The National Scene

Frustration is seen as the prevailing campus mood after a year in which student protests and violence declined ■ Surface Calm? The most significant thing about the past academic year seemed, at times, to be what was not happening. In contrast to the widespread student disorders that gripped the campuses in the spring of 1970, most colleges and universities experienced relatively little disruption. There were fewer protests and less violence. Students were not killed by National Guardsmen on the campus of a state university. Hundreds of student strikes and campus closings did not occur. Even commencement exercises, for the most part, did not lose their traditional decorum.

Observers were reluctant to interpret those outward signs as proof that higher education was somehow free of the turmoil that had engulfed it in previous years. To some it appeared that a profound malaise had set in—among students and faculty members—and that this foreshadowed a period of continued conflict. Higher education, said a prominent sociologist, is in the throes of a moral “depression” analogous to the Great Crash of 1929. “There has been a loss of momentum and of morale almost everywhere in American academic life,” he said.

The campuses have been “suppressed,” not “cool,” said a young activist at an Eastern university. “There’s more sadness and depression than anger,” remarked a student-body president in California. In the Midwest, another student leader told fellow graduates: “We have been quiet this year because it has been important for us to rethink the tactics of the past.” He stressed that students had not relinquished their determination to bring about change, but everywhere students spoke of their frustration with the failures of past protests.

According to Yale psychologist Kenneth Keniston, the student movement is in agony over the realization that the “potential for violence” exists within itself, as well as within the rest of society. The outlook? Professor Keniston, for one, is not certain. Much will depend on events beyond the students’ control, he says, such as how fast the war is ended and whether there is renewed “tolerance for criticism and dissent” in this country.

■ Collective Approach: The point has been getting across to college and university faculty members that higher education’s political and financial problems can lead to similar problems for them. Increasingly they are turning to collective action through faculty organizations to protect their interests. Concerned primarily about threats to salary gains and threats to their job security, teachers on dozens of campuses have chosen collective bargaining representatives. The trend is expected to accelerate.

■ Government Aid: Congress has taken special interest this year in one of the colleges’ favorite legislative objectives—a program of unrestricted federal grants that the institutions could spend essentially as they wished. As committee hearings on the subject ended, the prospects for action on a bill to authorize such grants seemed brighter than ever. The Nixon Administration, which was not eager to rush into the program, agreed to support a limited version. It told Congress that it favored giving colleges “cost-of-education” allowances based on the amounts of federal student-aid funds that they received.

■ In Brief: A growing number of municipal governments have been looking into proposals that would require colleges to pay local taxes on previously exempt properties. The cities need the revenue, but college officials are worried. “Once you start down that road,” says one, “I think it is the end of private higher education” . . .

Several associations representing colleges and universities have advised the federal government how to strengthen the Reserve Officers Training Corps. They say that the institutions should have “shared responsibility” with the military in developing the ROTC curriculum on their campuses, and that “maximum flexibility” is needed to adapt the programs to local conditions . . .

Federally supported fellowships for first-year graduate students have declined a whopping 85 per cent since 1967, according to the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. It’s an intellectual “famine,” says the director . . .

A federal court in Virginia has ruled that a state college may not upgrade a virtually all-white branch campus to four-year status, because a predominantly black college, also state-supported, already exists in the same city . . .

A nonprofit organization called the Common Fund has been started to help colleges get a better return on their investments. The fund will pool the deposits of many institutions . . .

The number of students applying to the high-cost Ivy League and women’s institutions declined in 1971, while public universities showed a rise in applications from their own states.

R. Harvey Chappell Jr., left, Vice Rector; and Ernest Goodrich, right, Rector of the Board of Visitors announce Graves' appointment.

Graves Sets Fast Pace In Assuming Presidency

Thomas Ashley Graves, Jr. wasted no time last spring before plunging into his new role as William and Mary's next President.

Two weeks after his election May 22, he and his wife, Zoë, were in Williamsburg for a three-day round of meetings, conferences and tours. Perhaps his first official act was to meet formally with the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni that weekend, and to deliver brief remarks at Commencement on June 6.

Three weeks later, he visited Williamsburg again for more conferences, social occasions with area civic and political leaders, and additional tours. Two further visits took place as the summer wore on, and between the visits he and Mrs. Graves conducted an extensive volume of correspondence with alumni, College faculty and staff, friends of the College and numerous others.

The visits culminated in their move in the last days of August into the historic President's House, before he took office on September 1. With them came their two children, Andrew, 5 and Elizabeth, 4, for whom the third floor of the old manse had been remodeled as a children's headquarters. Andrew, especially, was delighted that a real cannon (Old Spottswood) adorned his "front yard."

Mr. Graves spent most of his time listening when he visited Williamsburg, including during his meeting with the Alumni Board. He repeatedly sought suggestions from those with whom he talked, and indicated that he would maintain an "open door" policy wherever possible. He limited his own comments to more general and philosophical responses to questions.

He told a newspaper interviewer that he preferred to be called

"Mister," though he holds the Doctor of Business Administration degree from Harvard Graduate School of Business, earned in 1958. He earned the Master of Business Administration degree from Harvard in 1949, and the Bachelor of Arts degree in economics from Yale College in 1947. He holds his secondary school diploma from the Phillips Exeter Academy in 1942, and earlier he had attended public Schools in New Canaan, Conn.

He very early expressed the hope that he and Mrs. Graves could become Virginians as quickly as possible. Judging by response to the announcement of his election, that will be easily accomplished.

Mr. Graves, though his background has been in business administration, has concentrated on human relations and management fields. His doctoral thesis was in the area of educational administration, and in recent years he has published several articles on the college presidency. His writing, and his consulting relationship with a number of educational administrative bodies, has earned him a reputation as a national authority in the field. He also has wide experience and contacts in international management affairs.

The announcement of his selection followed a day-long session of the Board of Visitors, during which Mr. Graves and one other candidate were questioned extensively. The selection process began early last spring, in the hands of a special committee of students, faculty, alumni and Board members headed by Ernest Goodrich '35, Rector of the Board. The committee first considered the type of person who ought to be chosen for the presidency, and then went about obtaining suggested names. More than 300 individuals were proposed, along with a separate list of names representing "finalists" in Harvard's recent search for a president. A subcommittee pared this list down to less than one-tenth its original size, and the entire search committee cut the list by more than half again. At this point, a dozen persons were asked to submit references and credentials if they were interested in the post, and to consider traveling to Williamsburg for an interview during April with the committee. Eight of these candidates followed through to the interview stage. Finally, the search committee proposed five names to the Board of Visitors at its May meeting, suggesting priorities which the committee agreed upon.

The selection of Mr. Graves was unanimous. Almost immediately after the Board's decision was made, a press conference was called so the announcement could be made to satisfy mounting curiosity on the campus. The President-elect, who had flown early that Saturday morning from foggy Boston, after making arrangements only the night before for the trip, stayed in Williamsburg for the weekend to begin his series of introductions and conferences.

When he returned Sunday night to his home on a quiet street in Newton, Mass., just outside Boston, the congratulatory messages had already begun pouring in, and Monday morning he began his three-month term as William and Mary's President-elect.

Davis Y. Paschall

For Every Building, A Hundred Shrubs: His Proud Legacy

For all of the massive material progress he realized during his administration, Dr. Davis Y. Paschall may be remembered as the president who brought a sense of quality rather than quantity to the College of William and Mary. He put up more than $35 million worth of buildings during his 11-year administration, added four schools, a score of new graduate programs, and several new departments, streamlined the administration, and evolved William and Mary from a small undergraduate institution into a modern university. But for every new building, he planted a hundred shrubs and flowers; and for every new graduate program, he took pains to emphasize, both in word and deed, that William and Mary's primary concern was for the undergraduate.

He said in his inaugural address ten years ago that the mission and purpose of William and Mary was to produce the educated man; one he defined as an individual steeped "in the knowledge and values of a liberal education as to enable him to building the skills of future specialization without losing the perspective of the good life." No multi-university, with its computer approach to education, could achieve that function. William and Mary must, Dr. Paschall emphasized, reaffirm and vitalize the principle that "this College is a teaching institution" in the best tradition of students like Jefferson learning under great minds such as William Small and George Wythe.

A decade later when he issued his Ten-Year Progress Report, Dr. Paschall still held to that view. The progress of his administration, he wrote, must portend a future of high standards, of quality rather than quantity, and, "while preserving the modern university status attained, accord priority consideration to the undergraduate, and avoid the temptation for colossus in enrollment or multi-university in goal."

A philosopher by nature, he was a pragmatist by experience, and it was that last quality that held him—and William and Mary—in good stead during his administration. A life-long Virginian who knew every crevice of the Capitol in Richmond from his days as State Superintendent of Public Instruction, he cajoled, charmed, and mesmerized the General Assembly into record capital outlay and maintenance and operation appropriations during the Sixties. And William and Mary desperately needed them. The first classroom building in 30 years was completed in 1964; he added a new library, a new fine arts building, a life sciences building, several dormitories, and a six-million dollar physical education-convocation center, as well as a number of other buildings. He more than doubled faculty salaries, which had lagged far behind, and made William and Mary attractive to first-rate scholars.

An astute judge of men, Dr. Paschall took personal pains to avoid the pitfalls of a man with hat in hand in Richmond. Not long after he arrived at William and Mary, the Board of Visitors reportedly urged him to put an item in the capital outlay request to air-condition the President's House, which is stultifying in the summer humidity in Williamsburg. He steadfastly refused; how could he ask for classroom buildings in Richmond, he pondered, when he put his own personal comfort first. The President's House was still un-air-conditioned when Dr. Paschall moved out upon his retirement.

A stickler for detail, he was, by his own admission, a poor delegater. The rumor persisted on campus that he answered even third-class mail with a personal, three-page letter in prose reminiscent of the 18th century gentlemen Virginians such as Jefferson whom he admired so much; as more of a tribute than a criticism, his style became known as "Paschallian Prose." Callers to the President's Office were frequently told that President Paschall was out on the back campus with the architects; as often as not, he was riding around in a rickety College pickup with the campus landscaper explaining where he wanted a shrub or an azalea planted. If he ever left the President's office before five o'clock—which was indeed rare—he never failed to admonish the office staff to be sure and turn out the lights and lock the doors.

An extremely warm and personable man, Dr. Paschall's trademark was the corn cob pipe, Sir Walter Raleigh tobacco, and the baggy, rumpled suit that had at least fifty paper clips in each pocket. He took enormous amounts of time to meet with students, faculty, alumni or friends who were just passing through and wanted to say hello. Seated in the big, blue President's chair, he would visit at length or discuss in great detail a pressing issue, all the time puffing on his corn cob that he never could seem to keep lit. In the final years of his administration, when the Flat Hat directed a number of unkind barbs toward his office, he still separated personality from issue; on a pleasant spring afternoon, he took the student editor on a personal tour of the President's House.

His long-suffering and loyal companion, Mrs. Paschall, was never certain whether he loved her or William and Mary more, probably because he was rarely home long enough for her to find out. In semi-retirement as President-Emeritus of the College, he will finally have time for his family.

It is indicative of Dr. Paschall's view of William and Mary that he probably considers as his proudest achievement not the massive six-million dollar William and Mary Hall, but the beautification of the Jefferson Prospect, Crim Dell, and the entrance to the New Campus. One of his final acts as President was to maneuver enough funds to landscape the mall between the academic complex on the New Campus linking the Library, the Fine Arts Building, William Small Physical Laboratory, and the Life Sciences Building. His office as President Emeritus will be on the third floor of Swem Library, overlooking the mall. If the campus landscaper should plant a shrub slightly out of line in future years, he will no doubt hear the polite voice of an old Southern gentlemen admonishing him gently over his shoulder.

The College

The new ranking academic officer at the College, who took office September 1, is from the State of Maine but is no stranger to William and Mary.

Dr. George R. Healy taught during special summer session programs at William and Mary in 1960, under the direction of Dr. Harold L. Fowler, now dean of the faculty of arts and sciences. During that summer, he stayed in a room in the Brafferton, which is now his office.

Last spring, he visited Williamsburg for another assignment. He was a participant in the annual Antiques Forum sponsored by Colonial Williamsburg. Over the years, he has contributed several times to the William and Mary Quarterly.

Dr. Healy came to William and Mary after serving 14 years as a teacher and administrative officer at Bates College, Lewiston, Maine. Most recently, he was provost and dean of the faculty at the all-male school.

At William and Mary, he assumes the post of Vice President for Academic Affairs, succeeding Dr. W. Melville Jones. An article on Dr. Jones is published elsewhere in this issue of the Gazette.

Under his guidance at Bates, the curriculum was extensively revised and a new academic calendar was adopted. The new calendar includes two regular semesters along with a six-week session for independent projects and special courses. A similar calendar was proposed two years ago at William and Mary, but the faculty was unable to reach a consensus on its adoption.

Dr. Healy, who is 48 years old, is a native of Milwaukee and alumnus of Oberline College. He holds his graduate degrees from the University of Minnesota and taught at Massachusetts Institute of Technology before joining Bates in 1957 as professor of history and cultural heritage. He is a specialist in French 18th century history and the French impact on American colonial culture.

He and Mrs. Healy, the former Dorothy Ann Kobli of Wheaton, Ill., have three sons.

Dr. Healy was selected on the basis of recommendations from a special search committee, headed by Dr. Fowler. Before the appointment was made formal, he was interviewed in late May by Dr. Thomas A. Graves, Jr., who had just been elected President, at Graves' Boston office.

Y. O. Kent Given Honor

Yelverton O. Kent, retired manager of the College Bookstore, has been honored with an Emeritus Membership in the National Association of College Stores.

One of the organizers of the 1971 NACS convention, Kent was a member of the planning committee for the 48th meeting.

A member of the Williamsburg City Council from 1954-1968, Kent has been a resident of Williamsburg since he graduated from the College of William and Mary in 1930. He is a native of Norfolk.

He entered the college in 1918 as a member of the Student Army Training Corps and joined the Army later that year, serving until after the end of World War I.

He returned to college in 1926, was president of the sophomore and junior classes and a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. A member of the William and Mary Hall of fame, he won varsity letters in five sports, baseball, football, basketball, track, and swimming during his undergraduate years.

Kent served as college cafeteria manager for 16 years before becoming manager of the bookstore. He retired in July.

He is a past president of the Rotary Club, past governor of the Loyal Order of Moose and a member of Bruton Parish Church.

Tuition Remains At 1970 Level

There is no increase in tuition this fall although room and board costs have been raised.

The board charge increased by $20 per year to $550. Average room rentals rose by $35 to $380.

Both hikes were attributed to larger costs in providing room and board services to students.

Tuition remains at $660 for Virginia students and $1,594 for out-of-state students. Laundry fees are $40 per year.

"We managed to accomplish this," President Paschall said regarding the tuition charge, "through very careful budgetary planning and in effecting economies wherever possible, but without detriment to the quality program offered by the College."

Mrs. Poe First To Receive Grant

Mrs. Lillian A. Poe, a doctoral candidate at the College, is the first William and Mary student to receive an Advanced Study Fellowship for Black Americans from the Ford Foundation.

This $4,224 fellowship will provide tuition and living expenses for 1971-72, for one year's study toward a doctorate degree. Mrs. Poe's field of concentration is Modern History, with an emphasis on Black History.

She majored in history at Hampton Institute, and received a master's degree from the University of Virginia.

Mrs. Poe has spent one summer at the University of Singapore, under a Fulbright-Hayes Fellowship. She attended Huntington High School, in Newport News.

During the past academic year, she has served as assistant to the Dean of Admissions at William and Mary, in addition to continuing her graduate studies.

Law Applications Show Great Rise

A dramatic increase in applications for admission this year to William and Mary's law school has been added to the already highly competitive admissions picture at the College.

Applications for admission to this fall's undergraduate freshman class remained at about the same level as last year, but the Marshall-Wythe School of Law reported a 60 per cent increase in prospective students.

Robert P. Hunt, dean of admissions for undergraduate programs, said an analysis showed 5,341 applications for the 900 openings in the Class of 1975 enrolled in September. The ratio of applications to vacancies has remained at about that level for several years, although in 1966, there were about 10 applications for each opening.

At the law school, which now has 310 students, there are 1,200 applications on file for 150 openings in this fall's first-year class, according to John E. Donaldson, associate dean. The law school ceased taking new applications in late April because of the great number already filed.

The number of law school applicants at this point compares with only 750 for last fall's class, when the school continued to consider new applications until August, 1970.

Livingston Publishes Book on Christianity

The Macmillan Company has recently published "Modern Christian Thought: From the Enlightenment to Vatican II" by James C. Livingston, Chairman of the Department of Religion.

Designed to be used both as a text and for the general reader, the book is a study of the major intellectual and scientific movements of the modern period, such as Rationalism, Romanticism, Idealism, Marxism, Darwinism, and Existentialism and their impact on Christian thought. The book further examines the responses and major movements which these ideas have effected in Christian thought since the eighteenth century.

Sadler Named Dean of Men

W. Samuel Sadler, 28, has been appointed Dean of Men. Sadler, who served as acting dean since last fall, succeeds Carson Barnes, Jr., who last year became Dean of Students.

A native of Newport News, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest S. Sadler of Mathews. His wife is the former Miss Mary Elizabeth Smith of Titusville, Fla. The couple has one daughter.

He attended Hampton public schools and is a graduate of Hampton High School. His bachelor's degree in government was earned at William and Mary in 1964 and he received the master's degree in educational administration during William and Mary's commencement on June 6.

Prior to returning to William and Mary in 1967 as assistant dean of admissions, he had worked for public health agencies in Elizabeth City, N.C. and in Bend, Oregon. Last summer he held an internship with the State Council of Higher Education, coordinating a clearinghouse for admissions.

President Blair

Blair Biography Comes At an Historic Time

Entirely by chance, a fascinating biography of William and Mary's first President is appearing within weeks after the College's 24th President takes office. "James Blair of Virginia," by Parke Rouse, Jr. of Williamsburg, leads the list of fall books from the University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill.

Rouse, a journalist turned historian, is Executive Director of the Jamestown Foundation and acting director of the Virginia Independence Bicentennial Commission. The volume on Blair is the product of two years of research, in Williamsburg, Scotland and England, and a year of writing. The only other biography of this influential colonist and clergyman appeared 70 years ago.

Blair's importance to the development of Virginia appears to have been overlooked, Rouse feels, since he left no dynasty comparable to the Carters and the Byrds. His papers were dispersed among relatives after his death and so were his investments.

"No man contributed more to Virginia's intellectual maturation than did James Blair," Rouse writes.

"In giving form to spiritual and intellectual life in Virginia, Blair was opposed by the apathy of a materialistic age. His hoped-for reformation was slow, for scientific rationalism was beginning to undermine the prevailing religiosity by the time he arrived in 1685 in Virginia. Yet, through his acquaintance with secular as well as theological thought—of the Hellenistic as well as the Christian tradition—he could reconcile the two and lead Virginia away from the narrow colonialism of Sir William Berkeley into the wider humanism of George Mason. . . .

"Of all his endeavors, the college was the most successful. After a slow start, it became by the end of his life an uplifting influence in colonial America. By the time of the Revolution, most of Virginia's clergy and many of her statesmen had trained at the college. In the outpouring of settlers from Tidewater to the west and south, William and Mary's graduates planted schools and churches over a wide span for a hundred years after Blair's death. . . ."

The biography, 366 pages in length and retailing for $10, describes the Reverend James Blair's politicking, his ambitions, his occasional unscrupulous behavior, his violent conflicts and his triumphs. As the Bishop of London's Commissary in Virginia and Rector of Bruton Parish Church, Blair combined ecclesiastical with political power to achieve his aspirations. At the age of 85, he became acting Governor of Virginia, his savage vigor undampened by deafness and age.

Rouse found Blair "unknown and unknowable, unloved and almost unlovable," but "had Blair lacked his steely disposition, he could never have founded his college or curbed the chronic usurpations of royal governors."

Blair's Scottish nationality, and the way in which he was ordained into the Church of England, blunted his effectiveness with his clergy. His mannerisms, while meriting praise, also led to the appearance of unfriendliness and disputatiousness. He never "acquired the love of luxury, of outdoor life, of good-natured camaraderie in alehouse or tavern which enlivened Burgesses' meetings in Jamestown or Williamsburg. He found his pleasure instead in the play of power and the implementation of ideas. He remained an abstemious Scottish pedant even when he grew rich and powerful."

"James Blair of Virginia" was written in part with a grant from the American Philosophical Society, which felt that William and Mary's first President was worthy of further research. The grant enabled Rouse to visit Alvah Parish in Banffshire, where Blair was born and resided in the rectory; Marichal College in Aberdeen, where he went to grammar school; the University of Edinburgh; and to research records of the Church of Scotland (into which Blair was ordained prior to its conversion to the presbyterian form of government) and archives in London. In the latter visit, Rouse located records of Blair's voyage to Port Royal in Jamaica, from which he journeyed to Virginia.

Rouse, a native of Smithfield, Va. and alumnus of Washington and Lee University, is a prolific author in the field of Virginia history.

He has been a Williamsburg resident since 1953, and since 1954, has been associated with Jamestown, the spot where Blair lies buried.

William and Mary received Virginia's petition for a college in 1691, at the Palace of Whitehall in London.

Blair's tombstone at Jamestown has been separated from that of his wife by a sycamore tree, now known as "the mother-in-law tree." It grew in the 19th century.

Faculty Profile

Mel Jones Pursued By Chapmen

By S. DEAN OLSON

The Chapmen have been following W. Melville Jones around William and Mary for a number of years, confident that someday they would get the attention they deserve. When Dr. Jones retired at the end of August from more than 40 years of teaching and administration and moved from the academic vice president's office in the Brafferton to the third floor of Swem Library, the Chapmen were waiting for him in the form of a musty manuscript, wrapped neatly in brown paper and gathering dust from two decades of reluctant neglect.

The surroundings are more modest, the telephone doesn't ring as much, and there are no secretaries scurrying around with messages from scores of people who need to see him about matters that won't wait until tomorrow. But Mel Jones no doubt likes the new circumstances. After nearly twenty years in the eye of the administrative hurricane, he will have time to get back to the writing and scholarship that he so reluctantly found necessary to put aside in the late Fifties to assume the position of Dean of the Faculty. Through the Sixties and until September, 1971, the duties became more demanding, the positions—from Dean of the Faculty to Dean of the College to Vice President and finally academic vice president—bore more responsibility, and the manuscript on the Chapbooks—the plagiarized stories of 18th Century folk literature sold by Chapmen (cheap peddlars) to the people of England, Scotland and Ireland—simply had to wait to be put in popular book form as Dr. Jones intends to do now.

In addition to the Chapbooks, Dr. Jones will work on a history of the College of William and Mary, concentrating initially on the early presidents of the College. From a modern perspective, no one is better qualified: in 43 years of teaching and administration, he served under five presidents and watched and participated in the growth of William and Mary from a struggling footnote in history to a modern university of national reputation.

One of the men most responsible for the growth of the College recruited Dr. Jones to William and Mary. After graduating from Allegheny College in Pennsylvania, where he was born, and receiving his masters at Ohio State University, Dr. Jones came to Virginia in 1925 to join the faculty at the University of Richmond. In 1928, he received a telephone call from Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, whom he had never met, who asked him to come by his room at the Richmond Hotel. Dr. Chandler minced no words on their initial meeting: he offered Dr. Jones a promotion in rank and considerable increase in salary to come to William and Mary with its English Department.

Dr. Jones didn't accept immediately, but asked time to talk it over with his wife. A few days later they drove to Williamsburg in a borrowed Model T Ford to meet with President Chandler. Mrs. Jones stayed in the car while her husband went to Dr. Chandler's second floor Brafferton office, and the President wanted to know where his wife was. In the car, said Dr. Jones; let's go see her, said Dr. Chandler, who proceeded to demonstrate that the way to a man's signature on a contract was through his wife. He announced that he had found a place for them to live; if Dr. Jones hadn't decided before to accept the William and Mary appointment, that settled it.

Two weeks later, the President called again. "I can't give you that house," he told Dr. Jones. "The College seamstress lives there, and the College can't do without a seamstress." If the young professor had any overblown ideas about his place at the College under his new boss, the call no doubt put them in perspective.

The President made good on his promise of a house the following year, but in the interim the Joneses lived in the home of the treasurer of the College, who had his office on the first floor of the Brafferton. It was a fortunate turn of events because the Treasurer, Colonel Lane, belonged to an old Williamsburg family, and the Joneses quickly got to know the community through the Lanes.

Dr. Jones, however, had little time to socialize. He taught 15 hours of English, including Shakespeare and Milton. He had a number of challenging students, among them a bright young fellow named Davis Young Paschall. Many years later when Dr. Paschall became President of the College of William and Mary—and Mel Jones' boss—Dr. Jones looked back to see if he had judged his former student's potential correctly. He had indeed; Dr. Paschall had received an A in sophomore English.

In 1931, Dr. Chandler granted Dr. Jones a year's leave of absence to begin his studies toward his Ph.D. at Harvard. Dr. Jones is still grateful for the President's consideration; since the Depression had set in, he was one of the few fortunate young scholars who had a job to return to in 1932.

Dr. Jones remembers that the enrollment at the College was about 1200 students, the faculty consisted of probably no more than fifty, but Dr. Chandler had put the College its road to respectability in Virginia. "He was a great builder," says Dr. Jones. "He had great energy and great imagination, and he would go to any length to get appropriations and buildings for the College. He made the State recognize this College."

Dr. Jones recalls all of the former presidents with affection and admiration. Although they had their idiosyncrasies, each brought to the College a special quality. John Stewart Bryan, the Richmond newspaper publisher, succeeded Dr. Chandler when he died in 1934. Cultured, sophisticated, and well known throughout the country, Bryan developed the faculty during his administration. Extremely social minded, he entertained frequently at the President's House, and often Dr. Jones would get a call from the President early in the morning inviting him over for breakfast. John Edwin Pomfret followed Bryan. A scholar and historian, Dr. Pomfret served as the wartime President of William and Mary, when enrollment dipped drastically. "He used to say his chief job was housekeeping," says Dr. Jones. Indeed, he remembers, it was a major task to keep the College functioning during the war, and Dr. Pomfret welcomed the presence of the Naval Chaplains School and the Army Special Training Program on campus.

In the meantime, Dr. Jones had received a lucrative Carnegie Foundation Fellowship to study in England in 1939. Having led travel tours to Europe almost every summer during the Thirties, he looked forward to the year in England with a great deal of anticipation. The war broke out, however, and he had to change his plans; instead of going to England, he used the fellowship to continue his studies at Harvard. He returned to William and Mary for a year in 1940, and then went back to Harvard in 1941 to finish most of his course work and begin on his dissertation—whose topic was the Chapbooks. With a heavy schedule of teaching and a growing family, he completed his degree in 1953 and was promoted to full professor.

Dr. Jones' demonstrated administrative skills captured the attention of Admiral A. D. Chandler, who assumed the Presidency after Dr. Pomfret retired. In 1954, the College began its 200th anniversary celebration of the birth of John Marshall, in which Dr. Jones assumed a major role. In the fall of 1954, the Chief Justice and all of the Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court and the Chief Justice of England met at William and Mary for a symposium on Marshall, Wythe and Blackstone. In the Spring of 1955, a second group of prominent legal figures met for a symposium on "John Marshall—A Reappraisal." Dr. Jones, who directed the program, edited a book based on the symposium, which was published in 1956 and reissued again recently.

Hardly had the Marshall celebration concluded when planning began for the 350th anniversary celebration of the founding of Jamestown. With President Chandler's blessing, Dr.

Jones was put in charge of planning the entire program, and he took a leave of absence for a year and a half to carry out the mission.

When he returned to the College in February of 1958, he looked forward to returning to teaching. But in June of that year, Dr. Charles Marsh resigned as Dean of the Faculty to assume a college presidency, and President Chandler asked Dr. Jones to succeed Dr. Marsh. Dr. Jones considered the offer for sometime and then decided to accept. As much as he loved teaching, he says, he felt he could have a greater influence on the College as Dean of the Faculty because he knew both the administration and faculty well, and got along with both.

In the Sixties under the Paschall administration, the College evolved from a small undergraduate College to a moderate sized university as recognized by the State Council of Higher Education. The structure of the administration evolved accordingly, and Dr. Jones moved to the second level administrative position with each change. He successively became Dean of the College, Vice President of the College, and academic vice president. With the final reorganization in January 1969, he was offered the position of executive vice president, but declined because the mandatory age for retirement was approaching.

His good friend Dr. Paschall affectionately referred to Dr. Jones before their retirements as the "Earl of the Brafferton." In an eloquent tribute to Dr. Jones in his Ten-Year Report, Dr. Paschall noted that, "No man at William and Mary is more intensely interested in the College's ties with Great Britain than is Dr. Jones. Over the years, he has been instrumental in starting and expanding a student scholarship program under which the Draper's Company supports the work of students from Britain studying at William and Mary in exchange for College students sent to a British university. He has launched formal exchange programs with Exeter University and the University of St. Andrew's in Scotland, and William and Mary's Junior Year Abroad Program was established under Dr. Jones' supervision. William and Mary also has a summer session for American law students at Exeter, England." (Dr. Jones began the faculty exchange program between the William and Mary law school and Exeter, out of which the summer session emerged.)

In 1970, Dr. Jones was granted "Freedom of the Company" by the Drapers' Company, an honor previously accorded only two non-Britishers, including a former king of Denmark. During his many visits to England, he has won the affection of Drapers' Company officials, who hold him in the same high esteem as his colleagues at William and Mary.

Dr. Jones says he leaves the administration with the warmest of feelings toward the College and the people he's been associated with. He regrets that he had to sacrifice teaching when he became Dean of the Faculty, but he says he has enjoyed administration. "I hope I have made a few contributions to the College," he says, with customary humility.

The Alumni

YOU MIGHT call them, now, the “writing Weavers of '32.”

John D. Weaver's newest book came out late last year—The Brownsville Raid: The Story of America's Black Dreyfus Affair (W. W. Norton & Co.).

Then, last spring, Kitty Weaver (Katherine Grey Dunlap) and her husband, Henry B. Weaver, collaborated in the book Lenin's Grandchildren (Simon & Schuster). She is the author and he the photographer.

All three are classmates. John Weaver is an author; Kitty Weaver is involved in numerous clubs and charitable groups; and Henry Weaver is vice president and general counsel of the Atlantic Richfield Co.

The Brownsville Raid is a thoroughly documented account of an almost forgotten bit of history which had a cast of characters that included Presidents of the United States, Senators, the military establishment, white townspeople of Brownsville, Texas and 170 black soldiers. The three companies of black soldiers had been dishonorably dismissed from the Army, under orders from Theodore Roosevelt which President Taft carried out, after a mob scene in 1906 near Brownsville.

Weaver, studying the proceedings of a court of inquiry into the affair, found the court ignored convincing proof that the men were actually innocent of the offense. The author believes Roosevelt made a mistake by peremptorily discharging the men, and refused to let the War Department back down.

The Brownsville Raid has a distinct Weaver family connection. He first learned of the little-known episode from his mother, several years ago. His father was the official court reporter for the 1909 inquiry which followed the incident. John Weaver feels the neglect of the Brownsville episode by historians, is a convincing reason why “black studies” programs should be initiated in educational curricula.

Lenin's Grandchildren is an assessment of Soviet education at the pre-school level, hailed by reviewers as “the most comprehensive, lucid and judicious” study of its type. She has studied Russian language and culture since 1960, and wrote the book after four extensive trips to the Soviet Union beginning in 1963. Her husband toted four cameras, six lenses and other equipment for the excursions, and 50 well-chosen photographs were used to illustrate the book.

Pre-school education in Russia begins at the age of two months and extends to seven years, encompassing every phase of the young children's personality. She writes that the Soviet system relies on aggressive, systematic instruction and is the absolute antithesis of the permissive Montessori-Summerhill forms so popular in the Western world.

Her club activities, which also involve foxhunting and tennis in New York and Loudoun County, Va., are shadowed by her interest in young children. She is one of the founders of the Fauquier-Loudoun Day Care Center in Upperville, Va., and it was there she chose to open the sale of her book with an autograph party in May. She continues to further her education—she holds an M.A. from George Washington University; a B.S. in agriculture from the University of Maryland; and has undertaken graduate work at Georgetown and the University of Pennsylvania.

Hunter Todd, left, and production crew on captured Russian armored car while filming in Israel

J. Hunter Todd: Atlanta Film Maker, Swinger

IF J. HUNTER TODD '61 has his way, Atlanta will be known primarily for its international film festival.

And well it might. Todd, who is achieving national attention as one of the most swinging members of the young Atlanta social set, is the driving, imaginative founder and director of the Atlanta International Film Festival and president of the largest film production company in the Southeast, Interfilm-Cinema East.

The Festival this June drew more than 1,000 entries from around the world and James Stewart's newest film was premiered there. Some say the four-year-old event is second only to Cannes among film festivals.

The format, a bit more subdued than some, still is flamboyant and involves the usual roster of motion picture stars and directors. Last year, Otto Preminger, Vincent Minnelli, Mike Nichols and Stanley Kramer were among those who judged films for the Festival's Golden Phoenix Award.

The format also involves a blaze of publicity and considerable partying. Todd's three-acre bachelor estate was the setting for one pre-festival party described in the Atlanta newspapers thus: "Three hundred persons from Atlanta social, cultural and business circles attended a party given by J. Hunter Todd Saturday night at his home to honor diplomatic representatives of countries taking part in the third annual Atlanta International Film Festival. Two hundred wines from 30 countries, Polynesian and Chinese hors d'oeuvres were served. Music was by a modern jazz quartet."

Todd's film-making company, which helps underwrite the Festival, has won more than 70 major awards from other film festivals, more than any other small film company in America. He goes all over the world in production, making almost a million dollars worth of films a year.

His interest in producing films began at William and Mary, where the subject is not part of the curriculum. His first film was "Fire," about Williamsburg's fire department. Later, he did a half-hour special about the College itself. During a three-year Army stint, he made films about the space program; later he worked for feature companies and then the State Department in Atlanta. Since he established Interfilm four years ago, he has made films for MGM and Paramount, movies for major corporations, and on a volunteer no-charge basis, for VISTA and the Office of Economic Opportunity. He did the National Epilepsy Foundation's film starring Jack Lemmon in 1969, the same year he was named one of Atlanta's ten outstanding young men.

Todd, a native of Hampton, Va., earlier dabbled in painting and was a radio announcer on several Peninsula stations. He signed off even the briefest weather report with his name, an early indication that his name would be identified with everything he does.

Ada Holland '38 Is Williamsburg Newspaperwoman

Ada Holland in Gazette office

BY BARBARA BALL

ADA STUART Holland '38, chronicles much of the daily life of Williamsburg as Social Editor for the Virginia Gazette.

She can also advise on the etiquette of wedding announcements, list the names of all club presidents in the area, counsel students, trace the history of most important edifices in the area, and if need be—write a sympathetic obituary, an enticing want ad or a lighthearted feature on rose bushes.

Working for a weekly newspaper requires a plethora of talents—and a fair mastery of most.

In the course of a weekly edition, Mrs. Holland gathers news, types it, writes headlines, perforates and processes the type, does proofreading, takes pictures and—when she's not busy—takes stationery and job printing orders, gives directions to out-of-town visitors, and answers questions on who's doing what in Williamsburg.

Almost without realizing it, she found herself recently in the role of bridal consultant. Because she is familiar with the many details of a wedding after handling hundreds of bridal stories, she found herself advising, comforting, suggesting and in general “consulting” for the mothers of brides.

Despite the whirl of activity in the cramped offices of the newspaper on Prince George Street, Mrs. Holland stoutly maintains that she wouldn't change her job for all the proverbial tea in China or coffee in Brazil. She has printer's ink in her veins—she's sold on newspapering.

Mrs. Holland handles a wide variety of stories during a week and she mothers each through the composing room to make sure each one gets a good spot in the paper and each carries the correct headline.

“As a weekly newspaper I feel we have a duty to the community to see that events are covered adequately,” she said of her devotion to detail.

The horror of any woman's page writer is getting the bride's wedding in the paper on the wrong day—especially ahead of the actual event. Mrs. Holland remembers one incident of such a slip that haunts her still.

“The bride was very sweet about it but I still dread a recurrence. I'm constantly checking dates to make sure it doesn't happen again.”

Some of her most enjoyable hours at the Gazette have been spent with students from the college. Until last year The Flat Hat was produced at the Gazette offices. Students would stop by her desk to ask her advice on stories or just to chat about William and Mary “then and now.”

“We used to get into some lively discussions about how life at the college has changed in recent years,” said Mrs. Holland.

“I used to tell them about when I went to college and they thought I was talking about the Dark Ages. I told them about the restrictions on social life then—no dates on Mondays, in your room by 10 o'clock.

“I never will forget the look of amazement on one student's face when I told her I could remember in 1936 when Life magazine came out with pictures and a story on the birth of a baby and the housemother in Jefferson confiscated the magazine. Naturally we all just went somewhere else to read it.” →

Mrs. Holland first began her association with newspapers in the early 40's when she wrote a column called "Down Westmoreland Way," for the Potomac Interest which was published in Colonial Beach.

"It contained," she recalled "a little news, some chit-chat, a few humorous comments on the passing scene in Virginia's Northern Neck, and was a chance for me to expound on the major issues of the day such as Bundles for Britain and War Bonds."

Later she wrote social news for her hometown of Montross in the Northern Neck News. In addition to being a columnist, Mrs. Holland at that time also assisted the Red Cross home service chairman and later took over the chairmanship herself (without pay) for the county of Westmoreland.

She married in 1942 and continued her interest in community activities while her husband Elton served overseas for almost two years with the Army Engineers at Allied Headquarters in Europe. The Hollands have two children, David and Cary. David, a graduate of the University of Virginia, is now attending law school at his alma mater. Cary, a graduate of Old Dominion University, is married to Stephen Wing, an alumnus of William and Mary, class of '69. The Wings reside in Elmhurst, N.Y.

Back in Williamsburg in 1946, Mrs. Holland returned to the town she loves and which satisfies her deep appreciation of history.

"It's like living in two centuries," she said. "I feel close to the past and appreciate the privilege of being a part of Williamsburg and its history."

As the Jamestown community reporter for the Virginia Gazette in the 50's Mrs. Holland made a weekly listing of comings and goings, family reunions, Sunday suppers and club notices and was paid by the inch for her prose.

"Papers are getting away from this type of reporting now," she said. "They're getting more sophisticated, but I did enjoy that type of writing. I got to know a lot of people over the telephone. They would call to tell me about a weekend trip, a relative that had stopped by to see them, or an award their college son or daughter had received."

Mrs. Holland began her full-time association with the Gazette when she was called in as a substitute for a receptionist who was called away because of a death in the family.

"I remember I was home having a leisurely morning—reading the paper in the kitchen and having a second or third cup of coffee. John Gravely, the publisher, called and asked me if I would come down and help out. I told him 'give me time to do the dishes and I'll be right down.' That was in 1964—I've been there ever since."

"I like writing features when I have time and especially enjoyed the interviews I have had with the former Mayor of Williamsburg, H. M. Stryker, and Ray Brown, whose stamp and stationery shop was a town landmark for many years at the corner of Prince George Street and Boundary."

Active in the Williamsburg Woman's Club since 1949, Mrs. Holland has held practically every office in the club and has been president three times. She has been registrar for the Sunday School at Bruton Parish Church for more than 15 years. She tried to resign last spring but is still at her post. She is also a member of the Catherine Coleman Branch of the Women of the Church.

Mrs. Holland admits she likes to collect things.

"I've boxes and boxes of things I've put away. I'd like to write a book one day—an autobiography. I have a nostalgic feeling for the past. I'd start with some of the old diaries of my great-grandfather that I am fortunate to have."

Mrs. Holland has never had any formal journalism courses but she feels her liberal arts training has served her well. She was a history major at William and Mary. She's self-appointed custodian of spelling and punctuation at the Gazette, and reporters who don't use the dictionary often enough—soon take up the habit at her urging.

While Mrs. Holland continues to enjoy a happy, harried life as a writer-editor, she continues to receive assurance that she is the right person in the right job. She holds awards for women's page writing and editing from both the Virginia Press Association and the Virginia Presswomen's Association.

of the company. He retired as vice president and director of facilities planning for Crowell Collier and Macmillan.

When with Macmillan, he made location studies, designed the facility, and established operating procedures for the subsidiary company, Brett-Macmillan, Ltd of Canada; he served as secretary and member of the board of directors of this company while continuing as vice president and general manager of Macmillan.

Shortly afterwards, he recommended construction of, planned the facilities and equipment for, and established operating procedures for the first automated distribution center in the publishing industry. The facility was built in Delran, N. J. by Macmillan.

In 1965, Joe became director of corporate services on the staff of Crowell Collier and Macmillan, with primary responsibility for moving the parent corporation and eight subsidiaries into a new 30-story headquarters building at 866 Third Ave., New York City. This assignment involved the planning and construction of several hundred private offices, fifteen conference rooms, clerical areas, special purpose facilities, executive offices, board rooms, a theater with the latest projection and speaker equipment, executive kitchen and dining room, employee cafeteria, mail room with vertical conveyer system, and all support facilities, and the moving of over 1500 people to the new quarters.

Upon completion of this task, Joe was appointed director of facilities planning with responsibility for real estate acquisition and the planning, leasing, and construction of offices, warehouses, and manufacturing facilities for Crowell Collier and Macmillan and its 177 subsidiaries throughout the world. In 1969, Joe became vice president and director of facilities planning.

During the last few years, Joe directed the expansion of the Delran Distribution Center, mentioned above, to provide facilities for 12 publishing companies and houses, and planned the construction and equipping of a computer center containing 12 complete computer systems with tie-ins to branches of the corporation throughout the United States and Canada. This center was also built in Delran, N. J.

What do you take to a conference in 18th century Williamsburg?

20th century transportation.

You hop a United, National, Piedmont or Allegheny jet to Patrick Henry Airport, only 20 minutes from Williamsburg by limousine. Or you zip along interstate highways by car.

And you arrive to find a fascinating town of 18th century dwellings, public buildings, craft shops and tavern; a town where some very important meetings were taking place as early as 1699.

For those first conferees, diversions were somewhat limited. There were no tennis courts, swimming pools or Robert Trent Jones golf courses to adjourn to as there are today. But in spite of the limitations, those earlier meetings in Williamsburg shaped the course of a nation.

Just think what yours could do.

It is with a feeling of sadness to think of William and Mary without our distinguished classmate, Davis Y. Paschall in the Office of the President. His courage and dedicated spirit has meant so much in this the most trying time for all institutions of learning. We shall always be grateful for him.

Bill Talton was kind enough to fill us in on some news. After sixteen years with the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, he returned to his home town of Opaka, Fla. and went into general insurance and real estate. He has retired from the insurance company but is still active with his real estate company and now has his daughter as an associate. His son is a pilot with Eastern Air Lines, flying the DC-9's.

Bill's brother, Jim Talton, '32 is also with Eastern. He is number one captain stationed in Atlanta. He expects to retire soon.

Peggy Diggs is another classmate who was with Eastern but has retired.

My son, James Leroy Bradshaw, '66 has graduated from Medical College of Virginia and is now associated with his father in the practice of dentistry in Blackstone, Va.

Many of our classmates are retiring and finding other things to do of interest—It would be good to hear from all of you who are members of the Class of '32.

Glad to receive a letter from Wilbur Y. Morton bringing us up to date on him and his family. He completed two years of doctoral work in economics at the University of Tennessee, 1968-70. He is an assistant professor in Economics at East Tennessee State University, Johnson City, Tenn., having been on the staff five years. He and his wife, Ruth, live in Johnson City. She has taught high school and adult education until January 1971—now is enjoying being at home. Their two daughters are married. Phyllis and husband, Mike Ryan, were in Moscow until August or September 1971. She has her M.A. from George Washington University, while Mike has a Ph.D. and was studying at the Moscow University on an exchange program. He is on leave from University of North Carolina. Sheila married in June 1970 to Ford Caldwell, who is studying at North Texas University. She is a buyer and supervisor in Sanger-Harris department store, Dallas. That's a busy family, I'd say!

M. Gill Piquette informs us she completed 30 years of service in the Federal Government in April. But she is not ready to retire yet.

The end of April my husband and I were delighted to be able to attend a concert of the Choir of the College of William and Mary in Aberdeen, Md. As usual, we marveled at the stamina of the students who undertake these tours, and their ability to present such beautiful music. Dr. Fehr is such a talented director. We enjoyed meeting him and the members of the choir at a get together at the home of Virginia Forwood (Pate) after the concert.

Charles (Leon) was the class of '40. They are having rather an overwhelming year: Esso Eastern Standard is being moved to Houston, Tex, so they will be there as of August 1 (address 14423 Bramblewood Dr. zip 77024) after 21 years in Connecticut. On top of that one son, Chipper, graduated from high school and will enter Colby in Waterville, Me. in the fall. Their oldest daughter graduated June 6 from Madison College in Harrisonburg, Virginia, majoring in Library Science. Their second daughter, Candy, is a sophomore at Northwestern and they are announcing her engagement May 28, and she will be married in New Canaan September 4 and they'll be coming up from Texas for the wedding. Their youngest son is twelve and going into Junior High in Houston, so he is very excited over riding his bike to school, since they are far out in school bus territory now. They have a home in Vermont they will continue to come to in the summer, so they won't lose contact with the New England they all love. So good hearing from you, Betty.

Also had a grand letter from Jack Purrill who wrote that he has been busy overseeing the restoration of an old colonial house for their daughter, Anne, and her husband—"a real labor of love because this is the purest and most unspoiled old house that I've had the opportunity to work on." Built in 1770, it is a typical New England center chimney house, with five fireplaces, surrounded by stone walls and a barn so that Anne can continue her interest in horses. For years she was one of the best junior hunt seat riders in the state. Jack and Harriet are moving on July 15 from a house built in 1810 to one built in 1725. The address is 129 Neipsic Road, Glastonbury, Conn. They expect to go to Ireland for a couple of weeks this summer and take 12-year-old Kate with them.

Jack noticed in the papers that Steve Lenzi is a registered lobbyist at the State legislature. Steve served a term in the legislature a few years ago. The Purtils see Jimmie Elliott and Bill St. John frequently. They live in Newington and Jimmie has just become a real estate salesman.

William M. Musser, Jr., a partner in the law firm of Rengier, Musser and Stengel, in Lancaster, Pa. has been elected president of the First National Bank of Strasburg. Congratulations, Bill!

I was indeed saddened to hear from Paul Post that his wife, Virginia Peterson Post, passed away March 20th at their home in Williamsburg. "V" was a graduate of Mac Alister College in Minneapolis and received a Masters Degree on Social Work from the University of Southern California. For the past four years Paul has been with the James City County Health Dept. I know the class joins me in expressing our sympathy to Paul.

On June 12 Frank and I attended the wedding of Margie Hoskins and Red Bloxom's daughter, Louisa, and Edward Lawson Woods at the Atlantic Fleet Chapel in Norfolk. Also there were Sally Bell and Thea Wainwright, Yvonne Johnson and Luther Jenkins and Margaret Peek and her husband.

Over Memorial Day weekend our home was headquarters for a reunion of my family. There were 30 of us present, gathering from Chicago, California, N. Y. State, N. J., and West Virginia. We had a ball in spite of the fact that it rained the entire weekend!

Our son, Daniel, is away for the summer, working at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science in Gloucester Point. It's a fine experience for him but I do miss him. Recently, Frank and I had a pleasant trip to Eastport, Me. and enjoyed a second spring.

We are in the throes of planning an addition to our house—another bath and dressingroom and enlarging our bedroom. We have the drawings from the architect so the next hurdle is getting the work started.

On September 1, Frank and I fly to London to spend the month touring Great Britain. I'm really excited for this is my first visit there.

I'm so grateful for all your letters and I do hope you'll keep up the good work and let me hear from others of you, too.

A note from Peg Apperly (Knowlton) received in March told that Mildred Wiltshire (Owens) now lives in Maryland, Peggy Ford is still teaching at Endicott in Boston and Mildred Russell is working in Englewood, N. J. and plans a trip to England in the spring. Peg also wrote that they have just one youngster at home now. Their oldest daughter is working for her PhD at the University of North Carolina, their son graduated from Princeton and is teaching in a new school in the area and their second daughter is at Tufts University in Boston.

Congratulations to T. Crawley Davis, Jr. who has been elected a vice-president of the Delaware State Chamber of Commerce for 1971. Jim, senior vice-president of the Bank of Delaware, joined the bank in 1950. He holds his law degree from the University of Pennsylvania, is active in the Delaware Bar Association, Delaware Bank-

Judge John P. Harper and Dot's son Jack has completed his Masters in Civil Engineering at Duke and is going on duty in the Navy as a Lt. (j.g.) and daughter Penny will be a junior at William and Mary in the fall. Pat and Dot are looking forward to seeing everyone at our 30th reunion in October.

Kitty Britton (Norton) and Larry were in Richmond in June for the wedding of their daughter, Wendy, to Lee Brown. Wendy graduated from Sweet Briar and Lee from Randolph-Macon just two weeks before the wedding. Among the ushers were son David, an attorney in Richmond and son Rick, who is in high school in St. Paul. The reception at the Country Club of Virginia was a veritable William and Mary Alumni reunion—Kitty, Dot Toulon (Smith), Hope Toulon (Byrne), Betty Boyd (Parsons), Johnny Britton, Bob and myself.

Hope to see many of you in October—please write often to keep in touch—your classmates want to hear about you.

Edith Rathbun (Bell) and her husband, Loyd, report from Meredithville, Va., that they are both continuing to teach. They have three grandchildren and lead a busy life.

Virginia Sims (Wilkinson) writes from Huntington, W. Va. that their oldest son is married and two younger girls are attending Hollins and the University of Tennessee. She and her husband spend quite a lot of time in Palm Beach, where they have purchased a condominium.

Patty Nichols (Curcuro) leads a busy life, but not too busy to send us some news: Gil Fitchett working for CIBA in New Jersey; Bill Slater working in California . . . and her own husband, Ed, still teaching at the U. of Connecticut.

V. Manuel San Juan, Jr., '42 of San Juan, Puerto Rico who is a financier, industrialist and insurance executive has recently been elected President of the Manuel San Juan Company, Inc. During the year 1970 he was named Man of the Year by the Sales & Marketing Executives Association. He is president of five other insurance companies and is a director of numerous businesses.

The husband of your class secretary has recently been elected Mayor of Hutchinson, Kan., so we both send "official" greetings to you all!

Greetings from the Gentle City.

Martha Davidson (Askew) has moved from Illinois to a hillside home in Bakersville, N. C. She and her family are all "sculpting" and doing enamel work and etchings. One daughter is married; another is spending the summer in Saltillo, Mexico.

The Rev. George Holmes is rector of historic old Saint Paul's Church in Edenton, N. C. He flies his own plane and has made many interesting trips. There are nine children in his family—Rosemary, George and Jane are in college; Rachel hopes to spend the summer in Switzerland; Rebecca is in Florida; the twins, Katherine and Emilye, are musically inclined; John is a fisherman, and Shirlee is a seven year old artist. George's wife, Rachel, is in charge of the Learning Lab. for the College of the Albemarle. In his spare ! ! ! time George teaches a class in psychology and one in human relations.

Governor Holton accepted 100 Pelicans from James E. Howard, president of the Beer Wholesalers. These will help keep the litter off the highways and make Virginia beautiful. Good for you, Jimmy.

Betty Buntin (Matthews) writes from Kentucky that she and Bob had several William and Mary graduates as guests for the Derby. They have had one son accepted at Stetson, another son is in Viet Nam.

George T. Blanford recently was elected Vice President of the Dallas-Fort Worth Alumni Chapter.

Milt Greenblatt of Waterbury, Conn. attended the New York Alumni Chapter's spring meeting at Thursday's 24, one of New York's newest discotheque/restaurants.

Dyckman W. Vermilye of Alexandria, Va. became Chief Executive Officer on July 1st, of the American Association for Higher Education.

Ann Washington Beard is living in Durban, South Africa where her husband is building a lube oil refinery. Their son Jim, Jr. is a jet transport pilot in the USAF; son Bill is an officer in the Army in Viet Nam; son Richard on year leave from William & Mary studying at the University of Natal in South Africa; and daughter Lisa is in 3d grade in local public school.

Be writing to you in the autumn.

Greetings classmates—

Apologies for last issue. Perhaps this news will make up for it! Parent's Week-End was really fun. There with their children were JoParker Flint and John with Debbie, Emily Snyder Alexander and Kay, Jean Boyd McIntyre and Betsy. Pat and Dot Harper and Penny. Nancy and Dixon Foster and Kate, Evie and Hal King and Kathy, Jan Freer Scantlebury and Alice, and others. We had a "Gathering" with the help of Jean McIntyre and the Fosters for alums and their "kids" that evening. Called Johnny and Louise Hollis, but their daughter was being married in Washington that day, so they couldn't make it!

Last month we had a ball chaperoning the Tri Delt Pledge dance. All the sorority and fraternity kids came. Met Aubrey Mason's son, Jane and Bill Smith's daughter, Joyce Remsberg's daughter, Skippy Myers's daughter, Kate Foster, Deal Chandler, Grace and Harry Cox's Ginny, and others. Rolf and I went thru the Crescent with the pledges—after all these years—very exciting. They were wonderful young people. Don't believe everything you read in the Flat Hat! We've just had about twenty plus for a houseparty at Sandbridge, and they were great!

Speaking of the Flat Hat, Harry Barr stayed with us several days last week. He's in the Freight Forwarding business in New York. Read my old Flat Hats and said their content had surely changed!

Bob Sanderson called several months ago from Memphis. He's President of International Galleries. One of his clients was having a show at the Norfolk Museum. Took them to the 'Burg.

Had a party after the opening and got together such W&M folk as Jane Whitmore Whittemore and Pete and Donald Griffin. Bob was telling us about seeing Joe Ritter in California. Took Bob "Antiquing" in Norfolk and he decided (with Fran Loesch Brunner and Joan Kable Griffith) that Norfolk is good antiquing spot. Suzy Parsons Cosgrove and Cliff bought lots here for their new shop in Red Bank, N. J. The Norfolk Museum is now the Chrysler Museum named for Jean Outland Chrysler's husband. Paintings by Degas, Mary Cassatt, and Cezanne are arriving daily which will really enrich the whole area.

Speaking of antiques—met Lois and Doug Donald in Williamsburg last week, looking at the College for Diane. We went to a huge new antique shop on Richmond Rd. which turned out to be owned by Maggie Sease Bourroughs and Bill. In addition to opening the shop, she'd just married off her second daughter and was teaching school. Dorie Wiprud Diggs's daughter, Sarah, is to be married in Williamsburg June 15th. She's completed her junior year at the College. Jean Preston's Merle is graduating. Hear Ruthie Tillar's Elizabeth and her husband are coming back to William and Mary. Joan Kable Griffith writes that Harriet Irvin Rutland will be at Homecomings. Jack Carter has a son who is a Senior at the University of Texas, a daughter that will be a junior next year at William and Mary. Another daughter is at Foxcroft. Three others are in lower grades. Jack continues to travel for the Episcopal church. Hear that Julie Rowan is secretary of the Houston, Tex. Alumni group. Great news about Bob Longacre being President of A&P Company! Betty Aurell Shutz writes that they added a third alum in June '69 when their son graduated—now 1st Lt. in Viet Nam, daughter a '70 graduate of Madison, married, two sons in College, and two living at home still.

Marge Retzke Gibbs writes that Billie Davison Cantlay, whose husband is Brigadier General George Gordon Cantlay, deputy commanding general of U. S. Army Armor Center, Fort Knox, Ky., wrote from a plane bound for New York and the 25th anniversary trip to Bermuda. They were guests of Betty Buntin and Bob Matthews on Kentucky Derby Day. So were Nancy Norris and Dick Foster. Went to breakfast hosted by Mary Stanton and Bob Doll. All had dinner back at Ft. Knox. Son, Lt. G. G. III was married last November to a Tacoma, Wash. girl. He left for Viet Nam in May. Son, Dave, will start last year at USMA this fall—went to Africa on exchange on Operation Crossroads to Africa program during the summer. Daughter, Carolyn is at home.

Betsy and R. C. Williamson's oldest son, Rick, is attending USNA, Annapolis. See you all at Homecoming!

I was as disappointed as all of you to see a void in our column for the March, 1971 issue. The news covering homecoming and compiled with the help of several others was mailed in plenty of time. Somewhere it was lost.

Jack Carter who travels around the country for the Episcopal Church as an advisor for their schools, passes on news of some of our class. Bill Heffner also works with the Episcopal Church. In Okinawa for 15 years after the war, he established churches there, and married an Okinawan girl. They now live in Cos Cob, Conn.

Bill Williams is an Episcopal minister in North Carolina. Howard Douglas does fluorine research for NASA in Ohio. John Fields manages a family business of wood products in Rochester, N. Y.

Flossie Metius Johnson's husband, Dwight, enjoys flying his own plane, and can sometimes persuade Flossie to go along. They live in Glenside, Pa. Two others who live in Pennsylvania are Dossie Blake Woods, and Ruth Kenyon Jolly. Dossie's husband is a professor at the University of Pennsylvania and they have 4 children. Ruth lives in Villanova and has a son and daughter.

Our sympathy goes to Mary Simon Blevins who lost her husband suddenly last summer with a heart attack. Simo continues to teach physical education in Princeton, W. Va.

Mary G. Jones Vliet and Arthur live in Arlington. Their sons are 19 and 20. Mary G. had a serious operation 3 years ago but looked great when we saw her last fall.

Lyon and Lucy Jane Tyler are in Lexington where Lyon is a professor of history at V.M.I. A lawyer for 13 years, he studied at Duke after deciding to teach.

Ann Wilson Taylor and Herbert still live in Crewe, their home town, though Herb commutes daily to work with an insurance company in Richmond. Their daughter is an airline stewardess and their son is a college freshman.

Jean McPherrin Morris and Harrell are in Newport News. They have three daughters, the oldest in college, and Jean teaches.

Imagine—there are two Dorothy Bloms in Class of '45. Dottie Engstrand is Mrs. Gaston Blom of Englewood, Colo. As Dorothy Johnson, I was used to meeting other namesakes, but this is more unusual.

At the annual convention of the American Lutheran Church held in San Antonio last October, Jack Merriman was elected to a six-year term on the Board of Regents of Luther College, Decorah, Iowa. He is a partner in the law firm of Weinberg and Green, Baltimore, and is married to Marjorie Talle, '44.

Dossie Kissam now lives in Amherst, Mass. where she serves as a state public health nursing consultant for the western part of Massachusetts. Divorced in 1955, Dossie returned to school at the University of California and Boston University and got her masters. She then taught at Joyce Remsburg Shank is now in the Philippines as her husband has been assigned to Clark Air Force Base. Their previous home was in Bellevue, Neb. This coming year, Joyce will have two daughters at William and Mary, in the sophomore and freshman classes, after having spent a summer in the Philippines with their parents. We are sorry she cannot come to our 25th reunion this fall.

A most welcomed letter from Cecy Waddell Cunningham tells of a happy new life in Hillside, N. J., where Scotty is now the Head Master of his own prep school, Pingry. Their son, Todd, will be entering the fourth grade here this fall, while daughter, Ann, will go to a nearby girls' school. The Cunninghams retain a lively interest in Virginia and Williamsburg, making occasional trips to the area.

It will be a well travelled and continental Nancy Grube Williams that will see us in October. Grubie is spending the summer—from early June to Sept. 6th—in France and Europe, with her four children—driving a Mercedes-Benz and speaking French exclusively. A busy and exciting summer for sure.

Arthur Reisfeld attended the spring meeting of the New York Alumni Chapter.

Leonard B. Aaron is a member of the public accounting firm in Newport News, Aaron, Roesen & Cutts, along with several W&M graduates.

I hope in the next edition we have lots of news from the reunion in Williamsburg. If you cannot come, please let us hear from you.

Those from the Class of '49 seen at the spring meeting of the New York Alumni Chapter where Mark McCormack, '51 was the guest speaker at Thursday's 24, one of New York's newest discotheque/restaurants were Lou Bailey, Tom Nethercott, and Scotty Nielsen.

In May, W. Dale Parker of Titusville, Fla. was announced the winner of the "What Our Flag Means to Me" contest sponsored by the Gannett Publishing Co. of Florida. It was a very impressive article. Dale is currently Vice President of Travel International, Inc., a firm which packages tours from Europe to Florida; also he is a faculty advisor to Mensa Col-

Had a very nice letter from Woody Wayland. They are now living in Williamsville, N. Y. Woody had recently had lunch with Gene Hoffman. Gene is a Corporate Account representative for St. Regis Paper Company.

In my last letter Ed Brown had asked about the other members of the first R.O.T.C. class from William and Mary. His question brought response from Ted Flagg, Colonel U.S.A. He said that Otie Garrison '49 was killed in the Korean War in 1951. As for Ted he has seen duty in both Korea and Vietnam and progressed from 2nd Lt. to Colonel and served all over the world. At the present time Ted is deputy Director of the Department of Gunnery at the U. S. Army Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. Ted and wife, Fran have three children, Ted Jr., (16), Nan (13) and Tim (8). Ted gives hope that we will hear from the other eight members of that historic group. How about it?

Bob was in Houston about a month ago and had lunch with Bill Lowe, who has recently been elected President of the Houston, Texas Alumni Chapter. I keep hoping that one of these trips will include me but they never happen at the right time.

John Dunton is Conservator and has been since 1963 at the Fortress of Louisbourg in Nova Scotia.

Herb Chandler, Jeannette Bailey, Henry Pinsker and Joe Brinkley attended the spring meeting of the New York Alumni Chapter.

We have already started our weekends to the beach, last weekend our 13-year-old daughter took 6 gals down with us. Only time I ever wished I were deaf. That's all and please some more of you who haven't been heard from stand up and be counted.

THE BIG PLAY

WHEN THE Indians are in a third and eight situation, it's time for the big play. The quarterback must keep the team moving and needs a real gainer. At Williamsburg Department Store, we think you'll find many big gainers in our fine ladies, men's or youth departments. Another big play is possible in our expanded gift department where we offer quality items from around the world. So, when the game weekends near and you don't have quite the right thing to wear, drop in at Williamsburg Department Store for help with that big play. Remember, "Dress Right. As you can see, our news is scarce this time, but I am hoping to see many of you at our 20th Reunion at Homecoming in October. There I hope to have a chat with you, and then I will have more news to share with those of you who are not able to make it to the big event. It's hard to believe that we have been out of college twenty years! Bev. and I are making plans to be in Williamsburg for all the festivities which are being planned for the alums, and how I am looking forward to seeing all of you again! For those of you who can't make the trip back, how I'd like to hear from you!

Our news is abundant, for the first time in many issues. Thanks for the letters.

Ginny Postles (Keithly) has written from Brownwood, Tex., where she is the wife of the Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church.

The Tom Keithlys have lived in Texas twelve years now, having been residents of Fort Worth, then Dallas, before settling in Brownwood. They have three children: Becky, 13; Hugh, 10; and Mark, 7 years.

The church was built in 1889, and the rectory, next door, is 65 years old and rumored to be haunted by one of its earliest inhabitants.

Life is not placid, nor peaceful, however, being involved in church school, choir, and wherever else there's a need. Despite all these activities and those of bringing up three children, Ginny escapes to her hobby of sculpture. She even studied wood sculpture in Dallas under Octavio Medellin for three years.

At the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in Houston, Tom came across Dick Fowler, who is an Episcopal Priest in the Diocese of California. He lives in San Francisco.

Joann Eversole (Meyers) is living in Rochester, N. Y., and is married to Phil Meyers, an Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Management at the University of Rochester.

Joann worked for seven years for the City Planning Bureau. (I do remember now that she did graduate work at Harvard in city-planning.) She is now doing consulting work for the Genesee Region Health Planning Council, learning a new field while using her training. Her agency has responsibility for all aspects of health care planning in a ten county area.

Their two children are: Carole, 4, and Stephen, 3. The whole family enjoyed an extended tent-trailer vacation last year that took them throughout the eastern and southeastern United States and as far west as Missouri.

They were able to visit Nancy Johnson (Burd) '53 and family in Nashville. Stephanie Johnson (Neal) '53 and husband, Don, are still in Alaska. They have three daughters, and all love Alaska life.

Isabella Rupert (Tosco) and her husband (Ugo) have built a new home in Bow, N. H. They are avid mountain-climbers.

Gordon Vliet was on hand in New York City where the New York Alumni Chapter held its meeting on May 19th at the Thursday 24. Walter Trent was present, as were Pat and Don Berryman, Marshall Ries, Dick Bennet and Gil Parmele.

Pete Crenier is back on the east coast in New Jersey.

Peggy Wells (Stiles) is still writing as was reported in the Journal Messenger, Manassas, Va. Two articles appeared during the spring, one in the Maryland Horse, entitled, History of Hampton Mansion Closely Linked with Horses. In the Stereo Review, she wrote Bel Canto Banquet dealing with the recipes opera stars have enjoyed. In the works also is a children's book, by Four Winds Press, entitled, Dougal Looks for Birds. Then, there was a series of three articles in Thoroughbred Record about the races and yearling sales at Deauville, France, where Peggy's husband took pictures last summer to accompany the articles.

In Southern Living, the May issue, you may have recognized a familiar face—that of Ann Angle (Smith). Sandy Cove where the Smiths have their home was shown as were the members of the family. House Beautiful also had an article on the area in February. The family was to be in France during the summer.

Williamsburg Chief of Police Andrew Rutherford was pictured last spring in the City Newsletter of Williamsburg where it was announced that he was elected class president of the U. S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs School.

The school was held in Washington, D. C. and lasted for ten weeks. It was for local and state law enforcement officers.

Time Magazine recently quoted Rene Henry in an article on the housing industry. He now has his own public relations firm at 1801 Avenue of the Stars, Century City, Los Angeles.

David N. Heinrich, M.D. of Waukegan, Ill., was planning to bring his family to Williamsburg during the summer. There are three children, ages ten, eight and three.

We learn from Mary Ann Garth that Jim Grant is the Deputy Commissioner of the U. S. Food and Drug Administration.

Bill is a management labor attorney, a member of the American Bar Association, the New York State Bar Association, Association of the Bar of the City of New York, and a member of the National Panel of Arbitrators of the American Arbitration Association.

Bruce Muni has been promoted to district sales manager for Air India.

Marine Corps Major William S. Humbert, III, was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. Major Humbert, the operations officer for the marine detachment, was cited for heroism and extraordinary achievement in aerial flight while serving as a pilot with Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 263 in connection with combat operations against the enemy in the Republic of Vietnam. Despite heavy rains and dangerous winds, Maj. Humbert courageously maneuvered his CH-46 transport helicopter to evacuate a seriously ill marine from a unit which was located four miles south of Nam O Bridge in Quang Nam Province.

News is brief this time so I hope before our next issue I'll be hearing from lots of you with news of your recent activities.

Among our successful classmates in industry is Dave Edmunds who this year was promoted to Commercial Manager for the C&P Telephone Company in Charleston, W. Va. Dave was formerly District Commercial Manager in Huntington.

I talked with Judy Webber Manson and Irene Hill Mnick this spring. Judy and her husband, who is in the Navy, were in the process of moving from California to Florida, and Judy was spending some time with Irene before the move. We had planned a little Pi Phi get-together along with Carolyn Bacon and Anne Brown Lanman but Irene managed to run in a Mack truck the afternoon of our get-together so our visit was postponed! In attempting to contact Mary Gerwig Vincent for our reunion I found that she is now living in Lynchburg, Va.

Phyllis Garris Powers and husband, Bob, are living in Arlington, Va. while Bob is stationed here with the Navy. Phyllis says her two-and-a-half-year-old daughter keeps her busy but she has found time to enjoy some of the Washington sights and theatre as well as do some PTA work. She has an eight-year-old in school.

Steve Oaks has been elected President of the Houston, Texas Alumni Chapter.

I received a letter of appeal from Pat Muddiman Callahan. Pat's son, John, has leukemia and she has requested that I ask our classmates to pray for John as well as to write letters to President Nixon asking him to release the funds which the face of the earth

*If you want to know where it is—a meter or a world away—
Cubic has the system!*

CUBIC'S SECOR, the surveying satellite developed for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, keeps introducing changes in the cartographer's art. For example, the system places the Ryukyu Islands a half-mile southwest of where we thought they were. To make such discrete measurements, SECOR employs electronic trilateration. As the satellite makes its pass, signals bounce between its 7-pound transponder and 4 portable Cubic ground stations. When the data is correlated, one station, whose position is only generally known, is located with new precision.

Since 1964, the ground stations have leapt across the Pacific toward Hawaii in the first part of a globe-girdling program. With each satellite pass, stations receive information from 10,000 data points—and tens of thousands of correlations are used for each distance measured. Trilateration is the key to a number of Cubic's significant systems developments. SECOR is more proof that if you want to know where it is—land, sea or space—Cubic has the system. Write Chief Scientist, Systems Div., Dept. E-276, Cubic Corp., San Diego, Calif. 92123.

A letter from Pete Siegenthaler reminds us of Homecoming and our tenth anniversary the weekend of October 23. He and Ann plan to come up from Atlanta and are looking forward to seeing many of our class there. The Siegenthalers have been busy with Siegenthaler & Company, Realtors, and their three boys—Craig six, Dan four, and John two months.

Tom Lipscomb is editor-in-chief at Dodd, Mead in New York, publishing especially distinguished nonfiction and commercial fiction. He is the youngest (or close to it) editor-in-chief in the business.

Rex Adelberger is an assistant professor of physics in Genesco, N. Y. He and Patricia have two children, Marc two and a half and Kirstin seven months.

In April, Ron Monark was named director of marketing for Commercial Credit Company in Baltimore. He had most recently been first vice president of the Oceanography Development Corporation in Florida.

Steve Edwards has been appointed sales manager of the Norfolk branch of the Friden Division—The Singer Company.

Carol Noble Braun's husband Dick returned in June from Vietnam and they were to move in July with their three daughters to Albany, Ga., Dick's new assignment. The Gunns, at this writing, planned to spend the Fourth of July weekend with Paul and Jane Bahn in Springfield, across the street from the Brauns, to help with a farewell party. Then plans called for a week together at the beach for the six Bahns and four Gunns.

Gayle Crabill Kerns and Walden moved to Athens, Ga. in January where Walden is an assistant professor of resource economics and environmental quality at the University of Georgia. Walden received his Ph.D. in April from Penn State in agricultural economics. After nine moves in eight years the Kerns are happily settled down in a new house with daughters, Laurie, almost 7, and Kelly, 3, and another child expected this fall. Gayle writes that Jackie Fleming toured Europe for three months this winter and is living in Upperville, Va. while job hunting in the Washington, D. C. area. In Arlington Judy Case Falkenrath and 2-year-old Michelle are living with her parents while husband Jim is in Vietnam on his second tour. Also, in Arlington are Nancy Sinclair Henry and Jim.

Dorothy Guild Tompkins and Bill live in Columbia, S. C. where Bill is chief of the gastroenterology section of the medical department. Dorothy was working in the pediatric clinic at Ft. Jackson, where Bill is stationed until the birth of their son Billy. Dorothy hopes to return to work. Next summer the Tompkins plan to return to Charlottesville so that Bill, who finished his two years in the Army, can practice internal medicine and Dorothy can finish her last year of pediatric cardiology. Marcus Higginbotham moved to Louisville, Ky. in July 1970; he is employed by Penn Central Transportation Co. as trainmaster. He and his wife were expecting their first child in May. B. Conrad Bush has been promoted to audit manager in the Buffalo, N. Y. office of Ernst and Ernst, and lives in Hamburg.

Chuck Williams is an attorney with Lutz and Kavaljian in Alexandria.

Jim has been with Picker for the past six years, located in the Northern Virginia office. Jim and his wife, Gay Vaughn, '62, and their two boys, Scott, 7, and Charles, 4, will be relocating in the Cleveland, Ohio area during the summer. Susan Shackelford Schlichting writes from Baton Rouge that Cort, '64, is nearing completion of his Ph.D. in Economics at Louisiana State University and will graduate in August. He has accepted a teaching position at Spring Hill College in Mobile, Ala. Susan has again been teaching 4th grade, but "retired" prior to the birth of their second child in May. Their daughter Kirsten is almost 4. Pam Johnstone Hitt reports that for the past two years, Dave has been working for the State of Oregon as a vocational rehabilitation counselor. He was first assigned to Astoria, then transferred to Corvallis. The Hitts are planning a trip back East this summer. Jonny is 4½ and Christ, 3. Pam has worked as a substitute teacher this past year.

Susanna Black Gould and Chuck live in Annandale. Chuck is project manager for several sections of the D. C. metro system. Chappy, Charles, Jr., is now two and Katherine was born in December. Susanna writes that they all enjoy camping in their new trailer whenever possible and they plan to take it to Williamsburg this summer. Karl Zavitovsky writes from Tarija, Bolivia, that he has been away from the States so long that he hardly knows what to expect upon his return in July or August. After two Army tours in Viet Nam, Karl's civilian job for the past 30 months has been regional director for Peace Corps programs. Karl and Mimi have had two boys while living in southern Bolivia, Frank, 7 months, and Jeff, 20 months. Karl plans to be working with the international division of Chase or First National City Bank upon his return.

Thanks to Randi Sigmund Smith for her long and news-filled letter. Randi married Richard Smith, Georgetown University '63, in February 1965. They have two daughters, Robin, 3, and Randi Marie (Deede), 2. Richard is a stockbroker and Randi is working part time as a freelance writer doing advertising and promotional work for several advertising agencies and some small businesses in the Hartford (Conn.) area. William Harris has been elected vice president of United Virginia Bank-Seaboard National. He has been with the bank since graduation and, in addition to being assistant branch administrator in the main office, has also served as manager of the Hilltop and Little Creek offices.

Fran McCampbell Ring is happily settled in Brussels, Belgium, with husband Stuart and two daughters, Susan and Katie. Her long, effervescent letter was full of the delights of living and traveling abroad. Fran reports that Ann Harvey Yonkers traveled extensively in the rural areas in the South and Southwest last fall and found the experience "incredibly interesting" and enlightening as well as disheartening in the abject poverty areas. Charlie continues with his law firm in the Washington area. Ann and Charlie's second baby was born in June. Jim and Maureen Harvey Culliton are back in the States from India, living in Boston, where Jim is working with MIT in administration. Babs Beaumont Anderson and Gene were in the process of building their dream house on the waterfront in Clearwater, Fla., during the early spring.

Both William Irwin Salmon and his wife, Lydia Susan received their Ph.D. degrees from the Iowa State University in May in the field of Physical Chemistry.

John and I spent three weeks in June traveling in England and on the Continent—Our first trip to Europe realized at last! Our plans are now to be at Homecoming, so we look forward to seeing many of you then. If I do not see you in person there, please write me a letter so I can report your news in the next issue of the Gazette.

Jane Youngblood Spurling writes that in June Rick received his M.B.A. from William and Mary. Jane taught first grade at Rawls Byrd last year and in addition studied for her Masters in Education. After a short vacation to Bermuda in August, they moved to England for three years where Rick will be studying law.

Jane also included in her letter that over Memorial Day weekend she and Rick visited Roddie and Terry Waters Whibley and Bob and Marion Beers Fitzgerald at Camp La Jeune, N. C. Roddie and Bob are both stationed there as lieutenants in the Marine Corps. At the time, Marion and Bob were awaiting the arrival of their first child. Their daughter, Erin Alexis, arrived June 16th.

Jim and Pam Rollay Runyon lived in Williamsburg until June when Jim received his M.B.A. from William and Mary. They then moved to Connecticut where Jim is currently working for General Electric. They have two children, Kirsten and Matthew Christian.

Carrington Salley writes that she made the Law Review at the University South Carolina and has had two articles published in the S. C. Lawyer. She was in the top 12 out of 150 in her class last year and was on the staff in charge of the New Candidate Program. Carrington visited Greece, Turkey, and Italy last summer before attending the Exeter Summer School (Law) on the William and Mary program. Stacy Scherer joined Carrington after classes the end of August, and they toured Scotland and Ireland for ten days.

Peggy Riordan Sims and Kirby had a son, Kirby Powell Jr., on January 9th. He was baptized in Atlanta and Carrington is his godmother. Peggy and Kirby are living in Birmingham where Kirby is with Cheeseborough Ponds Company selling hospital supplies.

I heard from Billy Dunn in May. He had just spent ten days in Bangkok and was planning to spend his R&R in Hong-Kong. Billy said he hoped to be released from the Army by July of this year to attend the University of Pennsylvania in August.

Melvin and Frances Herring Reynolds moved from Raleigh, N. C. to Hampton last May. Melvin completed his Masters in nuclear engineering at N. C. State, and has been transferred with VEPCO to Surry where their nuclear reactors plant has recently become operational.

We see quite a bit of Brad and Sandy Barrick Bierman who have been living in Williamsburg for the last two years. Brad has written and published an airport directory, while Sandy taught for two years in Newport News. They are hoping to move up to Alexandria this fall.

Mary Morden writes from the University of Michigan Medical Center that in June she took the National Board examinations in Basic Sciences. After the boards, she had a job as medical officer and able-bodied seaman aboard the "Minstrel Boy," Marty McGuire left her job with Massachusetts Investors Trust in May and spent several months in Europe this summer.

Barb Johnson is with Lan Chile Airlines in Boston.

As of last May, Woody Lookabill was serving as a chaplain's assistant at Ft. Bragg. Woody at that time was trying to obtain an early release from the Army so that he could begin Law School at Washington and Lee in September.

Mary Chris Schmitz was kind enough to send me the Kappa Delta newsletter. She said that after reading all the news from the Chi O newsletter in my last issue, she didn't want to be outdone by them! Mary Chris is still working as a computer programmer for Reynolds Metals and is going to graduate school at the Univ. of Richmond in Economics. She plans to finish her degree by June 1973.

Jack and Sally Barner Dean are in Athens, Ohio where Jack is studying Architecture at Ohio University. Jack and Sally serve as resident directors of a dorm of 250 boys. In addition, Sally is doing social work at the State Mental Hospital.

Nancy Beachley received her MA in Spanish from the Univ. of North Carolina in August. At the time of the KD newsletter, she was interviewing at private girls schools in North Carolina and Virginia for a teaching position.

At William and Mary for the past two years getting her Masters in Biology has been Judy Carhart. Judy spent the summer at the Marine Biological Laboratories, Woods Hole, Mass. on Cape Cod working as a Research Assistant. In September she enrolled at MCV in Richmond.

De Garber is in her second year of teaching fourth grade in a predominantly Negro Richmond school.

After a vacation in August at the St. John's Island National Park in the Virgin Islands, Jerry and Kathy Jordan Jebo moved to Williamsburg. Jerry is studying at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, following Coast Guard service in Viet Nam and, later, employment at the Government Accounting Office in Washington. While living in Alexandria last year, Kathy worked for State Farm Mutual Life Insurance Company.

In August Carol Knight received her Masters degree in psychology from the University of Maryland. Her year included teaching a discussion section for an introductory class as well as assisting a graduate course in psychological testing. Since February Jackie Engle Berger and Carol have been sharing an apartment northeast of D. C. while Charlie is in Viet Nam. Carol says there is a reasonably good chance that she'll stay at Maryland for her Ph.D.

Mike and Janet Marshall McGee with their son, Chris, and daughter, Laurie, are living in Silver Spring, Md. After Mike's tour in Viet Nam ('68-'69), he spent one more year at Ft. Bragg, N. C., as a captain in the Training Center and in the 82nd Airborne Division. Mike is currently majoring in business administration and working part time as well.

Bruce and Sue Miller Long report from Ft. Rucker, Alabama that Bruce is in the second phase of flight school. They are the proud parents of Polly Suzanne, born September 1970. As for Army life—they love it. Bruce will have a three year obligation at the end of flight school, so Sue says an Army career could possibly be in their future.

"OVER the years various words take on new meanings. For example, to be called a 'square' guy was a compliment. Now it means you are odd. 'Indian Giver,' however, still has the same connotation it had when you and I were youngsters.

"'Indian Giver' means one thing—to give something and then, at an opportune time, to take it back. We are asking you to be an 'Indian Giver'—give us your support now and receive your reward in the knowledge of having helped worthy youngsters acquire an education, as well as helping our athletic program grow and improve.

"One thing is for certain, you can't be an 'Indian Giver' if you don't give NOW!"
