

Bedford April 4th 1807

My Dear Sarah

I feel so thorough a conviction, of the impropriety of my conduct in so long omitting writing to you, that I will not pretend to offer a single excuse, but readily confess my fault, and promise amendment, as the best atonement I can make. But you must not think my silence has proceeded from want of affection; for otherwise I am now convinced, how dear you are to me, and feel a thousand fears, and anxieties, which I never experienced, till at so great a distance from you. Nothing but the improvement of your mind, could have reconciled me, to so long a separation, particularly at your time of life, when a Mothers presence is so necessary. Your virtues my dear Child, I have great confidence in, but young people frequently want discretion in little things; and believe me when I tell you, situated as you are, you have need for all you are master of. It is a sentiment natural to young minds to believe every body good friend, & course our friends as we are not conscious of having done any thing to make them otherwise.

is a sentiment that proceeds from a good heart and virtuous inclination, but it is by no means a safe one. Daily experience proves how few there are who deserve the name of friends. Our best way therefore, is to be guarded in our words, and actions, before all, as those who have nobody to trust, have nobody to betray them. To this you will say, am I to have no friend, to whom I can make known my distresses and compelled to endure them in silence. Yes, in me, you have a friend whom you may trust, and one who will never betray you. Therefore scruple not to make known your little wants and complaints, as you may rest assured I will never slight them, whatever they may be. —

I observe among the different branches you are learning, geography is not included, but you did not tell me why, although you know how anxious I am that you should learn it, and not superficially, but be mistress of it, as well as Arithmetick. Without the former, History is but imperfectly understood, and without the latter, you will be subject to many inconveniences, and impositions, particularly when you get to be an old maid, as was your resolution when we parted. I hope you will adhere to it for six years at least.

Your friends are generally well and desire to be remembered to you. Present our most respectful compliments to Mr and Mrs Anderson, Miss Smith, and the rest of the young Ladies, with whom we are acquainted God bless you and believe me your

Affectionate Mother

Bethy Watts

I arrived here my dear Sarah just as your Mama had finished her letter and as I could not prevail on her to press my love to you I thought it best to write it myself, Believe me my dear Girl I am not a little pleased to find from your letters that your situation is in every respect so agreeable and am confident your improvement will be such as will be extremely gratifying to your friends I know of nothing rare or uncommon that has occurred — among your acquaintances since you left us — Whenever you feel disposed to write to any of your friends besides those you have already written to I shall be pleased to be among the number for it will always give me pleasure to hear from you particularly if you inform me of your happiness and welfare — Now then my dear Girl accept the best wishes of yours

Affectionate Cousin

Alice desires her love to you, your little brother is all surround me & makes me very saucy Mary Watts