Alum Leaves $13.4 Million

Bequest from T.C. Clarke '22 is largest cash gift in W&M's history

The late T.C. Clarke '22 had a deep love for the history of the College of William and Mary. When the Alumni House was recently expanded, it was Clarke's idea to incorporate an institutional time line into the structure's terrace, so that new generations could come to appreciate their legacy.

But as much as Clarke appreciated the past, he also looked forward to the possibilities of the future. In anticipation of the College's accomplishments to come, he gave strict directions about the time line: "Make the wall long; we've got a lot of time left."

These same motives—reverence for the past and hope for the future—led Clarke to set aside some $13.4 million of his estate for the College, a magnificent bequest that was announced by President Timothy Sullivan at the most recent meeting of the Board of Visitors. It is the largest cash gift in College history.

Sullivan said that the bequest will enable William and Mary to establish a $10.4-million endowment to help the College meet its most pressing needs, as Mr.

Clarke directed. The remainder will be devoted to scholarships for law and business students and student-athletes and will enhance the School of Business Administration.

"From his long service on William and Mary's Board of Visitors and our Endowment Association, T.C. Clarke had a broad understanding of the College's history and had learned that no one is capable of predicting an institution's needs centuries or even decades hence," said Sullivan. "In his wisdom, Mr. Clarke established this endowment to give future leaders of the College the freedom, as well as the resources, to deal with the great opportunities and pressing needs they will inevitably encounter. For that we are most grateful."

A portion of the funds will be used to enhance scholarships for business and law students that were earlier established by the donor and his late wife, Elizabeth. In gratitude, William and Mary has renamed in the donors' honor the Business School Medallion, which

A Pile Of Hope

In what is likely the largest relief drive ever mounted at William and Mary, students led by Chris Mercer (right) and Ling Ling Phung have so far collected more than six van-loads of goods for victims of Hurricane Mitch in Central America. The drive continues until Dec. 4. Collection centers are located in both the University and Campus Centers. Monetary donations should be made out to the NationsBank Emergency Fund and can be sent to CS Unit 1640.

Fellowships Pay Tribute To Pamela Harriman

Coca-Cola grant launches program

Last Monday's announcement in Washington, D.C., of the establishment of the Pamela Harriman Foreign Service Fellowships befitted a woman whose profession was characterized by statecraft. From the Benjamin Franklin Diplomatic Reception Room at the U.S. Department of State, some 300 friends and officials—including the French ambassador to the United

French Ambassador to the United States François Bujon de l'Estang (middle) and White House official Donald Bandler (right), who read a personal greeting from President Bill Clinton, joined President Timothy Sullivan at the U.S. State Department in inaugurating the fellowship program.

States, Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbot, former Ambassador to the Soviet Union Robert Strauss and two U.S. senators—honored the legacy of the late U.S. ambassador to France and former member of the William and Mary Board of Visitors.

The Harriman Fellowships are sponsored by the College of William and Mary and will provide funds for three students from U.S. colleges to work in the American embassies in Paris and London and in the Office of the Secretary of State in Washington, D.C. They were made possible with lead gifts from the Coca-Cola Foundation and Italian automaker Giovanni Agnelli.

In announcing the formation of the fellowships, President Timothy Sullivan joined a litany of Harriman's former friends and colleagues in extolling her record as a "patriot, diplomat and philanthropist."

"[William and Mary and Pamela Harriman] held in common an ambitious vision for the future of our country," said Sullivan. "Our community cherished Pamela Harriman as one of its own ... and continues to bear witness to her influence."

Flanked by the U.S. and French flags, François Bujon de l'Estang, French ambassador to the United States, recalled France's deep admiration for Harriman, particularly her commitment to learning and increasing understanding between the two countries. "For this reason," he

It All Began With A Raisin, McCormack Tells Law Symposium

It all began with the lowly raisin, confessed famed sports agent Mark McCormack to an enthusiastic group of students at a Sports Law Symposium on Nov. 14-15 at the School of Law.

Yes, the lucrative field of sports celebrity product endorsement began with an offer from the California Raisin Advisory Board to pay golfer Gary Player to munch raisins during tournaments, speak warmly during interviews of the energy he derived from dried grapes and even dispense free samples to spectators as he walked from tee to green.

McCormack was intrigued by the idea and negotiated a contract—with a few major changes, of course. Sticky hands and putters just don't go together.

And the rest, as they say, is history. The 1951 graduate of William and Mary has used his keen marketing imagination and his ability to build strong relationships with the nation's sports heroes into a worldwide enterprise called the International Management Group, a firm which directs the careers of such greats as Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus, and such greats-to-be as Tiger Woods and Peyton Manning.

As the keynote speaker to the student-organized event, McCormack detailed the growth of his firm, which was brought to prominence by its first client, Arnold Palmer.

"We quickly saw the opportunity offered by 'branded' products," said McCormack, who helped Palmer develop a line of golf clubs and other products. Recently, McCormack even applied the Palmer "brand" to a line of furniture, which last year sold $40 million. Not bad for a golfer who won his last major PGA tourney more than 20 years ago.

Successful entrepreneurship like this demands foresight, and McCormack explained that the firm stopped using "win" advertisements with Palmer in the 1960s.

"We knew that Arnold wouldn't win forever," said McCormack, "so we began to talk about his power and his accuracy, instead. These themes still are quite persuasive."

The firm next moved into "way-of-life" contracts, such as skier Jean-Claude Killy's endorsement of Moët & Chandon champagne. Television spots featuring the famed Olympian in après-ski mode with a glass of France's best quickly sparkled on television sets around the world.

Another strategy that proved lucrative to McCormack and his clients was customer entertainment, as a McCormack story illustrates.

"People love to enjoy themselves with sports figures," explained McCormack. "At the request of a major American railroad, we arranged a golf outing for the president of a Japanese steel company with Jack Nicklaus. As a result, the railroad was able to land a contract to transport coal from the U.S. being shipped to the Japanese steel mills."

The list of stories and successes was endless, as "the most powerful man in sports" (as Sports Illustrated has called McCormack) outlined the burgeoning field of sports management for the aspiring sports lawyers.

"From televising cricket in India and Pakistan, organizing badminton in Indonesia, and promoting European professional golf, to managing the careers of more NFL players than any other firm, Mark McCormack has truly developed a sports empire on which the sun never sets," said third-year law student Kevin O'Neill, who helped organize the event. "We very much appreciate Mr. McCormack's willingness to share his experience with all of us." ■

by Bill Walker

In addition to keynoting the Sports Law Symposium, Mark McCormack (left) honored close friend Millie West (right), director of special projects for the athletic department, who was inducted into the Intercollegiate Tennis Association's Women's Tennis Hall of Fame on Nov. 14. McCormack, a sponsor of the ITA Hall of Fame located at the College's McCormack-Nagelsen Tennis Center, was joined at the induction by his wife, Betsy Nagelsen, who served as master of ceremonies.

said, "the idea of carrying on her memory through these fellowships is one of the very finest tributes that can be paid to her."

In a statement read at the ceremony, U.S. Special Envoy Richard Holbrooke said the fellowship program would have been very close to Harriman's heart. "Pam always loved working with, and promoting, young people," Holbrooke said. "Placing three carefully chosen young Americans in the embassies ... and in the Office of the Secretary of State will continue something that she did, in an informal manner, throughout her life."

Earl Leonard Jr., senior vice president of the Coca-Cola Company, said support for the Harriman Fellowships will allow students to deepen their insight into other cultures and become more aware of how they may best serve their country and community.

Leonard's colleague, Douglas Daft, senior vice president for the Coca-Cola Company and president of its Middle East and Far East Group, formally announced his company's contribution of $200,000 as the founding grant for the program in a Nov. 12 ceremony in the Wren Building.

With support from the College, Greg Werkheiser '97, former president of the Student Assembly, undertook much of the effort in organizing the proposal for the Harriman Fellowship program. Werkheiser, who was also on hand for last week's announcement, spent three months working with Harriman at the U.S. embassy in Paris.

The late ambassador's close association with William and Mary began with her appointment to the institution's Board of Visitors in 1986, on which she served until 1990. At the College, she was a benefactor of the Pamela Harriman Professorship of Government and Public Policy and championed the founding of the Williamsburg Campus Child Care Center. In 1996, William and Mary awarded her an honorary doctorate of laws, and she served as the principal speaker at Charter Day.

Juniors and seniors in U.S. colleges and universities may apply for the fellowships. The applicants will be evaluated by the Department of State, reviewed by an advisory committee of distinguished citizens and chosen by a selection committee. Each fellow will receive a $5,000 stipend for living and travel expenses for the 11-week summer internship in one of the three locations.

The initial class of Harriman Fellows will be named for service during the spring of 2000. Applications will be available in the fall of 1999. ■

Nobel Scientist Urges Greater Vigilance Over Environment

Challenging future generations of scientists to tackle the environmental threats of the 21st century, Nobel-prize-winning chemist Mario Molina spoke to an overflow crowd of more than 400 students, faculty and community members last Tuesday in the University Center's Commonwealth Auditorium.

The MIT professor of earth, atmospheric and planetary science warned that the earth's fragile atmosphere, which he likened to the skin of an apple, cannot withstand continued human-imposed stress.

"We can no longer assume that nature will take care of all of the waste of human activities," he said.

Molina reported that one of this century's major environmental concerns, the depletion of the ozone layer, which he discovered in 1974, is finally on the road to recovery. By the year 2010, when developing countries cease their legal use of toxic chlorofluorocarbon gases (CFCs) found in coolants and propellants, the ozone can begin to regenerate.

Meanwhile, however, other atmospheric problems slow the ozone repair process and further damage the earth's atmosphere.

Smog, the visible air pollution in the lower atmosphere above large cities including Los Angeles and Molina's native Mexico City, contributes to the creation of ozone. But the presence of ozone in the lower atmosphere—as opposed to its rightful place in the higher stratosphere—negatively alters the atmosphere's chemical composition.

"What was once an urban problem has reached global proportions," Molina said.

Vast forest fires in South America and elsewhere, and global warming—the warming of the lower atmosphere—also produce pollution that creates misplaced ozone.

Molina noted that some industries are changing manufacturing methods to decrease atmospheric problems. Just as refrigerator manufacturers earlier this century replaced deadly ammonia coolants with CFCs, and later replaced CFCs with similar, but nontoxic chemical compounds, today's industries continue to learn how to bypass their dependence on CFCs and create cleaner technologies.

Molina, who knew he wanted to be a scientist at the age of 11 and converted a family bathroom into a chemistry lab, is William and Mary's first Canon Visiting Scholar. He spent two days on campus visiting with students and faculty. ■

College Adopts Its First Official Flag

The first official flag in the College of William and Mary's 306-year history was adopted by the institution's Board of Visitors at its meeting on Friday.

Featuring the College's colors of green and gold, the flag has a round seal with the institution's coat of arms surrounded by the words "Sig Collegii Gulielmi et Mariae in Virginia • 1693," William and Mary's name in Latin, along with its date of founding.

The adoption of the official flag came as a part of a report on the military heritage of the College presented by William Mirguet Jr. '62, a former member of the Board of Visitors, who is leading an effort to compile and publish a record of William and Mary's military history since its founding.

"In the course of our research," reported Mirguet, "I learned that the College had never adopted an official flag. We decided to do what we could to rectify that situation."

Mirguet also presented the design of a new flag for the "Queen's Guard," a ceremonial group of William and Mary ROTC students. The flag is based on that of the original Queen's Guard of Great Britain, known for its commitment to protect and serve the queen.

The project was begun in 1996 and has been underwritten by contributions from several individuals. In addition to producing a book, the group is commissioning an original work of art and plans to sell copies of both the book and the artwork to establish an endowment to support and maintain a display area to commemorate the national military service of faculty, students and alumni.

The service of Mirguet and members of his committee was recognized and commended by a resolution unanimously adopted by the Board. Other members of the committee include S. Dean Olson, director of publications; John Quarstein, director of the Virginia Memorial Museum; and Wilford Kale Jr., senior policy analyst at the Virginia Marine Research Commission and author of several previous books on William and Mary.

is annually awarded to an outstanding business leader.

"Mr. Clarke's bequest will eventually touch faculty and students in all areas of the College, just as he would have wished," said Dennis Slon, vice president for development. "One could hardly have envisioned a more profound way to stimulate the ongoing development of William and Mary."

Slon added that the bequest brings the total of Mr. and Mrs. Clarke's giving to the College to more than $15.5 million. In addition to creating several faculty and student endowments, the Clarkes were donors to the William and Mary Annual Fund, the Athletic Endowment Fund and the Alumni House expansion project. The Clarkes' support of the expanded facility was commemorated by the Clarke Memorial Terrace.

The late T.C. and Elizabeth Clarke

The retired chairman of Norfolk's Royal Crown Bottling Company, Mr. Clarke graduated from William and Mary in 1922 with a bachelor's degree in history.

From 1974 to 1982, Clarke served on the Board of Visitors and was vice rector of the group for four years. For 10 years he served on the board of trustees of the William and Mary Endowment Association and took a leadership role in the Campaign for the Fourth Century, which generated $153 million.

He was also a director of the Athletic Endowment Fund and the School of Business Sponsors, as well as a member of the Old Guard Council, Order of the White Jacket, President's Council, Sir Robert Boyle Society, Chancellor's Circle and the James Blair Society.

In view of his continuing service to his alma mater, Clarke was awarded the Alumni Medalion in 1978 and in 1991 was Grand Marshal of the Homecoming Parade. ■

The International Hollywood Hobnobber: Pat Burdette, Alumni Affairs

Name: Pat Burdette

Position: Programs Assistant, Alumni Affairs, Society of the Alumni

Duties: Pat works with the affairs department in the processing of flyers and newsletters, events registration and tracking financial records/dues payments for alumni chapters and their constituent groups, such as the Young Guard, the Hulton Willis Association and the Order of the White Jacket.

Background: Pat joined the alumni affairs office in 1995 after she and her husband moved to Williamsburg from Connecticut. A native of Los Angeles, Pat attended high school with James Brolin (husband of Barbra Streisand), Jack Jones (who sang the "Love Boat" theme song), the real Gidget (of surfer movie fame) and Nancy Sinatra. Nancy's father, Frank, performed for the high school's graduation party in 1958.

Before moving to Williamsburg, Pat and her husband, now a retired IBM executive, lived in Hawaii, Japan, Hong Kong, Venezuela, Idaho, Utah and Connecticut. "I particularly enjoyed our time spent in Asia. It was a great adventure for our whole family and always exciting," said Pat. "But living in all these places helps you realize that Williamsburg is a special place."

Most memorable moments: "Homecomings. They are such enormous undertakings. It's amazing what some 20 people can put on every year."

Best aspect of your job: "The variety of work and the great group of people at the Society ... There's never a dull moment."

Worst part of your job: "Deadlines. We are constantly pulling information together for events. Just as one Homecoming ends, we are thinking about the next one."

Hobbies: Gardening, needlework and visiting historic sites. "When I'm on my way to work, I always make a point of driving
