Pulitzer-Prize Winning Columnist To Speak At Charter Day

David Broder, The Washington Post columnist whose work appears in more than 300 papers across the country, will be the principal speaker for Charter Day on Saturday, Feb. 4, at the College.

Broder was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for Distinguished Commentary in 1973, and has been an associate editor of The Washington Post since 1975. He has written a number of books on the national political scene, including The Party's Over: The Failure of Politics in America and The Republican Establishment: The Present and Future of the G.O.P.

'Eagles' Will Soon Be 'Soaring' In UC

A 22-foot high sculpture of two bald eagles in flight titled "Soaring Eagles," by David Turner '83, will be dedicated in the University Center at 3 p.m., Friday, Dec. 9. All members of the College community are invited to attend.

A gift of Dorothy R. Blair, the sculpture will be dedicated in honor of Mitchell Byrd, Chancellor Professor of Biology Emeritus, "whose tireless efforts have been instrumental in the resurgence of the bald eagle."

Turner, who usually adopts wildlife themes for his pieces, decided upon two eagles as the centerpiece for this sculpture after thinking about possible symbols for the College. "The bald eagle seemed somewhat symbolic and a great tie-in considering the College's history and the significance of the Tercentenary," said Turner.

In addition to honoring Byrd, Turner and the College also felt the sculpture would serve as a fitting reminder about the need for conservation.

The University Center lobby with its high ceiling and skylights also suited Turner's sculpture, which emulates two bald eagles banking above a treetop.

A student of Byrd's while studying biology at the College, Turner had a familiarity with his subject before beginning "Soaring Eagles." However, to model the numerous details that photographs can't capture required him to travel to the State bald eagle rehabilitation facility in Weyer's Cave, Va.

"It was real tricky trying to work with the eagles," said Turner. "Getting them to sit still, of course, is very difficult."

Another of Turner's sculptures, "Great Blue Heron and Marsh Wren," was installed in Crim Dell in 1992.

David Turner puts the finishing touches on one of the eagles in his sculpture for the University Center.

College And Colonial Williamsburg To Portray History of Wren Building

by Peggy Shaw

The College of William and Mary and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation have announced plans for a joint partnership to portray the history of the Sir Christopher Wren Building, the country's oldest building in continuous academic use. An on-site exhibit at the Wren Building, long a visible symbol of the partnership between the two institutions, is now being designed and is scheduled to be completed this winter.

"The story of the Wren Building is not only William and Mary's story and the story of the Commonwealth but the story of our country as well," said President Timothy J. Sullivan. "This is a unique opportunity for Colonial Williamsburg and the College to join forces to tell that story."

The Wren Building, begun on Aug. 8, 1695, has endured 300 years of fires, wars and America's changing forces. Military troops used the building in the American Revolution and the War Between the States as a barracks, a hospital and a depot for commissary stores. From 1700-1704, the Virginia House of Burgesses assembled in the building's Great Hall until the Capitol was completed, and students with names like Thomas Jefferson and James Monroe studied in the Moral Philosophy room.

The Wren was restored to its colonial appearance in 1928 and designated a National Historic Landmark by the Department of the Interior in 1962. Since then, the Georgian elegance of the building's facade has become well-known to Americans and others through its depiction by artists and photographers.

Robert C. Wilburn, president of the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation, said Colonial Williamsburg is particularly pleased that this exhibit will take place in the first original 18th-century public building in Williamsburg to be restored.

"The College and the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation have been inseparable partners and neighbors for nearly 70 years, and the Wren Building is the embodiment of our close relationship," said Wilburn. "The final product will be a graphic and dramatic presentation of this historic building and the College itself and the roles both played over the years in our community.

"This exhibit will provide both visitors and residents with new insights to and appreciation of our past."

The rich story of the Wren Building will be presented in a 340-square-foot stair hall off the main entryway, next to the Wren Information Center. The exterior of the historic building will remain unchanged.

This intimate exhibit space will be designed to serve as an introduction to the College and the city, offering visitors graphic information on the history of the stately Georgian building believed to have been designed by the well-known royal English architect, Sir Christopher Wren, according to W. Samuel Sadler, vice president of Student Affairs at the College and chairman of a joint committee overseeing the project. Wall-mounted graphic displays will tell the story of the Wren Building's struggle to survive three centuries.

Research for the project was done at the College last summer. Members of the Colonial Williamsburg staff are now producing designs, and will provide technical assistance and workmanship as the project proceeds.

First Phase Of College Bookstore Renovation Completed

The main sales area of the College Bookstore opened last week following less than three months of renovation. The entire facility should be completely renovated by January.

Among the most noticeable changes to the Bookstore, which is managed by Barnes & Noble, has been the addition of 12 feet in display space on the main floor. New overhead lighting, a revamped register area and information desk are also new features.

Over the next month, Barnes & Noble will begin stocking the main sales area with more than 40,000 trade or general interest books—35,000 more titles than the Bookstore previously carried. For a collection of this type, this will be one of the largest at any Barnes & Noble college bookstore.

The Bookstore will also soon carry a sizable assortment of magazines and have a small seating area for reading.

Formerly the textbook area, the rear room off to the right is being converted to a school and art supplies room. The new textbook area will be located downstairs and is 40 percent larger in space than its predecessor.

College and Barnes & Noble officials are planning a gala grand opening some time in late January.

New Society Of The Alumni Award Recognizes Volunteer Service

By Emily Jones '95

Whether it's making countless phone calls, traveling to high schools nationwide or working on committees, these alumni are often behind the front lines, ready to do all sorts of jobs or help out in a pinch. The new Alumni Service Award recognizes those individuals who work behind the scenes in outstanding support of alumni groups.

Individuals and organizations nominated exceptional volunteers for the award. The Alumni Society's Board of Directors, which created the award, selected the winners from the nominations. Up to seven Alumni Service Awards will be given annually by the Alumni Society in conjunction with the organization that nominated the recipient.

Involved in many areas of alumni activity, the recipients of the first Alumni Service Awards are:

Marilyn Miller Entwisle '44 was nominated by the Office of Admission for her commitment to that office and the Society. "She has always been willing to bail us out at the last minute by conducting regularly scheduled staff interviews in addition to her own scheduled interviews and her responsibilities as local coordinator," says Virginia Carey, dean of admission.

Charlotte Tolley Etgen '59 was recognized by the Office of Admission for her involvement with the Houston chapter of the Alumni Admission Network. In her volunteer position, Etgen visits over 40 high schools and attends almost 20 college fairs each year.

Raymond Robert "Bob" Goodhart '65 was nominated by the Association of 1775 for the numerous hours he spends calling alumni and encouraging their participation in that association as well as in the Order of the White Jacket and the newly formed Botetourt chapter. In addition to this, Goodhart helped to plant the garden at the Alumni House as a memorial to those who have served their country.

James John Seu '53 was credited by the Order of the White Jacket as being one of the driving forces behind that organization. Seu also was recognized for his 35 years of service with William and Mary athletics. As the owner of The Colonial Restaurant, Seu has provided free meals for many different William and Mary athletic teams.

Thaddeus R. Shelly III '84 M.B.A. was recognized by the M.B.A. Alumni Association for his strong leadership and involvement. According to his nomination, Shelly "sets the record for participating in activities to assist and inform M.B.A. students about the business world outside the classroom."

Mary Jo White '84 J.D. was nominated by the William and Mary Law School Association Board for her nine years of active involvement. White has held numerous positions in the association, including president. In addition to her association positions, White has been a key member of two Dean Search committees, reviewing many resumes and applications and interviewing candidates.

Elizabeth C. Young-Kirkey '83 was nominated by the Hulon Willis Association for her leadership and personal commitment. Young-Kirkey has worked to improve relations of African-American alumni with the College and the Society, contacting alumni for the H.W.A. newsletter and fund-raising for H.W.A.

HACE Sponsoring Annual Holiday Luncheon

The Hourly and Classified Employees Association cordially invites all College employees to its annual holiday luncheon, Tuesday, Dec. 13, at noon, in Chesapeake Room A of the University Center. The William and Mary Child Care Children's Choir, Gretna Smith, and Janice Bunting will provide entertainment. No reservations are required and the luncheon is free.

IN MEMORIAM

Anna O. Braxton

Anna Odell Braxton, 70, a retired employee of the College, died Nov. 29. Braxton retired from the College in 1977, after 21 years of service.

Mrs. Braxton is survived by a daughter, three sons, two sisters, a brother, 11 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

A funeral service will be conducted at 2 p.m. on Saturday in Shiloh Baptist Church by the Rev. Wilbert Warren. Burial will follow in the church cemetery.

A viewing will be held at Whiting's Funeral Home from 5 to 7 p.m. tonight.

Joseph H. Banks Sr.

Joseph H. Banks Sr., former grounds maintenance person at the College, died Nov. 26. He was 80 years old.

Banks, who retired from the College in 1974 after many years of service, is survived by his wife, three sons, three daughters, one sister, 17 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

A funeral service was held yesterday at New Zion Baptist Church in Williamsburg.

Board Approves Hamilton Endowment

The College Board of Visitors recently approved an endowment established by the late Margaret L. Hamilton, professor of government emeritus. Proceeds from the $200,400 endowment will be used for faculty salaries.

Hamilton began teaching in the government department at the College in 1953, where she remained until her retirement in 1986. Hamilton primarily taught in the areas of comparative politics and international relations, but also taught courses on American government and other subjects.

In addition to her teaching and research, Hamilton took an active role as chair of the government department from 1973 to 1978. She served on numerous committees at the College including those on educational policy, faculty affairs and foreign studies.

Campus Classroom Connections Features Language Lab

William and Mary's Language Learning Laboratory has been selected as one of 11 facilities to be featured in Campus Classroom Connections. The technologically advanced laboratory, located in Washington Hall, was profiled in an article titled "Building with Information Technology: A Case Study Guide of Higher Education Facilities."

The selection was made as part of a special project funded by the New Jersey Department of Higher Education to develop a guidebook of "Classrooms of the future."

William and Mary opened its Language Learning Laboratory in 1991. The facility has enhanced instruction in many areas, particularly in the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures.

Republican Governors Celebrate At William and Mary Hall

The nation's Republican governors gathered in Williamsburg last week to discuss common issues and celebrate the emergence of Republican political clout across the country.

During the meeting of the Republican Governors Association, political leaders discussed the impact of the GOP controlling 30 governorships and both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The governors talked with federal leaders about the need to eliminate unfunded federal mandates. Costs associated with these mandates, such as the Clean Water and Clean Air acts, are often passed along to the states.

On Nov. 21, the governors were entertained in William and Mary Hall during a dinner. The Statler Brothers also gave a concert. Virginia Gov. George Allen and his wife hosted the event.

A model of the U.S. Capitol served as a backdrop for the evening of festivities.

Gov. and Mrs. Allen (l) observe the National Anthem, which Johanna Chase (r) sings.

HACE Supports Green And Gold Christmas

Members of the Hourly and Classified Employees Association collected $350 in donations for the annual Green and Gold Christmas party. Sponsored by some 400 William and Mary students, the program is designed to benefit underprivileged children in the community. More than 250 children are expected to attend the party which takes place tomorrow in William and Mary Hall. Shown here are HACE Treasurer Joyce Jackson (l) and freshman Jackie Hayes, chair of the fund-raising committee for Green and Gold Christmas.

Dear Fellow Employees:

Thanks to everyone who participated: our holiday projects—the Thanksgiving food drive, filling Salvation Army Christmas stockings for senior citizens, Green and Gold Christmas contributions—have been overwhelmingly successful.

We will again have the collection box for canned and/or dry goods (stuffing mix, cranberries, canned vegetables, etc.) and/or monetary donations at the Dec. 13 general meeting in the University Center and would appreciate your bringing any contributions with you to the meeting. We hope to collect enough to distribute another basket to one (or more) of our fellow employees who may need a helping hand during the holiday.

If you cannot attend the meeting and would still like to donate a canned item or make a monetary donation toward the purchase of a turkey, please forward your donations to any member of the Committee prior to Friday, Dec. 16. Checks should be made payable to HACE.

Thanks in advance for helping someone else have a happy holiday. Should you have any questions, please give one of us a call.

News From The Marshall-Wythe School Of Law

Tax Experts Gather For Two-Day Conference

The 40th William and Mary Tax Conference is being held today and tomorrow at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. More than 250 lawyers and accountants from Virginia and the surrounding area are expected to attend the event, which has the theme "Living With Pass-Through Entities."

Seventeen nationally prominent tax experts, representing law firms, law schools, accounting firms and governments from across the country will be featured. Michael P. Dolan, deputy commissioner of the Internal Revenue Services, is the keynote speaker.

Law School To Participate In Summer Rural Legal Corps

The Marshall-Wythe School of Law has been selected to participate in the National Summer Rural Legal Corps.

The national program places 50 law students from across the country in selected rural legal services offices during the summer of 1995.

Fellows earn $300 per week for up to 10 weeks.

"Legal Services offices often face great challenges in recruiting top quality lawyers," said Thomas Krattenmaker, dean of the law school. "This program will enable our students who may be interested in a career serving indigent clients to get hands-on experience serving people who really need their skills."

Registrar's Office Will Not Generate Transcripts Until All Grades Are Posted

The Office of the University Registrar reminds currently enrolled students that the office does not produce official transcripts during the grade reporting period. Once grades are posted to student records, transcripts may be requested.

Students who do not need a transcript that includes Fall 1994 grades are encouraged to submit their request before Dec. 9. Transcripts with Fall 1994 grades may be requested after Jan. 5.

Students may expect delays of up to 15 days caused by the backlog of requests received during the holiday break. Usually, transcripts are processed and released within three to five working days following receipt of the request during the semester. The office will resume that schedule as quickly as possible.

Students are also reminded that their accounts must be clear of all fines and fees before a transcript will be released. Anyone who has an encumbrance on their record should contact the Bursar's Office for complete information.

In place of an unofficial transcript, students may use a copy of their grade report. Transcripts must be requested in writing and the student's signature is required. Forms are available in Room 108 or outside Room 119, Registrar's Office, Blow Hall.

Program For Gifted Students Begins Feb. 4

The Center for Gifted Education in the School of Education will once again hold its Saturday Enrichment Program beginning Feb. 4 through April 1.

The program recognizes the importance of encouraging highly able students, ages 4 through 18, to explore additional specialized interests.

Courses are open to students who have scored in the upper fifth percentile on a nationally normed aptitude or achievement tests. Eligibility screening by a certified school psychologist is available for a fee. A recommendation is required from school personnel for each applicant.

The application deadline is Dec. 19, and a $10 application fee is non-refundable. The total fee for each course is $165 and some scholarships are available for eligible students. For more information, call ext. 12351.

Holiday Observance

The College will observe the following Christmas holiday leave schedule: December 23, Friday; December 26, Monday; December 27, Tuesday; December 28; Wednesday; December 29, Thursday; December 30, Friday; January 2, Monday.

Notecards Featuring President's Art Collection Available

Blank notecards decorated with artwork from the President's Collection of Faculty and Student Art are now available for purchase.

Notecards depicting mixed-media portraits of King William III and Queen Mary II are being sold in packages of six for $8 at the UC and Bookstore. The portraits, which hang above the central stairway in the University Center, were produced by Associate Prof. Paul Helfrich of the Department of Art and Art History.

Notecards with scenes of student works from the President's Collection are also being sold in the Bookstore and the UC's Students X-Change, as well as the Alumni Society gift shop. The student cards, produced by the Society of the Alumni, are being sold in packages of 12 cards each for $12. Single cards are $1.25. Each package has four copies of three scenes.

Images depicted are: "The Path," by Heather Freese '94; "Sunken Garden Stuff" by Cecilia Bell '92; "Still-life with onions" by Ann Murphy '93; and "Still-life with round table" by Jeffrey Slomba '92.

Proceeds from the sale of the cards will go to purchase more artworks for the collection, which was begun in 1992 with a gift from President Timothy J. Sullivan and his wife, Anne. The purpose of the collection is to acquire, exhibit and preserve exceptional works of art from William and Mary faculty and student artists.

President's Collection artworks are now on permanent display in various campus locations. For more information, contact Valerie Hardy, collection curator, at ext. 12268.

DEPARTMENTS & SCHOOLS

Anthropology

Professor Norman F. Barka presented an invited paper Nov. 4 at the Jamestown Conference, a semi-annual gathering of regional archaeologists, sponsored by the National Park Service and the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities. Barka's paper was on "The Archaeology of the King's Castle, Bermuda." The paper discussed recent discoveries of a 10-year project titled "The First Decade of Settlement: Archaeology of the Original Bermuda Forts, 1612-1622." The project is a joint venture with the Bermuda Maritime Museum.

Art and Art History

Valerie Hardy, curator of the President's Collection of Faculty and Student Art, is one of several featured artists whose work is on display through Jan. 15 at the Peninsula Fine Arts Center. Titled "Interiors/Intimate Presences," Hardy's paintings reflect her work during the last several years. The Peninsula Fine Arts Center is located at 101 Museum Drive in Newport News. Call 804-596-8175 for more information.

Economics

Amit Batabyal, visiting assistant professor, has published papers and book reviews in Ecological Economics, Ecological Modeling, Environmental and Resource Economics, Journal of Asian Economics, Kyklos, and Resource and Energy Economics.

English

Assistant Professor Chris Bongie received the annual Modern Fiction Studies Margaret Church Award for his essay "Lost in the Maze of Doubting: J. M. Coetzee's Foe and the Politics of (Un)likeness," published in Vol. 39, No. 2 (1993) of Modern Fiction Studies. The award is given for the best essay published in Modern Fiction Studies in a given year as determined by a selection committee of scholars in the fields of modern narrative theory.

Mary Ann Melfi, visiting assistant professor, recently gave an invited paper titled "Consumption as Metaphor: On the Verge of Life in Villette" at an international conference titled "The Brontës: Webs of Consciousness" held Nov. 3-5 at Baylor University's Armstrong Browning Library.

Adam Potkay, assistant professor, has recently had published The Fate of Eloquence in the Age of Hume. The book explores the fate of eloquence in a period during which it both denoted a living oratorical art and served as a major factor in political thought. For Potkay, the tension between the ideals of ancient eloquence and of modern politeness defined literary and political discourses alike between 1726 and 1770. Although politeness eventually gained ascendancy, eloquence was never silenced.

Government

Christopher Howard, assistant professor, co-authored a chapter, "Citizen Participation in Urban Politics: Rise and Routinization" (with Michael Lipsky and Dale Rogers Marshall), that was published in George E. Peters (ed.), Big City Politics, Governance, and Fiscal Constraints (Urban Institute Press, 1994). The chapter focuses primarily on participation by racial minorities and the poor.

Modern Languages And Literatures

Ann Marie Stock, assistant professor, has had the results of her recent research published in Studies in Latin American Popular Culture. Stock's essay is titled "Out of the Archives: Preserving Latin American Cinema Documents."

Bhala To Serve On Advisory Council To Gov. Allen

Raj Bhala, assistant professor of law, has been named to Governor Allen's Advisory Council on Self-Determination and Federalism.

The Council will provide advice and assistance to the governor and executive agencies regarding state-federal relations and reforms. The 50-member body will be co-chaired by Secretary of Natural Resources Becky Norton Dunlop and Charles Cooper, a former U.S. Attorney General and Chair of President Reagan's Working Group on Federalism.

"With the help, advice and assistance of this very capable council, we intend to bring new attention and focus to the issue of State sovereignty, not only here in Virginia, but around the country," said Allen. "They share not only an uncommon vision of a dynamic federal system in which the state and the people again fulfill their role as laboratories of democracy and as the front line in addressing the needs and aspirations of the people."

Bhala

Philosophy

Professors Larry Becker, Alan Fuchs, and David Jones, and Associate Professor George Harris conducted twice-daily seminars for a conference of domestic relations court judges from around the country held in Williamsburg, Oct. 29 to Nov. 3. Sponsored by the American Academy of Judicial Education, the conference was organized around the topic "Domestic Relations: Philosophic Ethics and Decision Making."

Psychology

Professor Ellen Rosen recently presented a paper titled, "Computers and Sexuality Education: Tapping into the Wild Side," at the 24th annual meeting of the Society for Computers in Psychology in St. Louis. The paper was co-authored by Linda Petty, professor of psychology, Hampton University. Rosen is a member of the board of directors of the society.

School of Business

Dean Al Page is serving on Virginia's "International Trade and Development Working Group," part of the governor's endeavor to develop a comprehensive state strategic plan for economic development.

Page moderated two panels at a recent symposium on German-American Business Cooperation that took place in the State House Chambers in Richmond. The first panel dealt with "What German Companies Seek in a U.S. Location" and the second panel focused on "Support for German Businesses in Virginia."

He also moderated a panel discussion of members of the Virginia Manufacturing Association this fall, dealing with corporate restructuring in Virginia.

The new VMA journal Focus will publish an article by Page on economic development this month.

In addition, Page is the faculty adviser for two economic development field study projects staffed by second-year M.B.A. students. One group is working with the Greater Richmond Chamber of Commerce and the Richmond Regional Planning District Commission. Their task is to assist in updating the Chamber's "A Focus on Our Future" consensus agenda for the greater Richmond area. The second group is working with The Virginia Chamber of Commerce on a study of how Virginians will earn their income in 20 years with respect to basic employment. The results of the study will be used to assist decisions ranging from corporate training to state and local government resource allocation.

Wanda A. Wallace, the John N. Dalton Professor of Business Administration, was invited in late October to Wake Forest University as the Hylton Lecturer. The topic of her presentation was "Standard Setting from a FASAC Member's Point of View ... Particularly Stock Options." Wallace also recently presented, with co-author John M. Althoff, "Putting Away for a Rainy Day: Anticipating the Los Angeles Earthquake" at the 1994 Accounting Educators mini conference "Innovations in Accounting Pedagogy." The conference was sponsored by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants Academic and Career Development Division in cooperation with and hosted by the School of Business Administration, Portland State University.

School of Education

Associate Professor Brenda Williams and Associate Dean James M. Patton, with the assistance of Stan Jones, Williamsburg-James City County minority achievement coordinator, and of Ethell B. Hill, WJCC director of pupil personnel services, have received a $20,000 grant from the Commonwealth of Virginia

Office of Programs to Serve Homeless Children and Youth. The title of their project is "Project AIMS: Addressing Identity, Motivation and Skills."

James Patton, associate dean and associate professor, recently attended several conferences and workshops where he delivered a number of lectures including: "Exploring the Three Warring Souls of African-American Youth with Gifts and Talents: Developing Social Skills and Leadership Enhancement Strategies" and "Educational Equity in Policy and Practice" at the Council for Exceptional Children's Symposium on Multicultural Exceptional Leaders Conference in San Diego, Calif., Nov. 10-11; "Responding to the Cognitive and Social-Emotional Strengths and Needs of African-American Gifted Learners in the Regular Classroom—A Holistic Approach," at the National Association for Gifted Children in Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 9; "Working with Families from Diverse Cultures," at the 5th Annual Resource/Collaborative Teaching Symposium in Williamsburg, Nov. 4.

School of Law

Dean Thomas Krattenmaker's book, Regulating Broadcast Programming, has just been published by MIT Press. The book, co-authored with Lucas A. Powe Jr., professor of government at the University of Texas, argues that regulation of broadcast content should be based on the same principles used for print media, in which control of editorial content lies in private hands instead of in the government. The book is part of a series commissioned by the American Enterprise Institute on the general topic of Telecommunications Deregulation.

Office of Student Assessment

Six representatives from the College participated in the annual conference on Student Assessment held last month in Virginia Beach.

Randolph Coleman, director of academic advising, presented a paper titled "Assessment and Advising as Unifying Components in the General Education Program at the College of William and Mary."

Heather MacDonald, dean of undergraduate studies of arts and sciences, participated in a poster session titled "Impact of Assessment on Advising in the Major." The poster was co-authored by David Lutzer, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences, and Coleman.

Susan Bosworth, assessment coordinator, and Dawn Taylor-Church, a graduate student in sociology, participated in a poster session titled "Involving Students in Assessment Research."

"Using Assessment to Develop an Efficient Oral Communication Program at the College of William and Mary" was the title of a presentation by Tamara Burk, instructor of theatre and speech.

Former College Chaplain Examines Retreat Ministry In Book

The Rev. Donald B. Harris '57, an ordained Episcopal minister and a former chaplain of William and Mary, has just had his first book, That's How the Light Gets In, published. The book focuses on Harris' founding of Credo Institute, a worldwide retreat ministry.

Harris founded Credo (Latin for "I believe") as a Navy chaplain in California. Credo, which complements self-help programs, 12-step groups, or psychotherapy in fostering spiritual growth, was originally designed to help members of the U.S. Navy and Marines to overcome the spiritual emptiness that was evident in their alcoholism and substance abuse.

"Credo helped people focus on what they were doing to themselves," Harris said. "It was a place of spiritual friendship and safety."

Today, Credo programs operate in the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps throughout the world. Harris himself also continues to organize Credo weekends for college students, the homeless, drug and alcohol abusers, and others in need of a spiritual boost. One such retreat is scheduled next weekend, Dec. 9-11, in Williamsburg at the Williamsburg Christian Retreat Center.

Harris' book draws its name from the lyrics of a Leonard Cohen song: "There's a crack in everything: that's how the Light gets in."

Today Harris and his family serve the William and Mary community in several ways: His wife, Ruth, is the music librarian for the College and all three of Harris' sons have attended the College.

That's How the Light Gets In: A Credo of Friendship has been published by Credo Institute and is available for $18.95 by writing Credo Institute at P.O. Box 2105, Williamsburg, VA 23187. For more information about next week's Credo retreat, contact Harris at 229-8541.

Play It Again: Preston Reconstructs 19th-Century Musicals

In the late 19th century, long before TV and movies, Americans were fascinated by musical theater. In those post-Civil War years, playwright and performer Edward (Ned) Harrigan—the Harrigan of George M. Cohan's tribute song—churned out popular musicals with his favorite collaborator David Braham.

A century later, the songs and scripts to at least two of those popular 19th-century musicals have been published together for the first time in a book edited by Katherine K. Preston, assistant professor of music. The book, Irish American Theater, published by Garland Publishing Inc., includes two musicals hand-picked by Preston: "The Mulligan Guard Ball" (1879) and "Reilly and the Four Hundred" (1890). Preston also wrote the book's introduction.

Irish American Theater is number 10 in the 15-volume series "Nineteenth-Century American Musical Theater" which brings together some of the most culturally influential yet historically inaccessible musical plays of the 19th century. According to Preston, the series is an attempt to help scholars, performers, teachers and students rediscover a vast, untapped reservoir of American cultural history.

"There has never been a compilation like this before," said Preston. "The series attempts to dredge out from various archives the plays themselves and the music so that scholars will be better able to understand the function of musical theater and to make these plays and music available to groups that might be interested in performing them."

In preparing the book, Preston's first task was to locate as much as she could of the Harrigan-Braham plays and scores. Although Harrigan and Braham were prolific and extremely influential on the New York stage in the late 1870s, their plays and music are not available today.

Preston cites several reasons for this: The team was making musical theater history just before the advent of sound recordings and the mass marketing techniques of Tin Pan Alley. None of Harrigan's 42 full-length plays and 80-90 sketches was published during his lifetime, and there is no collection of David Braham's musical manuscripts. Except for the sheet music to popular songs, scores were not routinely published. Overtures, for example, were often lost because there was no market for them.

Fires also wreaked havoc on old plays and scores that were stored in theater buildings. "We assume that much of David Braham's work went up in flames when the New Theatre Comique in New York City burned in 1884," Preston said. "It was standard to keep your music, scripts and instruments in the theater."

Once Preston located as many songs as she could for the project, she was faced with deciding which songs went with which plays, a task more difficult than it sounds since songs were sometimes repeated or dropped from play to play, or reworked into different versions. "The Mulligan Guard Ball," for instance, began as a skit and evolved into a three-act play. "In each incarnation different songs were added," Preston explained. "There were a couple of songs we could not find."

In addition, there was one reference in the play to a Virginia reel, which Preston simply selected herself after conferring with a colleague who is an expert on 19th-century traditional dance music.

Preston found most of her materials in the Music Division of the Library of Congress, the Music and Manuscripts Division of the New York Public Library at Lincoln Center and library sheet music collections.

Preston still holds out the hope that some of the complete orchestral scores to Harrigan-Braham works may yet be found. "I'm not convinced that there's not in someone's attic a trunk full of David Braham's music," she said. "But as far as I know, none of this is in any public collection."

Preston is the author of a 1993 imprint from the University of Illinois Press titled Opera on the Road: Traveling Opera Troupes in the United States, 1825-1860. In this book, which has been described by American historian Lawrence Levine as "pioneering," she examines the place of operatic performance and operatic music in American society during the first half of the century, and challenges commonly held notions of opera as an elite art form by describing its widespread popularity among Americans of varying social and economic classes.

Preston also wrote Music for Hire: Professional Musicians in Washington, D.C., 1877-1900, which was published by Pendragon Press in 1992. She is currently working on a book about late 19th-century American women who were both prima donnas and managers of English-language opera companies in this country.

Preston, who joined the William and Mary faculty in 1989, is an expert on music in 19th-century America. She holds a B.A. from The Evergreen State College in Olympia, Wash., an M.A. from the University of Maryland at College Park and a Ph.D. from the Graduate School of the City University of New York.

David Broder Highlights Charter Day '95

1992 and co-authored by Bob Woodward.

A reporter since 1953, Broder has covered national politics since 1955, when he joined Congressional Quarterly. He was born in Chicago Heights, Ill., and received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Chicago. He has been a fellow of the Institute of Politics at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University and a fellow of the Institute of Policy Sciences and Public Affairs at Duke University.

Broder will receive an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at the ceremony.

Also at Charter Day, the College will bestow an honorary degree on Damon J. Keith, circuit judge of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. Keith has had a distinguished 24-year career on the federal bench.

Prior to his appointment to the Court of Appeals in 1977, Keith served as U.S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Michigan, holding the position of chief judge from 1975 to 1977.

Keith is a member of the Citizen's Advisory Commission on Equal Educational Opportunity of the Detroit Board of Education and co-chair of the United Negro College Fund, Detroit. He has also served as chair of the Michigan Civil Rights Commission. In 1990, Keith was appointed by President George Bush to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

The judge has a number of associations with William and Mary. He was executive chair of the National Steering Committee for "Brown vs. Board of Education After 40 Years: Confronting the Promise," held in May 1994. The conference, co-sponsored by the College's Institute of Bill of Rights Law, drew national attention for its examination of the civil rights movement both before and after the landmark U.S. Supreme Court case.

This spring, Keith delivered the 1994 commencement address at the College's Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

Keith will receive an honorary doctor of laws degree from William and Mary.

Charter Day ceremonies will be held in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall.

Wren Project Draws CW And College Together

Colonial Williamsburg Foundation research indicates that the Wren Building is one of the most popular sites for visitors to Williamsburg. Volunteers from the Christopher Wren Association greeted thousands of visitors to the Wren Building last year.

Sullivan said he was excited that through this portrayal, many thousands of visitors from around the world who come to the College will gain a better understanding of William and Mary's unique place in the nation's history.

"The decisions of William and Mary and Colonial Williamsburg to move forward jointly with a new effort to interpret the Wren Building and William and Mary's history is an important statement of our determination to work together for the improvement of this community," he said.

News Seeking Student Intern

The William and Mary News is looking for a student intern to write news and feature articles next semester. The ideal candidate will be a junior, senior, or graduate student with some experience in journalism, preferably having worked for a student newspaper.

He/she will also have a strong familiarity with the College community and an intention to pursue journalism as a career. One story per issue and at least a one-semester commitment will be required. Submit one short writing sample, a story idea, and resume to Poul Olson, Editor, William and Mary News, Holmes House, 308 Jamestown Road, by Friday, Dec. 9.

This is an unpaid position.

VIMS Working To Give Beleaguered Oyster New Lease On Life

By Poul Olson
Editor

About once a week, Jeff Gardner makes the half hour trek by boat through the marshes near Wachapreague, Va. to check on his crops. They require careful, regular attention against the elements, predators and particularly disease. Often taking two years to grow, they are not easily harvested in a short period of time. Despite all the factors working against him, Gardner is confident that someday his efforts to grow oysters will pay off.

Gardner, who runs his one-man operation "Shellfish for You," and hundreds of other Virginians like him are aquaculturists or farmers of sea animals. Since the 1950s when overharvesting and disease began ravaging once bountiful natural oyster stocks, researchers with the Virginia Institute of Marine Science have been looking into ways to raise oysters, clams, and other edible sea creatures through a variety of methods.

It wasn't until the late 1980s, with oyster stocks nearly completely exhausted due to the virulent and destructive diseases MSX and Dermo, that VIMS launched a program to specifically develop alternative approaches to producing the bivalve.

The effects of this initiative, which has involved a cooperative effort among VIMS scientists and commercial growers, are slowly becoming noticeable. In 1993, oyster aquaculturists sold almost $110,000 in product in Virginia. While this figure pales in comparison to the $11.5 million in cultured clams raised last year, the dollar value of cultured oysters now exceeds the dollar value of the natural oyster harvest from public grounds.

Because of their limited supply, Virginia oysters today command a hefty price compared to other seafood. Prices for oysters, once based on the bushel, is now determined per animal. Some of the largest, best-quality oysters are sold today for 50 cents a piece to restaurants, which often resell them for more than twice that amount.

With the potential to fill market niches left by the decline in stocks of several marine species, an increasing number of oyster enthusiasts and entrepreneurs are turning to aquaculture.

In conjunction with their outreach efforts to develop more effective culturing techniques, VIMS scientists also sponsor a number of workshops on oyster aquaculture. At an all-day session Nov. 19 at the Gloucester Point campus, researchers, private culturists, and other officials spoke to more than 250 culturists, industry experts, and interested community members about the current status and future of oyster aquaculture.

Both VIMS scientists and private culturists agreed that successful aquaculture operations hinge on discovering the right combination of growing techniques and conditions.

"There's no science involved here," said Carter Newell, part-owner of Great Eastern Mussel Company in Maine. "In order to be successful on a fairly large scale and make money, you need a fishermen's attitude [and] the right oyster species, right environment, and right culture techniques."

Newell, who has been in the business since 1982, now harvests between 250,000 and 300,000 oysters each year, some of which are bought for 50 cents a piece.

To reach these production levels required a considerable degree of trial and error. Newell said he had to locate harvest sites with the best potential for "good growth and low mortality."

Because of the large amount of financial risk in beginning a large-scale operation like Newell's and the protracted time (sometimes four years) to grow a market-size oyster, private culturists invariably except the fact that they likely will not make a profit for some time. Many of the culturists who spoke at the workshop cited several years when MSX and Dermo almost completely wiped out their cultured oyster stocks.

With luck on their side, culturists, however, can sometimes choose an environment where oyster diseases can be avoided.

Along with several colleagues, Mark Luckenbach, associate professor of marine science and director of the oyster aquaculture program at VIMS, has been actively investigating ways for culturists to minimize the disease threat.

Luckenbach said seed stock secured from oysters previously exposed to Dermo are less likely to die from the disease when exposed again later in life. Culturists who wait until late spring, instead of the usual early spring, before spawning juvenile oysters can also reduce disease risk, Luckenbach added.

Several culturists at the Nov. 19 workshop spoke very favorably of the cooperative and productive relationship VIMS has cultivated with the oyster aquaculture industry.

Compared to Rhode Island where he also farms oysters, Gardner lauded the "support network" VIMS has built for private culturists in Virginia. He specifically cited Luckenbach's efforts to personally help growers overcome the problems commonly accompanying oyster aquaculture operations.

With supplies of natural Virginia oysters at record lows today, the oyster aquaculture industry is expected to provide an increasingly larger share of product for the market. Initial industry projections suggest production may increase by 72 percent this year alone.

Declines in natural stocks of other species of popular seafood are making aquaculture an attractive vocation. VIMS scientists have traditionally focused their aquaculture research on oysters and clams, but a variety of marine species also apparently have culture potential in Virginia waters.

"Oysters are just the tip of the iceberg," said Newell.

A private oyster culturist explains his operation to a workshop participant. The metal mesh bags in the foreground are kept submerged in water until the oysters inside them grow to market size.

Top EMS Award Goes To VIMS

The Virginia Institute of Marine Science was recently recognized for its contributions to the Virginia Emergency Medical Services System.

For 22 years, VIMS faculty, staff and graduate students have actively worked with the Abingdon Rescue Squad. In recognition of this service, the State last month awarded the Institute the 1994 Governor's Award for Outstanding Contributions to EMS.

Earlier this year, VIMS also received the 1993 Outstanding Contributions Award from the Peninsula Emergency Medical Services Council.

Faculty, staff and students who volunteer for services with the Abingdon Rescue Day Squad, are expected to make up any work hours lost through participation in rescue squad duties.

Development Staff Keeps Campaign Momentum Alive

Last year, the College's development staff obviously had a lot to celebrate. The Campaign for the Fourth Century had reached a successful conclusion, with more than $153 million in gifts and commitments raised—a record for William and Mary and to date for any school in Virginia.

The campaign was tied to the College's 300th anniversary, and its success was celebrated at the Busch Gardens Tercentenary party during Homecoming and with banner stories in College publications.

This year, the hoopla isn't as great, but Vice President for Development Dennis Slon says there is still a lot to celebrate.

"Our biggest challenge has been to keep alive the momentum that we generated during the campaign, and I'm pleased to report that we've been successful," Slon said.

While surpassing the $150-million campaign goal was important, Slon said a key goal of the campaign was to boost the annual level of income the College receives from alumni, corporations, foundations and other donors.

During the campaign, the College brought in between $5 million and $15 million a year in private funds. Last year, the goal was to raise $17.5 million. Having reached that mark, Slon said his staff hopes to bring in $20 million in 1994-95.

"Meeting these annual goals is important, but it's not just a matter of raising the bar to see how high we can jump. The College has a number of very important needs that were identified through the Strategic Plan. We know that tuition and state dollars won't meet those needs," said Slon.

Completed after a year of study, the Strategic Plan laid out a comprehensive view of William and Mary's future for the next five years. One of the plan's key foundations was the recognition that state support for higher education has dropped in recent years and is not likely to grow in the next decade. As a result, private dollars will become increasingly important if the plan is to become reality.

Slon said the development staff is working to raise unrestricted private dollars to meet the plan's goals, such as faculty and student support. Future plans include identifying funds for capital projects such as an expanded and renovated Earl Gregg Swem Library and modernization of the buildings on the New Campus.

Mini-campaigns to help finance the expansion of the Alumni House and to outfit Tercentenary Hall are also scheduled to finish this fiscal year.

Slon believes that donors are out there and are willing to help William and Mary meet the combined challenges for the next year.

"We're working very hard with the College Board of Visitors and Endowment Association to make sure we meet the short-term goals of the College. At the same time, we are also working together to ensure the long-term goals of the College can be achieved so that William and Mary becomes the finest public university in Virginia and the nation," said Slon.

News From The School Of Business

Business Undergrads Take Top Honors In National Tax Competition

Four undergraduate business students from the College placed first in the 1994 national Tax Challenge, Arthur Andersen's national collegiate tax competition which tests students' federal tax law knowledge and planning ability.

Competing in the 10-school undergraduate division, the team included seniors David Gilbertson, Elizabeth J. Goodwin, Annette Haralson and Jennifer L. Walker. James Smith, John S. Quinn Professor of Business Administration, was their coach.

For its win, the College received $10,000 in scholarship funds from the Arthur Andersen & Co., SC Foundation.

The College has sent a team to regional Tax Challenge competitions for the last three years, but this was the first year a team was invited to the national event.

Calendar

Special Events

Dec. 3. Green and Gold Christmas, an annual party for underprivileged children sponsored by William and Mary students, will be held in William & Mary Hall.

Dec. 9. The annual Festival of Lessons and Carols, one of the most beloved traditions of Advent and Christmas in England, will be held at 7 p.m. at the Williamsburg Presbyterian Church, 215 Richmond Rd.

For the special event, sponsored by the Christian campus ministers, students, faculty and staff will join campus ministers in reading seasonal biblical passages. Carols and hymns will be interspersed among the readings and sung by the congregation. Special music will be performed by the folk choir of the Catholic Student Assn. and two handbell choirs, the Williamsburg Ringers from the Williamsburg United Methodist Church and Westminster Ringers of Williamsburg Presbyterian Church.

Members of the College community and the general public are invited.

Dec. 10. A buffet Santa breakfast to benefit the campus child care center will be held from 8 to 10:30 a.m. at Second Street restaurant. Tickets will be $7.95 for adults, $3.95 for children (four through 12 years) and free for children under four. For an additional fee, Colonial Photo will take children's pictures with Santa.

Dec. 10. All members of the College community are invited to the annual Yule Log ceremony, sponsored by Omicron Delta Kappa and Mortar Board, which will be held in the courtyard of the Wren Building at 6 p.m. Festivities will include the singing of Christmas carols, led by the William and Mary choir; holiday readings; and President Sullivan's reading of the favorite holiday story, "How the Grinch Stole Christmas." Each person at the ceremony will be given a sprig of holly and invited to touch their sprig to the Yule log for good luck and, in keeping with tradition, to throw the sprig into the fire, symbolically disposing of all the cares and troubles of the past year. Refreshments will be served.

Persons attending the ceremony are asked to bring canned goods, clothing, books or toys for distribution to needy families in Williamsburg. Canned goods can also be dropped off in receptacles in the lobbies of the Campus Center and University Center through Dec. 9.

Dec. 10. The Black Faculty and Staff Forum invites all members of the College community to attend its annual holiday gala. The celebration begins at 9 p.m. in the Tidewater Room, University Center. Dress is semi-formal, hors d'oeuvres will be served and door prizes will be awarded. Tickets are available from Lorraine Allen, ext. 13162 or Jacqueline Smith, ext. 13157. Prices are $10 for singles and $18 for couples, when purchased in advance, or $12 for singles and $20 for couples at the door.

Dec. 10. The College Club's Fifth Annual Holiday Ball will be held from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the University Center Ballroom. Music will be by the Smith Wade Band. Dress is semi-formal. Cost is $15 per person for club members and their guests, $20 per person for non-members. Beer, wine, mixers and a light buffet will be served. Call ext. 12825.

Dec. 13. The HACE holiday party will be held at noon in Chesapeake Room A of the University Center. Details will be announced.

Dec. 17. The Black Faculty and Staff Forum will hold its first children's Christmas party from 1 to 3 p.m. in Chesapeake Room C, University Center. Santa and Mrs. Claus will visit and there will be refreshments, gifts and stories. Pictures will be taken. Interested persons are asked to provide the names and ages of children who will attend. Complete the form sent to each office or call LaVonne Allen, ext. 13162.

Performances

Dec. 2. Performances of Fall Directors' Workshop, a second season production, will be held at 8 p.m. in the Studio Theatre, PBK. "Home Free," "The Loveliest Afternoon of the Year," "The Valentine Fairy," "Pilgrims," and "Naomi in the Living Room" are on the bill. Admission is free.

Dec. 2-3. Holiday concerts by the William and Mary Choir and Chorus under the direction of Frank Lendrim, will be presented today and tomorrow at 8 p.m., and also Saturday at 2 p.m. Performances will take place in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall. Admission is $4 and tickets are available at the hall box office from 1-6 p.m. or at the main desk of the Campus Center. Reservations can also be made by calling the box office at ext. 12674 or the Campus Center at ext. 11071.

The traditional program includes the "Shepherd's Pipe Carol" by the all-female chorus; the Czech carol, "Carol of the Drum" by the Botetourt Chamber Singers, a small vocal ensemble from the choir; and Vivaldi's "Magnificat" by the choir. Tenors and Basses will sing two numbers, including "The Boar's Head" carol.

Accompanying the singers will be The William and Mary Brass Ensemble on Friday, and The DOG Street Brass on Saturday.

The William and Mary Choir is composed of some 85 undergraduates majoring in a variety of academic disciplines. Although very few of the choir members are music majors, the group regularly wins accolades for its professionalism. Singers rehearse six hours a week and receive one academic credit per semester.

The choir presents two concerts on campus every year, in December and in the spring.

The choir's latest recording, "Beneath Thy Trees," can be purchased at concerts or through the William and Mary Bookstore. The recording was produced with digital recording and master technology by Colonial Williamsburg Productions. Sales proceeds help finance the choir's tours and publications of the Society of the Alumni.
