a warehouse dating from the late 18th to the early 19th century.

Among the materials recovered during the excavations were a mid-18th-century Iberian storage jar, European and American ceramics, animal bone of all kinds and the breech portion of a large Civil War cannon.

It will take three to six months for archaeologists to clean, identify and analyze the thousands of artifacts discovered during the summer. Considering the fact that historical records of Gloucester County prior to 1850 are virtually non-existent, the recent excavations could reveal much about the function of the community from the late 1600s through the mid-1800s.

"This project affords us a wonderful opportunity to obtain an archaeological cross-section of the town," said Donald W. Linebaugh, co-director of the Center. "From the several digs that we've conducted at VIMS, it appears that the original pattern of buildings and streets is remarkably intact."

After analyzing the features and artifacts from the recent work, Center archaeologists will combine them with information from several digs conducted at VIMS since 1989. AutoCAD, a computer modeling program, will be used to create a three-dimensional picture of what Gloucestertown, a National Register of Historic Places site, may have looked like.

"Eventually, we hope to determine how the landscape at Gloucestertown was used through time, how people lived and interacted in this setting, the town's re-

Kennedy Named Assistant to the President

Colleen Kennedy, associate professor of English, has been named assistant to President Timothy J. Sullivan and chief of staff. Kennedy takes the place of Virginia L. McLaughlin, who announced her desire to return to the School of Education last spring.

"I took the job because I wanted a broader view of the College than my previous position provided," Kennedy said from her new office in the Brafferton. "I had a fairly narrow viewpoint. After five years here, I knew a lot about what undergraduate education entailed but not how the College worked with Richmond and the legislature, or how administrators functioned in relation to each other."

Kennedy, who recently received tenure at William and Mary, will serve as an adviser to the President on faculty and student matters. She is working with the President's Aides, for example, and on developing mentorships between the Governor's School and William and Mary faculty.

Kennedy is taking a sabbatical from teaching this semester in order to become more familiar with her new responsibilities. She can be reached by mail at either the Brafferton or in care of the English department at Tucker Hall.

Her phone number is ext. 11254.

Kennedy, a graduate of the University of Texas and the University of California-Irvine, joined the William and Mary faculty in 1988. Her areas of concentration include contemporary American fiction, feminist criticism and composition theory.

IN MEMORIAM

Bruce J. Neilson

Professor of Marine
Science Emeritus

August 31, 1994

To The College Community:

It is with very deep regret that I inform you of the death on Tuesday, Aug. 30, of Bruce J. Neilson, professor of marine science emeritus at the College of William and Mary's School of Marine Science/Virginia Institute of Marine Science.

Professor Neilson received his A.B., M.A. and M.S.E. degrees from Princeton University and his Ph.D. from Johns Hopkins University. He was an active researcher, teacher and faculty member of the SMS/VIMS for 22 years.

He led the VIMS program in environmental engineering, directed the research program in physical oceanography as a division head and contributed significantly to the development of the academic program as a teacher and mentor.

Professor Neilson published numerous articles and reports on topics related to water quality and natural resource management issues during his career. He worked closely with natural resources management agencies at the federal, state and local levels. His advice was actively sought by agencies such as the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Virginia Department of Health, the Marine Resources Commission and local planning district commissions. His tireless devotion in communication with natural resource managers and stewards greatly enhanced the advisory mission of the Virginia Institute of Marine Science.

He served as faculty secretary and chair of the Educational Policy Committee, among many others, provided leadership and contributed significantly to the development of the institution and its programs. He will also be remembered for his pioneering efforts in establishing the Matthew Fontaine Maury Fellowship Fund, the School of Marine Science's first endowed graduate fellowship.

Survivors include a daughter, Jana Neilson of Louisa, Va.; a son, James E. Eversole of Laurel, Md.; his parents, Dugald and Margaret Neilson of New Alexandria, Pa.; a sister, Margaret Pirc of Grove City, Pa.; and his life partner, A. J. Stafford of Gloucester.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, 162 Prince George St., Annapolis, MD, 21401 or to Virginians for Justice, 6 North Sixth St., Ste. LL3, Richmond, VA, 23219.

Center Projects Total Nearly $6 Million To Date

gional function, and perhaps even patterns of trade," Linebaugh said.

Excavations over the summer preceded the installation of a new sanitary sewer line for the VIMS campus. College archaeologists are planning two other digs at VIMS this fall prior to the expansion of Nunnally Hall and the construction of the new Environmental Toxicology and Pathology Research Center.

The work at the VIMS campus atop old Gloucester town is only one of the Center's many research projects. Founded in 1988, the Center provides archaeological research services for public and private agencies and organizations. During the six years of its operation, the Center has undertaken more than 500 projects totaling nearly $6 million in grants and contracts.

Through these projects, the Center also offers both undergraduate and graduate students in anthropology, history and American studies an opportunity for practical training in the growing field of cultural resource management archaeology.

In conjunction with the Department of Anthropology, the Center offers several avenues for students to gain an understanding of the applied aspects of the field, including internships, courses and work/study.

This fall, the College Woods will become the laboratory for undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in Anthropology 415, "Practicing Cultural Resource Management." Linebaugh and Dennis B. Blanton, the Center's other co-director, will guide the students in a week-long field exercise to identify archaeological sites.

Previous work in the College Woods by anthropology alumna Suanna Selby '94 suggested the potential for both Native American sites and small 19th-century farms. Students in this fall's class will examine the soils in a small section of the woods for possible artifacts.

Three Good Reasons To Listen To 'With Good Reason'

Three College professors are among the guests this fall on "With Good Reason," a public radio program sponsored by the Virginia Higher Education Broadcasting Consortium.

"With Good Reason" is a weekly, half-hour radio show featuring interviews with outstanding faculty members at Virginia's public colleges and universities on topics of interest to the general public.

"We try to bring the work and thoughts of scholars, researchers, writers, artists and scientists alive through informative conversations," said Laura Womack, the show's host. "We specifically avoid topics that listeners might interpret as direct advertising as well as public policy issues bearing directly on the financial interests of the colleges and universities."

Guests from different institutions are typically paired together for half-hour discussions on topics such as Virginia's economic outlook, effective parenting, the African-American experience and current news events like health-care reform and the Middle East.

Bill DuPaul, department head of advisory services at the College's Virginia Institute of Marine Science, School of Marine Science, will be a guest on the program aired during the week of Sept. 4-10. He will discuss "Net Profit: The Future of Virginia's Seafood Industry" with George Flick of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. Together they will examine Virginia's seafood industry and what can be done to safeguard it.

"Managing Miracles: The Role of Ethics in Modern Science" will be the program's topic Sept. 18-24. Hans Tiefel of William and Mary's religion department will be a guest along with John Fletcher, a biomedical ethicist, at the University of Virginia.

A third program marks the 40th anniversary of Brown vs. Board of Education, the landmark Supreme Court decision which led to desegregation. Rodney Smolla, Arthur Hanson Professor of Law and director of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at William and Mary, and Melvin Urofsky, history professor at Virginia Commonwealth University each organized a national conference to celebrate. They will both be guests on the Oct. 2-8 program, "Color Code: The Legacy of Brown vs. Board of Education," discussing the decision's impact on civil rights in the South then and now.

When "With Good Reason" began in 1992, it aired only twice a month on a few public radio stations. However, because of the rapid success of the program, it expanded to a weekly schedule this year and can be heard on radio stations across Virginia.

Today, "With Good Reason" has more than 487,023 potential listeners per show, according to Arbitron ratings. Stations offering the program set local air times. In the Hampton Roads area, "With Good Reason" can be heard on WHRV-FM 89.5 on Tuesdays at 11 a.m.

The Virginia Higher Education Broadcasting Consortium is a volunteer association of the state's public higher education institutions, the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia and the Virginia

Rodney Smolla

Foundation for the Humanities and Public Policy.

As a member of the consortium, William and Mary takes an active role in the planning and preparation of "With Good Reason." Each fall the College submits a list of outstanding scholars and researchers to be considered for the year's programs.

Department chairs, deans and program directors are encouraged to contact Kelley Daspit of University Relations at ext. 11631 by Friday, Sept. 9, to nominate their outstanding faculty. Please include the name of the person, his or her specialty and a possible topic for discussion.

Faculty Assembly
Meetings Scheduled

Regular meetings of the Faculty Assembly will be held Sept. 27, Oct. 25, and Nov. 22. Meetings for spring 1995 are scheduled for Jan. 24, Feb. 28, March 28, April 25, and May 9. All meetings will take place at 3:30 p.m. in the Board Room of Blow Hall, third floor. All members of the College community are invited to attend.

Keio University Students Study At College

Approximately 45 Japanese college students studied multiculturalism at the College during the Keio University Summer Program July 25 through Aug. 15.

The program enabled students from the Shonan Fujisawa campus of Keio University in Fujisawa City, Japan, to develop a better understanding of the complexities of American society while living on campus with William and Mary students.

Shonan Fujisawa began five years ago as an experimental university in Japan that took creative approaches to teaching and learning while focusing on an international curriculum. Keio University is the most prestigious private university in Japan, accepting some of the most creative and intelligent youth in the country.

The three-week program at William and Mary was designed to give Japanese students a better understanding of the complexities of American society by introducing representative cultures, histories and people. Students learned how race, ethnicity and gender have helped to shape the contemporary United States.

Professors from William and Mary's American Studies Program led small discussion groups.

Students also visited an American company, a fishing village, a baseball game, churches, Williamsburg's historic area and Carter's Grove plantation.

One of the goals of the program was to improve the students' English language skills. With the assistance of language specialists, students spoke English at least 14 hours a day and worked to acquire a practical vocabulary.

Students spent one day studying volunteerism in America. They participated in community service activities at a variety of locations around Williamsburg.

Student Conference Funding Application Deadlines

The following deadlines have been set for the submission to the 1994-95 Conference Fund. The Conference Fund has been established to provide financial assistance to full-time graduate and undergraduate students. Guidelines and applications are available from the Office of the Student Activities Accountant, Campus Center Room 208. Questions concerning conference funding should be addressed to Anita Hamlin, student activities accountant, ext. 13271, or Kenneth Smith, associate vice president for student affairs, ext. 13270.

1994-95 Conference Fund Deadlines:

Sept. 19, 1994	Conferences from: Oct. 1, 1994 to Jan. 31, 1995
Jan. 20, 1995	Conferences from: Feb. 1, 1995 to April 30, 1995
April 17, 1995	Conferences from: May 1, 1995 to Sept. 30, 1995

Applications received after the deadline will not be considered.

Student Teaching Applications Available

Application forms for School of Education students who plan to student teach during the spring semester 1995 are available in Jones 221.

News To Publish Special Edition

A special edition of the William and Mary News will be published next Wednesday, Sept. 14. Deadline for calendar submissions is Friday, Sept. 9. Items may now be e-mailed to wmnews@mail.wm.edu or sent via campus mail to the News Office in Holmes House.

Chinese People 'Hustling' To Find Opportunities

course, many Chinese are concerned about the future [of China] after the Deng Xiaoping era. But for the time being their main goal is finding opportunities to better their lives. People are hustling."

Canning agrees with President Clinton's recent decision to separate human rights issues from trade policy and renew China's Most Favored Nation (MFN) trade status. Had Clinton chosen not to renew MFN, in addition to severe economic repercussions especially in Hong Kong and south China, the U.S. aviation and other major industries as well as millions of American consumers would have suffered the economic consequences, Canning said.

Based on personal observations and conversations concerning the continued erosion of central government control over the lives of the common person, Canning believes that the Chinese have more personal and political freedom today than most Americans realize. Even at the highly visible level of national politics, change is apparent. He cited a vote earlier this year in the National People's Congress, usually considered a rubber stamp for central government policy, in which a sizable minority of representatives voted against an official proposal for a major dam project on the Yangzi River.

"Continued economic growth, with its much desired spillover effect on living standards, requires social and political stability," Canning said. "As I see it, the Chinese apparently believe that economic progress will eventually produce political reform. They know that taking to the streets won't bring about change. Time will."

Search Underway For New Dean Of Arts And Sciences

The Arts and Sciences Dean's Search Committee plans an open meeting for the College community in order to hear ideas about criteria and other issues that the committee should be considering in the course of its work. This meeting will be Wednesday, Sept. 14, at 5 p.m. in the Colony Room of the University Center.

Individuals who cannot attend should send any ideas or comments to the committee through the chair, Linda Reilly, Department of Classical Studies.

In April President Sullivan appointed a committee charged with undertaking an internal and national search for the position of Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences. This committee has begun its task, which is to submit a short list of acceptable candidates to the president by Feb. 1, 1995.

The selection of a new Dean of Arts and Sciences is a critical one for the College, and the committee wants to create the strongest possible pool of candidates for consideration. The search committee would like to ask members of the College community for nominations of potential candidates for this position. Any suggestions should be forwarded to Reilly by Sept. 19.

Other members of the Committee include: Christopher J. Abelt, chemistry; Lawrence C. Becker, philosophy; Joanne M. Braxton, English; Matthew S. Coffey, graduate student; Edward P. Crapol, history; Tomoko Hamada, anthropology; Gary A. Kreps, sociology; Chi-Kwong Li, mathematics; Paul Marcus, Law; E. Shannon Smith, undergraduate; Eugene R. Tracy, physics

The following position announcement has been advertised nationwide.

Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, College of William and Mary

The College of William and Mary invites applications and nominations for the position of Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences.

The Dean is the chief administrative officer of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, which includes 27 academic departments and programs. The Dean is responsible for the administration of instructional programs, budgetary planning and allocation, faculty development, academic advising and state-mandated assessment programs within the Faculty of Arts and Sciences. The Dean is assisted administratively by a Dean of Undergraduate Studies, a Dean of Graduate Studies of Arts and Sciences, and an Associate Vice Provost for Academic Technology. The Dean reports to the Provost. Salary will be competitive and commensurate with qualifications.

Candidates should have an earned doctorate or equivalent and should be established scholars with administrative experience consonant with the complexity of a state-supported university. They should have a strong commitment to liberal education, scholarship and issues of diversity. The position carries professorial rank with tenure in the appropriate department.

Nominations, or, in the case of applicants, a letter of application and resume should be sent to:

Professor Linda Collins Reilly
Chair, A&S Dean's Search Committee
Department of Classical Studies

In addition, applicants should arrange for four letters of recommendation to be sent to the above address. The search committee will begin reviewing applications by 16 Oct. 1994 and will continue the review and interview process until the position is filled. The starting date for the position is 1 July 1995.

The College of William and Mary is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer. Members of underrepresented groups (including people of color, persons with disabilities, Vietnam veterans and women) are encouraged to apply.

NEH Grant Allows Fehrenbach To Continue Work On Library Listing

Robert J. Fehrenbach, professor of English, has been awarded an $84,000 grant by The National Endowment for the Humanities to continue the work of Private Libraries in Renaissance England. Fehrenbach is general editor of PLRE, an international historical and bibliographical project he began in 1986. The grant, one of only 38 awards made from over 180 proposals, is the second that Fehrenbach has received from NEH; the first, for $130,000, supported PLRE from 1991 to 1994. The grant total of $214,000 is the largest combined funding ever awarded by NEH to a single scholarly project at William and Mary.

In printed and electronic forms, PLRE provides detailed information about private libraries in England from the late-15th century to the mid-17th. Lists of privately owned books are edited and annotated from manuscripts such as personal catalogs, account books and wills, and especially from the thousands of inventories of property recorded for probate during the Tudor and Stuart periods. With the current grant, PLRE will complete editing lists drawn from 162 inventories compiled at Oxford University between 1506 and 1653. Since 1992, three volumes of PLRE have been published, a fourth volume goes to press this fall, and a CD-ROM containing the entire database will soon be available.

Since its appearance, PLRE has been widely recognized for its contribution to a variety of scholarly fields, most especially intellectual and social history and historical bibliography. Sears Jayne, professor emeritus, Brown University, has characterized the project as "an event of major importance to historians of the Tudor Period"; and Christian Coppens, keeper of rare books and manuscripts, Louvain University Library (Belgium), described the undertaking as a "fantastic project." Anne Lake Prescott of Barnard College, Columbia University, in addressing its interdisciplinary value, stated that "scholars of all stripes will applaud PLRE," while Arthur Kinney, editor of English Literary Renaissance, has praised PLRE as "eternally and infinitely useful."

David McKitterick, fellow and librarian, Trinity College, Cambridge, judged that PLRE "proffers the essential balance to the STCs for everyone working in the period," and Margaret Lane Ford of the British Library has written that "PLRE will clearly be the greatest resource of its kind."

Scholars in Berne, Adelaide, Leyden, Belfast, Montpellier, Toronto, Zürich, Rome, Oxford, and Cambridge, are among the historians and bibliographers who have sought information from the Williamsburg master database on such diverse subjects as: Erasmus and Raleigh readership, 17th-century law books, Neo-Latin culture in 16th-century England, the dissemination of Continental emblem books, the use of Aristotle's Rhetoric in Renaissance England, and the influence of Continental Reformers on mid-16th-century England.

In addition to the NEH support, the work of PLRE has been funded by the British Academy, Cambridge University, the Folger Shakespeare Library, and the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research.

PLRE is published in the United States by Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies and abroad by a leading electronic publisher in England, Adam Matthew Publications.
