Higher education's 'uncertain' future: Will students want what colleges offer? Will colleges have enough space?

A BACKWARD GLANCE at the growth of higher education over the past century shows that the pattern was almost always predictable. Enrollments kept rising, doubling every 15 years or so. An ever-increasing share of the college-age population was actually going to college. New colleges kept going up. Old ones kept getting bigger. And this year, the federal government estimates, enrollments are up again—by six per cent.

But what of the future?

Can we expect more of the same?

What will higher education be like—and how big will it be—in 10, 20, or 30 years?

The answers aren't that predictable anymore. Too many factors in and around higher education are changing. Never before, says the noted Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, have the colleges been faced with a comparable situation. Amid many uncertainties, here's what the panel sees ahead:

► In the 1980's, higher education will have the unusual experience of a pause, if not an outright decline, in enrollment growth. New campus construction will cease, faculty members will be recruited far more slowly, and the opportunities for reform that tend to accompany periods of expansion will be reduced. There may be some qualitative improvements, though, as the demands of quantity subside, and adult education may come in for some dramatic expansion.

► The end to enrollment growth in the 1980's will be preceded by a decade of reduced growth, at a rate of perhaps 50 per cent. In the 1990's, enrollments will rise once more, by some 30 per cent. But compare those figures with the 124-per-cent increase of the past 10 years!

► In the long run, higher education will find that it is growing "more nearly with society," instead of far ahead of it. The portion of the college-age population in college at any given time may well level out to about 50 per cent a year by the turn of the century.

Taken together, those developments would be unprecedented for higher education, the commission says in a report on New Students and New Places. But as it looks at past and current trends, the panel stirs in some ideas of its own about where the academic world should be going. It expects greater college opportunities for low-income students and for adults to add to the enrollment pool. It wants to reduce the time students take to earn degrees. And it projects a shift of enrollments to two-year colleges, along with a decline in graduate rolls. The overall result, it says, would be a net drop of about 1 million students in the total estimated for 1980 on the basis of previous trends. The panel's revised total is 12.5 million students by 1980, with 16 million estimated for the year 2000. None of this can be forecast with great confidence, however. The panel points to these "new uncertainties":

► As colleges continue to be hard-pressed financially, will they be able to afford "new places" for new students?

► Most jobs today don't require a college degree. What happens when the labor market stops absorbing college graduates "at the level of training they have acquired?"

► Will students want what the colleges have to offer? The effects of the cultural revolution are a "great unknown."

► What will happen to the birth rate, which is now showing a dramatic decline?

► In the midst of the "new technology" of tapes and computers and video-cassettes, will the campus survive as the main center of higher education?

As academic leaders ponder such questions, they must also weigh proposals concerning the number, location, and size of their institutions. If they take the Carnegie Commission's advice, they will create at least 175 new community colleges and at least 80 new "comprehensive" public four-year colleges, mostly in urban areas, by 1980. They will not create any more Ph.D.-granting "research-type universities." And they will not let their institutions stay too small or get too large.

■ In Brief: For a long time now, the country has not been sure what to do about its traditionally black colleges. Should it save them, or scrap them in the name of integration? The wealthy and influential Ford Foundation, long-time supporter of higher education generally, has made a choice. It will devote about three-fourths of its higher-education grants over the next six years (some $100-million) to aiding minority students and a limited number of black colleges . . .

Minority enrollments are growing at a faster rate than those of the rest of the college population—20.4 per cent to 5.7 per cent between 1968 and 1970, federal statistics indicate . . .

Many private colleges are in worse financial shape than they had forecast. A survey has found more than 100 of them approaching bankruptcy.

Describes Role
Of College's "Community"*

When Thomas A. Graves, Jr. visited Williamsburg for the first time last January, he had no reason to suspect that he would be a permanent resident of the Colonial Capital less than nine months later.

He spent two days attending a UNESCO conference at the Williamsburg Lodge in January and—early riser that he is—he took two cold, early-morning strolls through the historic area and the campus. He recalls that he was charmed by the serenity of the place, especially at dawn, and at the sudden way in which the College campus came to life just before 8 a.m.

Mr. Graves has no recollection of realizing, during that visit, that William and Mary had a brand-new contemporary campus beyond the Sunken Garden. The new campus is separated from the older sections by a wooded area.

He does remember, however, seeing a notice on the Williamsburg Lodge's bulletin board that a dinner meeting was scheduled of the special Presidential Search Committee one of those two days. He was aware at the time that his name was one of 300 which had been suggested to the Search Committee as it began the long series of meetings which led to recommendation of a successor to Dr. Davis Y. Paschall.

Mr. Graves recalls thinking there was very little chance that his name would reach the final stages of the Committee's deliberations.

Once elected in May, however, he plunged into his new role with vigor and an insight developed from years of studying the problems of administering higher education. He was considered one of the nation's leading authorities in the techniques of heading up a college or university.

Mr. Graves spent the summer reading anything and everything he could obtain on William and Mary, visiting the campus and meeting with leading Virginians and alumni leaders. While still in Boston, he and Mrs. Graves were the guests of the Boston Alumni Chapter at a reception. He moved his family's belongs into the President's House on campus on July 31, in a drenching day-long rainstorm, and spent August at their rented summer home in Annisquam, Mass., continuing his reading and correspondence.

The Graves' made the final move to Williamsburg a gradual one, in two cars, stopping along the way for overnight visits in several cities between Boston and their destination.

On August 29, their children got their first glimpse of their new home and the cannon which is in their front yard. It was the first time in many decades that children's toys were regularly a part of the Wren Yard setting.

The upper stories of the 260-year-old house were redecorated to combine old surroundings with the warmth and vitality of a young family.

The third floor serves as a bright playroom and family center.

The Graves' began almost immediately to entertain members of the campus community. Faculty and administrative staff, and their spouses, were welcomed in a series of "at homes" each month in the fall. Members of each class were greeted during other open houses. At Homecoming, the Graves' were hosts for coffee and pastries Saturday morning.

Together, the Graves' attended all sorts of on-campus functions and also a series of special Alumni Chapter receptions held throughout the state and in the District of Columbia.

During "office hours," Mr. Graves spent as much time as possible away from the brightly decorated President's Office in Ewell Hall, although he used it as the site of a steady round of meetings with key people from throughout the College community. At other times, he dropped into administrative and faculty offices unannounced, toured residence halls and inspected ecological trouble spots around the campus.

After a brief swearing-in September 1, he went immediately to Richmond to attend a unique joint meeting of board of visitors of state-supported colleges and universities. It was an important introduction to state-wide financial problems confronting higher education. He later attended sessions of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in Atlanta and the American Council on Education in Washington.

Mr. Graves jumped to few conclusions about current William and Mary policies, although he gave heavy emphasis to his concept of a sense of "community" among all who are associated with the College. Each element of the community, he said, has its own important role and it his role to serve to enhance communications and understanding among them.

Excerpts from Opening Remarks

Delivered September 14, in William & Mary Hall

On the Role of the College:

"To me, William and Mary is first and foremost an academic institution. Here, you and I will find and have social experiences, political and athletic experiences, some very personal experiences, and many others as well. But we are here, each of us and all of us together, primarily to contribute to and participate in as rich and vigorous, as exciting and stimulating, an academic experience as we can possibly build together. The discussions we have, the activities we engage in and the decisions we reach should, I suggest, keep this central academic goal in mind.

"Within this broad goal of academic excellence the College of William and Mary has defined its own special mission, and I shall try to reaffirm it as I perceive it. I do not believe that an educational institution can be all things to all people, and I do not believe in the homogenization of higher education. In order for the entire system of higher education in the country and in the Commonwealth of Virginia to provide the educational services that our citizens need and deserve, each institution must carve out for itself a particular academic task which it then strives to accomplish exceptionally well. If we do this at William and Mary, as a community, we will not only survive the pressures that may be upon us to be something other than what we are and can do well, but we shall, more importantly, make a special and invaluable educational contribution to Virginia and to the country, as a unique institution of higher education. I have an idea that each of us is here because we sense that William and Mary is special and unique. I am."

On Its Character:

"I have tried to describe William and Mary as an academic institution, as a college, as a university, and as a state institution. Let me simply add that I also see the College as one having a national character. I suspect that this is why most of us, from in state and out of state, are here. It is national, I believe, in the resources it draws on—its faculty, its students and increasingly I hope, its financial strength. And it is national, I trust, in the contributions it makes, both as an institution and through its alumni. Through William and Mary's national character, the Commonwealth of Virginia benefits many-fold."

On the Role of Alumni:

"There are over 20,000 living alumni of William and Mary. As I stated at my first meeting with an alumni group of the College this past summer in Boston, "the success of the College of William and Mary is measured through the lives of its alumni—the contributions they make, the satisfactions they feel, the quality of their lives. The common good of society is a reflection of the quality of life of its members. William and Mary, through its alumni, individually and collectively, has as its mission the promotion of that common good."

"This is another way of describing the mission of a liberal or liberating education, for only through such experiences can one appreciate and contribute to the common good. As Archbishop Temple of England said many years ago when surprise was expressed at the success in after-life of a man, who as a boy at Rugby had been somewhat undistinguished, "It is not what they are at eighteen, it is what they become afterwards that matters."

"Our whole purpose here has to do with what you who are students become as alumni—and the quality of your lives."

About the Students:

"We have approximately 4,000 students here. I hope that each of you is here because you are motivated and committed to be fully involved in the excitement and discovery of an academic adventure. Many others have been turned away so that you could take your place at William and Mary.

"In order that you may feel that involvement that I believe is so important, I want you to be and feel that you are full partners in this educational community. I intend to treat you as responsible and mature individuals and citizens of high personal standards, capable of sharing fully in the governance of your own lives. I must assume that this is what you are and this is how you plan to conduct your own lives. As President John Logan of Hollins College in Virginia stated this past July, "sound personal standards are, after all, the ultimate determinant of all right conduct."

"I would hope that all of us will work on the assumption that "each member of the campus, (including students, faculty, administration and Visitors), has the right to organize his or her personal life and behavior, so long as it does not violate the law or agreements voluntarily entered into, and does not interfere with the rights of others or the educational process." I have just quoted from a Model Bill of Rights and Responsibilities prepared by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, which I shall refer to again in a moment. Let me simply say now that I want each of you as students to be involved in and share in the decisions which affect your lives here, both academically and socially, mindful of the rights and responsibilities of others and the primary reason for your being here. I want you to have full citizenship in this community, in terms of both your rights and responsibilities, for in this way I hope you will like it here as students—which is why you came in the first place."

Jackie Sivertsen '72 gets Homecoming Crown from new President.

The Faculty:

"The faculty of William and Mary make all the difference. It is their zest for the teaching-learning process and for research, their sense of excitement and adventure in working with ideas and young people in encouraging learning for today and tomorrow, their dedication and caring for the individual student's development, that will allow us to use the superb resources that are our heritage, in raising the College to new, high levels of excellence. I hope that you who are faculty members young and old, may be innovative and flexible in searching out new ways to motivate the students to like it here as students, new ways to provide them with an academic experience that is relevant for today and tomorrow. I hope you will work together and creatively across schools, departments and disciplines in this search. I hope that in this search you will not feel inhibited by any academic traditions or educational dogmas in regard to the form and substance of curricula and calendar. You have the major responsibility for educational policy and practice—for the role of educational leadership that I want this College to play. As my friend Whitehead said, "imagination is a contagious disease."

The Administration:

"The administration is here, I suggest, simply to do everything possible to help create an environment that will allow students and teachers to do their thing under the most favorable circumstances. Our task in the administration is to provide direction, support, and resources to the educational effort, to allow teaching and learning to take place. Let me emphasize that with careful planning, involving efficient and effective use of educational resources—which must be the responsibility of each and every one of us—I believe that we can strive toward excellence and still keep costs down to a reasonable minimum. So far I have had an opportunity to get to know members of the administration best, and as most of you already know, William and Mary is fortunate indeed."

The President:

"I hope you will find me accessible, visible and approachable, consistent in behavior and flexible in ideas. I hope that I may serve as a bridge, a communicator and at times a catalyst—to you, through you and for you. I shall try to encourage unanimity of understanding, if not always unanimity of agreement. At the same time, I think you will find that I shall be delegating operating and day-to-day decisions to where they belong—to the able administrators, faculty and students who make up this community. In delegating, however, I recognize that the ball stops with the president in most instances, and I know that there will be many occasions when the president must make the final decisions, however difficult and tough they may be. I shall remain responsible, in the final analysis, to the Board of Visitors, for the health of the College."

The Community:

"I have been talking about individuals and groups. To me, it is essential that they come together as a voluntary association called the William and Mary community, working together toward a common academic purpose. If they do, if we do, this College will indeed be a special and unique institution. I hope that we may explore new ways in which together we may combine our resources and strengths as groups and individuals toward more effective governance of and more effective communication within this community.

"In placing emphasis upon William and Mary as a community, let me suggest that we may also wish to define, clarify and articulate our rights and responsibilities as members of that community. I hope that we may focus our attention on rights and responsibilities rather than on powers and privileges or prerogatives, on policies and procedures rather than on rules and regulations, on freedoms rather than on license. I hope that we shall not talk about your rights and my responsibilities but rather about our rights and responsibilities as citizens, our rights and responsibilities as members of this particular academic community, the rights and responsibilities of the College itself, and the procedures we follow if those rights and responsibilities are violated. In this way, I believe, we may protect and advance the individual freedoms and the academic freedom that are essential to the good health of William and Mary as an academic institution."

Special Concerns:

"I said earlier that I was not in favor of the homogenization of higher education. More specifically and positively, I am in favor of diversity, consistent with high quality, within an institution such as William and Mary, in both faculty and students. I hope, for example, that we may take affirmative action, with imagination and resourcefulness, to encourage and attract to the College well-qualified students and faculty of minority backgrounds. All of us at the College, in the state and in the nation will benefit, and William and Mary will have taken a further step forward in promoting the common good.

"Finally, in regard to quality of life, let me express my own personal conviction that high quality of education in a university such as William and Mary takes place best in an environment in which there is a high quality of life and living. While we are very fortunate here in our physical and material resources, I believe that we can and should improve some of the living conditions and conditions of work at the College, and also devote further attention to the problems of the environment on campus. Each of us will need to take his or her share of responsibility for the success of this effort."

The College

Student publications and the campus radio station were placed this fall under a new Publications Council responsible directly to the college president.

Among the members is one person appointed on recommendation of the Society of the Alumni to involve off-campus interests in student publications policies. The appointee is Hugh DeSamper, '51. The Council will also include four students, two faculty members and two members of the administration.

President Graves established the new Council on the basis of recommendations made in June by a special committee which studied the status of the Flat Hat, the student newspaper. The special committee was appointed by former President Davis Y. Paschall after a controversy over the use of allegedly obscene language in the newspaper last February.

The new Publications Council has, as one of its responsibilities, the task of reviewing all existing student media in order to determine whether they should continue to receive allocations from the mandatory student fee or other College-related sources.

Formerly, student publications came under the jurisdiction of a publications committee of the Board of Student Affairs (BSA).

The BSA, which included a number of student leaders, faculty and administrators appointed by various groups on the campus, was involved in a variety of student-related matters.

The campus radio station was responsible to a faculty radio-television committee for guidance.

Among those from whom President Graves sought nominations was a special student panel which included the editors of the student publications, the student director of the campus radio station, and the president of the student government.

The Publications Council is to "serve as the formal entity, or agency responsible to the President . . . through which the College of William and Mary fosters creativity and communications by supporting student-operated publications with funds and other resources."

It has the authority to oversee the funds and resources which are available to the student media, and to establish standards and policies to insure editorial freedom of expression and adherence to "canons of responsible journalism, which include sincerity, truthfulness, accuracy, impartiality, fair play and good taste."

It also has the authority to appoint editors and other managerial officials, as well as to discipline them for breach of applicable standards and requirements. The Council is also expected to make advisory services available to the media in various areas.

Selby Named Graduate Dean

Dr. John E. Selby, professor of history, has been appointed Dean of Graduate Studies of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Selby, who holds degrees from Harvard College and Brown University, is a native of Boston. He taught for several years at the University of Oregon prior to becoming Assistant Director of Research for Colonial Williamsburg in 1961.

He joined the William and Mary faculty on a part-time basis in 1963 and has been a full time member of the faculty since 1968. He is a specialist in American colonial history and economic history.

Fourth Reading Program Starts

"Liberty and Liberation" is the topic for the fourth annual College-Wide Reading Program this fall.

Among the speakers who are visiting the campus as part of the year-long program, is Dr. Samuel Keen, whose book "To A Dancing God," is one of five selected for study. Dr. Keen is professor of the philosophy of the person at the Center for the Personality at Prescott College, an experimental college in Prescott, Ariz., Roy Innis, director of the Congress of Racial Equality, also spoke.

Other books to be studied this year include "On Liberty" by John Stuart Mill, "Law, Liberty and Morality," by L. A. Hart, "The Autobiography of Malcolm X," and "Masculine/Feminine," edited by Betty and Theodor Roszak.

College Opens Unique Greenhouse

The College has a "penthouse" greenhouse which is unique in several ways.

Situated atop John Millington Hall, the life sciences building built in 1968, the greenhouse features an unusual architectural design, special glass, and automated control systems.

The greenhouse was designed by architects Wright, Jones, and Wilkerson, of Richmond, with features which are aesthetically pleasing without sacrificing function.

Sloping "A" roofs, formed of glass panes in the shape of unequilateral triangles, contribute to the striking appearance of the greenhouse. The sloped sides of these roofs have a double purpose. They allow condensation which forms on the inside wall to run off without dripping, and protect the outer greenhouse surface from the elements, according to Dr. Martin C. Mathes, associate professor of biology, and a member of the departmental greenhouse committee.

The laminated double-strength glass which protects the greenhouse plants is made of Solex, which is normally manufactured for use in buses. It is being used as greenhouse glass for the first time at William and Mary. The glass keeps out excessive heat, making unnecessary the whitewash or shielding often seen on greenhouses in the summertime, and yet not blocking out beneficial light. This safety glass remains watertight in the case of glass crackage.

In addition to the shelter provided by the glass, the greenhouse provides for its plants three automatic "watchdog" devices, which are pneumatically and electrically interlocked to assure their operation at the correct times. In the event of bad weather, an automatic weather indicator, which is sensitive to wind and rain, closes the glass vents. In hot weather, an automatic temperature-sensitive device turns on an evaporator cooler; in cold weather, it cuts on radiator heat. A section of the greenhouse lighting is controlled by two automatic time clocks, which make it possible to extend the length of the day inside the greenhouse.

"This option is especially helpful on short winter days, when more daylight is needed," says Dr. Mathes.

The neon-like glow of the greenhouse, an unusual sight in Williamsburg, is not a conventional fluorescent light, but "gro-lux," which makes the plants grow luxuriously while at the same time protecting them from excessive heat. The light, which appears purple to human eyes, combines both the red and blue wavelengths of light, which are necessary for plant photosynthesis.

A penthouse location is always popular, but biologists whose plants require a large amount of sunlight have special reason to praise the location of the present greenhouse. Dr. Stewart Ware, assistant professor of biology, is one research scientist who found that, in the older ground-level greenhouse, his plant experiments were hampered by shade from surrounding trees.

Since the greenhouse is now situated on top of the biology building, the shade problem has been eliminated, believes Dr. Mathes, who added, with a smile, "unless a skyscraper is built nearby." A skyscraper in Williamsburg is not considered to be a likely possibility in the near future.

Despite water hosing and humid air, the ceilings of the rooms on the floor beneath the greenhouse remain completely dry. Credit for this goes to the water-proofed greenhouse floor, which is covered with many layers of a plastic-like waterproofing substance.

With its automatic devices and expanded amount of usable space for plants, the greenhouse will be an aide to classroom work, and will make possible more biology experiments and laboratory work.

New plants and rocks are being placed in the greenhouse for the first open house, which is planned for this fall. Included among the unusual plants in the greenhouse are "babytoes," "baseball plants," "living rocks," and "tiger jaws," all of which names are descriptive of the appearances of the plants. The greenhouse also boasts a night-blooming cactus, a Venus flytrap, and various poisonous plants. Dr. Gustav W. Hall, associate professor of biology, has added a collection of ferns for classroom use.

Rocks, which provide a moist habitat for plants such as lichens, have been added to the waterfall in the tropical room, which is one of the two special rooms enclosed within the larger area of the greenhouse. Continuing the idea of combining the useful with the beautiful, the waterfall, which empties into a pool, provides aeration for the water by flowing over a series of cascades. In this tropical room are controls which provide high humidity for the growth of plants such as orchids and bromeliads, a type of pineapple-related plant. The other special room is the terrarium, which provides a natural environment for the use of small animals, including snakes, turtles, and frogs.

CW Shows Freshmen Its Other Face

For many years, freshmen have received a cordial colonial welcome from the College's good neighbor, Colonial Williamsburg. An early part of the orientation program has featured a night in the historic area of town to watch costumed performers and the fifes and drums.

The thousand or more new students this fall were also welcomed with a festive night on the town, but it was considerably different than years past.

A modern rock group, "The Family of Man," performed from a platform at one edge of the magnificent Governor's Palace garden, while the fifes and drums paraded in another area. Costumed hostesses conducted tours of the Palace itself and rich pastries and punch were served up from several tables along the walks. Finally, a fireworks salute to the newcomers exploded in the air.

It proved that Colonial Williamsburg is "with it," even though it's decidedly 18th century.

WILLIAM F. SWINDLER

EVEN BEFORE he graduated from Washington University of St. Louis in 1935, Bill Swindler had set the pattern of his life. Besides studying for a degree in pre-law, he took a part-time job with a local newspaper. There have been few times since 1935 that he has not been pursuing at least two jobs at the same time. But for a man who has published nine books since 1947, earned five degrees, including a PhD and an LL.B., served as an editorial writer, the dean of two journalism schools and as a director of development and professor of journalism or law at four different institutions, a certain amount of overtime was inevitably required.

Dr. Swindler's life is more settled now as a professor of law at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law at the College of William and Mary where he has been for the past decade and a half. But his flurry of activity has by no means decreased. Within the next three years, he will publish the result of some three decades of research: a 10-volume collection of the constitutional documents on each of the 50 states. The project, which will appear under the series title of "Sources and Documents of U. S. Constitutions," is the definitive study of all of the state constitutions in the United States.

The study of the state constitutions comes on the heels of three other scholarly works on the history of the nation's constitution. He published "The Old Legality, 1889-1932," in 1969; "The New Legality, 1932-68," in 1970; and the third work of the series, "The Constitution of the United States: A 20th Century Interpretation," in 1971. "Justice in the States," a collection of papers from the National Conference on the Judiciary,

Swindler Becomes Major Authority In Legal History

By S. DEAN OLSON

which Dr. Swindler edited, will appear later this year.

Such an enormous proliferation of scholarship would keep any ordinary scholar busy full-time, but Dr. Swindler has carried a full load of teaching since he joined the law school faculty in 1965. In addition, he served as a general counsel to the Virginia Commission on Constitutional revision and as primary organizer of the National Conference on the Judiciary which President Nixon and Chief Justice Burger both attended in Williamsburg earlier this year. He is a consulting editor to the Papers of John Marshall and a member of the Chief Justice's Committee on Supreme Court Memorabilia.

The father of two teenage children, Dr. Swindler claims he practices "selective neglect" in organizing his frantic schedule. "You can't do everything you would like to do so you have to put some things first, and you can't let other demands interfere with your regular work," he says. "You have to work afternoons, evenings and weekends."

Swindler has probably practiced that schedule since he graduated from high school and entered Washington University on a pre-law scholarship during the 1930s. He had to forsake law when his scholarship was ended because of the depression, and he was forced to "get out and make a living." Luckily, however, some money came through from the National Youth Administration to help him through school, and he was able to enter the University of Missouri as a graduate student in journalism after he left Washington University. After receiving his degree, which was heavily based in economics, political science, and history, the St. Louis Star-Times plucked him from the Missouri campus at the age of 23 and offered him a full-time job as an editorial writer.

Swindler spent only two years at the newspaper, but the experience had a lasting effect on his career. His colleague on the editorial page was Irving Brant, a distinguished authority on the Constitution who was about to begin his monumental six-volume study on James Madison. With a latent interest in law and Brant's influence, Swindler frame of reference turned toward the Constitution, particularly the state constitutions which had been so woefully neglected. Although intensive research on the state constitutions did not begin until 1956, he has been collecting notes on his 10-volume study since he met Brant in the 1930s. Ironically, both Brant and Swindler have the same publisher today: Bobbs Merrill.

After serving on the St. Louis Star-Times, Swindler took a job as an instructor in journalism at the University of Missouri. Pursuing his normal pattern, he served as a special correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and began on his Ph.D. in political science and public law with minors in economics and history. Completing the course work in two years, he was offered an assistant professorship at the University of Idaho in the journalism department and moved out west in 1940. He had expected to be at Idaho for only two years, but two things happened: the war broke out and the chairman of the journalism department quit. Both events affected Swindler's life. He was named by the Federal Government as the director of the U. S. Office of Censorship for the Pacific Northwest District (a part-time job which paid a dollar a year), and the University appointed him to the chairmanship of the journalism department.

As a former newspaperman, Swindler served as more of a persuader than a censor. When the government delineated events it hoped newspapers would not print, Swindler was informed, and it was his job to contact the editors and persuade them not to print the information. The technique was relatively successful. He remembers one particular incident—the floating by the Japanese of fire balloons over on the Japanese Current in the hope that they would set fires. Swindler persuaded the newspapers not to report on the balloons so that the Japanese would not know whether their efforts were successful. After three months, the balloons stopped coming.

Swindler left Idaho six years later when he was offered the Deanship at the University of Nebraska School of Journalism. He served in that position for ten years, publishing a textbook on "Problems of Law in Journalism," and presiding over the growth of the journalism school from 100 to 300.

As much as he loved journalism, however, Swindler was still very much interested in the legal profession. In 1956, he decided to resign the deanship and enter law school, combining his interest in constitutional law and affinity for law in general with his background in journalism and legal history. "I realized I wanted to go into law rather than stay in journalism," he remembers, "and I had about reached a peak in journalism."

During the next two years he not only studied for his law degree but served as a part-time teacher in journalism and as a part-time editorial writer for the local Lincoln, Neb., newspaper. During his legal studies, he had met a former William and Mary professor, Frederick Beutel, who suggested that he write William and Mary about a position on its faculty. Since William and Mary offered a strong tradition of contributing to constitutional growth in America and an ideal location for constitutional research, with its accessibility to documentary sources in Washington, Swindler found the idea most appealing. He wrote the College, and asked them if they could use a man with his background. The then president of the College, Admiral Alvin Chandler, responded that indeed William and Mary could—but as director of development rather than in the law school since there were no openings at the time. Swindler accepted the offer: he came to William and Mary as director of development, with faculty status as a full professor of law with the understanding that he would move to the law school as soon as there was an opening. With the change in presidents in 1960, it took seven years to get to the law school, but the delay did nothing to diminish his penchant for research. He continued in his spare time to collect material for his study on state constitutions and published in 1965 a book on the Magna Carta. In 1968, he brought out a high school version of the same book.

The Alumni

Homecoming 1971 was, with the exception of the weather, an outstanding success. On the other hand, a steady rain—worst Homecoming weather in local memory—cancelled the Homecoming parade, the class picnics and kept Cary Field only partly filled.

What the weather took away from Homecoming was made up by the spirit of 4,000 returning alumni. Among new features was a Saturday morning open house-breakfast for early risers at the President's House, hosted by President and Mrs. Graves. Some 400 attended the affair, which will be repeated next fall.

The William and Mary Indians turned back Virginia Military Institute 12-7 in a close, muddy football game—pushing William and Mary to its best Southern Conference record in history: 4-0.

Two incumbents and three new members were elected to the Board of Directors of the Alumni Society—Jane Harden Hanson '42 and Glen E. McCaskey '63 were re-elected, while Dan H. Edmondson '38, William L. Person '24 and John F. Morton '58 were newly chosen.

Alumni Medallions were presented to Dr. J. T. Baldwin '32, on the College faculty; Earl B. Broadwater '18 of Roanoke; William W. Cowles '26 of Boston, Mass.; Dr. Janet Coleman Kimbrough '21 of Williamsburg; Judge Gregory G. Lagakos '35 of Philadelphia and Walter J. Zable '37 of Rancho Santa Fe, Calif.

RONNIE BARNES

Ronnie Barnes, class of '52, passed through Williamsburg recently, and his homecoming illustrated that a graduate of an institution renowned for its 18th century traditions doesn't necessarily live in the past. Ron, in fact, is a futuristic educator who has been in the forefront of a movement in America to re-tool the educational system to twentieth—and twenty-first—century demands.

A physical education major who came to William and Mary partly as a recruit for Sharvey Umbeck's great tennis teams of the forties, Barnes set out to pursue a coaching career. After a tour of service in Korea and marriage to his college sweetheart, Betsy Skinker of Roanoke, he discovered at the University of Colorado that his intent was correct but his orientation wrong. Indeed, he wanted to work with young people, but after earning his masters' degree in physical education he switched to higher education administration for his doctorate. His studies—along with counseling in a dormitory—crystalized his real intent, which was to work with students, but he felt he could do much more in higher education than in coaching.

Barnes worked for awhile in the student affairs office at Colorado and then moved to the Iowa State University in student affairs in 1961. At both schools, he taught higher educational administration, and the combination of the two fields—student affairs and higher education studies—channeled his energies into the creative pattern that has marked his career to date.

Barnes found the right outlet for his creativity at the University of North Dakota where he moved in 1966. He had the title of vice-president for student affairs, but that position proved secondary to his real impact on the school. As a consultant to a statewide study on how to modernize North Dakota's educational system, which was woefully inadequate, he developed and served as the first director of the University of Dakota's renowned New School of Behavioral Studies in Education, which was featured in Charles Silberman's book "Crisis in the Classroom." The school developed a totally new teacher training program which brought teachers back to the University of North Dakota to teach them new ways to relate to students.

Developing the school proved as much of a learning process for Barnes as it was for the students who would study there. Traveling the country, talking with innovators in the field of education, he realized that his "identity as an educator and self-esteem as a person would have to be related to the development of new educational models." Dealing with the realities of how to reach a "learning society," he remembers, "provoked me to begin dealing with totally different learning-centered approaches and goals."

Barnes, who is interested in the creativity aspect rather than the management aspect of education, left the school after it had been organized and moved to Arizona as vice-president for student affairs at Prescott College, a four-year liberal arts school which ranks as one of the nation's most innovative institutions of higher learning. Again the title of his position was no measure of the impact he had on Prescott College. Only three years old and organized around the concept of four centers of learning, Prescott put Barnes to work organizing a fifth center—the "Center for the Person." The mission of the center is a large one: in Barnes' words, to assist the student to better understand himself and others in the world about him and in the world of the future. The approach of the center is based upon the experience of the students, and most courses are designed by the students themselves. "The center deals with the whole pattern of alternative life styles," Barnes says, "and ways a person should learn if he is to be able to adapt and be open to the increasing complexities of our technological society."

A man of perpetual creative motion, Barnes stayed at Prescott College only until he felt his work had been completed. In July, he accepted the dual role of coordinator of educational planning for the Minnesota Experimental City and professor of experimental studies at Mankato State College. Barnes' job is to organize the educational program of the Experimental City, and part of the prospectus of the City indicates the challenge ahead:

"We can all agree that present cities need to be renewed and restructured, but we must go beyond that single goal and develop new and attractive alternatives to present patterns. MXC [Minnesota Experimental City] is one such alternative. It will demonstrate the best ways for improving existing cities and lead the way to understanding how to create the new cities which are considered essential for balanced national development.

"... In reality, ... we are dealing with the essential 'humanness' of life. We are dealing with people—their lives, their emotions, their spiritual and material well-being."

Barnes' educational philosophy is ideally tailored to deal with that challenge. He believes that technological advancement has outstripped our educational system. "First," he says, "we have to break down the equation that education equals schooling and that learning equals a classroom plus a teacher plus a textbook.

"The complexities and enormous changes taking place in society are outrunning our abilities to cope with and adapt to them as persons. It's possible that our educational system is becoming less relevant and responsive to changes in our society, and consequently, education today is less helpful than a generation ago."

Learning must be more broadly defined, Barnes contends. We must move from an institution-centered, teacher-centered, subject-centered approach to a learner-based approach.

"In other words," he adds, "we have to put man back into the center of the process rather than subjects."

Barnes sees a system where learning will be continuous, where students will drop in and drop out, learning what they need when they need to know it. Community and world oriented, person and human centered, the new education will recognize that cramming a student's head full of facts and data in the mistaken notion that he will retain them is less important than assisting him in finding and coping with knowledge.

In Barnes' view, this means not just looking at our educational system, but re-tooling, re-structuring, and re-orienting the system. He feels educators have not done a good job in illustrating the need for change, but he remains hopeful that the challenge can be accomplished.

Leeds '56 Guides New Program

The educational innovation that is so well articulated by Ronnie Barnes has found practical expression in a college run by another William and Mary graduate, Clarence W. "Bud" Leeds, '56. Leeds is the chief executive officer and dean of the faculty of Simon's Rock College in Great Barrington, Mass., a college that a prominent book on education calls "the most important venture in American education."

Leeds himself calls Simon's Rock "a little hard to understand." Dedicated to the thesis that 16-year-olds are ready for college studies and campus life, Simon's Rock was founded in the mid-Sixties by Mrs. Elizabeth B. Hall. The college accepts students after their sophomore year in high school, offers them an innovative and exciting curriculum that leads to an associate in arts degree after four years, and allows them to sit on policy-making committees that not only chart the course of the curriculum, but shape the long-range planning of the college itself.

Leeds says the school tries to turn on students who have been turned off by the duplication and irrelevance of much of higher education. Simon's Rock takes students at a time when, Leeds says, "we feel they are ready to enter college life." As a result, the college attracts some of the very brightest young minds in New England's prep schools, and it keeps them interested by a challenging faculty of cross-disciplinary competence who, by and large, see themselves as co-learners with the students. With an academic term based on a 4-1-4 system, Simon's Rock sponsors a number of independent projects between the major terms that allow students to travel and do research all over the world.

By most any measure, Simon's Rock is a unique experiment in American education.

A math major at William and Mary, Leeds came to Simon's Rock in 1968 after a distinguished career in a number of prep schools and as an international consultant on progressive education. After he graduated from William and Mary, he taught briefly at Kent School in Connecticut before he was drafted in 1956. When he was discharged in 1958, he took a job with Pinecrest Prep School in Fort Lauderdale and continued graduate studies during the summer at Columbia University. In 1959, he accepted a job as chairman of the math department at Berkshire Prep School in Sheffield, Mass., and during the next nine years, he forged a reputation as an author, innovator and leader in a number of professional societies. He spent six of his summers at Stanford University during which time he contributed to nine books on calculus and analysis that were published for high school seniors through college sophomores by Houghton-Mifflin and Yale University Press.

Leeds spent two summers in India as a consultant for the Agency for International Development (AID) and for the National Science Foundation, teaching math to teachers at Banaras Hindu University and Kurukshetra University.

The year before he accepted the Simon's Rock position, Leeds served as a consultant to the Department of Education at Stanford University. The position required a good deal of travel around the country, and it provided Leeds with an opportunity to survey education in general. When he was offered the Simon's Rock position, he accepted with a great deal of enthusiasm. "It was quite simply," he says, "the most exciting venture in American Education that I could see at the time."

Three years on the job have done nothing to change Leeds' mind. With an enrollment of 230 that will eventually grow to a thousand, Simon's Rock enjoys a unique reputation that attracted employment inquires from a thousand individuals last year. Leeds interviewed 350 and hired 11 to the faculty. One of them was a Ph.D from M.I.T. who can and does teach psychology, mathematics, biology, and chemistry. Simon's Rock derives its name from a huge glacial outcropping on the 200-acre campus.

The concept, the college, the curriculum, and the faculty—all are unique at Simon's Rock. It's little wonder that the man who heads the operation considers himself the "luckiest man" in education today.

The nicest dividend of this job is getting letters from classmates I've lost touch with. This one was from Anita Rucker (Mrs. Leonard Cottrell) who I remember so vividly but have not seen since 1925! She and her husband are living in Chapel Hill, N. C. now and enjoying gardening. She says she is already making plans to be at Homecoming in 1975!

And very exciting news from "Tommy" Bland (Mrs. Addison Rothrock). She has been invited to attend the launching of Apollo 16. Her husband who died recently, was in on the planning of the Apollo program and she has been asked to attend in his honor. I hope she writes us all about it. She, too, says she is planning to be with us in '75!

CYMBALS

ARMONY IS important, regardless of its application. It is necessary in music, in color, in personal and business relations. At the Williamsburg Department Store, we believe in harmony of style, but we also believe that the well-dressed person stands out, like the sound of the cymbal stands out in an overture. If you always remember that your clothes never stop talking about you, we know you'll dress right, and that we'll be welcoming you to our many departments on a steady basis. And, we'll help you select some "cymbals" of clothing harmony that will make you stand out, whatever the occasion.

With many uncertain qualms I volunteered to serve for the time being as Secretary of our class of 1926. I feel someone closer to the local of the majority of our classmates would have a better opportunity to gain news of interest through chance meetings as well as through the mail.

Because I so enjoy the news from all the classes contemporary with ours and miss that of our own classmates, I do hope any of you who have interesting activities or experiences will jot them down and relay them to the "Gazette" through me so they may be shared.

In trying to find one of our women classmates to enjoy returning to reunion with I did hear from Sue Ferrat Welch.

She retired in June as one of the librarians in the Norfolk school system and is looking forward to doing all those things one dreams about through the years and other obligations.

Thomas Gayle formerly of Mathews, Va. retired to his old home there after many years of diplomatic service to his country.

Greetings to all of you. Today is a warm September day, but you will receive this in the December issue of the Gazette, so a happy holiday to each of you. If you have time, send me a Christmas card with some news of you on it. I'd truly like that.

I had a nice card from Annette Petersen Clark. She was interested to read in our column of classmates in and around Urbanna. She now lives near Deltaville, in Amburg. We have a lot to talk about, and I hope we can get together (we went to the same high school also).

Also a note from Payne Terry who started with us, was out a year and so actually graduated in 1928. He lives in Kinston, N. C., has a wife and son, worked in Personnel at the DuPont plant there until he retired in 1969. The same year he went with their local Community College working on a Manpower Development program. He enjoys it very much but says he may stop next summer. (He and his wife have recently had a 6 week tour of Europe.) Payne says he doesn't feel any older than he did 15 years ago— isn't that great? So many of the Class of '27 will want to see you, Payne—try to come back for Homecoming '72.

He was also appointed in September to a new term on the William and Mary Board of Visitors. Ed and his wife live in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. He served as national president of the fraternity from 1967 to 1971. Congratulations, Ed. Please write sometime!

Haven't heard from anyone else, but I'm hoping for a heap of news on Christmas cards. Once again, Merry Christmas to you!

A nice letter from Dr. Walter A. Porter of Hillsville, Virginia. Walter stated that for health reasons he retired from the general practice of medicine September 1, 1971, after 39¼ years. Walter further stated that he had talked with Floyd A. Gessford's widow who lives in Maryland near Washington, D. C. Also said that he had seen Clyde Smith in Hampton. By coincidence, I received a letter from Clyde today. Clyde said that he occasionally sees Bauman Mundie and Logan Hudson and that both have now retired. I was most pleased when Clyde mentioned that the Lower Peninsula Chapter is sponsoring a reception for Doctor Graves on September 30, 1971, at the Fort Monroe Officers' Club. I hope very much I can get down there for the reception. I am much impressed with Doctor Graves.

Also a letter from Marvin L. Crowder of Clarksville, Virginia. Marvin says he wants to go to the Homecoming game and plans to participate in the Alumni Golf Tournament. Irene Priddy Brown is traveling abroad this summer. I received a card mailed in Rio De Janeiro and also one from Cape Town. During the past few months I have heard from Harold (Doc) Glennery of Pottstown, PA, Donald and Katie Van Wormer of Bat Cave, NC, Ed Hill and Kittie Topping Hill of Plymouth, NC, J. Allen and Mary Cook of Silver Springs, MD, Livian E. Wimbish Newbill of Scottsburg, VA, and from Virginia Beirne of Rochell, VA.

I often see Rosser Massey who was a member of the Class of 1928 but transferred at the beginning of his junior year.

It is not surprising for us to find John in these positions of responsibility for in retrospect we find that he was President of the Honor Council and the Wranglers Club in his Junior and Senior years. He was a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, the Y.M.C.A. Cabinet, the Interfraternity Council and very active in the Literary Society and Intercollegiate Debating Council and Team. In a May issue of the Phoenix Republic we note the headline "Everybody toes line in Muecke's court." U. S. District Court Judge Carl A. Muecke of Phoenix has the reputation of being a no-nonsense jurist. While some judges allow lawyers delay after delay in trial dates and case loads get ever bigger, Muecke's court is a model of stern efficiency.

Muecke's law-and-order stance represents a curious metamorphosis. When he got a lifetime appointment to the federal bench in October, 1964, some lawyers were alarmed. He had been a labor organizer and liberal lawyer, and some thought he might be easy on criminals. It hasn't worked that way. Muecke is tough on dope peddlars and he regularly ignores ill-founded pleas for leniency by others convicted of crimes. And he has incurred the wrath of some lawyers by making them toe the line. Carl believes "Law and order simply means that everyone gets his constitutional rights, no matter who he is."

After graduation from William and Mary, U. S. Marine service with the O.S.S., and a stint as reporter for the Arizona Times, Carl decided to go to the University of Arizona law school at age 32. He emerged No. 2 in his class! He became involved with the liberal wing of the Democratic Party, became Maricopa County chairman to push John F. Kennedy for President, and was named U. S. attorney for Arizona in March 1961 after Kennedy won the White House. President Johnson named him a federal judge and he won Senate confirmation in 1964. Congratulations, Carl, for a fine and efficient job as U. S. District Court Judge.

And our hearty congratulations to another classmate. Climaxing a colorful military career that began thirty years ago, Colonel Jack L. Giannini, Director of Information for the Military Airlift Command, was awarded the first oak leaf cluster to the Legion of Merit in retirement ceremonies at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., on August 31, 1971.

The versatile colonel has served as a fighter pilot, staff judge advocate, squadron commander, plans officer and for the past 10 years has held public affairs positions at critical levels of trust.

Jack's career began in 1941 when he entered the Army Air Corps after graduating from the College of William and Mary. He received his pilot's wings in June 1942 and during World War II flew 96 missions as a fighter pilot in England, North Africa and Sicily and in the China-Burma-India theater. Later he attended Vanderbilt Law School, receiving a doctor of laws degree in 1948. Before being assigned to Military Airlift Command in the summer of 1968, Colonel Giannini served in Vietnam as chief of public information on the staff of General William Westmorland.

In his most recent post at Scott Air Force Base, Jack advised and assisted General Jack J. Catton on public affairs matters as they pertained to this world-wide command. During this time, Colonel Giannini also assisted in introducing the C-5 Galaxy, world's largest aircraft, into the command jet transport fleet. A command pilot, the colonel previously was awarded the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with oak leaf cluster, Air Medal with oak leaf cluster and the Air Force Commendation Medal with oak leaf cluster.

Jack, his wife Mary Ellen and son Roger tentatively plan to reside in the Belleville, Ill. area. Best wishes for a happy retirement.

Dorothy Lindquist Swan of Cleveland Heights, O. missed our 30th reunion in October because she was attending a Medical Seminar in Greece. She is still working with her physician husband. Their daughter has two sons and her husband is in the Army at Ft. Gordon, Ga.

the Getzen Company in Elkhorn, Wis. Through their publication, The Getzen Gazette, we learn that Harold has been greatly honored by the employees of this company on the occasion of his tenth anniversary with the firm. The company is engaged in the manufacturing of band instruments. One of the busiest of New York's professional trumpet players, Mr. Carl "Doc" Severinsen was named Vice President of the Getzen Company this past year, and the Gazette reports many other well-known musicians who are using Getzen instruments. As President and owner of the Company, Harold supervised its rebuilding after a disastrous fire in 1963 and started it on a new course, with the idea of making the finest quality instruments in the field.

Greetings from the Gentle City.

Joe and I found September to be a great time to visit Bermuda. We lucked out with four hurricanes circling the island, but just sunshine and blue skies were in evidence while we were there. We met a Bermuda family who had just put their eleven-year-old son on a plane for the States. He was entering Pingry, the school where Scotty Cunningham is headmaster.

Gene Kidd, President of the Baptist Hospital in Nashville, Tenn., has been re-elected for a full term to the Board of Governors of the American College of Hospital Administrators.

Suzanne Eppes Felchlin writes an interesting newsletter. She married in 1953 and went to live in Switzerland, her husband's native country. On June 6, 1971 the women of Switzerland were given the right to vote, and Suzy exercised her right after having been unable to vote for eighteen years. She and her family visited her relatives in Battle Creek, Mich. this summer.

Hope to get some more interesting mail for the next issue.

Hi Classmates! Just got back from our game with Davidson. Among the cheering alumni were the Buck Bradfords, Harry Barr, Pat Harpers, Warren Spratley, Betty Hicks Wagner and spouse, Jimmy and Marion Macon, and the Dixon Fosters. Nancy's news was that Billy Davison Cantlay's husband is Commanding General, 2d Armored Division stationed at Fort Hood.

Went to a tri-Delta leadership school in Colorado in June. I'm a new District President (District includes William and Mary). Saw Claire Brinley Berner. She is an Associate Director and has a DDD daughter at the College. Speaking of Pan Hel spirit, the Theta's are at our beach house this weekend for a retreat, among them is Jean Boyd McIntyre's Betsy.

At Sandbridge this summer were Bebe Nelson Judge and Ed. Also there were now owners Harrell and Jean Mcpherrin Morris. At Virginia Beach were Allen and Jerrie Healy Clay, still in Cincinnati. Ebie Berkeley Harrison and Bob are still in Philly.

Went to Dorie Wiprud Digg's Sarah's wedding in June in the Wren Chapel. Saw Ellie Harvey Rennie and Tom. Met Marvis Bunch's daughter, also a rising senior.

Ann Hitch Kilgore led the slate in Hampton City Council election, her sixth term, I believe. On my TV screen often are State Senator Hunter Andrews of Newport News and Pete Axon, Commonwealth Attorney of Chesapeake.

Bill Remick and his wife are part owners of a decorating shop here. Mildred Sheffield also is a decorator in Norfolk. Her husband, Russell Stanger, is Director of the Norfolk Symphony. Jane Craig Beaver and Bob still have Navy duty in Norfolk. Eleanor Rheuby Volonte is in Arlington. They have a daughter at Drew, studied in Switzerland last year. Son is a freshman at Virginia. Ellie is on the board of the Red Cross (Arlington).

Bill Morris of the College of Law at West Virginia University has had about thirty articles published in various professional journals and his first book will be published by Michie Company soon. Next summer he will teach at Gutenberg University, Heidelberg University and at the City University in London.

Suzy Parsons Cosgrove and Cliff have moved to Lake Forest, Ill. Living there also is Bill Baumann. Lois and Doug Donald celebrated their 25th anniversary in Hawaii. Douglas is at UNC—Diane perhaps at the College in 1972. Joan Kable Griffith's Mandy, a senior at Ashley Hall, is also a hopeful.

Mary Carver Sale of Pittsburgh writes that her daughter, Mary Quinn, was married to an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the College, Anthony L. Guenther.

Colonel Thomas J. Stevens, USMC for the past two years Commanding Officer of the Marine Barracks at Yokosuka, Japan, has been assigned to the Naval War College in Newport, R. I.

Robert W. Eastham has been made Vice President of the Bank of the Virgin Islands. For a number of years after leaving the Department of State he was with the First National City Bank in several posts in South America and the Carribean Islands.

Hope for lotsa news at Homecoming!

Greetings, classmates, and a special thank you to Dorothy Johnson Blom for the excellent job she so faithfully accomplished as class secretary. We are grateful to Dot as well as the other classmates who have served in this capacity. It isn't easy to follow in their footsteps. However, I'm looking forward to the opportunity and depending on your cooperation.

I recently visited Jeanne Schoenewolf Preston at Virginia Beach. The Preston family experienced three graduations last June. Their son Bill graduated from Norfolk Academy and is a student at Randolph Macon College. Daughter Merle graduated from William and Mary and is teaching socially disturbed children in New Jersey. Their oldest daughter Peggy Preston Fanney '69 and husband Rob are living in Hopewell following his graduation from V.P.I.

Jeanne and I attended a luncheon at Sunny Trumbo Williams' '44 Sandbridge Beach house late in the summer. Other William and Mary friends there were Jean Boyd McIntyre '44, Jane Craig Beaver '43, Jane Whitmore Whitmore '47, Nancy Outland Chandler, and Bebe Nelson Judge '44. Ed and Bebe were vacationing at Sandbridge.

Jeanne enjoyed a visit from Audry Hudgins Thompson when Aud was there visiting Virginia Beach friends in August. Their son Johnny is a senior at Randolph Macon College and has future plans for medical school. Another son has entered a Florida College this year. Other Virginia Beach news reveals that Martha Macklin Smith won a match with her sister in the State Amateur Women's Golf Tournament. Congratulations, Martha!

The Rev. John Paul Carter '44 reported a 100.9 mile hike down the Appalachian Trail with his son Andy, who is a freshman at Salisbury School, Salisbury, Conn. Jean Worstell Carter sends news concerning other members of the Carter family. Daughter Christie is a junior at William and Mary and Janet who graduated from Foxcroft is a freshman at the University of Virginia. Two of the Carter children are still at home.

From the Houston Chronicle, June 20, 1971, comes news of a western barbecue at the famous King Ranch in Texas, given in honor of a double wedding party by Louise Thomas Cooley and Dr. Denton Cooley. The occasion was for Europeans and Texans present for a Houston wedding. There was also a sketch of Louise dressed in the attractive ranch type outfit worn when she and Dr. Cooley entertained the international set.

Mildred Foster Lewis writes from Charleston, S. C., that husband Bill is an engineer with Armco Steel, Inc; she is a receptionist in a doctor's office, and they are proud grandparents. Their two oldest daughters are married. Gayle graduated from Furman University and Pam graduated with a B.S. degree in nursing from the University of South Carolina. Son Billy is a sophomore in college and their daughter Judy is a junior in high school. Mildred enjoyed a visit with Margery Sease Burrus when the Lewis family was in Williamsburg several months ago for an Engineers Convention.

Our son Tom is on the Staff at V.P.I. and in graduate school. Daughter Elizabeth is a student at the University of Rochester.

It would be just great to hear from you in the near future.

Charles is married and has four children. They live in West Hartford, Conn.

Tom Hubbard answered my plea of stand up and be counted. He and family moved to St. Petersburg, Fla. from Richmond about three years ago. They bought a great old house (he even sent me a picture) once owned by Babe Ruth and was told that Al Capone spent a great deal of time there. Anyway it looks fun. They are ready for anybody who happens to be in the St. Petersburg area. Tom's business is Life Insurance and he also has a small accounting company coupled with business management of a dozen or so doctors.

George Conwell is now Personnel Director for the Can Division of Reynolds Metals. George travels to the West coast, Houston, Tampa, Newark and Bristol. He and Diane '52 have four daughters the oldest of whom is 16. George mentioned that they had seen Nick Reams this past summer. He is with the Y.M.C.A. in Memphis, Tenn.

Howard W. Wiseman of Maplewood, N. J. is Curator of The New Jersey Historical Society.

A note from Carol Gardner Lorenz and Roy brings us up to date on them. In July of 1968, Roy was transferred to the Schilling Division of McCormick and Co., located in Salinas, Calif. He is now director of human relations for the division. They live in Carmel Valley which is near Salinas, Carmel, and Monterey. Their daughters, now 13 and 11, took to California immediately. Connie entered Carmel High as a freshman in September, and Debbie will be a seventh grader at the Carmel Middle School. Carol's brother Bud who graduated from the College in 1956, is now an internist in Springfield, Virginia, and lives in Annandale. He has two children, a girl, 9, and a boy, 7. Carol wished that she and Roy could be with us at Homecoming this year for our reunion, but their trips East have to be made during school vacations.

We received a card during the summer from Connie Carhart Michals '50 and Charles while they were on their month's vacation in Greece. I had a chat with them when they were back for Connie's 20th Reunion last year.

Jan Noyes MacLeod of Montchanin, Del., was appointed by the resident judge of her county to the Alexis I. duPont Board of Education. She has four children in her district's schools and is president of the Alexis I. duPont Middle School PTA. Jan has a master's degree in speech from Northwestern University; is a former member of the board of directors of the League of Women Voters; and is a member of the Wilmington Drama League and the Brandywiners, Ltd.

Nan Jones Hodges wrote that she and her family spent a month in Wales and England in June. She enjoyed showing her four sons the pleasures of London, and they explored Wales, her husband's country, from the point of view of living two weeks on a Welsh hill farm which had 1250 sheep. They spent one final weekend with Jack Morpurgo in Leeds. He is well into the research for his history of the College of William and Mary, and his discoveries on the early history of the College are fascinating according to Nan. If you remember, Nan was the student from our class to be chosen to attend Exeter, and the highlight of this trip for her was a luncheon reunion given for her by seven of her English classmates from Exeter.

While visiting this summer with some of our friends who moved from here to Charlottesville, we got to see Betty Cox Scott and John who looked great in spite of some games of their favorite sport of tennis before arriving at our friends' house. Betty is busy as a mother of four and will be the President of the Faculty Wives of the University of Virginia.

Our reservations at the Brick House Tavern, the headquarters for the Class of 1951, were confirmed this week, so Bev.

and I are anticipating a wonderful time seeing friends at our 20th Reunion at Homecoming. I plan to write about all of our class I see in the next issues. Hopefully it will take quite a few issues because I hope we will have many of you to return. However, I would like to hear from those of you who will be unable to return, because we will miss seeing you and the class wants to hear about you, too. Why not let me hear from you at Christmas or during the coming new year?

Ever-faithful Mary Jane Thomas Stokes wrote of their move to an 1840-built farmhouse in the French Huguenot area of Powhatan, Va. It sounds so picturesque.

So many thanks are sent to Bob and Betty Powell Squatriglia for their long and news-filled letter. Married in 1961, Betty and Bob have two children, Robby 5 and Beth 3. Bob was Assistant Dean of Men at the College from 1963 to 1967. After receiving a master's degree from the College, Bob worked at the Counseling Bureau in the Division of Student Affairs at South Carolina. In June of 1970 Bob was awarded his Ph.D., and a move was made to Brockport, N. Y. where he was Dean of Student Services at SUNY (a group of eleven four-year colleges in New York State) at Brockport. September of 1971 Bob assumed his latest position—that of Vice President of Student Affairs at the College in Brockport. Betty has been active in church and civic work and is expecting their third child.

Richard Snyder is teaching and coaching in Saddle Brook, N. J. and is married with one daughter.

Deno Baltas has been named administrative representatives in the claim department at the Washington, D. C. casualty and surety division office of Aetna Life & Casualty.

Jack White, with a Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina is now an associate professor at the University of Georgia.

Gloria Marr Gassman, the mother of four children, resides in Mt. Carmel, Inc.

The Squatriglias invite any William and Mary 1960 alumni to call on them while visiting the Rochester, N. Y., or Niagara Falls area.

My husband Pat is now aquatics coordinator and head football coach at Wilson High School in Bristol Township School District, Pa. Our older son, Pat Anthony, age 5, is now in his second year in Montessori School, and Lee Anthony is a wild two year old. My time is involved with the paper work of our investment real estate and our children's Montessori school, the Children's House of Bucks County. It is a parent-run corporation and I am registrar. With car pools to the Children's House and Pat's football weekends, life is full, exciting, and a bit wacky with our boys.

Please do write. I need your help to have a column.

by Parke Rouse, Jr.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, JAMESTOWN FOUNDATION

In this fascinating biography Parke Rouse portrays the conflicts, clashes, and triumph of James Blair, one of the two or three most powerful Virginia colonists of his generation.

Appointed the Virginia commissary to the Bishop of London in 1689, Blair became increasingly influential in the colony. As rector of Williamsburg's Bruton Parish, founder and long-time president of the College of William and Mary, counselor and acting governor, Blair became one of the pivotal figures in the colony.

This long-needed biography of Blair is an important chapter in the story of Virginia's emergence into greatness.

As most of you know from previous newsletters, Larry and Bonnie Hamlet White are living in the Canal Zone this year. Because they are so far away, Bonnie has asked me to write the class column until she returns next July. Dan and I have moved into the White's old apartment, so if the address seems familiar, it is! Please send your news to me this year, and I will see that it is published.

The Whites are thoroughly enjoying their new life in Panama. Bonnie is teaching, and Larry is an intern at the Gorgas Hospital near Panama City. They write glowing reports of the gorgeous countryside and of their many new experiences.

Missy Crowgey attended summer school at The University of North Carolina in Charlotte where she is working on her Master's degree in Guidance and Counseling. This fall she is teaching English and social studies while continuing to go to school at night.

Allan M. Brown and Randall T. Bell each was awarded a Juris Doctor Degree by the Harvard Law School in June 1971. Congratulations, Allan and Randy! Congratulations also to Roderick Merrill Coleman who received a Master of Science degree from East Tennessee University in August.

Janey Cooke Bembenista and Wally are still enjoying New York City. Janey is at Pratt Institute completing her Master's degree in City and Regional Planning. Wally is still working in the tax field and studying at N.Y.U. in the business administration program.

Jane Brower Terry and Luke have moved to Maryland. Jane received her M.D. in June and is doing a psychiatry internship. With Jane an intern and Luke a resident, they are staying busy.

Nancy McNairy Daugherty and Tom are living in a farmhouse in the Minnesota countryside. Tom is a surgery resident at Mayo, and Nancy is busy decorating their home and preparing for their baby to arrive in December.

Nonie Turville Waldo and her husband Danny have recently moved from Illinois to Maryland. Her husband recently completed his Master's degree in Civil Engineering and is now working in the new Walter Reed Hospital. Nonie had been working as an administrative assistant in a tax firm, but now she is spending her time decorating and taking care of their new house.

Al Louer has been chosen for inclusion in the 1971 edition of Outstanding Young Men of America. He was nominated by the William and Mary Alumni Association in recognition of his professional and community leadership. Congratulations, Al!

Rick Shelley was in Charlottesville this summer, working on the last stages of his Master's of Education degree.

Bob and Mary Stedman Johnson are in Williamsburg, enjoying their new home and their new son.

Dan and I moved from Houston to Charlottesville in June. He is an intern at the University of Virginia Hospital, and I am working part-time in the Children's Room of the public library. We enjoy being back in Virginia again and seeing many of our old friends.

This 45-pound satellite is changing the face of the earth

*If you want to know where it is—a meter or a world away—
Cubic has the system!*

CUBIC'S SECOR, the surveying satellite developed for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, keeps introducing changes in the cartographer's art. For example, the system places the Ryukyu Islands a half-mile southwest of where we thought they were. To make such discrete measurements, SECOR employs electronic trilateration. As the satellite makes its pass, signals bounce between its 7-pound transponder and 4 portable Cubic ground stations. When the data is correlated, one station, whose position is only generally known, is located with new precision.

Since 1964, the ground stations have leap-frogged across the Pacific toward Hawaii in the first part of a globe-girdling program. With each satellite pass, stations receive information from 10,000 data points—and tens of thousands of correlations are used for each distance measured. Trilateration is the key to a number of Cubic's significant systems developments. SECOR is more proof that if you want to know where it is—land, sea or space—Cubic has the system.
