Colonial Echo

1922

PUBLISHED BY
THE STUDENTS OF THE COLLEGE OF
WILLIAM AND MARY

*Yours sincerely,
James H. Dillard*

Dedication

to

James Hardy Dillard

Whose whole life has been spent for the educational development of man; whose unremitting labor for our Alma Mater has never ceased; whose desire and aim has been for the upbuilding of the College of William and Mary, we respectfully dedicate this, the twenty-first volume of the Colonial Echo.

James Hardy Dillard

AMES HARDY DILLARD was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, on October 24, 1856.

He was prepared for college in the famous old school conducted by William R. Galt in Norfolk, one of that type of schools which inculcated love of letters and learning, and a high sense of honor in its pupils.

Here young Dillard distinguished himself by his aptitude for mathematics and the classics, and was a leader among his fellows.

At the age of seventeen, he proceeded to Washington and Lee University, where the lofty standards set by General Lee were still the informing inspiration for faculty and students alike. From the beginning of his college course, young Dillard, by virtue of his native abilities, careful training, and charming personality, took the lead not only in his academic work, but in the activities of the literary societies, and in writing for the college publications. Being graduated in course Master of Arts in 1877, he served as assistant in mathematics for one year, studying law and receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws.

As Principal of the Rodman School, of Norfolk, and Co-Principal of the Norfolk Academy (both now, unfortunately, gone the way of all such splendid old centres of preparatory instruction), until 1887, Mr. Dillard heard the call of the West and became Principal of Mary Institute, in St. Louis, then the Woman's Department of Washington University.

His reputation as scholar and lecturer spreading through the Mississippi Valley, in 1891 he became Professor of Latin in the Tulane University, New Orleans, where he remained until 1907. This period of his career placed Dr. Dillard in the fore-front of American scholarship. Hundreds of men now leaders in the professions throughout the Gulf States, had their minds and tastes moulded by his skill as teacher, his charm of manner and his genius for translating the classic literatures into terms of modern life and thought.

This professorial period was also rich in productive labors. Dr. Dillard's clearness of thought and expression secured him a wider audience than the class room; and he published Exercises in Arithmetic, Selections from Wordsworth, Fifty Letters of Cicero, and Favorite German Poems (Aus dem Deutschen Dichterwald), besides numerous contributions, literary and critical, to various papers and reviews. The mere list is significant of the catholicity of his tastes and abilities.

But Dr. Dillard has never been of the selfish type of scholar whose activities are bounded by the lecture room. These sixteen years of his life were fruitful in many contributions to the social and educational well-being of Louisiana. He served successively as member of the Board of Trustees of the Tulane University; as member of the State Board of Education of Louisiana; as one of the founders of the Southern Association of Colleges and High Schools, and as President of the National Conference of Church Clubs.

In 1907, Dr. Dillard was selected by the Trustees, out of a large number of eligible Southern leaders of thought, as President of the Jeanes Fund for the Education of the Negro Race. In his activities in this field, Dr. Dillard showed such educational and social statesmanship, and so conclusively proved the benefits of such an institution to whites and blacks alike, that in 1917, the Slater Fund, which had hitherto maintained a separate existence, was, by action of both Boards of Trustees, coalesced with the first named fund, and the joint organization confided to the Presidency of Dr. Dillard alone.

In 1913, after an absence of twenty-six years, Dr. Dillard returned to reside in his native State, which he loves as the men of the Periclean age loved the "City of the Violet Crown." He fixed, as the centre of his executive functions under the Jeanes-Slater Fund, the City of Charlottesville, with its congenial atmosphere of "Town and Gown." Here he continues, on his native soil, his manifold activities, and on a national stage. He is still serving as member of the General Education Board, of New York City, and as member of the Board of Trustees of the General Theological Seminary, New York City.

In 1918, Dr. Dillard was appointed by Governor Davis to membership on the Board of Visitors of the College of William and Mary, and was immediately elected Rector of the Board. To the duties of this high office he has brought a singleness of devotion which might have been expected only of one whose youth had been nurtured at this old and venerable shrine. Hardly a forward move of these four years but bears the impress either of his initiative or of his wise and mellow counsel. As truly of him as of that other great builder of the Old College, Sir Christopher Wren, may it be said, "Si monumentum requiris, circumspice." His visits to the old College, whether in an official capacity or on occasions of visits of national celebrities, are perennial sources of delight to the entire college body; and when at the urging of President Chandler, he says "a few words" in Chapel, his admirers like to think they can discern in him touches of the beauty of mind, the grace of person, and the sweet reasonableness the Southerners associate with the Washington and Lee of the years when the aroma of the life and death of the great Lee still hung about it.

Dr. Dillard's long and honorable career has been crowned with signal marks of appreciation from the world of letters and education. His Alma Mater has made him Doctor of Letters; the Tulane University, the scene of his active academic labors, has given him the degree of Doctor of Laws; the University of the South, the Southern educational institution of the church of which he is a devoted member, has conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Civil Law.

But Dr. Dillard's place in the hearts of all William and Mary folks is independent of all honors and degrees, wear he them never so worthily. They love him for himself, and for his love for the Old College. The Board of Editors wish him many more long years of all he so eminently possesses:

All that which should accompany old age,

As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends; and is proud to dedicate the 1922 COLONIAL ECHO to James Hardy Dillard, Rector of the Board of Visitors.

Foreword

We have attempted to present in the following pages a record of a year of our lives as students of the College of William and Mary in Virginia. To those who have never been students of this ancient College and who have never visited this venerable shrine of learning, we fear that the year-book will be somewhat meaningless; but to those who have had this honored privilege we hope to arouse the most cherished memories.

There are many things peculiar to this grand old College that are as incapable of being expressed in words as is the splendor that envelopes the College campus—her honor system, her historical traditions, her democratic atmosphere, and her ideals. The spirit of Jefferson, Washington, Marshall, and Wythe still lingers about the ancient halls of the main building, constantly reminding the students that the ideals set by them shall not be lowered by the future students of the College. Such an atmosphere, hovering over our grand old campus and becoming an integral part of our Alma Mater's graduates, constitutes the spirit of the College of William and Mary. We shall, therefore, attempt to give to the students and alumni of this College a few of the outward manifestations of our love and affection for our old Alma Mater.

To William and Mary

*O William and Mary, we kneel at thy shrine,
To the home of our patriots true,
Whose ideals in thy soil loom aloft in thine elms,
As they lace with the clouds in the blue,
And the sunset's rayed mist flowing down to thy lawn
Is the glory of old to the young,
Like the buttercup on the campus in May,
We gather the gold where it sprung.*

*O William and Mary, thy rose-laden dreams,
All awake Lake Matoaka's view,
Where the shadows soft faded away to the shore,
And the sunlight e'er widened and grew
In this sunrise aglow, time aged halls stand
With thy wisdom ingrown like thy moss,
And our hearts are the vines wound around thine
old walls
Which have shouldered the centuries' cross.*

Senior Class Prophecy

HE seventh of June, 1957, had come at last. The members of the class of 1922 were gathering in the large reception room of Washington Hall, one of the new dormitories recently erected on the campus of William and Mary College.

This day, the seventh of June, was to witness the reunion of those who, thirty-five years before, had departed from the sheltering arms of Alma Mater, and had gone to seek their fortunes.

Already many had come. Gathered in groups here and there about the immense room, they engaged in lively and animated conversation. In some of the groups merely the polished repartee of the man and woman of the world flew back and forth. Sparks of wit and humor brought forth laughter. Everywhere geniality and good will prevailed.

Suddenly in one of the groups the laughter died down. Someone had introduced a subject which interested vitally that whole group. Each one took part in advancing his views and ideas.

A light-haired man approached the interested speakers. Immediately closing around him, they greeted him warmly. "Welcome, Fulcher, we certainly are glad to see you. Do tell us all about yourself and your work. Father Time, it seems, has treated you with kindly grace, and has left scarcely a print of his finger upon you. You look puzzled. Don't you know me? Well, well, that's rich! I am Bill Hoskins. All of us in this group are medical men, some greater than others, but all of us interested in the one big subject of medicine. The man that has contributed a great deal to our field has been Womock. Of course, you have read of his very successful surgical operations, and the splendid reputation he has made, deservedly so."

"Don't flatter me, Hoskins. I have done nothing in comparison with the scientific research work that you, Burcher, Davis, Bailey, Jennings and Hopkins have done. Indeed, Fulcher, we have done very little. You are the one who has been honored with the Noble prize for discovering at last a definite and immediate cure of carcinoma.

"There by the table is Berl. He is trying to get the Senior Class together, just as in the old days, and with pretty much the same difficulty. Let's take our assigned places."

Berl had changed considerably. His hair was heavily streaked with grey, and there were deep, worried lines about his eyes. A tall, handsomely dressed woman leaned over to her companion and whispered quite audibly:

"Edna, doesn't he look worried? People say that rich widow he married is not quite so rich as he hoped. It seems that his political career has been somewhat checkered by her domineering, monetary demands."

"Did he really marry that widow, Alice? I am surprised. Let's stop whispering; he's calling for order."

"Ladies and Gentlemen, as former president of the Senior Class of 1922, I have been asked to preside once more at a meeting of our members. After a lapse of thirty-five years, I need not call attention to the changes time has brought about. With the exception of the ladies, of course, we all are more or less conscious of them. It is a great pleasure to see you again. I regret that all of our class cannot be with us. Some of those who could not come sent greetings and notes of regret. I shall read them to you later. I hope each of you will tell us something about yourself or about any other members of the class. I hope, also, that you haven't forgot the clippings from papers which I wrote you to bring. First, I shall read the greetings from some of the absent ones. Then, each of you give an incident of interest.

The first note is from Miss Maria Holman.

'BOMBAY, INDIA, June 5, 1957.

'Dear Classmates,

'It was with a pang of regret we learned this morning that the ship which we were to board for the dear old States left yesterday.

'My sister Mary and her husband have been visiting me for more than a month. We were planning to return from India, and to arrive in time for our class reunion at William and Mary; but even if we should take the next ship, we should arrive just one day too late. The Trans-Oceanic Airplane men are on a strike and we could not obtain passage that way. I am sorry we cannot come. I assure you, however, that our thoughts will be with you.

'I have been very busy at the English hospital here in Bombay. Besides my supervision of the medical personnel of this city, I conduct a pathological clinic to train the students of Bombay University.

'How Mary and I wish we could see all of you on the seventh! Do plan for another reunion in the near future.

'Mary joins me in wishing everyone of you the greatest success in the further pursuance of your life work.

'With kindly greetings and pleasant reminiscences of our class of '22, I am,

Sincerely,

MARIA HOLMAN.'

This greeting is from Mr. Josselyn Reed:

KASHGAR, CHINA, June 1, 1957.

'Dear Classmates,

This greeting for you comes from the furthest borders of the Chinese Republic.

For twelve years now I have been engaged in missionary work among the Chinese people. My work is very interesting, but at times discouraging and difficult. I have organized five churches since I came to China, and I hear that everyone is vitally alive and carrying on a splendid work.

I shall think of you on the seventh of June.

With every good wish for each one,

Your classmate,

JOSSELYN REED.'

"There isn't a one of us who has not read of the honor that has come to Miss Cornelia Adair. I have no direct message from her, due, no doubt, to other pressure of official duties; but I shall read a few lines from the Richmond Times-Dispatch:

'Miss Cornelia Adair, formerly of Richmond, has been appointed by the President of the United States as Secretary of Education. Miss Adair is well qualified and is most competent to render valuable service in such a capacity.'

"I see all of your faces light up with pride in the achievements of our classmate. I am certain that no other class graduated from William and Mary has had more great men and women than our own class of '22.

"Let me read another excerpt from this paper:

'The engineering expedition for which plans have been laid during the last ten years by the International Engineering Association, has at last been undertaken. Captain Edward M. Lee is in charge of the expedition, with the following well-known corps of assistants: L. N. King, H. S. Holmes, J. W. Henderson and J. Duff.'

"That completes the list. Now, each of you tell about yourself and your work. The chairmen of the various committees will also tell us about their members."

A rotund little woman with smiling face arose. Her eyes shone with much the same coquettish light as in previous years. Immediately the class recognized her as former Elizabeth Van Laer.

"Classmates, it is my pleasant duty as chairman of the Married Members' Club to present to you the married folk of our class, and to tell you, as far as I know, a little about each one.

"Mr. Ammons married Miss Cecil Norfleet about two years after completing his course at William and Mary. I understand that he and Miss Norfleet taught school together, and that the romance which began at William and Mary had its culmination in the union of the happy couple. From Mr. Ammon's smiling countenance we must infer that the marriage has been one of the kind where 'they lived happily ever after.'

"This is Mrs. R. Brown, nee Leota Eifert.

"I recall how we used to wonder who that Westerner was whose picture stood on Leota's table. Mr. and Mrs. Brown live out in Colorado. I, or rather we—my husband and I—took a trip out West a few years ago. We came through Denver intending to stop there just a few hours sight-seeing. Out on the Western Boulevard we met Leota and Mr. Brown. I think I have never met a happier couple. They invited us out to their home and gave us a royal time.

"I have a note from Mrs. Sinton, formerly Lutie Holland. Let me read it to you.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 3, 1957.

'Dear Elizabeth,

You wrote as chairman of the Married Members' Club asking me whether I would be present at the class reunion. I am very sorry I cannot come. Mr. Sinton and I am leaving in our aeroplane for England via the Ethereal Route. Mr. Sinton has some important business to transact in London, and we must leave immediately.

Give my kindest regards and best wishes to all the members of our class.

Sincerely,

LUTIE.'

"Mrs. Bozarth, nee Alice Person, wants me to tell you that she and Mr. Bozarth invite all of you to come and have dinner with them tomorrow evening at seven-thirty.

“Mrs. Lyons, former Mary Wadsworth, and Mr. Lyons also extend you an invitation for tomorrow evening. After the dinner at Bozarth’s cars will take you to the Williamsburg Academy where boxes have been purchased. Miss Martha Flippo is the violinist of the evening. Martha could not be here today because of her schedule of performances abroad. She telegraphed, however, this morning, that she will certainly arrive tomorrow.

“Mabel Stratton, who shortly after graduation became Mrs. Stevens, and Medelene Blakey, married to dear Mr. S. P——, you all remember Mr. S. P——, are going to serve some delicacies of their very own making.

“Mr. President, after the refreshments have been served there will still be a half hour for the remaining members to give an account of themselves.”

Berl gave his assent.

In a few minutes the most appetizing dainties were informally served. High, good humor seemed to be the order of the day.

There at the left of Berl was a gentleman with iron gray hair. For a moment he talked to one lady, then to another. Irving White had not changed. As formerly, his affable manner was merely the cloak of a real misogynist. No woman had had a hand in the making of his career. His remarkable rise in the journalistic world was due to his own untiring efforts.

A woman lending force to her speech by gesture and by peremptory tone was no other than Isca Powers. She, whose decision in the realm of history and political science, had been unimpeachable in the days of ‘22, had made that decision almost infallible in matters pertaining to the appointment of women for office, and in ousting political bosses from territory assigned to women canvassers. Isca had become the president of the Federation of Women’s Clubs.

At one end of the room three women conversed in a quiet manner on what seemed to them a very interesting subject. Emily Hall, following close in the steps of her illustrious father, had gained for herself a name of national renown. Emily, a true scholar in every sense of the word, had brought forth literary productions of greater worth and value than any other woman before her had done.

Marguerite Jenkins, widely known for her poetry, was criticized by England’s greatest critic, “In beauty of expression and sublimity of thought the poetry of Miss Jenkins is superb.”

The work of Mary Haile also lay in the sphere of literary production. Her excellent short stories and descriptive articles were welcomed by editors of the very best magazines.

The dainties and refreshments had vanished. Berl tapped for order.

Kathryn Bullock, president of the National Teachers' Association, presented those who were engaged in the teaching profession. Mary Howison, the great Latin scholar, sketched briefly her work as Latin professor at Radcliffe College.

Virginia Thomson, tall and dignified, had changed but little. Her personality was as charming as ever. It was known even in the old days of '22 that Virginia's brilliant intellect would win her a place in the world. It did. She had become president of Columbia University.

J. G. Hudson gave briefly an outline of his work in the educational field. He had devoted six years to a comparative study of foreign and American educational systems. Taking the best from these, he had worked out an excellent system of education in West Virginia.

"Closely associated with education work," said Miss Bullock, "is social welfare work, and we number among us one of its greatest exponents, Miss Ruth Harris."

"Classmates, in the early years of my social work, I came into contact with the saddest side of human life. I never realized there was so much want and poverty in the world until I began work in settlement districts. Sometimes it was not so much want and poverty that caused the sorrow as it was lack of love and sympathy. I have learned how much it means to give to the poor and to those whom the world ignores a little of the love and sympathy which after all is so easy to give. In later years, being elected president of the National Social Welfare Association, I have done work somewhat different. Some of you may have heard me lecture in the interest of welfare work in schools and colleges. Last week I spoke to the girls at the University of Michigan. Margaret Bridges, recently married to a gentleman from Essex county, Virginia, had been dean of this university. She wrote me to come there to lecture. When I finally found an opportunity to go out to Michigan, Elizabeth Berger had taken her place as dean. Beulah Berger is associate professor in French at the same institution."

A tall man arose. This was the very one who had gone out for oratory in the contest between the Phoenix and Philomathean societies in 1919. He had seemed awkward as he arose to deliver his oration that night, but he certainly lost every vestige of awkwardness when he began to speak. When he finished, the house went wild. With that same splendid delivery, Dickinson gave some of the most interesting experiences which could possibly come to a lawyer of his fame and ability. Every member of the class had heard how Dickinson, together with Lawyer F. F. Chandler, won a difficult case for I. Hardy and J. F. Wilson, brokers. Fifer had come as business accountant from Washington later to adjust matters for the two brokers.

No decision in the complicated case could have been rendered with more fairness and justice than that given by the judge, Mary Beverley Ruffin. Having considered the case as has always been her custom, from all possible angles, she gave a judgment worthy of her renowned name.

"I feel," said Berl, "as I am certain the rest of you do also, that we have spent a most enjoyable afternoon. By coming together in this way we knit the bonds of true friendship more closely together. We have recalled the happy memories of years ago and realized more fully that 'When occasion throws them together in the years to come, they will agree with wise wags of the head, "Those were the good old days."'"

The Ocean of Education

CANTO I.

THE SPRING

Colleges seem like a spring with students as flowers around it ;
Gushing from mossy fissure in brains of the age-ridden boulders,
Flashing its foam-bubble spray with violet-hued iridescence
Blown into beauty by tangents of varying breezes,
Kindled by suns and by moons and by stars of the waking present,
The spring leaps into its basin. And, bending, around its bring, are Gathered the children of nature, thirsting to drink of this nectar,
To taste the ambrosia of life as presented to them by the ages.
So clear is its quick-silvered surface, they gaze in the marvellous mirror,
Reflecting their life and the life of the world ; and, reflecting, is painted
Wherein that living is lovely, wherein 'tis sordid. But every moment,
The mirror is changing.

Beside the bright waters, bold Jack-in-the-pulpits,
Reaching, lean over the others and fill up their pitchers to brimming,
Trilliums whiten the ground with their presence ; and little spring beauties
Gladden the eye and the heart and the hand, though many drink lightly,
Sun caressed golden-rod, quaffing, has gilded its path to lead others.
Deadly-night-shade, although parched, waves its red flag of danger, as, scorning
Founts, would turn others away. But the down-trodden flowers, unheeding,
Drink more and more, all bringing their blind little children anon to be Healed by the warming damp clay of its bank. Yet the spring, all exploring,
Waits not for its children to find it, but, trickling slowly,
Seeps under the sedges unseen and travels, unsparing
Itself, and waters the roots of desire in whoever is thirsting.

Glorious the spring, gushing and gleaming from ancient worn boulders,
Carrying on golden washings to rinse in its present-day basin.
Ever the nugget is pure, though with sands it is partially hidden.

Colleges seem like a spring, where each brings his cup to the fountain.

CANTO II.

THE STREAM

Graduates stream from the gate in a beautiful brooklet unending,
Starting with lilting cadence of hope and of sweet expectation,
Bubbling with joy and with zest, and tumbling onward delighted,
Singing o'er pebbles and rocks, that, stubborn, occur in its pathway.
Soon sinks the song to a quieter key as widens the brooklet,
Mellowed with greater experience—beauty of birds in the heavens,
Dimness of forest, and cry of the suffering wild folk beside it,
Luscious green meadows it never can reach, and the west wind
Flying above and beyond it. The belody ever and ever
Softens and sweetens its lay as its life-stream grows fuller and deeper,
Clinging to dead leaves of hope which continue to float in its bosom,
Watering arid lands awakened to bloom and to beauty;
Finally dreams in a tone sympathetic, murmuring music,
Embodying all of the joys and the sorrows of life never ending.

CANTO III.

THE RIVER

Homesick and glad is the cry of the graduates' brooklet of beauty,
Meeting the onrushing river of foregoing men from their college.
Widened the power of the river, strengthened the power of the streamlet,
Melting together, marching along in glorious volume and madly
Victorious. Deep in its depth is the song of its source and its progress,
Born in the spring of its being from brains of the boulders of ages,
Born and advancing in translucent topaz, surrounding and misting
Beryline meadows with saffron-hued haze,—turning to sunlight
All that it touches.

The tears of the willows, weeping for water,
Begging the streamlet for more than it bears, turn to crystals of gladness
At sight of the wealth of the waters, providing for them in abundance.
Swept from their feet are the willows, uprooted and borne down the river,— Beauteous Grecian maidens, triumphantly carried aloft on Shoulders of heroes victorious. Graceful their tremulous arms and
Out-stretched on the turbulent current, running the treacherous rapids,
Wildly the river sweeps onward to gild all the dusky, dead prairie.

CANTO IV.

OTHER RIVERS

River of graduates, sprung from the college's radiant fountain,
Banish thy bed of seclusion, leap o'er thy banks and unite with
The rivers of all institutions, and uniting, accomplish thy purpose.
Rivers of power, rivers of pulsing endeavor, descending
Into the valleys where dingy and darkling the scum of the people
Settle in deadly disaster, in muddiest slime there deserted,
Carry away the débris, banish the slum of the people,
Purify all of the pools, stagnant and stark with contagion.
Green as the slime are the frogs there, miserably mourning their sorrows.
Stir up their blood to ambition, sluggish in streams never moving.
Rivers of power, rivers of pulsing endeavor, whiten
The valleys in down rushing rain from thy hill-tops descending.

CANTO V.

THE LAKE

Azure the lake in its purity, scarce by the heavens supplanted
Made of the rivers of graduates, sprung from the colleges' fountains.
Joined are the rivers in beauty,—beauty of life and of nature,
Beauty of science and artistry, beauty of souls everlasting.

Butterflies poise o'er its lilies, sipping the spray on the petals,
Drinking the dew of devotion, devotion to dreams everlasting.
Beavers, the lumbermen, cutting their timber, let soft swaying waters
Carry their logs to their houses. Soon did they learn to depend on Brains so to lighten their labor. Common dun deer make a pathway
Down to its brink, where they fill their lives full of the joy of its waters.
Dim in the distance, the speck of the carping old sea-gull is swallowed;
Placid the lake in the love and the lives of the universe tended.

CANTO VI.

THE OCEAN

Gradually sweets the lake. Wavelets, appearing, seeking, stretch onward, Lap up the shore, spread o'er the plains, cover the hills, and Encompass the country, resound in a dazzling, far-reading, billowing
Ocean of education. Mighty its roar and its raging,
Tearing all wreckage away. Mighty its power, undulation,
Sweeping the floor of the land it awakens to duty.
Harmony, coming, results in its orchestra. Harken the music:
Wind violins, sweet Zephyrus first, southern Auster as second;
Wave violoneellos; whispering flutes of the grasses; drumming
Of tides; and the petulant piccolo notes of the wild stormy petrels;
Sirens of vessels deep-booming like growling trombones; and wailing
Sea-gull cornets; cymbals of shells; and the bells of the buoys;—all Drown the bass viol of thunder. Such is the song of the ocean.

CANTO VII.
THE BED OF THE OCEAN

Wondrous the bed of the ocean, builded with brain and with beauty :
Coral reefs rise in great cities, e'er mounting and measuring upward ;
Many the towers, many the palaces gleaming, many
The windows portraying the life of the people. Luxuriant sea-weeks
In gardens and vineyards surround the whiteness, soft floating against the cool Marble.

In laboratories of deeply shelved caves with drying stalactites,
Lighted by radiate jelly-fish, burners of pure phosphorescence,
The waters soon petrify wood into stone, and green vegetation
To traceries chiselled in quartz, thus cherished through all generations.

Tinted in shades opalescent, bright as the delicate sea-shells,
The ocean's gray canvas is painted in marvellous new masterpieces.

Melody curcurs unceasing, sweet in the sighing of breezes,
Wild in the swelling tornado, low in the tide's gentle humming.

Ever the rhythmical surf is caught into lyrical stanzas.
Ever it throbs with that beat, caged with wild lamentation ;
Vanquished when burdened by love, calmed to melodious dreaming.
Poetry sings in the surf, as sweet and as wild and as haunting.

Brilliant the minds of the people, cleared by the transparent waters,
Sparkling as bright as the sunlight dancing on billows and pebbles,
Flashing like mica in stones, strung on the wavering shore-line.
Thus are the minds of the people clarified by the great waters.

Drops from the scurrying wavelets, dashed at the base of a boulder,
Leap away to the heavens, crystal sparks from the anvil,—
Crystal the thoughts of the people, leaping in shining ideals,
Soaring away to the heavens, winging their welcome way homeward.

Lovely the bed of the ocean,—the ocean of true education.

CANTO VIII.
THE WORLD OCEAN

Boundless the bring of the ocean, the ocean of true education.
Vanishing shores will, at last, sink into utter oblivion.
Then will the foaming green breakers roll away to the eastward,
Meeting the eastern Atlantic; roll away to the westward,
Joining the western Pacific. Out on the tides of her neighbors,
Waves will she send to all countries, bearing her spiritual message
Over the turbulent surface, reaching the shores dimly distant.
Eastward and westward her breakers roll and awaken an echo.
Covering all of the world, she will drown all gloom with her dear-drops,
Calling to laughter and song with the sun reflected in sparkles,
Calling to joy and to dreams the souls of her blind little children,
Laved in the healing waters, awakened to God and to beauty,
Laved in the healing waters of the ocean of true education.

History of the Senior Class

IN many ways the record of the senior class this year is different from that of any senior class in the history of the Old College. In the first place, during our stay of four years at the College, the old seat of learning has risen from the slough of despond to the very heights of hopefulness. In the year 1919 there was a palpable note of despondency, sadness, and solemnity in the history of the senior class. It was a period of change, of transition, of reconstruction after the great war, and we must think soberly, recorded the historian of that class. The attendance upon the College that year was small. The S. A. T. C. had rather confused the organization of the College. It was the year, so rumor has it, when the State authorities were even considering the advisability of removing the College of William and Mary to a location, accessible to a larger number of students.

But in the year that followed there was a reawakening. The College increased its attendance more than a hundred per cent. over that of the preceding year. The Legislature met and gave larger appropriations than ever before in the history of the College. A fine new dormitory was erected on the campus. Plans were laid for an endowment campaign. So the College, under the new administration, saw the dawning of a new era. And so the College has progressed from year to year during our stay of four years. The attendance upon the College is now five times what it was four years ago; and the number of graduates this year is five times the number in the class of 1919.

In the fall of 1918, women for the first time entered as students in the College. They have, during their four years at the College, shown in no little fashion their aptitude for scholarship. This year 50 per cent. of the members of the senior class are women. They have in the past years and will no doubt this year attain some of the highest honors. We can well imagine that the attendance of women upon the College has upset many of the traditions of the men, but since the women were at the College when we entered, we could not well recognize William and Mary without her women students. We may well add that the women students have in no way lowered the academic standards at the College.

With all this advancement and progress at the College, with the increase in the number of students and with the raising of the academic standards we could scarcely pass through such a period without experiencing some of their direct results, and without feeling that we are in some degree helping to make possible the success of it all. Like all graduates, we feel that our years here have been the best, and as we look back after our departure, we shall nod our heads in a knowing way and say the old College can never be what it was in our days. This is natural; if we did not have this sentiment for the old College, we would not love it as we should. We would pause here to express a word of most tender affection for the professors who were with us in our first year, but who are no longer at the College, Dr. Tyler, Dr. Keeble, Dr. Wilson, Dr. Clarke, and Dr. Garrett.

Only about a third of the students in the senior class were freshmen in 1919. So it is that the constituents of a college class are so evanescent that it is quite impossible to record even its happenings. Furthermore, a history should embody not only what has been done, but what has been thought and even hoped for as well. We believe that some of us, though we have not proved ourselves scholars, are leaving College better prepared to face the bigger and sterner tasks of life than when we entered the College. We believe that some of us have learned the best that any college can give us—the ability to think for ourselves.

We like to consider the College as a miniature state, with all its complexities, almost shut off from the rest of the world. In the midst of this state is man, "a being of genius, passion, intellect, conscience, and power." As in the civil state we see this man exercising these "various gifts in various ways, in great deeds, in great thoughts, in heroic acts, in hateful crimes." Many is the play that is acted on the campus, some uproarious comedies, others heart-rending tragedies. Sometimes Aristophanes plays such tricks on us that we do not know whether to laugh or to cry. Many are the friendships made at college; many, too, are the friendships broken at college. Many are the ideals and the ambitions on the campus; many, too, are the disillusionments and failures on the campus. We, of the senior class, have experienced at times the height of optimism, only at other times to topple down into the abyss of pessimism. With these various shades of inexpressible feelings that have filled our hearts during our stay at the grand old College of William and Mary, with all her traditions dear to us all, who would dare even if he could, to record the heart throbs of any single one of us?

Junior Class History

UPPOSE that every class historian finds something unique about his class whether that thing is really there or not. I am glad to say, however, that I don't have to fish around and stretch facts; for the class of 1923 speaks for itself—and my task is thus lightened.

While thinking over what to say in this record the other day, I said to our most worthy editor-in-chief, "Dick, shall I burden the readers of this book with all the honors of the junior class, or shall I make the history short and snappy?" Dick frowned and replied in the negative—I knew that he was right.

Now, about our distinctions—look back with me to the fall of 1919. I wish to make no radical claims for the class of '23, but 1919 is a year to be particularly remembered in the history of William and Mary. In that year entered a wonderful class of freshmen, one-third larger than the enrollment of the entire college during the previous year. And here is what I want you to note well. The present junior class entered in 1919, and in 1919 William and Mary started its great forward movement. I need only mention these two facts together, the connection can be readily established. (Look at our roll.)

But lest we seem a little conceited, let me pass hurriedly on to a few details about the class of '23. During the third week in September, 1919, one hundred and eighty-seven of us came up from the station wondering and shivering in our unrealized ignorance (and in our dusty clothes, too). That year five of our number made the Varsity football team, four made the baseball nine, and others made their letters in basketball and track. We had men taking prominent part in college activities, and plenty of good students, too.

In 1920 our class was reduced to one hundred and twenty-four, and today we have only seventy-four. Forty-two of the original class of '23 are still in the fold, the rest of the seventy-four we are glad to have with us.

We now claim to have the best scholastic standing of all the classes. We are well represented on the athletic field with good men in all the different sports. Top-notch business men, executives, honest treasurers, editors, authors, actors, speakers are among us. A full quota of sling-footers, tobacco bums, bull-slingers, etc., is ours—and I can't leave the lovers out either. Yes all kinds we have, for ours is a representative class.

I know that I have filled my page by now, and I realize that this is punk, but let it pass, Mr. Editor, under the excuse that the true and full history of the unmatched class of 1923 will be duly recorded as a part of the senior section in the 1923 "Colonial Echo."

SOPHOMORE CLASS

Sophomore Class History

SEPTEMBER 16. Indignation prevails! A green, brazen "duc" actually asking whether or not you are a freshman. The height of heinousity! This, the sophomore class, even in its freshest freshman days, would not have dared ask such a question. Immediately, we see before us months of arduous work in trying to make the inferior class ready to take our place.

December 22. Today we were almost overcome by the clouds of dust hovering over the campus, caused by the flurry of excited "ducs" in their eagerness to lose no time in reaching their "whick-whack" towns. We are irritated at the thought of our peace being greatly disturbed by insignificant "ducs," anxious for another visit from Santa Claus.

February 6. The much dreaded exams are over at last. In spite of the fact that we pretended that they were not dreaded, there was an uneasiness which we dared not show. Under our good influence and example, we have at last seen a few of the "ducs" actually studying. We hope to see a better improvement by June.

June 4. Our work as sophomores is at an end (we hope for all of us). We willingly resign our place to those who once were green as the very grass itself, but who, under wise training, have reached a certain degree of intelligence.

FRESHMAN CLASS

Leaves from an Undergraduate's Diary

September 18, 19—

MY first day as a citizen of the collegiate world ! Now that the evening shadows are here and as I am alone with my thoughts it will be well to sort and classify all these impressions that have deluged me. They are much more than impressions: they are jolts.

It seems that I created a college world out of the material of my imagination long before my feet were on the campus. I find that mentally I am between two worlds: the one which was created from the materials of imagination; the other of the concrete things of a very real reality. Strange—these two worlds have nothing in common.

One impression must needs be recorded. It is of that fifty odd miles of desolation that spreads itself out between here and Richmond. Passing through and musing on it as one will muse on trains, I named this wild stretch of land "The Country that God Forgot." A rather harsh nomenclature, yet the only one that seems to give an adequate impression of the feelings that must be common to all who, for their first time, steam merrily through its miles of sterile sameness.

I had my first taste of loneliness on that train. It was a well-crowded train. Just in front of me was a small group of very-much-in-evidence students of the upper-classmen variety. They were enjoying a very intimate companionship made sweet by a summer's separation. They were of a type which jarred a wee bit on my conception of mentally and imagination-created collegians. Primarily they were not intellectuals. Neither their faces nor their conduct betrayed any of those traits which by instinct one associates with the student type; just young active animals with an exuberant holiday spirit about them. Despite this there was a subtle air of cultivated superiority about them. I have been so much in that air today that I have mental mal-de-mer—such air is quite upsetting mentally.

While no brass band heralded my approach, yet there was a veritable sea of scrutinizing, intensive looks leveled with astonishing precision as I descended from the train. I had the keen and not altogether pleasant realization of just how embarrassing some sixty pair of clear young eyes could be. I would have given much to have been given some Gyges mirror whereby I could have looked behind those eyes to the reaction that my cinder-covered face set up. They made me feel as if I had forgotten to wear a tie, or as if my trousers were in jeopardy.

On analysis the whole day seems to have been a series of embarrassing situations. My first meal was an ordeal. To one who has been accustomed to eating within the privacy of a home circle the quick transition to a mob of hungry animals, all more than anxious to devour everything in sight, is a jolt that is not passed over lightly.

There has been a whole series of lesser jolts. A session with a dean who with a few words of biting academic criticism of my beloved prep. school nearly jolted my temper loose. A visit to the college treasurer was also a jolt of another kind. The kind that shook loose all my money. All these took place before noon.

After lunch I made my call on the president. I went with a mind prepared for a jolt. I was like a man who stands before the deep pool of cold water ready to take a plunge, shivers, musters up a maximum of courage and makes the plunge to find the water not cold, but delightfully warm. Such was my experience with the president, and the reaction was such a delightful surprise and so unexpected that I was—completely embarrassed.

There is one very subtle bit of satisfaction that comes to me as I sit here in this desolate room writing these words. I am not alone tonight. Over a vast expanse of this America of ours are perhaps thousands sorting the mixed impressions of a first day at college.

I salute you, my fellow adventurers, on the great collegiate sea. If you have found its waters as cool as I have, you will have found them as invigorating. Wherever you may be tonight, the University of Maine, of Michigan, Columbia, Yale, Tulane, anywhere, whoever you may be, I reach out invisible hands to you; for we are one tonight at the end of the first day of the great adventure.

September 21st.

William James somewhere describes the world that presents itself to the infant as a "big buzzing confusion." I am as an infant born into a new world; it certainly buzzes and is outwarding confusion confounded.

The process of discarding my college of ideality still continues, rather slowly but quite effectually. I am quietly substituting for my college creation of dream mists and cobwebbed ideals a something which, while I do not understand, yet I know it is of the materials of a drab reality.

Tonight I have not the slightest idea of what the function of a college is. The time was when I had a sure confidence that I knew with a scientific precision of definition. Tonight I am confident of little. Perhaps if faced with the task of defining a college man, the definition which I would hazard would be that he is a sort of specialized grown-up baby with a marked predilection to reversion to the undeveloped condition.

I am slowly learning the mysteries of college spirit. I am dimly aware of the attitude of the college mind, considering the college mind in the collective sense. It is a Janus-like thing, this attitude. Outwardly it assumes a position the exact opposite of what one would think it to be. What it is inwardly that sovereign alchemist, Time, has yet to reveal to me.

When I started for here my driving impulse was to know books. I fear that I shall know very little about books. It does seem that I shall know much about those things that are not in books.

There is a curious process going on among us freshmen. We are making friends on a conscious trial basis. All of us are quite engaged in making friends of the trial and error plan. We all seem to know by some unvarying instinct that many of our present friendships cannot last. The process of making friends is such a delicate one that I went over to the library this afternoon and read Emerson's Essay on Friendship. Some of those wonderful lines still echo through my mind. For a cold philosopher Emerson does have some surprising outbursts of very human warmth.

This brings me to an interesting bit of introspection. Are any of these men about me destined to be great souls? Will any of these buoyant, care-free personalities sway the destinies of our Nation? Will some of these hands which now move on such trivialities be the instruments that will pen words that will live from generation to generation? These are certainly possibilities. I must know all these men as intimately as possible, then I will not lose any chance of knowing a great spirit in embryo.

Now that I have been going to classes for several days, I have made at least one interesting discovery. It is that college professors are quite human and that they are not mere storehouses of academic learning. I no longer think of a professor as a storehouse of knowledge but rather as a dynamo of knowledge and a mainspring of thinking.

Phillips Brooks wrote after his first week in Virginia that if one intended to stay here any length of time it would be wise to leave one's intellect behind. This statement of Phillips Brooks has always puzzled me. It seemed harsh, quite too harsh for so gentle a soul. This last week I have found the feeling that prompted it. I feel the same way; why, I do not know.

It seems to be a part of freshmen scheme of things not to think. It appears to be almost a mania, an obsession with all of us to avoid the process as something dangerous and pernicious.

Life seems to be a travesty on itself, a huge joke. Men come from every direction to college with the avowed intention of training their minds to think. When we get here we seem to vie with each other to see who can be the most successful in avoiding the process.

November 15th.

In all truth the spirit of this place is on me. It is long past the hour of midnight. The lights are out and I am writing this by the fitful, uncertain light of a solitary candle. A new realization has come to me, a realization of the reality of people who have gone before and yet have left some indelible impress on the atmosphere.

I am just in from talking to shadows, to gohsts; for ghosts are but shadows. Cold marbled Botetourt was the first to melt from his frigid statuesqueness under the softening light of the November moon. I was coming in from the Duke of Gloucester Street, right up the main walk from the gate and the sparkling whiteness of Botetourt held me breathless. As I walked towards him I murmured his name, Norman Berkley Baron de Botetourt, and it was like a mystic cantrap, for in the drama of shadow lights he became quite animate and as I stood there at his feet he seemed to spread out a hand in patriarchal blessing and he seemed to say, "My son, for all who walk these walks are my sons, to you falls the mantle of tradition that was woven these two centuries ago by such as me. Wear it as becomes a son of this old College and I will watch over you and guard you." It was all very real and I stood there motionless with wide-open eyes looking up into that benevolent face and I loved old Botetourt.

Filled with strange calm I walked up to the Wren Building to cross over to Taliaferro. A shadowy Jefferson greeted me. He was very real. He was both youth and man. It confused me to see him here. I blurted out, "You should be at Charlottesville." Not the least diplomatic salutation for our greatest diplomat, to be sure. He looked quite sad and either he or the night wind in the trees murmured, "I wanted to found a democratic institution, and I have founded it here."

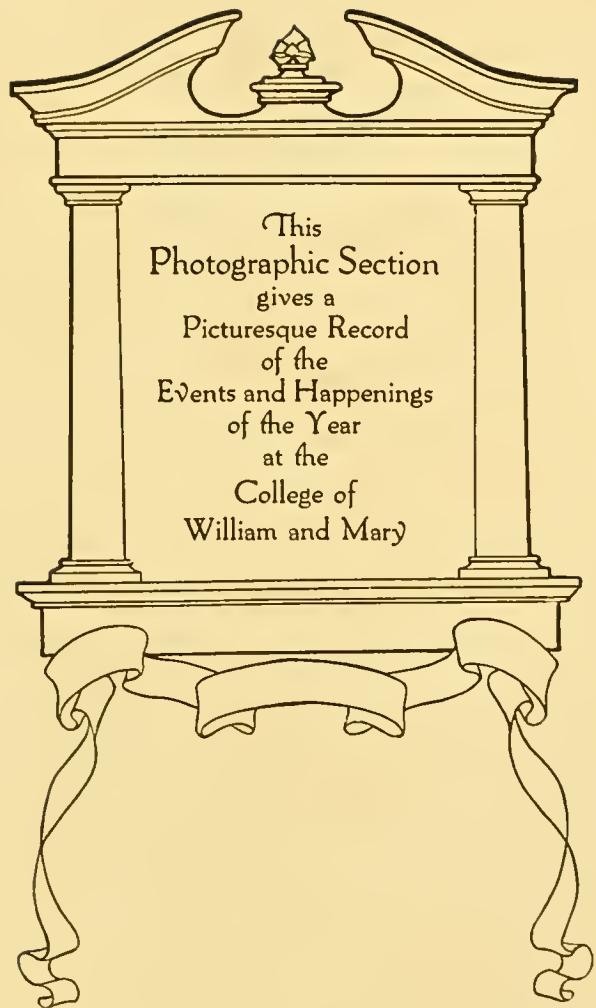

Frightened at my own poor judgment, I hurried past him, not daring to look back. The moon was shining bright into the first floor rooms of Brafferton. I nearly went by, but I paused just to watch for a minute the shadow form of Barton Rogers as he worked at his test-tubes with that loving zeal of the scientist.

Yes—the spirit of the place is on me. There is such a thing as atmosphere about a place. Traditions do mean something, and it all makes me feel quite small and very humble.

And the roses are white in the gloaming,
Where the hush of old beauty lies heavy and sweet,
Scarce stirred by the winds that are roaming.*

JAMES G. DRIVER

James Glenn (Jimmie) Driver was made professor of physical education at the College of William and Mary in September, 1919.

He is an alumnus of William and Mary, having attended the College four years. He was unusually prominent in athletics, and in his fourth year was signally honored by being elected captain of the football, the baseball, the basketball and the track teams. From the College of William and Mary he went to the University of Virginia where he was a member of the football, the baseball and the basketball teams.

His experience as an athletic mentor is a long one. He was Athletic and Physical Training Director at the University of South Carolina two years, and at Newberry College, South Carolina, one year. During the war he was a Captain of Infantry, directing physical training and athletics in the camps, and he also served on special duty consisting of bayonet instruction.

His work at the College of William and Mary has been most commendable. His teams have been representative ones, some of them having made excellent records. Coach Driver is a gentleman through and through, and his influence has extended to the members of the teams which he has coached. This influence has made the teams under his tutelage known throughout the State as sportsmen and gentlemen.

W. E. FINCHER

William F. (Bill) Fincher, who coached the William and Mary football team last fall, is a product of the Georgia School of Technology. He was for five years a member of the Golden Tornado, representing that school. Fincher was selected by Walter Camp in 1920, a member of the mythical All-American eleven. For four years he was named a member of the All-Southern eleven.

Fincher played for three years on Tech High School, Atlanta, Georgia, before entering Georgia Tech.

At Tech he played both end and tackle. In 1920, after the Pitt game, he ran the team, as well as playing his line position excellently.

Injuries to his men prevented the Indians from making the showing under Fincher that was hoped for. He made a number of friends among the students while here.

The Chronicle

INJURIES to many members of the football squad prevented the 1921 football season at William and Mary from attaining the success that the material for the eleven warranted. The material was the best that has ever been out for an Indian eleven.

During the first of the year, when Coach Fincher had all his men in shape physically, the Indians made a good record. Towards the last, however, the Indians, minus many of the most brilliant performers in the line-up, on account of injuries, failed to exhibit the brand of football that had been expected of them. Their play was not consistent.

White, Levvy and Harwood, three of the best men on the locals' roster, were absent from the gridiron at critical times. White hurt his shoulder and missed several games; Levvy was injured and also missed the most important games of the year; Harwood, after his injury in the Wake Forest contest, was unable to play further. A number of men were on the hospital list in addition to these three, but mention of the trio named is sufficient.

In the football classic of the year the Indians lost to University of Richmond, 17-7. For that reason alone, the season could not be called successful. Dobson's men played a smart game, always hitting the weakest points in the Indian defense. Their linemen had been carefully coached to deal with the Indians' line plays.

A review of the games of the year follows:

V. P. I. VS W. AND M.

In the initial game of the Indians' gridiron schedule, W. and M. was overcome in a hard-fought contest with the V. P. I. regulars by a 14-to-0 victory. The Indians showed splendid defensive strength but no offensive drive. Both elevens played cautiously in the first quarter, but the failure of a driving, smashing offense on the part of the Indians gave a leeway to the Techs. A thirty-yard run by Gettle and a ten-yard run by Wallace gave Tech a touchdown early in the second quarter. The third quarter found the Indians on their twenty-five-yard line. Line plunges by Gettle, Hess and Wallace gave V. P. I. her final victory, 14-0.

Rip Wallace was the outstanding player for V. P. I. Harwood and Todd were the shining lights for William and Mary.

TRINITY VS. W. AND M.

The Indians turned the tide of defeat into a victory wave by defeating the strong Trinity eleven by the score of 12-0. The Indians scored in the first and fourth quarters of the game. The powerful defense of the Indians prevented the Trinity eleven from getting to the Indians' forty-yard line on only one occasion, keeping the Carolinians on the defensive. This was the only defeat suffered by Trinity during the whole season.

Joice Levy was the star of the game for the Indians, both in gaining ground and in running back punts. Flanders ran good interference. The work of Todd, Fuller, and Harwood was splendid.

GEORGE WASHINGTON VS. W. AND M.

Though outweighed throughout the contest and outplayed in the first quarter, the Indians exhibited remarkable comeback qualities in the game with George Washington University and they played the big eleven to 7-7 standstill. Twice, in addition to the allowed score, Indian backs crossed the Hatchetites' line, only to be called back by the referee for stepping outside. On one of these decisions the head linesman ruled that the Indian back had not stepped out of bounds. Both touchdowns were scored in the last half.

WAKE FOREST VS. W. AND M.

The week following the George Washington game the Indians met Wake Forest in Norfolk and defeated the Baptists, 21-14. The defense of the locals was noticeably poorer than that exhibited in the George Washington contest, although the offense was equally as strong. The Indians started off like a house afire, and outplayed the North Carolinians during the first half, but injuries to Harwood forced the big end out of the game, and his exit apparently affected the defense of the Indians in the last half.

RANDOLPH-MACON VS. W. AND M.

The first home game on the Indians gridiron schedule resulted in an Indian victory over the Yellow Jackets by a score of 35 to 0. Fleetness of foot enabled the locals to make seven touchdowns. Randolph-Macon made eleven first downs, but her eleven could not score. No team has displayed greater pluck than did the Yellow Jackets against such odds.

Randolph, Bauserman, Cobb and Roane were the stars for the Yellow Jackets. Hastings, Levvy, Hardy, Jenkins, Flanders, Todd and White were the outstanding players for the Indians.

CATHOLIC U. VS. W. AND M.

Another defeat was cast into the Indians' wigwam when Catholic University ripped the Indians' line open by a score of 27 to 13. The Indians were outplayed during the first half, but the second half found them renewing their fight and offering more stubborn resistance.

Joyner's sensational run of eighty-five yards for a touchdown; Hastings' wonderful playing at end and full-back; Joice Levvy's ground gaining feats were the outstanding features of the game.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY VS. W. AND M.

The Indians ran wild on the local gridiron, making history in the field of football for the William and Mary eleven. The victory of 76 to 0 score over the Seminary eleven was the highest score in the history of the College and the largest made by any eleven in Virginia this season. The Indians' line charged better and fought harder than they had done before. The backfield ran well, taking advantages of interference and good openings. This local game was the preparation for the old time rival contest with the Spiders on Thanksgiving Day.

RICHMOND U. VS. W. AND M.

The Indians' last contest of the season ended in a defeat by the score of 17 to 7 in favor of the Spiders. This defeat cast a gloom over football enthusiasts for William and Mary. Thanksgiving Day found every loyal William and Mary alumnus in Virginia in Richmond rooting for the Indians.

The Spiders did their scoring in the first half of the game. Shift plays coupled with splendid interference gave the victory to the Spiders.

Hastings' and Dietz's running back of punts were the outstanding features of the contest. Dietz's receiving Harahan's punt on the twenty-yard line and returning it forty-five yards, and Hastings' running back a punt twenty-five yards in like manner were spectacular performances. These features furnished great hopes to the William and Mary rooters until the whistle blew for the close of the game.

The Winners

THE 1922 basketball record of the Indians is an impressive one. Out of a total of thirteen games, the locals emerged the victor in ten. The one regrettable feature of the year was the loss of the final game of the year to the University of Richmond by a score of 22-20, at Westhampton. The Indians had previously won from the Spiders in a runaway contest here by the county of 26-13.

In the first of the year the local five were the winners. They went through their schedule handily, as had been predicted. The largest score made against their air-tight defense was the 36-20 defeat administered by University of Virginia, mythical South-Atlantic champions George Washington defeated the local tossers 24-21, due in main to the Indian forwards' inability to cage foul goals. The final game was lost to the Dobsonites. The Indians, in poor condition, put up one of the bravest games a William and Mary team has ever exhibited. They led the Spiders until the middle of the second half.

- W. & M., 39; Randolph-Macon, 13.
- W. & M., 20; University of Richmond, 22.

Statistics for the year show that the Indians scored 464 points to their opponents 248. The leading Indian scorers were: Captain Cooke, with 41 field goals, and 42 foul goals; Hicks, with 55 field goals and 3 foul goals, and C. Pierce, with 43 field goals and 1 foul goal. Harwood, center, shot 21 field goals.

Baseball

FOR 1922 the baseball outlook is indeed promising. Nine letter men have returned, as well as a number of highly reputed players from all parts of the State. Three men are gone from last year's team, Haley Settle, captain and pitcher; "Rube" Marshall, pitching phenomenon, and "Bake" Jones, speedy second sacker. Men to fill their shoes will be selected from the incoming material.

The schedule arranged for this year is the most comprehensive ever attempted by an Indian nine. Twenty-two games are to be played, including a nine-day trip to the North. In addition a two-game series has been arranged with the Newport News Club of the Virginia State League, and a three-game series with the Indians ancient rivals, the University of Richmond.

Coach Driver, who successfully handled last year's team, is again directing the nine, and is being capably assisted by Otto Lowe, captain this year, who has held down the hot corner in highly commendable style for two seasons.

The letter men who have returned, with the number of years they have played, is as follows:

Stephens pitched great ball in 1920, but was out of College last year. He has played summer baseball in West Virginia, where his record was very good. "Scrap" Chandler was used as a relief pitcher last year and showed up well in the box. During last summer he was mound hero of some great games.

Jordan, a freshman from Smithfield High School, is said to have plenty of stuff and control. "Curt" Thompson is also expected to be one of the local's best pitchers. "Fobbie" Cobb, who matriculated in February, possesses a splendid diamond record.

The schedule for the year is as follows :

- April 1—Fort Monroe, here.
- April 3—Union Theological Seminary, here.
- April 6—University of Delaware, here.
- April 10—Newport News State League Club, here.
- April 11—Newport News State League Club, here.
- April 15—University of Richmond, Newport News.

The Artist

*His gaze drifts far away in distant dream
Above the ugliness of worldly strife;
He only sees the beautiful in life.
His glance, sweeping the skies for golden gleam
Like a searchlight's ray, hath pierced the heavens above.
Then, from that realm of Beauty, flows to his heart
The love of music, poesy, and art—
Touching sublimity—wild, ætherial love.
Like Mercury, with sandals golden spun,
He leaps from cloud to cloud to seek the sun.
One downward glance—the sky is ever lost.
One stumbling step—and Beauty counts the cost.
Ah, hold thy gaze unwavering to the light,
Thou godlike messenger to Beauty's height !*

Richmond
School of Social Work and Public Health

affiliated with

The College of William & Mary

Richmond, Virginia

Introduction

The Richmond School of Social Work and Public Health was organized in the spring of 1917. It was the first training school for social workers, recreation and community workers, and public health nurses to be established in the South.

The School became affiliated with the College of William and Mary in 1920. The affiliation permits students to count work done in the School toward A. B., B. S., and M. A. degrees at the College of William and Mary. Much of the instruction, particularly in pre-professional subjects, is given by the members of the College faculty who come to Richmond to meet these classes. The professional instruction is given by the resident faculty under the direction of:

DR. H. H. HIBBS, JR., Director

ANNE M. SMITH, Department of Recreation and Community Work

MARY P. DUPUY, Department of Social Work

BETTIE W. MACDANALD, Department of Public Health Nursing

The program of the School is unique in that the students not only attend lectures and classes, but also devote much of their time to field work with agencies such as the following:

Juvenile Court and Probation Work
Associated Charities
Psychopathic Clinic
School Attendance Office
Settlements and Community Centers
Boys' and Girls' Clubs
Playgrounds
Instructive Visiting Nurse Association
Public School Nurses
Bureau of Public Health
Chesterfield County Visiting Nurses

In preparing this section of the Colonial Echo the committee has attempted to illustrate each type of field work. It is hoped that these illustrations will depict our activities and convey to the reader some of the enthusiasm we ourselves feel.

*"If I could write one little word upon the hearts of men,
I'd dip into the fount of love and write with golden pen
One little word, and only one,
And feel life's work on earth well done,
For every heart would speak to me
That one sweet word—Fraternity."*

The Phi Beta Kappa Society

HE Phi Kappa Society, founded at the College of William and Mary, December 5, 1776, numbered among its first fifty members John Marshall, William Short, John James Beckley, John Heath, and Bushrod Washington. To quote from the original Phi Beta Kappa records: "At a meeting of the Society the 18th of May, 1780, Capt. John Marshall being recommended as a gentleman who would make a worthy member of this Society was ballotted for and received." The founders of the Society were John Heath, who was the first President, Thomas Smith, Richard Booker, Armistead Smith, and John James.

The first period of the Alpha chapter lasted only five years, when the fear of the British fleet in 1781 caused the chapter to place its records in the hands of the College steward. "1781. On Saturday, the 6th of January, a meeting of Phi Beta Kappa was called for the Purpose of Securing the Papers of the Society during the Confusion of the Times, and the present Dissolution which threatens the University." "And this Deposit they make in the sure and certain Hope that the Fraternity will one day rise to Life everlasting and Glory immortal." These records were lost, but were regained by the Virginia Historical Society and were returned to the mother chapter in 1893.

Although the first five years were greatly interrupted by the war, it was a very prosperous period for the Society. During this time a petition was received from Harvard and was granted December 4, 1779; another charter was granted five days later to Yale. These two chapters, with the consent of the Alpha chapter, established the fourth chapter at Dartmouth College. Brilliant men were enrolled in the New England chapters: J. Q. Adams, Emerson, Beecher, Bryant, Holmes, Longfellow, Bret Harte, Stedman, Stoddard, Webster, and Lowell.

In 1849 the old mother chapter rose from her dormant position and took on new life. William Short, one of the fifty founders, was still living and was interested in the Alpha chapter. He revived the mother chapter and placed its stewardship in the hands of the College faculty. However, in May, 1861, war again knocked at the doors of the old College, calling forth the Phi Beta Kappas to lay aside their college activities and to enter the army. Thus from 1861 to 1893 the mother chapter again slumbered peacefully.

In 1893, after the College had been in operation for five years, William Lamb determined to revive the chapter by initiating into the Society the whole College faculty and the librarian. Thus the mother chapter, again raised from her dormant state, took on new vigor and yet survives as the greatest honorary fraternity in existence to-day. The revival of the chapter was welcomed by all lovers of the historic old Society, which has clustered about its scroll a constellation of associations unparalleled in the history of any honorary society.

Speaks the Old Tower of Bruton Church

Thrice have I seen the embattled youth surge by,
Falcon-eyed, for Liberty content to die.

I.

1781

First saw I, proud, the tide that eastward rolled,
Cast in great Washington's heroic mold,
In blue and buff, with flintlock's sullen steel,
Bringing to birth a nation's woe or weal,

And other youth, who floated the fleur-de-lys
In the New World, making a people free,
Who served a king, and spake an alien tongue,
Yet, selfless, came o'er seas to right an ancient wrong.

II.

1862

Next saw I, sad, the tide aflood, then spent,
Of youth in blue and gray, to Freedom dedicate,
Nurselings from Her full breasts, each boy elate,
And counting self but soldier to Her lent;

And broken bodies, laid within my walls,
Breathed forth their lives, their dimming eyes the while
Looking last of earthly things on the Christ's sad smile.
At morn my shadow on their peaceful ashes falls.

III.

1918

Then last saw I, full proud and glad,
The tide of youth in khaki clad,
Sweep by to serve humanity,
In the Old Land of the fleur-de-lys.

Not theirs the ancient feuds that tore
Men's souls and bodies: onward bore
They clear-eyed, through the swirling foam,
The fangéd U-boats' shifting home,
In flame and thunder passed they on,
In each the soul of Washington.

Their ashes sleep in hallowed ground,
Bedecked by woman's tender hands,
And alien tongues, yet lovely, sound
Laments for them who died for France.

Thrice have I seen the embattled youth surge by,
Falcon-eyed, for Liberty content to die:
Now on my walls dawns the new day
Wherein shall Peace hold lasting sway.

Women's Athletics

UE to the new gymnasium and more students, there has been a keener interest in women's athletics this year. Every woman student has taken part in some form of sport. Especially is the spirit, the energy and the willingness of the Freshman Class to be commended.

The aim of athletics is to develop the individual physically, mentally, and spiritually. No attempt has been made to accomplish this goal by offering a variety of athletes from which each student can make her choice of activity. "A well trained whole, not a highly trained few," has been the slogan.

The different types of athletics have claimed their quota. The largest response has been to the swimming pool, because it is a new sport here and strikes a real cord of interest as the great sport for women. Swimming classes, plunges, and exhibitions have been eagerly attended.

Next in point of numbers have been hiking and tennis. Hickery has aroused a whirl of interest. Track is gaining its proper place. The tendency is toward the individualistic sports, many of which we may enjoy through life; but the team games with their valuable technical and mental training with their lasting hold on interest have not been neglected.

Hockey, indoor baseball and volley ball have had various degrees of support. Nevertheless, sentiment still favors basketball as the competitive sport for women.

The basketball season this year was very successful. About sixty girls played basketball, many of whom showed marked ability. A varsity was chosen after anxiety and thought. This team proved itself worthy of the esteem given to it. The defeat of the Sweet Briar sextet by a score of 29-25 was the high-water mark of the season. When it has been added that the School of Social Work of Richmond bowed with a score of — to 8, and that Great Bridge High School was outplayed by the freshman team 25 to 11, it is scarcely necessary to commend the speed and accuracy of the players.

In summary, it may be said that women's athletics has not only had a successful year, but the foundation was laid for a successful future.

Thoughts

I.

*The morn is a silver mist;
The moon is of gold;
The eve is a star, dew-kissed;
The night is a scroll.*

II.

*Writ with the stars of the blue,
Lit with the moon's soft ray;
At night I can dream of you;
Work holds me fast for the day.*

III.

*Morn is of silver, I know,
Silken and soft to the eye;
Noon is of glimmering, glad gold,
Brilliant, as none can descry.*

IV.

*Eve is the period of rest
That comes between day and night's dew,
But night is of all times the best,
For I only have dreams then of you.*

When Betty Came from Cooking School

*When Betty came from cooking school
Her cheeks were like a blushing rose;
Around her saucy little mouth
A dozen dimples sought repose;
She wore a hat of rosy tulle
When Betty came from cooking school.*

*I held her dainty parasol
(I wished it might have been her hand);
I whispered airy nothings
That but she and I could understand—
Ah, me! I fear I played the fool
When Betty came from cooking school.*

*Now Betty sits beside my hearth,
The prize, at last, is all my own,
And I am happy, though I feel
That prize was rather dearly won,
For now my meals are by the rule
That Betty learned at cooking school.*

*When Love as a modest moonbeam,
Touched its lips to a drop of dew,
And the dulcet voice of the song bird
Won each breeze as a messenger true;
When the pure dawn merged into sunshine
Awakening each Meadow and Glade,
Our God breathed a prayer unto heaven
Which returned in the form of a Maid.*

II.

*And I knew when her smile gladly greeted the Sun
'Twas Friendship thru eternity:
So the Virtues and Maid
In the Meadows and Glade
Pledged Love in Fraternity.*

SISTER SONG

Dearest of college friends, Delta Phi Kappas,
To thee we sing;
Tho' our hearts are smarting
Because we are parting
Our voices ring.
Hail O Fraternity, years will but strengthen our loyalty,
O blest be the Delta Phi Spirit that binds us as Sisters true. A. E. C.

Correct Punctuation
By
Lieut. Woolley.

Ode to Woolley

Of all things in creation
I detest punctuation !
It's dash ! dash ! dash ! dash !
It's dot ! dot ! dot ! dot !

Whene'er you think
You've got it right,
Be very sure you've not.

There's work to kill a nation
In Woolley's punctuation.
For your brains go crash ;
Your eyes go doty dot.

And lest you think
You've got it right,
Be very sure you've not.

It's a horrible sensation
To suffer punctuation.
Your wits may go to smash,
But "D" is all your lot.

(The moping owl doth to the moon complain,
But little consolation gets for all her pain.)

—MINERVA'S OWL.

Ode to Our Waiters

*See that waiter over there,
With that sad and vacant stare?
Do you notice how his face
Reminds one of an empty space?
But what redeems him is his grace,
Just like a polar bear.*

*Ah! here he comes toward us now,
With the water and the cow;
Then he goes out as if for more,
And stays and stays behind that door,
What we expect is food galore—
Puzzle—find the chow.*

*Oh! he is now o'er there with Reese,
With his elbow in the "grease."
Now he comes so gaily tripping,
In my soup his finger dipping,
Feminine fumes the while is sniffing,
D-u-m-b to say the least.*

*Did you bring the corn beef hash,
Or the potatoes a la mash?
If you think that your mere mention,
Of things to eat will arouse attention,
In the mind of that sad invention,
'Snuff—take the cash.*

*The other day I said to him,
When I was hungry, just from Jim,
"Mr. Waiter, please don't get sore,
But is there food behind that door,
Where you get your waiter, nothing more?"
Food????—aw, keep slim.*

*There are some waiters who are good.
What I mean is, they get the food.
Yeh, they get the food we will admit,
And we know from whence they get,
But what in the Hell becomes of it,
If you know—knock on wood.*

—F. R. W.

History of the Ringtail

HE College of William and Mary has one thing to boast of at least, and that is the owning of a few of that very rare specimen of the now almost extinct specie of the monkey family known to us as the "Ringtail".

In the year 1401 there were wont to wander on the present campus of William and Mary (at that time a mass of underbrush hidden in the shade of giant trees) a family of this monkey tribe as they swung from tree to tree for a pastime, instead of patronizing the Palace Theatre or Tennis' Drug Store.

This Ringtail family was a very queer sort of animal indeed. They were not shy, were easily led into captivity, and would eat right out of the hands of any member of the feminine gender.

In the year 1693, when civilization had reached its zenith in Williamsburg, Lord Botetourt and the College of William and Mary took their stand right on the very spot where these ringtails had once played. They gradually disappeared, until the year 1918, when it was learned by some of its ranks that the College was now complete since they had filled in the word Mary, at which time we again find slight traces of them slipping in and out of the campus when Mr. Bridges wasn't looking. Mr. Bridges then gave up the campus keys to Mr. Holmes, who locks it up every night before going to bed, now.

Upon returning to their tribal towns, such as Newport News, Norfolk, Richmond, Petersburg, McKenney, etc., they related their wonderful knowledge, and it can be justly said that in the year 1922 during the reign of Dr. Chandler, they became numerous and very useful, disguising themselves as Soda Checks and Movie Tickets, both to the feminine gender as well as their best beaux.

A peculiar trait about this specie is that it retains that former weakness of character. Although it walks upright like a human, and has quit its playful tactics of swinging from tree to tree, it is still easily led into captivity, a soda parlor, or a theatre by the enticing glance of the feline gender. They have been given many different kinds of names but the student of Darwin's Theory can recognize the old familiar Ringtail.

Piggy Rew—What thin legs Mr. Stephens has!

Rosa Marks—I can't see them now, they're behind his bat.

—O—

Bob Wallace—Say, Judge, they'll never be able to bury us in the same cemetery if we got married.

Lawless—Why, Bob?

Wallace—There wouldn't be room enough.

Lawless—Well, there would be if they didn't bury anything else but your brain.

—O—

Gibbons—Say, Bill, I see where you have a new goat named Thomas. Describe him to me.

Hoskins—Well, he wears spectacles, has red hair, wears a gray suit—

Henderson—And draws.

—O—

Pete Hundley—Henry, what the deuce are Dr. Bridges' rooters doing crowing?

Henry Moncure—Oh, Puss Harrison must have his head out of the window down at the Theta House.

—O—

Warren—Duc Parker, did you pass anything last term?

Duc Parker—No, sir, not a thing.

Warren—Take some physics this term and you will pass most everything.

—O—

Prof. Morton—Now Williams, when Commodore "Foote" was coming up the Mississippi with his "gunboats" to take Vicksburg why did the commander of the fort surrender?

Williams, A. Z.—I don't know Doctor, unless he scented defeat.

—O—

A widow called at the office of one of our recent law students to consult him about her husband's will.

Said Mr. Ford: "Yes, madame, come right in. You have a big legacy."

And ringtail Ford actually wondered why she glared angrily at him and left his office!

GAS MASKS!!!

Burfoot, Jordan and Puss Harrison did not know that the fellows had put limburger cheese in their pillows until they were told about it two weeks later. There is a lesson in every picture.

—O—

Lawless—Boo-hoo, boo-hoo.

Chalkley—What's the matter, Judge, ole dear?

Lawless—My uncle just died and when they buried him they put his violin in the grave with him because he liked to play it so well.

Chalkley—Well, what of that to cry over?

Lawless—Jack, I was just thinking suppose he had been fond of playing a pipe organ.

—O—

WAS Jessup on a Holloday and the Hicks were coming from the Barnes very Moody for Moore old Taylor. The Butler was making Bland remarks about the Boguess Bond the Cooke had given him in the Hall. But he was a Lowman which Marks the Little Wright there is in a Barker. However, deWitt of Derflinger, was Gay even though His Nickels were Nunn as compared to the fortune and Green Newbill of Jester fool; for his Gaines, though Blanks, were Best for the Price he had to Shell out. By this time the Hicks were Seager that they got Lawless and Cross so that no explanation would make a Denton their Clay Cobb.

Toward evening no Person was sober. Dietz were Haile, and the once beautiful Brown Lee was turning Gray. Quick as a flash a Young Virginia Blizzard sprung up from the East and the West, the Small Waters flowed Swift under the Bridges and the Broadwaters Lash the Shippe Chandlers. As the Englishman says, "It was Elmore than you think."

Then the white sky appeared and the Fleet Bull full of Holland gin ran from the Bush into the Forrestt toward Richmond and Metcalf Fuller Fitts in a Fogg. I grabbed a Ford beside an Essex and raced home to Franklin.

The maid met me at the door and said, "Say, Dozier know dat de plastering done fell and you won't be Eble to get to sleep cause the Bedsaul Chalkley."

That night we had the Miss Fortune to have to Alsoop out of the same dish and sleep in the Garrett.

Police Justice—"Officer, what are the charges against the Prisoner, Mr. Cobb."

Officer—"Corn on the Cobb, sir."

—O—

Dr. Hall—"You young Jacks can make B as good as you can D if you want to. You know a certain fellow swam across the Hell-es-pont. If he could do it, I can do it. I can try it anyway, even if I don't get any further than the first syllable."

—O—

Dr. T—"The Beta Damma Pelta fraternity will meet Tuesday. Yeh, that's the one I belong to."

—O—

Dr. Hall—"Young man do you know what part of the Bible the book of Nickodemus is in?"

Curler—"Yes, sir."

Dr. Hall—"Oh! What part of the Bible is it in then?"

Curler—"That part which hasn't been written, sir."

—O—

Buckner—"Look here," Mr. Lowe, I don't understand why I overdrew. I still have 4 blank checks left over."

—O—

Dr. Hall—"Now take the word lingerie. It looks as if that came from the word linger, because when a fellow sees some lingerie, he loves to linger—but for my part I wish the girls would make their lingerie longer."

—O—

Meade—"Don't you think Dizzy's love affair has gone to his head?"

Sapp—"I wouldn't be surprised, there ought to be plenty of room for it."

—O—

Cooke—" (On northern trip). Ferdie, here is where we go across the Hudson on the bottom in a jiffy."

Ferdie—"Gee, I wish I had brought my raincoat."

Dr. Hall—Young man, do you know what the word alien means? Are you an alien?

Joe Harris—(Very full of knowledge). No, sir, I'm a Philomathean.

—O—

Potter—Say, Kenney, what did Dr. Hall mean when he said bustle, to-day in class?

Kenney—Shut up, you darn fool, don't speak of such things behind a lady's back.

—O—

Student—Dr. Hall, I like the Methodist prayer book better than I do the Episcopal.

Dr. Hall—Young lady, the Methodist and Episcopal prayer books are so near alike that if you were dead you would not know which one they were burying you out of.

—O—

Pat was a hack driver for an undertaking establishment while Mike was a minister. One day Mike was called in hurriedly to bury a person, and in his hurry he forgot to find out whether it was a man or woman that was dead; so when he came to the place in the prayer book where it was necessary to use "brother" or "sister", he did not know which one to say. He turned to Pat and asked, "Faith Pat, and was it a brother or a sister that died?" Pat said, "Be jabbers, it was neither—it was a cousin."

—O—

Dr. Hall—Yer, Bow and Beaux. They're just alike in pronunciation but are very different in meaning. That's one of the peculiarities of the English language. The first "bow" is one you shoot with, and the second "beaux" is one that ought to be shot at.

Famous Characters of Dr. J. L. Hall

No. 1

Mr. and Mrs. Billy Hipkins, chief exponents of the King's English in these parts, as they looked on their wedding day, just prior to their extended honeymoon to Lightfoot, Toano, Norge and Five Forks. Give Mr. Hipkins strong chin the "once over" which denotes unusual development of the sub-maxillary, probably from eating. When Mr. Hipkins observed his wife's paw upon his clavicle he exclaimed, "Sally, you hadn't ought to a done it."

No. 2 and 2½

The most recent picture of Mr. and Mrs. Oui R. Smithereens, and their daughter, Molly, whose photograph was taken while busily engaged in her daily task. They have for years been of great assistance to Dr. Hall in developing English scholars for his History of the English Language course 2f. Note the bird-like mustache of Mr. Smithereens which does not signify anything but the phrenogolist would say from the shape of his head that he has wonderful driving ability which is very true of the gentleman—he drives the ice wagon all day.

Mrs. Smithereens claims that she inherited her English instincts and we must say that there is little doubt about that; yet she says her ancestors were of a Spanish line. (Note the pendulum ear-rings). However, we feel certain that she knows more about the clothes line. Now Molly Lou is constructed just like her mother rhetorically speaking, of course. Analyze the following expression from her very lips and see if you have ever heard anything to compare with it. "Taint fair fer Pa t' keep me to home tonight after I done hope Ma all this evening; and I'm a going to the movies."

What's in a Name?

*Johnson, Lincoln, Schenck, Washington Lee,
Has a very long name as you all can see,
With the Eds and the Co-eds he's certainly a bear
And he spreads his material most everywhere,
To look at his physiognomy you'd think he got "B",
Yet the highest he ever got was only a "D".*

*Now here is a runt whose name is John Doe,
Who has remained in College for a year or so,
When you see his face it looks so blank,
It reminds you of your cash in the First National Bank
But isn't it funny, you hear them all say
That this little Bump always gets "A".*

A Gateway to Progress

There it stands—a simple forty-foot gateway but unlike any other in the entire world. Through it have come many of the engineering ideas that have made this an electrical America.

The story of electrical development begins in the Research Laboratories. Here the ruling spirit is one of knowledge—truth—rather than immediate practical results. In this manner are established new theories—tools for future use—which sooner or later find ready application.

The great industries that cluster around Niagara Falls, the electrically driven battle ships, the trolley cars and electrified railways that carry millions, the household conveniences that have relieved women of drudgery, the labor-saving electrical tools of factories, all owe their existence, partly at least, to the co-ordinated efforts of the thousands who daily stream through this gateway.

HOME CONVENIENCES

ACHIEVEMENT

The goal of every ambitious man and firm is typified in the rapid growth of the Jahn & Ollier Engraving Company—the universal esteem in which their art and plates are held by the large national advertisers—and the enviable reputation for prompt deliveries which they enjoy.

Delivering this same high quality and careful personal supervision to schools has built up for us the largest college and high school annual engraving business in America—400 books yearly.

Thirty thousand square feet of floor space (4 floors) and over two hundred and fifty skilled employees are required to meet the constant demand for “J&O” commercial photographs, art, color process plates and photo engraving (one complete floor is devoted to color process work).

Intelligent supervision of all work by many skillful office service men eliminates your troubles. Sales service men sent everywhere.
