The William and Mary Tandem

← It appears that a new priority has been written for William and Mary with the results of the November election in Virginia. For the first time in Commonwealth history, two William and Mary alumni occupy the top spots in Virginia government. Mills E. Godwin, who attended William and Mary in the mid-30s before going onto the University of Virginia for his law degree, was elected governor — the first man to be elected to that position twice. And John Dalton of Radford, a 1953 graduate, was elected lieutenant governor. Other William and Mary alumni did not fare so well in the November elections. Godwin defeated Henry Howell, who attended the Norfolk Division of William and Mary before it became Old Dominion University, and in New York City, Al Blumenthal, a 1949 graduate, ran on the Liberal ticket for mayor, but lost in an election won by the Democratic candidate. However, another individual connected closely with the College — Dr. George Grayson, an associate professor of government — won a seat in the Virginia House of Delegates from Virginia's 51st District.

Journalism Fraternity Revived

A tradition which lapsed at William and Mary in the Spring of 1971 has been revived with the reestablishment of a chapter of Pi Delta Epsilon, the national honorary journalism fraternity. Six senior students of the College who are currently involved with publications were initiated into the revitalized chapter in ceremonies held with the appropriate pomp and circumstance in the Great Hall of the Wren Building. The fraternity hopes to revive two popular events on campus — the publications forum and the publications annual spring — in addition to its primary mission of fostering interest in journalism and student publications. The chapter was revived this fall with the help of alumnus W. Wilford Kale, Williamsburg Bureau Chief for the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

William and Mary Calling

← Sunday, November 25, was "William and Mary Sunday" across the nation when 1,900 alumni volunteers began telephoning other alumni in their localities on behalf of the William and Mary Fund. The volunteers sought pledges toward the current Fund effort, to be paid by the end of the current fiscal year. The Fund is administered by the Office of College Development in association with the Society of the Alumni. Income will be allocated by the College for such purposes as student aid, faculty research, special projects related to the academic and student affairs program, in cases where State funds are insufficient or unavailable. By Nov. 15, the fund had raised $90,494 in cash received from 2054 donors, for an average contribution of $44.05.

Service to Virginia

Another indication of the many ways William and Mary contributes in a public service role to Virginia is offered by recent statistics from the School of Education. J. W. Sykes, director of teacher placement, noted that more than 62 percent of the teachers who graduated last June from William and Mary are teaching in Virginia. This percentage represents 138 graduates who are employed as elementary and secondary teachers in 35 school divisions in the state. Only 10 of the 1973 graduates are teaching outside of the state, while several are attending graduate schools or are employed in other fields. During the past academic year, recruiters from nearly 50 Virginia school systems visited the campus to interview prospective graduates for teaching positions.

Crossing Country

← In meets from Penn State to Pullman, Washington, the William and Mary cross-country team has run up the best record in College history. Culminating an unbeaten dual meet season by trouncing Penn State's cross-country team — rated the best in the East before running against the Indians — William and Mary went on to win its 12th consecutive State crown, an unprecedented 8th straight Southern Conference championship, and then qualified for the nationals in Washington state by winning the District III championship in competition that saw the Tribe defeat last year's national champ. For more on the cross-country team, see P. 5.

J. Ward Jones

College Names First Director of Security

In the newest of a series of moves to attack campus security problems, William and Mary has appointed a specially trained police officer as the College's first Director of Safety and Security.

William J. Carter, Vice President for Business Affairs, said that Harvey P. Gunson, 39, a seventeen-year veteran of the New York City Police Department force, will take the newly created post on January '2. In the meantime, however, Mr. Carter said, Mr. Gunson will make several visits to the campus to consult on security measures.

Gunson, who holds a bachelor's degree from the John Jay College of Criminal Justice of the City University of New York, was the unanimous choice of a student-faculty selection committee which participated in a nationwide search starting early in 1973.

Other efforts now underway to mount the attack on security problems include:

- Installation of mercury vapor lamps at key locations and floodlights at residence hall entrances and at the ends of these buildings, to increase night-time visibility and help prevent the danger of assault. The equipment, on order for several months, was ordered as an emergency measure despite the fact that no funds were budgeted for it.

- Employment of a secretary for the Security Office, and its relocation to

Chryslers Donate Art To College

The College of William and Mary's art collection has grown significantly with the recent addition of nineteenth and twentieth century paintings, sculpture and glass given by Mrs. Walter P. Chrysler, Jr., to the Jean Outland Chrysler collection of modern art at the College.

The gift of 49 paintings, six sculptures and five examples of Tiffany glass augments the collection of contemporary art established at the College in 1964 and expanded in 1967 through the generosity of Mrs. Chrysler, a member of the Class of '42.

larger quarters in the center of campus, in order to improve the force's operations.

- Upgrading of the Security Office's radio communications system, with some $2,500 in equipment awaiting delivery.

- Establishment of a volunteer student escort service, in conjunction with the campus Security Office, by the Student Association.

- Establishment of an SA-sponsored training program aimed at teaching students the techniques of self-defense, again in cooperation with the Security Office.

- Employment of several students to work as "plainsclothes" security staff members at night, to augment the regular security force. These auxiliary staff members have been on duty since the start of the fall semester.

Mr. Carter pointed to two requests before the 1974 General Assembly which, he said, have been given "top priority" by the College for its next budget.

The request has been made for five additional security officers to expand the existing strength to 20 fulltime officers.

In addition, the College has asked for $126,500 in capital outlay funds to completely revamp the campus' outdoor lighting system.

The budget requests are under review by the Governor's Budget Advisory Board and, if approved, would become part of the Governor's budget proposals for consideration by the 1974 General Assembly.

The new Director of Safety and Security, a native of Brooklyn, served in the Army in Korea prior to joining the New York Police Department in 1956.

In his new position, Gunson will be responsible to Carter for a continuous safety and security program including direction of the Security Force.

Part of his work will involve conducting safety training and inspections to insure that employees and supervisors on the campus are familiar with safety requirements. He will also direct investigations of alleged violations of the law, coordinating his work when appropriate with federal, state or city agencies.

Classics Retain Appeal at William and Mary

The Department of Classical Studies at William and Mary made the decision a few years ago — not long after Dr. J. Ward Jones assumed the chairmanship — that it would take the broadest possible approach to the teaching of the classics.

"We decided," says Dr. Jones, "that we should not be narrow linguistic experts interested only in the declension of nouns and the conjugation of verbs, but rather that we should be interpreters of the Greco-Roman Civilization to the College community and specifically that we should make it our business to show the importance and relevance of this civilization."

The result has been only slightly short of phenomenal. The Department has 22 concentrators in Classical Civilization, studying in the areas of either ancient history, classical art and archaeology, or classical philosophy. And from a faculty of four plus one part-time member, over 450 students are enrolled in courses offered by Classical Studies.

"When I came to William and Mary," says Dr. Jones, "I wanted two things — an institution with a classical tradition and a good number of able and committed students. I have not been disappointed on either count."

Dr. Jones fits in the mold of a long line of distinguished professors who have occupied the chairmanship of the Department of Classical Studies — a chair that was one of the six original of the College.

Like such professors as George Ryan and A.P. Wagener before him, Dr. Jones has a complete commitment to the classics that goes back to his sophomore year in high school. Enrolled in a vocational curriculum, he decided to take an additional subject instead of a study hall and selected Latin. The decision changed his whole life. In the next two years, representing his Fredericksburg school, he won the Classical Latin Tournament of Virginia, which was sponsored by the Classical Association of Virginia. The tournament's father was A.P. Wagener, who honored Jones with a book and honorary membership in the William and Mary chapter of a national honorary classical fraternity.

Jones had no hope of going to college because of his poor circumstances, but he did so well in high school and so distinguished himself that he won four different scholarships which allowed him to earn a degree in the classics from the University of Richmond. After two years in the Army — during which he read Homer in Greek — he entered the University of North Carolina, earned his masters and Ph.D. from 1955-59, and married a colleague in graduate school who received her Ph.D. in the classics the same year he did.

In 1959, Jones went to Ohio State where he taught for two years. He was not completely happy there, however, and when he was approached about an opening at William and Mary, and after he had verified in conversations with former president Davis Y. Paschall and other administrative officers the College's commitment to the classics, he came to William and Mary in 1962.

Dr. Jones joined a two man department — he taught all of the Latin courses and Dr. Ryan taught the Greek courses. The faculty has since grown to four members in addition to one part-time member — a staff Jones calls "Young and energetic." "We have a superb staff of young professors," he says, "and we share the same basic educational philosophy — and we all like each other as well."

The students apparently like what the faculty has to say and their approach to the classics. To concentrate in classical civilization, a student need not be a linguistic whiz. Greek and Latin literature, for instance, are taught in English translation, making them comprehensible to all students.

"We appreciate the importance of tradition at William and Mary," says Dr. Jones, "but we have not been bound by tradition. We have been innovative and kept up with the times."

In modern educational philosophy, where classics on occasion are considered irrelevant and out of date, Dr. Jones is in the enviable position of never having had to defend their value at William and Mary.

"We have had support from the Administration and we never have had trouble attracting students. No one has ever needed to tell our students the importance of the classics," he says.

This may be one reason why Dr. Jones regards the William and Mary students so highly.

"I don't know that there is anything in the world I would take for the William and Mary student," he says. "Of all of the attractions at William and Mary, none is more inspiring than our students."

Successful Careers

The Interesting Lives of Some Faculty Wives

To the traditional male, the plight of Dr. J. Ward Jones, chairman of the Department of Classical Studies, may not seem an enviable one. He has a wife who is as smart as he is.

"A linguistic phenomenon," Jones calls his wife Elizabeth, who knows seven languages and received her Ph.D. in classical studies the same year he did from the University of North Carolina.

Shirley Jones

Jones and his wife, in addition to raising two children, are working together on a book on the Latin poet Virgil. While he teaches at William and Mary, Mrs. Jones pursues a full-time career as well — as an associate professor of classical studies at Christopher Newport College in Newport News.

"It is not an easy life," says Dr. Jones, "but it is the solution that has evolved for us."

The Jones are not typical, but neither are they unique in a William and Mary community that includes many faculty wives who are pursuing successful careers in their own right. Like their husbands, the wives are a varied group: they include those who began careers after their children were grown, those who pursued careers in the home while their children were growing up and then expanded them beyond the home, and those who combine homemaking with careers. And of course there are many faculty wives who continue to pursue one of the most difficult careers of all — that of a full-time housewife.

The stories of a few, picked at random and from various areas of the College, follows:

Shirley Jones says her husband is of the old school. For most of their 22-year marriage Gilbert C. Jones, an associate professor in the School of Business Administration at William and Mary, didn't want his wife to work, so she didn't.

In 1969, however, after their daughter had gone off to college, Shirley told her husband she had no intention of sitting around the house and getting bored. She asked him to suggest a possible career, and since the Jones' had traveled widely during his 20 years in the military service, he suggested the travel business.

Shirley caught onto the business and liked it more than probably even her husband had anticipated. For the next two and one half years, she worked part and full time in a travel bureau in Newport News. By then, she had enough experience to qualify under travel association standards to open her own business.

Moreover, her husband did not like the idea of her traveling almost 60 miles to and from work each day. "He insisted that I either open my own business or quit altogether," she remembers.

Shirley chose the former. With her husband's assistance, she opened the Colony Travel Bureau in Williamsburg in September 5, 1972, and she had been managing and running it ever since.

The encouragement and help she received from "Gib" in launching a career is typical of their 22 years of marriage, Shirley says. A graduate of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance (BA and MBA) and the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, Gib met Shirley in 1948 while he was stationed in New York. They married in 1950 and lived all over the world in the next 14 years until he retired from the Army in 1964.

The Jones' spent their last two years in the Army at Fort Monroe. Although Gib had planned to return to the University of Pennsylvania, he and Shirley liked the area so much that he accepted an offer to teach at William and Mary instead.

Although Shirley has a full time career, which includes teaching a course in travel for William and Mary's Office of Special Programs, she still adheres to traditional philosophy. "I know who the boss of the house is," she says.

Pat Winter earned a bachelor's degree in art from Carnegie Tech and a masters from Western Reserve University. After those considerable accomplishments, she returned to the home, set up her own art studio, and for the next 15 years concentrated on raising her three children.

Mrs. Winter is the wife of Dr. Rolf Winter, former chairman and now full professor in the Department of Physics at William and Mary. Pat and Rolf met while she was a senior at Carnegie Tech and he was finishing up his Ph.D.

Dr. Winter taught at Western Reserve and Penn State before he came to William and Mary in 1964. For the next six years, Mrs. Winter continued to run her painting and sculpture studio in their Williamsburg home, but in 1970 when their children were of high school age, she accepted a part-time faculty position in the Department of Art at William and Mary.

Mrs. Winter seems delighted by the nice blend of a career and home life that her part-time position allows. She teaches two classes in two and three dimensional design — all day Tuesday and all day Thursday. This allows her the other days of the week to take care of her studio and home.

She enjoys the contact with her 40 students in the two courses. She teaches them the basic elements of visual organization — color, space, and mass — so that they can organize and manipulate them into a design.

Mrs. Winter says she may have renewed her professional career outside of the home sooner if the philosophy that is current today had existed earlier, but she does not regret the 15 years she stayed home.

"I always knew that was not all I would do," she says. As far as her life is concerned now, she says, it is "just right for me."

Kathy Haulman says her husband Dr. Clyde Haulman, an associate professor of economics and Director of the Marshall-Wythe Institute at William and Mary, is a "wonderful mother."

Kathy and Clyde Haulman are the parents of a 15-month-old girl, Kate. In the mornings, while a lady cares for their daughter, Dr. Haulman teaches at William and Mary and Kathy is a student in the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. In the afternoons, Kathy returns home to care for their child. In the evenings, she turns Kate over to Clyde and closets herself with her law studies.

The Haulmans consider this not only an excellent arrangement but a fulfilling one as well.

"There is a special relationship between Kate and Clyde that I know wouldn't be there if he didn't spend as much time with her as he does."

The Haulmans met in 1966 when they drove together to Miami to attend a wedding. Both were students at Florida State University, where Clyde received his Ph.D. in economics and Kathy earned her B.A. in English and M.A. in Religion.

Kathy Haulman & Kate

Marlene Davis

They came to William and Mary in 1970. After she completed her thesis for her masters and defended it, Kathy worked in an antique shop and as a research assistant in the Department of Religion at William and Mary. After their baby was born last year, Kathy applied for law school and was accepted for the term beginning in Fall of 1973.

Kathy plans to practice law after she graduates from Marshall-Wythe. She believes there will be no conflict in both her and her husband pursuing full-time careers while they raise their family. When she wanted to enroll in law school, she says, he not only agreed, but encouraged it.

Bill and Marlene Davis met in 1968 when she was a student in his English class offered as a part of an NDEA Institute during the Summer Session at William and Mary.

"I asked him a question," she says, "and he says he is still answering."

A graduate of the University of Oregon with a masters degree in English Education from the University of Virginia, Marlene married Bill in 1968.

With common scholarly interests, Bill and Marlene have found their careers not only blend nicely but actually complement one another. Marlene teaches English at Hampton Institute in Hampton, Virginia, about a 45 minute drive from Williamsburg, while Bill is an associate professor of English at William and Mary.

Marlene's real passion is the pursuit of something known as brass rubbings. During the 13th-17th century in England, people of some means placed a slab of brass over the gravestones of their loved ones and engraved them with an effigy consisting of drawings and some appropriate saying. By using a particular kind of paper, Marlene can extract from the brass the detail of the effigy. She then studies it carefully and pursues the leads she gets there to learn more about the people and their customs.

She is concentrating on the Essex, Suffolk, and Cambridge area of England. She lived in England from 1963-65 and returned again in 1971 when her husband went on leave to study there.

She has completed the first draft of a book based on her scholarship. It will be written for young people.

In pursuing the project, she is delighted to have another English teacher in the house. "It's nice to have an expert close by," she says.

Intellectually, says Willafay McKenna, '57, her husband Virgil '57, understands and supports her interest and com-

Support for the Tribe—William and Mary lost to East Carolina 34-3 in the Southern Conference showdown at Greenville, N.C., but it was not for lack of support from Alumni. Among the 1000 or more William and Mary people in Ficklen Stadium were 50 members of the Richmond Alumni Chapter who chartered a bus (top) and took the 3-hour trip to Greenville. The banner "Take 'em Tribe," which they unfurled before boarding the bus, was taken onto the field (bottom) by Jay Lawler (far left), Bob Irby (center) and Jim Ukrop (right) for the team to run through when they returned to the field at half-time. William and Mary cheerleaders, including two in back row with Lawler, Irby and Ukrop, gave them a hand.

Alumna Works 100-hour Week in Pursuit of Medical Career

Georgeann Prescott '69 spends six days a week in the pediatrics ward at the Medical College of Virginia Hospital and once every three weeks she is there for the full seven days. Two of every three days are easy — only 12 hours a day — but on the third, her shift lasts for 36 hours straight. In a recent week, she put in 113 hours.

Georgeann doesn't mind, however, because she is doing what she has wanted to do since a high school biology teacher excited her interest in science — practicing medicine.

A graduate of James Blair High School in Williamsburg where she was elected to the National Honor Society and graduated in the top ten of her class, Georgeann entered William and Mary on the Early Decision Plan and majored in biology. Upon graduation she applied for medical school at MCV and the University of Virginia.

Year-end Planning Has Many Benefits

Year-end planning can frequently pay handsome rewards both for the contributor and for the institution to which he is contributing, according to Andrew D. Parker, Jr., director of Special Giving at William and Mary.

"For example," says Parker, "it is often possible to postpone the receipt of income for a few months — or to accelerate the receipt of income. Similarly, deductions — both personal and business — can be timed. Thus, in a year of high income, you may want to push some income into the next year and pull as many deductions as possible into the current year. Or if your income is lower than usual — or you expect a higher income or higher tax rates in the following year — you may want to reverse this plan."

"Further, many individuals are making sure those doctors' bills, real estate taxes, interest on loans and other similar deductible expenditures are paid to take advantage of those large itemized deductions that will be computed for Uncle Sam's infamous Form 1040 by April 15th," Parker said.

"In addition, a review of your investment program at year's end may offer excellent tax savings opportunities," he added. "Perhaps, for one reason or another, your taxable income is unusually small. If you have stock — or other capital assets — with a big paper profit, it might be well to sell before year's end. That way your gain will be taxed in the lowest possible tax brackets. And even if you want to retain the stock, a sale with an immediate repurchase will give you a higher cost basis. In determining your basic investment program, give some thought to taxes for a general awareness of taxes is the real key to tax savings.

"In conjunction with year end planning or long range planning, one should consider present giving and-or deferred giving to the College of William and Mary, for such gifts offer first, and foremost, the opportunity to advance the general welfare of your alma mater, and secondly, a reduction in your income tax liability for 1973," Parker said.

"Should you like to receive additional information on how a gift to the College of William and Mary can be beneficial to both the College and yourself, contact Andrew D. Parker, Jr., Director for Special Gifts, College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Virginia 23185," Parker noted.

MCV was her first choice, and she received her M.D. in May of this year. She was one of 11 women graduates in a class of 130, but she says the fact that she was a woman made little difference.

"We were pretty well accepted," she says of medical school, which she found not extremely difficult, but very time consuming.

In fact, it appears she found it almost easy; she completed most of her requirements in three years, enabling her to use the fourth year to pursue independent study and travel.

She studied for brief periods in cardiology at Lennox Hill Hospital in New York; in hematology at Grady Hospital in Atlanta, and in a special field related to the newborn at Gainseville Hospital in Florida. In addition, she visited London where she studied anesthesiology at Westminster Hospital and the London Hospital.

As an intern, Georgeann is specializing in pediatrics, where she is on equal footing with the men because, she says, more than half the doctors in that field are women. After her internship, she will spend two more years in residency at MCV. Eventually, she hopes to go into private practice.

Dr. Prescott says her 12 hour days vary a great deal, but mostly from the time she arrives at 7:15 in the morning until she leaves at 7 in the evening, she is busy with patients.

Her hectic professional life leaves little time for socializing, but the schedule should lighten somewhat after her year as an intern. Eventually she plans a home and family, combining the two with the professional life of a doctor.

mitment to politics, but during the political season even he sometimes feels it is a little much.

This fall, the dosage was even heavier than usual. In addition to running a house and caring for their two children, Willafay has continued part-time her work as a research associate in the Department of Psychology at William and Mary and has actively campaigned for Democrats in the fall election.

Willafay is no example of woman tokenism in Virginia politics. She is Chairperson of the James City County Democratic Committee and Chairperson of the 51st House District. In the 1972 Presidential campaign, she was elected a McGovern delegate to the national Democratic convention.

She majored in psychology and he in English, but after graduation, Virgil switched to psychology and, with his wife's support, earned his M.A. from Swarthmore and Ph.D. from Princeton. He taught for a year at Carleton College before returning to William and Mary to join the psychology faculty.

Willafay has always led an active life during their years of marriage. While her husband attended graduate school, she taught school, worked with emotionally disturbed children, and was a social worker.

In all of her many varied activities, politics comes through as Willafay's favorite.

"I really believe in our constitutional system," she says, "and if it is going to work right, there has to be involvement. When politics is left to a few people, it degenerates into power machinations."

Her husband undoubtedly agrees with that philosophy — even though, as his wife suggests, he may secretly wish elections came a little less frequently in the Virginia political calendar.

Arizin is Optimistic in Soph Season for Tribe Basketball

As William and Mary's basketball team entered the first full month of its season, Coach Ed Ashault looked to three returning second year men to provide much of the scoring punch.

There is only one senior on the team, Captain Mark Ritter, who Ashault believes will give the floor leadership the youthful Indians need to have a winning season.

The three sophomores expected to land starting berths are Mike Arizin, Matt Courage, and Rod Musselman. All clocked a lot of floor time last year as freshmen.

Heading the list of returnees is, of course, Rookie All-American Mike Arizin. The Springfield, Pa., native led the Tribe in virtually every category last season and his return (he was considering transferring and staying in the Philadelphia area to attend college) gives the Indians a consistent and strong scoring threat.

Arizin was accorded a host of honors during the '72-'73 season. Named the MVP in the Scranton Christmas Tournament, he was selected for that tourney's first team. He was chosen Southern Conference Player of the Week (Feb. 12-17) following his performances against East Carolina and West Virginia (W&M won both games). He totaled 42 points and 19 rebounds in those two games.

Additional honors for the sensational rookie were Southern Conference second team and selection to the conference All-Tourney second squad.

"He should be a more complete player this season. There's no question about his scoring ability."

The 6-5, 180 lb. sophomore has been devoting a lot of time working on his defensive play and Ashault feels he is "much improved" in that department.

"Michael needed to polish up defensively and he appears to be doing a much better job now," says Ashault. "He should be a more complete player this season. There is no question about his scoring ability."

Statistically, Arizin led William and Mary in scoring with a 17.2 average, rebounding (7.3 per game), and foul shooting (82.1), which all adds up to an outstanding freshman year.

The National Association of Basketball Writers selected Arizin to the Rookie All-American Team, the highest honor given a first year varsity college player. Mike joined such notables as David Thompson of N.C. State, John Schumate from Notre Dame, Henry Williams of Jacksonville, John Lucas of Maryland and Jim "The Fly" Williams of Austin Peay.

It was a fitting tribute to a sensational first year but Michael Arizin would gladly exchange all his honors for a winning program at William and Mary.

"I would not be telling the truth if I said I didn't appreciate the individual honors but they are indeed shallow if the team doesn't win," he says. "We are all working towards one goal, having a winner at William and Mary and I am going to do everything I can to help attain that result."

The sharp shooting forward, who may see some action at guard this season added: "We have the nucleus for a good, winning team this year and I hope we can provide the caliber of basketball the fans and students here deserve. I think we will."

To Randolph's Runners, Winning is a Way of Life

William and Mary's cross country team swept past Penn State in its final dual meet of the season with such ease that one might have wondered why Coach John Randolph and his runners had set that as one of their two major goals of the season.

But the 20-40 defeat of the Nittany Lions, coached by former Tribe mentor Harry Groves, did not show the weakness of Penn State, merely how magnificent William and Mary is this year.

Before the Penn State win, the Indians had won all ten of their dual meets. Penn State, however, was the big one. A powerhouse in track, undefeated in three years, State had knocked off the previous week Villanova, traditionally the Big Boy of the East, and by the time William and Mary met the Lions, they were rated the No. 1 cross country team of the East.

No more, however; that title now belongs to what must be rated as the best cross country team in William and Mary's history. Ron Martin, an all-American in his freshman year but sidelined with injuries the last two seasons, came in first in the race, breaking the course record of Greg Fredericks, the American record holder in the six miles, by an amazing 23 seconds. In breaking the record, Martin finished 25 seconds ahead of State's top runner, Charlie McGuire, the reigning NCAA 6-mile champ.

Co-captain Bill Louv finished third; sophomore Mac Collins finished fourth, and Tim Cook came in fifth, giving William and Mary four of the top five places in the meet.

The following weekend the Indians swept to their 12th consecutive State cross-country championship (8 of the first 10 places); on November 3, they won their eighth straight Southern Conference championship, and on November 10, the team qualified for the Nationals, scheduled for Spokane, Washington, on the weekend of November 17.

To qualify for the nationals — the team's second major goal of the season — the Indians had to finish in the top six in competition with some 60 universities from 12 states in the regionals. William and Mary may well compete in the toughest region in the nation: last year's no. 4 team in the regionals — Tennessee — won the national championship and the winner of the regionals, East Tennessee, finished second. William and Mary, which was second in the region last year, finished 11th in the nation.

Randolph literally bursts with enthusiasm and admiration when he talks of his cross-country team. Winning is a way of life, he says, quoting George Allen, and his boys are winners. The team consists of:

"As a group, they are inspiring. They realize that to be good you have to pay the price."

Ron Martin: co-captain and senior, recruited from England. He has run the three miles in the 6th fastest time ever by a collegiate runner. Last year, he finished 6th in the nationals. Randolph calls him an athlete with "beautiful rhythm. He simply runs the competition into the ground."

Bill Louv: co-captain and the other senior on the team. He is a former high school cross-country champion of Pennsylvania. He ran the fourth fastest time ever on the Penn State track, traditionally the site where the great track teams of the East compete. "He's a gifted runner," says Randolph, "and potentially the most talented on the squad when he really wants to run."

Mac Collins: no. 3 man on the team. He was one of the leading freshmen milers in the nation last year, running an indoor mile of 4:04 and representing William and Mary in the nationals at Detroit. "He's a pure miler," says Randolph, "with great speed."

Tim Cook: 4th man on the team, a former runnerup in the high school cross-country championships in Pennsylvania. A junior, Cook "gives 110 per cent every time he runs."

The fifth, sixth and seventh men on the team are John Greenplate, a sophomore and former high school cross-country champ of Delaware; Reggie Clark, a junior from Newport News, who holds the half mile records at William and Mary

(he was the top half-miler in the East last year); and Brendan Gallaher, a sophomore from Rhodesia who holds the freshman six-mile record at William and Mary.

In their cross-country meets, they run five and six mile races. For the long-distance runners, perhaps even more than in other major sports, the athletes must be extremely dedicated, disciplined and motivated. By the time Randolph's runners are ready to compete in major meets, some of them have been training year around for seven years, and it is only through an evolutionary process of years and years of running that they reach their top form.

At William and Mary, for instance, the cross-country athletes run a minimum of a hundred miles a week. In a typical day, they are up early and run five miles before breakfast. After a shower, breakfast, and classes, they are back in training at 3 p.m. for three hours and perhaps another 15 miles of running.

"As a group they are inspiring," says Randolph, who frequently runs along side of them. "They realize that to be good you have to pay a price, and they have been willing to pay the price. In fact, this is the first group that has done more than I've asked of them."

The price, however, is not in the classroom — a point Randolph is quick to emphasize. "We have not lost a man we have recruited in five years," he says, "and our academic average on the track team is above the all-men average."

As Randolph's team approached the pinnacle of competition in the Nationals, he had good reason to be proud.

Applied Science Program Receives Large Grant

The Applied Science Program of the College has received a $100,000 extension to a National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) grant.

The Applied Science Program is an interdisciplinary educational program taught cooperatively by the members of the chemistry, mathematics, and physics departments. The program leads to an M.S. degree in applied mathematics, computer science, atmospheric science and material science. Co-directors of the program are George T. Rublein, associate professor of mathematics and Arden Sher, professor of physics.

This new grant is one of a sequence of grants that over the last three years have totaled over $590,000.

Joy, Goodwill, Brotherhood Still Mainstays of College Christmas

The festival of Christmas at William and Mary has changed through the years, but the general feelings of joy and good cheer and the brotherhood of man remain even though the form may be different from 1921, 1933 or 1948.

Alumni of the 1930's will vividly recall the gala Christmas party given annually by President John Stewart Bryan. Held in the old Phi Beta Kappa auditorium, the party, directed by Mr. Bryan dressed in his 18th century attire of the royal governor, included skits by sororities, fraternities and student interest groups.

While the college-wide party is a thing of the past, other Christmas activities on the campus have gradually become important traditions at William and Mary. Mortar Board and Omicron Delta Kappa jointly sponsor the annual carol fest and Yule Log ceremony (see other story elsewhere on this page).

"The Yuletide season will be ushered into the Colonial Capital on Dec. 18 with the annual Grand Illumination."

This year's ceremony will be held in the courtyard of the Wren Building on Dec. 9 between 6-8 p.m. After a singing of carols, the giant log will be carried through the crowd to the building's Great Hall, where it will be burned in the giant fireplace. Hot cider and cookies will be served on portico.

Another tradition, at least for the last 28 years, is the Christmas concert of the William and Mary Choir and Chorus, under the direction of Dr. Carl A. "Pappy" Fehr. This year's program will be of special interest to alumni, since it will be the final Christmas concert by Dr. Fehr, who is retiring in June, 1974 after 29 years at the college.

Handel's famed oratorio, "The Messiah," will be presented by the two musical choral groups along with the College-Community Symphony Orchestra. The program is scheduled for Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall, Dec. 11-13 at 8:15 p.m.

PRESIDENT'S HOUSE TREE—Andrew and Eliza Graves, children of the President and Mrs. Graves, help decorate a giant 12-foot Christmas tree in the front livingroom of the President's House. The tree will be decorated in time for the students to have an opportunity to see it before leaving campus for the holiday season.

GRAND ILLUMINATION—The Grand Illumination of the colonial capital no longer takes the form of the White Lighting parade down the Duke of Gloucester (above). Instead, because the crowds had grown so large and the risk of injury to small children so great, the Illumination is held on Market Square Green with each house around the green being lighted with candles.

The Yuletide season will be ushered into the colonial capital on Dec. 18 with the annual "Grand Illumination" of the old city. Alumni of recent years will remember the famed "White Lighting" parade of the grand illumination which was held down Duke of Gloucester Street, ending in the old college yard where the William and Mary president welcomed the crowd and extended Christmas greetings for the season.

In later years, especially in 1970 and 1971, the crowds grew to more than 10,000 and Colonial Williamsburg decided that the risk of injury to small children was so great that it discontinued the parade last year. Now the Grand Illumination is held on Market Square Green with each house around the green being lighted with candles. The event will begin at 5:15 p.m.

"... the decorations include some 75 elaborately crafted clothespin soldiers and Santas...."

Another more recent college activity on the Colonial holiday calendar is the "Illumination of Wren Building and the old college yard" on Dec. 26 at 6 p.m. Dr. Harold L. Fowler, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, recounts the history of the college and as he talks about each of the three old buildings — The Wren, The Brafferton and the President's House — they are illuminated.

Dr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Graves extend their greetings for the holidays to the gathered throng. Giant hanging lanterns of fire help illuminate the scene as the gaily decorated buildings add an interesting 18th century feeling to a 20th century Christmas.

The Great Hall of the Wren Building will be open from 2-5 p.m. on Christmas Day for visitors to Colonial Williamsburg who wish to warm the hearts and bodies beside the roaring fire and listen to the melodious strains of 18th century music from a group of local musicians.

Before the students depart the campus for their own holidays at home, there will be many small Christmas activities including staff and faculty parties and fraternity and sorority parties and gala dances.

Mrs. Graves and children, Andrew and Elizabeth, help decorate the giant 12-foot Christmas tree in the front livingroom of the President's House. Mrs. Virginia Hughes, head resident of Landrum Hall has helped the President's family since 1971 in their preparations for the holidays. It was Mrs. Hughes, with the help of many students, who designed and made most of the ornaments and decorations for the Graves' first tree here two years ago.

Fashioned in the traditional style, the decorations include some 75 elaborately crafted clothespin soldiers and Santas and angel decorations were made from acorns found in the Wren yard. Mrs. Graves said that the President's House will be decorated by Dec. 12 this year, so that students will have an opportunity to view it before leaving campus.

The Graves will hold a large party for the college staff on Dec. 18 between 3-8 p.m.

For the last several years students at the college have brought a goodly measure of holiday cheer to youngsters of the Williamsburg area through parties, caroling, filling food baskets for needy families, sending money to provide clothes for needy children.

Sororities, fraternities and special interest groups have helped support orphans in foreign countries, not only during the holiday season, but throughout the year. Students also visit the elderly and shut-in members of the local community, having either a Christmas party or a carol sing.

Alumni Xmas Tree

Since this is the first Christmas Holiday Season that the Alumni Society will have its own house and own living room, it will also be the first year that it will be able to have its own Christmas Tree.

The Alumni Office asks that all alumni put the Alumni Society, Post Office Box 60, Williamsburg, Va., 23185, on their Season Greetings list. The Office staff will then fasten the cards on the Society Christmas Tree, as a symbol of the community of the alumni of the College.

CHRISTMAS CHEER—Students gather during the Christmas season on various occasions to share greetings and Christmas cheer with one another.

William and Mary Professor Helps Bring First Xmas Tree to City

Books are filled with legends and tales about the origin of the Christmas tree. One such saga is that the tree originated in Alsace and the Black Forest region of Europe in the late 18th century. Another tale is that the custom began in Germany and was spread throughout Europe by soldiers returning home from a military campaign. In 1841, Prince Albert, the German consort, presented the famous royal tree to Queen Victoria and the German Christmas tree immediately became an English tradition, too. It is difficult to determine how the Christmas tree came to America and became part of our Christmas. However...

"... children came to see the fantastic tree, to sing favorite carols, enjoy refreshments and to hear 'Minck' tell stories...."

it is somewhat easier to trace how the tree came to Virginia. There is a legend of some merit that the first Christmas tree in Virginia was in Williamsburg in 1842. And surprisingly, it was a William and Mary Latin and Greek professor, Dr. Charles Minnegerode, who legend says put up the first tree at the famed Tucker House on Market Square Green. Minnegerode came to the college in the spring of 1842 from Philadelphia. A political exile from Germany, he had been a prisoner in Hesse-Darmstadt, a small German state and upon his release came to America and with him came the German tradition of the Christmas tree. A close friend of Judge Nathaniel Beverley Tucker, the law professor at the college, "Minck," as he was affectionally nicknamed by the judge's children, liked the quiet life of the sleepy college town.

When the holiday season arrived, however, "Minck" grew homesick and yearned for the customs and festivities of a German Christmas. As Christmas Day 1842 grew near, "Minck" asked Judge Tucker if he could give a party for the children. The judge agreed, little knowing that he would be walking through the woods several days later looking for a suitable tree to place in the parlor as the focal point for his German friend's party.

Decorative items were unavailable, of course, so Dr. Minnegerode, with the help of the Tucker children...

Yulelog Celebration Remains Key Attraction for College Community

Each holiday season, just before the students leave the campus, the William and Mary college community gathers together to celebrate the great English ceremony of bringing in the yule log. The tradition of the yule log came to Virginia and America with those first Jamestown settlers in 1607 and Virginia planters nourished the idea. Many a great log was burned and many a drink was quaffed beside ample Virginia hearths in colonial times as revelers observed the ceremony.

Today, several centuries later, citizens still participate in the festivity, but nowhere in the state or nation is the observance probably as rich with tradition than at William and Mary, the nation's only "English" college.

The program, held at the Wren Building, is the main holiday event for the school's 5,000 students. Sponsored annually by Omicron Delta Kappa and Mortar Board, the program begins with the singing of holiday carols. After the audience has been told the history of that event, the ceremony begins when the great log, usually selected months before, is carried through the students.

An important element of the Yule Log is to touch it with a sprig of holly, which is, according to legend, designed to bring good luck for the coming year.

With pomp, the log is placed in the giant fireplace in the Great Hall of the Wren Building and is kindled with pieces of last year's log. The pieces of holly are then thrown into the flames by the students as they pass through the hall.

There are two traditions about the significance of the casting of holly. One is that throwing it into the fire casts off old worries and the other that it is tossed with a wish for the new year.

Yule log blessings have also been passed down through the years. Each Christmas at the college the blessing is: "May this fire burn brightly, so that its light will seek out and bring happiness to those less fortunate than we, and bring peace on earth, good will to men."

As the log burns, wine is sprinkled on it and another chant is offered: "Burn the log, of fire! Fire, burn away all evil!"

It is believed that the English yule log program became a part of the Christmas tradition through the Vikings, who, at their feast of juul, at the winter solstice, kindled bonfires of huge logs in honor of their god Thor.

Later in medieval times in England, a whole tree trunk was placed in the fireplace of the baronial hall. Scattered 18th century records indicate that the tradition was a lively affair in the colonies as Englishmen tried to relive their own festivals of the homeland.

"... the log is placed in the giant fireplace in the Great Hall of the Wren Building and is kindled with pieces of last year's log."

Many superstitions have grown up around the yule log. It was considered bad luck if it did not burn for the full 12 days of Christmas, which began on Christmas Eve and lasted until dusk on Jan. 6.

In Plantation times, servants watered the log down at the day's end to preserve it through the holiday season. Many planters excused their servants from all their duties as long as the log burned.

The Virginia Almanack of 1711 expressed A Christmas wish which was probably said during many yule log ceremonies in Virginia that winter:

"We wish you health, and good fires, diversion and good company; honest trading and good success; loving courtship and good wives; and lastly merry Christmas and a happy new year."

W. Wilford Kale, an alumnus and bureau chief of the Times-Dispatch bureau in Williamsburg, prepared these pages for the Gazette.

YULELOG CELEBRATION—One tradition that has stood the test of time is the Yulelog Celebration at the Sir Christopher Wren Building before the students leave for the Christmas Season. Hundreds participate in the occasion each Yuletide season.

Alumni Notes

Alumni of the William and Mary Choir plan a concert reunion May 4, 1974, to honor the retirement of Dr. Carl A. "Pappy" Fehr, choir director for more than 25 years.

Alumni plan to join with the present Choir members for a song fest when the Choir presents its Spring Concert. During the day, there will be an opportunity for singing, socializing, and reminiscing, according to Phoeke Harcum, a Choir alumnae.

Providence Meeting

The William and Mary alumni in Rhode Island are sponsoring a cocktail party at the Holiday Inn in Providence, preceding the William and Mary vs. Providence basketball game on December 20, at the Providence Civic Center.

The cash bar reception will run from 6 to 7:45 p.m., with a $5.00 per person fee covering the game ticket and hors d'ouvres. Reservations should be made immediately by writing to Mr. Wayne Pullen, 5300 Post Road, Apt. 326, East Greenwich, R.I. 02818, accompanied by your personal check made payable to the W&M ALUMNI OF R.I. The tickets so ordered may be picked up at the reception, or at the gate after the reception.

Morton Portrait

Friends of Dr. Richard Lee Morton are conducting a fund-raising campaign to raise $1500 to commission a portrait of the retired William and Mary history department professor.

The portrait will be hung in Richard Lee Morton Hall, the new social sciences building which was named for Dr. Morton by the Board of Visitors. Contributions should be sent to Dr. Harold L. Fowler, Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences.

Any money beyond $1500 will be given to the Richard Lee Morton Scholarship Fund.

Make checks payable to College of William and Mary — Morton Portrait Fund.

Missing Banners

Several Class Banners were missing from the Williamsburg Lodge on Friday evening of Homecoming. The Alumni Office would like to have these banners returned so they will be available for the next Class Reunion, and they were handmade at some cost of time and effort.

Alumnus on TV Quiz

Reid Williamson '70, was on NBC's TV show Jeopardy. Last fall he won all five shows, making him eligible for the "Tournament of Champions" matching nine such undefeated players. He appeared most recently on the show broadcast during the week of November 12-16.

Necklace on Sale

A handcrafted sterling silver W&M cipher is available as either a necklace or pin from the society. Designed and produced by Mike Stousland, '41, it is available in either form for only $10.00. Send your order to P.O. BOX 60, Williamsburg, Va. 23185, and make your check payable to the Society of the Alumni.

After leaving William and Mary, Albert E. Cox attended the University of Virginia for one year and then in 1930 accepted a position with the P. Lorillard Company in Danville, Va. In 1933 he married Frances Glenn Jones. One year later, motivated by the need for an increase in salary, he terminated his work as assistant to the re-dryer at the tobacco plant, and began a career in the field of insurance.

Albert started selling life insurance in the fall of 1934, and as the depression began to wane, branched into selling crop insurance, which at this time was something new in insurance, but soon became almost a universal practice. In 1940, he and T. Stanley Goodridge opened the Cox and Goodridge Insurance Agency in the Masonic Temple in Danville. In 1950 the company was moved to its present location on Market Street. The company now has a staff of nine in Danville, and two in the Chatham office. Albert is president of the company, which handles all forms of general insurance: hospital, automobile, personal, commercial, fire, and crop. Albert owns a separate crop insurance business, Southside General Agency, which he operates especially for Virginia and Carolina tobacco farmers.

In addition to his reputation in insurance, Albert has built a reputation as a prominent Southside Democrat. Before moving to Danville in 1958, he served as secretary of the Pittsylvania County Democratic Committee for several years. After serving as a Fifth District delegate to the 1960 Democratic National Convention, he was named chairman of a joint city-county committee to promote the Kennedy-Johnson ticket. Although no longer active in politics, he has maintained an interest in politics and a variety of other activities.

Albert is a trustee of the Averett College Anderson Student Aid Fund, and a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the First Baptist Church, the Danville Golf Club, the Rotarians, and Masons. He maintains a farm on White Oak Mountain in Pittsylvania County, and plays golf as often as possible. However, he is primarily interested in collecting books and reading.

Albert's basement library contains an extensive collection of American and Virginia history, biography, literature, and religion. Naturally he enjoys visiting bookstores, and usually leaves with new volumes for his library.

As a member of the board of directors of the American Association of Insurance Agents, he travels extensively. Previously, when he was president of the Virginia Association of Insurance Agents, he visited every city in Virginia.

Other than the change from doing things for themselves to wanting things handed to them on a silver platter, Albert says people have not changed during his lifetime. He says "I've seen the country change a lot during my lifetime, but people haven't gotten any better. People haven't changed at all." Although Albert has changed jobs, political affiliation and a number of other things, he has remained a student of life and books, always enjoying his studies.

We were delighted that John and Marion Milne Barba were able to attend — Marion is doing beautifully and we are deeply pleased.

Among those who signed up at the Alumni House were Barbara and Austin Roberts, Daniel Bradley, Bill Wyatt, Sid Brooks, Waldo Mathews, Esther Mirmlestein Weinberg and Dan Blocker. We were able to chat briefly with Herb Young, Bob Hornsby, Mike and Betty Stousland, Pat and Dot Harper and Bill and Jimmie St. John. The "group" that meets in front of the theater at parade time has grown smaller, but we were joined by Jean Cox Phillips and Bill, Gervais Wallace Brekke and Nils, Bobby and Frank Henderson and Ann and Jack Garrett. Bobby Taylor reported that he is now managing the Captain John Smith Motel in Williamsburg and said that Peg Stigall Chafin is living in Williamsburg with her daughters. Vince and Carolyn Lusardi's second daughter graduated from the College in June.

Jack Geddes told me that he took an early retirement last year and that he and Mary Ellen (Lokey) moved to Vero Beach. After a short time, Jack realized that he was not ready for retirement so they moved back to Conn. and he became associated with WQXR as reported in my last news letter. Both Mary Ellen and Jack were fascinated by the new areas around Williamsburg so perhaps they can be enticed back to Virginia permanently.

Several weeks ago, Grace Flavell Macklin and Frank visited The Tides Inn accompanied by Grace's Father. They were sorry they could not stay on for Homecoming, but Grace brought me up to date on their family. Frank is a sales manager for the Philadelphia branch of an industrial chemical firm which he finds challenging and which keeps him busy. Grace and Frank have four daughters: Ann, the oldest, is married and has two children, Becky, seven, and David, four; the two middle girls, Trish and Ginny, both work for the same pharmaceutical firm and use home as a place to hang their hats between rounds of activities; and Marny, the youngest, has just turned eighteen and is in college in Vermont taking a course in nursing. Grace's father has lived with the Macklins for the past six years and three generations under one roof has worked remarkably well. In spite of an active household, Grace still finds time to make a quilt, knit a sweater, sew or do crewel. The Macklins live in Fort Washington, Pa.

They had a great time. Their other son, Bruce, is with Southern Calif. Gas Co. in Newport Beach, Calif., where he lives.

Homecoming '73 was a combination of perfect weather, a wonderful parade and football game, as well as other special events too numerous to mention. Cato and I enjoyed seeing friends from various classes. Among those present from the Class of '45 were Joan Kable Griffith and Max, Jane Welton Anderson and Bill, and Mary Alsop Hubbard and Jim. Also there and of interest to our class were Frank Shields, Jim Bowman, Tom Restrick, Bob Chandler and their wives.

The Griffith's daughter, Mandy, a UVA student, joined her parents in Williamsburg. Their son Ross attends the U. of S. Carolina, and Margery is a '73 graduate of Salem College. The Anderson's daughter, Tracy, a student at Stratford was also there for Homecoming.

There was a special get-together for many Thetas present for Homecoming, and a very memorable occasion it was for each of us. Mrs. George Stringfellow, who was Kappa Alpha Theta Housemother for 12 years (1943-55), was guest of honor at a brunch at the Cascades. "Mama String" was accompanied by her daughter, Frances Stringfellow Gray, also of Wakefield and her Theta granddaughter, Kathryn "Bootsie" Gray Bradshaw '52 of Newport News. Other Thetas present for a visit with her were: Marge Retzke Gibbs, '44; from the Class of '47, Jane Whitmore Whittemore, Dorothea Shinn Francescon, Bonnie Wolfram Ware, Bland Devany, and Charlotte Ann Webb; from the Class of '48, Barbara Hughes Peters, Mary Minton Gregor Eitel, Frances Robb, Nora Spann Chandler, Jane Seaton Harrell, and Frances Brigham Johnson; Mary Virginia Cline Beall, '49; Carol Raymond DeSamper, '54; and Marcia MacKenzie Kirkpatrick, '50. Several Theta husbands were also there: Connie Harrell, Derek Peters, Paul Eitel and Gordon Johnson. It was the second year for such a special occasion, and 17 of us were happy to have a visit with "Mama String" this year.

In addition to seeing Sunny Trumbo Williams, '44 and Rolf at Homecoming, Cato and I also enjoyed a weekend at their Sandbridge beach house in Sept. At that time we also had a nice visit with Jean McPherrin Morris and Harrell. Recent visitors in Emporia were Sunny, guest speaker at a club meeting at my home, and Jeanne Schoenewolf Preston and Page.

As you can see, I have very little news for you for a change. Thanks to your not writing to me and your not getting your names in the news lately, I have nothing to write except to remind you to write to me about yourselves and your families. I know if you are as busy as we are, that you have little time to write, but how about taking time to send me a Christmas card with a note for the class on it. Better still, just write me a long letter about you and our classmates with whom you keep in touch. It would be appreciated by all of us.

In several more years, we will be getting together for our 25th Reunion. At that time, a new Class Reporter has to be chosen to take my place according to the new policies set up by the Society's Board of Directors. From then on, the job will be rotated every five years. I do hope that one of you will consider taking the responsibility for our class. Ours is a close class, and I think you will find the job a very meaningful one. If you are interested or if you have any suggestions for my successor, please let me know so that I can tell our Class President. I have enjoyed the job these many years, but I am glad the Board made this decision because I think the change will be good for all of us. Because of this job, I feel very close to all of you and hope that I have kept all of us close together in heart and in mind in the years since I took over from Betty. Many of you have helped me keep us together by faithfully sending me cards and letters plus getting your names in the papers. I am grateful for this. Now I am looking forward to turning the job over to one of you in 1976.

Lucy Keen Bertram sent me an interesting program book on the Phelps Fair Week, a highlight of the year's work of the Auxiliary of Phelps Memorial Hospital in Scarborough, N.Y. Lucy was the general chairman of the week. I wish I could share the program book with you, especially you people who do volunteer work and work with hospital auxiliaries. This looks like a good idea though it must be a big job. Lucy wrote that they netted twenty thousand dollars, so I can see it was worth her hard work. Lucy and Jack have one son, Dave, a nice young man whom I met at our last reunion. Jack was made an I.B.M. Vice President about a year ago.

Congratulations to Hillsman Wilson who has just been elected to the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni of the College!

I also had a card from London from Connie Carhart Michals '50 and Chuck. They live in Shaker Heights, Ohio, but they do a lot of traveling and always remember to send me a card. Why don't more of you send me cards while on your travels, so that I can share your trips with the class?

Have a happy Chanukah, Christmas, and New Year. Don't forget the William and Mary Fund. Most of all, don't forget to write to your '51 Class Reporter. The class would like to hear from you.

Thanks to the many faithful '53 alumni who returned to Homecoming in October our 20th reunion was a great success. Our new Alumni House, perfect weather, smashing football game victory, and renewal of old friendships made the weekend a most satisfying experience. Please forgive me if I omit or add a "wife or husband" to the list of those who attended. Write and tell me you were there.

Jim and Barbie Schwartz Smith and their four children visited with Jim's parents in Petersburg and drove over on Saturday. John Kris, his wife and two sons, Bill and Bobbie Bowman Allison, and Randy and Mary Alice Regier Hoes came from Massachusetts. Randy is manager of GTE Sylvania. Joanie Alleman Rubin, her husband Bob and children attended. Joanie is editor-in-chief of Playbill. She and Bob, an educational film producer, have travelled to Europe, Russia, and Israel. They spend their summers in Cape May, N. J. Betty Zepht and Evie Abdill came from Washington, D. C. Jim and Betsy Booth Devitt and their two sons; Bill and Ginny Campbell Furst and their son and daughter; Carol and Class President Carmen Romeo; Russ and Page Beck Gills; Gene and Connie Carhart Bohlman; Sally and Howie McCallen, who is commercial manager for Public Service Electric and Gas Company in New Jersey; Jim Seu, who owns a restaurant in Williamsburg; and Joe Megale all were at Homecoming.

Bob and Peggy Bunting Mitchell spent a week prior to Homecoming in Williamsburg. Peggy had low women's score in the Alumni Golf Tournament. Joe and Eloise Bryant Agee attended. Eloise will be teaching second grade at Norge Elementary School. Joe teaches Physical Education and coaches the golf team at the College. Joe and Carolyn Burt Hume kept up their attendance record and travelled from Williamsport, Pa. Burt is manager of Keystone Business Forms. Pat and "T" Marston Taylor came from New York. "T" has been working as a high school librarian for the past three years.

Others at Homecoming were Jack and Helen Barber Stabile from Pittsburgh; Bill and Betty Gayle Jeter and their three sons; "Bebe" Hammond Brown, her husband and family; "Mo" Maddox, who is district counsel for Small Business Administration; Don Woulfe, owner of the Don Woulfe Printing Company in Illinois; Fran and Al King; David Potts; Bill and Anne Hines Fuller and their two children who also visited with Anne's parents; Ed and Ginnie Gary Lupton and one of their daughters; Don Layne and his wife; Jack Martin and his wife who now are proud grandparents; Nancy Yowell Starr; Jane Guenther Williams and her four daughters; and Jerry and Ann Johnson Harris. Jerry is vice president of Sicash Builders.

The list continues. Ed and Betty Kustrup Sheahan had a surprise visit at Homecoming from their son who attends college in Charlottesville. Betty is a real estate associate broker for Caine Realty in New York. George Ritzel and his wife Janet attended. George rode in the parade with others of the Class of '53. He is president of the Virginia Board Club, director of the Richmond Association Insurance Agents and the Old Dominion Press Club. George also is chairman of the Richmond territory of the William and Mary Fund Campaign. We kept running into Jim and Bev Simonton Kelly during the weekend. Bev is still very busy with teaching school and singing with Bruton Parish Church and the Williamsburg Madrigal Singers. Jim is now assistant to President Graves. We missed seeing John Dalton but wish him success in his campaign for Lieutenant Governor of Virginia. Betty Brinkley Garrison and her husband, Charles, also were there. Betty is a department chairman and teacher of senior high school mentally handicapped children. The list concludes with Kitty Shaver Gaertner and Martha Parker Stanley. Kitty is manager of the Sperry Marine Employees' Federal Credit Union and president of the Georgetown Green Homeowners' Association. She and her husband Paul have three children and live in Charlottesville. Martha and her husband have three sons — one now attending the College. Martha helps with her husband's petroleum products business, is president of the United Methodist Women, secretary of the Orange Women's Club, and is on the Orange County Electoral Board in Virginia.

Jay and I especially enjoyed talking with my two roommates, Ginny Campbell Furst and Ginnie Gary Lupton.

Don't forget our William and Mary Fund.

If you thought about going to Homecoming '73 and didn't, you missed a great weekend and reunion. 1963 was a very good year! Here is what I gathered when I passed around a notebook during all the festivities:

Donald and Lori Schenk are living in N. Miami, Fla., where he is a claims adjuster for Professional Adjusters. They have four children: Stacey Lynn, Don, Jr., Kristen Leigh and Michael.

L. Cdr. Robin Reighley is officer in charge, USS Mahan DLG-11, enroute to the staff of the Commander Cruiser Destroyer force in San Diego, Calif. Linda Elliott Simon and John, '64, are in New York City where John is a banker with Allen and Co. and Linda attends N. Y. Law School.

Kent and Joey Krider Delano have two girls. Kent was a Pan American pilot but is now doing aviation consulting and owns a sail boat business. Eric Erdosy is Vice President of Clarendon Trust in Arlington and is head coach of the 75 pounds and under football team. Eric's wife is Ann O'Neal.

Gary L. Young is production control manager of Acupis Corp., Mt. View, Calif. He enjoys hiking, sailing and leather work. Lynne Thomas Richbourg just moved to a larger home in Vienna, Va., with her husband and four boys. She is a den mother for cub scouts and is bowling and playing bridge in her spare time. Pat Farrell Franklin and Jay live in Falls Church. Jay is in commercial real estate in Washington, D.C. and Pat substitute teaches a couple of days a week, is very involved in the PTA at their two children's school, and is taking an economics course. The Franklins play as much tennis as they can in their spare time.

Carolyn Birch Knowles just finished her Master's in Math education and is teaching four algebra and one 8th grade math course at a county high school near Charlottesville, Va. Mary Frances Bonner Koltes became a new mother in June and is working two days a week in International Training in Health, HEW. She enjoys skiing and tennis. Lesley Ward Winingder counsels part time at the local family treatment center in Atlanta and plays tennis daily.

Rosemary Brewer Philips is working as a librarian at Temple University (since 1965). Her husband Charlie founded his own company, a small data processing firm for education institutions. They have a house in Lansdown, Pa., and keep in shape keeping it and the yard in shape. They are "ice hockey nuts" and have season tickets to the Phila-Flyers as well as the Phila Eagles football team. Randi and Paul Shumate and Angela, 5 years, live in Basking Ridge, N.J. Paul works for Bell Telephone Labs at Murray Hill as a physicist and skis every chance he gets. Randi is very active in the Junior Woman's Club.

Sally Siegenthaler Coulton writes: "I hate snow! Everyone at Homecoming lives in southern climes!" Sally's husband Roger operates a gift shop in Mansfield, Ohio, and Sally is housewifing it after having worked in publishing for nine years. Learning how to cook, keeping house and the club routine keeps her busy. Diane LaFerriere Auburn and Bob are living on post at Ft. Belvoir, where Bob is serving his military obligation as an OB-Gyn, M.D. He will be getting out of the service in June and they are looking at practices in California and Florida. The Auburns have four children.

Jackie Murphy is a systems engineer for IBM working on the Hill covering the Senate, House and Library of Congress. She was married this spring to Robert M. Trelogan (Dickinson '60) but has kept her own name. Jackie and Bob travelled for a month in Spain and stayed with Spanish friends, so she was able to put to use her W&M Spanish. Jackie's hobbies are black and white photography, pottery, skiing and tennis. Ann Harvey Yonkers lives in Cottonou, Dehoney, Africa, with husband Charlie who is director of the Peace Corps there. They have 2 children, Adam, 2, and Kate, 4. Ann's hobbies are French cooking, pottery and photography.

Two years ago, Valerie Simms spent the year in England working on her thesis and also traveled in Israel. Last year she received her PhD in Political Science from Georgetown University. Currently Val teaches at Federal City College in D.C. and has begun law school at Georgetown University.

Mary Kay (Walsh) Bransford lives in Denver, Colo., where her husband Louis works with the Federation of Rocky Mountain States. They have one son Timothy, nine months. Ken and Kay Bonner Drews '64, have two children, Devon, 6, and Dana, 3, and live in Lakeland, Fla., where Ken is National Sales Manager, Educational Development Systems. Kay has become very active in local civic activities and continues to speak and write about the battered child syndrome, a study she worked on while living in Denver.

Bob and Ann-Meade Baskerville Simpson '63, have two children Ann-Darley, 8, and Scott, 5, and are expecting one in December. Bob is an attorney in Virginia Beach in practice with his father and Fred Lowe. Ann-Meade taught while they lived in Richmond but has retired. Sandra Dixon Bowen and E.J. live in Richmond where E.J. practices dentistry. They have two children Sidney, 3, and Chuck, 5 months. Patti Pound Berry is in her second year of medical school at the University of South Florida. Marilyn Sterner Keat has three boys and is currently dancing with the Penn State orchesis group.

David and Diane Stuart Perrine have been stationed in Europe for the past two years and expect to be stateside in another year. With their three children, they have traveled a lot in Europe and have done as much skiing as possible. Sue Spillers Reid and Bill live in Baltimore where Bill is an attorney. Their child Michael is one year old. Sharon (Teddy) Hall McBay and Welbur live in Arlington. Welbur owns and operates two ski shops in No. Virginia. Teddy is expecting their first child and therefore is not skiing too much now. Dick Franklin is a stock broker for Alex Brown Co. and plays tennis regularly with his wife, Jane. They have a one year old child.

Steve Parker is Rector of Trinity Episcopal Church in Collinsville, Conn. His wife, Jean Garde, is President of the League of Women Voters in their town. The Parkers have two girls, Lesley, 4, and Christine, 2. Yvonne Baay received her PhD in Chemistry in 1967 from University of Penna. That same year she married Dr. William H. Brandley, Jr. Bill and Yvonne have two children, Bryan Wm., 4, and Meredith Linn, 1. Yvonne presently teaches evenings at La Salle College in Philadelphia while living in Hatboro, Pa. Tommy and Linda Symmes live in Shelton, Conn., and Tommy works for Olin Corporation, Stamford, Conn. Their child randel John is 2.

Crellin James Byrd tutors geometry in a school for emotionally disturbed children in Richmond. Her husband co-owns a computer leasing company — Commonwealth Computers Co. Their boys are Lee, 7, and Garnett, 5. Fran Marshall Derks is working on her Masters in Elementary Ed. at the College and has three children, 9, 7, and 5. Sandy McNair Hawley is assistant professor of history at Virginia Commonwealth University. Her daughter, Lee Ann, is 6.

Tom Palmer is a partner in the law firm, Brautt, Lewis, Beschickter and Palmer, Mannassas, Va. Neal and Judy Friedenstine live in Alexandria where Neal is still building houses. His newest hobby is flying his own Cherokee airplane. Sally Monroe Clore lives in Williamsburg with her two daughters. She received her degree from the College in 1970 and is now teaching school. Bill Beale is a partner in an accounting firm in Alexandria and lives in Gaithersburg, Md.

Carol (Kirkup) and Keith Bloomstrom live in San Diego, Calif., with their two children Kirk, 4, and Kali, 2. Keith is a data processing salesman for IBM and Carol works part time as a system engineering consultant in data processing. Barry and Marty Cervarich Grantier live in Richmond and have three children. Barry works at Capital City Iron Works which is a steel tank fabrication firm. Bill Jones is supervisor of employment, Blue Cross of Virginia, living in Richmond.

Phyllis Eason Galanti is not currently employed but is working for Godwin's election in the gubernatorial contest in Virginia. Her husband, Paul Galanti, was released from Hanoi on Feb. 12, 1973, after 6 years and 8 months in a POW camp. He is now undergoing flight refresher training at Oceana Naval Air Station and he will then become Executive Officer of Navy Recruiting for Virginia for 2½ years, stationed in Richmond.

Ray and Sue Roache Warner '64, live in Oakton, Va., with their children, ages 7 and 4. Ray is Congressional liaison for the Department of Transportation. He is also serving as president of the board of an activity center for mentally retarded adults and is active in the Fairfax Jaycees. Jim Cocrane works for IBM in Va. Beach. John Gravely, still paying for those days of spirit for the Indians, had another operation on his knee this spring. His wife, Charlene Stafford, is teaching in experimental 45-15 at Va. Beach and is looking forward to a vacation in the fall. Wayne and Rita Woolwine '61, have recently moved to Va. Beach.

Jane Miller Smith and Dave, '62, live in Atlanta with their children Stephen 5 and Catherine 3. Dave is an attorney and vice president for Tri South. Fred '62 and Judy Hawkins Coddling live in Fairfax where Fred is an attorney. Their children are Hayden, 3, Cady, 2, and Cathy, 3 months.

Lockett and Jerry Van Voorhis have just moved to Williamsburg where Jerry has become chief assistant to Dr. Thomas Graves, President of the College. For six years they had lived in the Baltimore-Washington area. In Baltimore, Jerry served as President of the Baltimore Alumni Chapter and Lockett taught Spanish. Jerry was on the staff of the George Marshall Foundation in Washington, and in connection with his work in the PhD program at Johns Hopkins, worked also on the Dwight D. Eisenhower Project in Washington. He was selected as one of five Congressional interns in the country to work at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Washington. Jerry's field of specialty is the defence complex and his work with the government involved his study in this area, with high level papers. Lockett and Jerry have a 2½ year old son, Chandler.

Suzanne Keebler Authur and Doug moved to their hometown, Strasburg, Va., in the Shenandoah Valley after Doug finished law school and two years in the Army. In their moves they have fixed up several houses and would love to restore an old house on day. While Cal, their red-haired son, is in kindergarten, Suzanne sews, paints and decorates. Recently she helped organize the Shenandoah Valley Music Festival Guild. Suzanne's college roommate, Kathryn Deeds, married Ronnie Young. They live in Bluff City, Tenn., and have a daughter, Piper Lynn, 3. Kathy is teaching school. Roger Bergey is coaching basketball at Harrisonburg, (Va.) High School. He and his wife Pamela have a two year old daughter, Melissa. Jim Robinson and his wife, Anna, also live in Harrisonburg. He is with Packaging Corp. of America and they have three daughters.

There were so many faces at homecoming whose names don't appear here, that I'll try to list as many as possible. I am sorry I didn't talk to every one of you and get you to write down what you are doing. Jeff and Susan Allen, Steve Barrett, Judy Beers Trelogan and Pete, Betsy Brown living in Vermont, Cynthia Fulwiler Puskar, Dale Harris Cohen and Dick, Liz Holland Lungler and George, Glen McCaskey, Priscilla Spindle, who wrote news about several others but not herself! Martha Walker Blanks, Charlie and Tricia Lee White, Gale (Westie) West Fretwell.

John and I, Michael, 6, and Mark, 3, moved in July into a seven year old contemporary home here in Greenville. We now have lots of room for guests and are sincere when we say, please come to see us when you pass through our town. Meanwhile, lets all start planning now for our fifteenth reunion! (The Alumni Society thinks we should switch class correspondents every 5 years at reunion time and I agree that a fresh outlook would be great. Please drop me a note if you will write this column 4 times a year for the next 5 years — after all, I've already done it 10!)

Bill Edleston was sworn in as an attorney in New Jersey in May. Bill received his law degree from Seton Hall University in Newark, N.J., in 1972. In law school, Bill served as a member of the Legal Aid Clinic and was law clerk to the Warren County Judge.

Brian White was married to Dee Nicholson ('71) June 24, 1972, and they are currently living in Virginia Beach.

David Kintsfather was discharged from the Air Force in August and is now studying for his Master's degree in Radio TV at the University of Mississippi. In addition, David has received a teaching assistantship to instruct a beginning television production course. David's wife, Nancy Scroggins ('71), is working in the telephone office on campus and also taking several courses.

Wynne Whitehurst is living in Portsmouth and is serving as counselor to Science and Technology students (about 350) and to 250 apprentices from the Naval Shipyard. Many thanks, Wynne, for sending along the following Chi O news.

Janet Ackroyd was married to Johnny Ellis last November, and is working as a systems analyst in Virginia Beach.

Expecting the birth of their third child in late February are Les and Ann Bradstreet Smith.

After teaching for a year, Carrington Salley has joined a law firm in Columbia, S.C. In addition, Carrington is active in the S.C. women's groups and holds a state office.

Kathy Friedman Bright and her husband, Tom, are living in Washington, where Kathy is working for Senator Charles Percy.

Bob and Judy Chase Kahn became the proud parents of Nathan Clarke in June. Bob retires from the Army in December, and they hope to stay on the West Coast where Bob plans to join a law firm.

Living in Williamsburg are Jake and Ginger Graef Smith. Jake is in law school and is clerking as well.

Also living in Williamsburg are Andy and Miss Galloway Parker. Andy is working for William and Mary.

Su Su Williams married Ray Villarosa and is living in Williamsburg. Su Su and Ray are both in their final year of law school.

Sal and Lydia Bulynko Jesuele are in New Jersey, where Sal has recently moved into a new law office.

Teaching in Richmond is Kaye Pitts. Kaye also worked as an Administrative Aide for the House of Delegates during its session.

Living in St. Louis are Bill and Janet Berglund Tabor.

Ann Nelms is no longer teaching, and at last word was looking for a job in public relations.

Jim and Linda Marsh Stewart have moved to Reston, Va.

Russ Maxfield and his wife Ruth are living in Williamsburg. Russ is working on his MBA at William and Mary. Their first child, Andrew, was born June 4, 1972.

Phil and Maggie Keator are living in Hampton where Phil is in the sign business and Maggie is teaching government.

Richard and Katherine Rogers Buriak are stationed at Ft. Leonard Wood, Missouri.

John Loeffler has been promoted to Assistant Vice President of the Central National Bank in Richmond. John joined the bank after graduation, was assigned to the commercial division in May, 1970, and became a Loan Officer in December 1970.

Mary Bee Anholz is on the faculty in the School of Engineering and Technology at Southern Illinois University. Mary Bee is working on the Career Development for Children Project.

Stationed at Mather AFB, California, as a pilot is Dan Farlin. Dan, in addition, is working on his Master's degree in psychology.

Linda Sundin Bivens is living in Hampton, where her husband Bob is a probation officer.

Stationed in Germany are Jon and Sandie Irwin Bilbo.

Ann Hitt and John Keifer were married in May 1972. John is working in Boston and Ann is teaching.

As before, Doug and I have a house in Old Town, the historic district of Alexandria. I have been playing lots of tennis, serving on several committees for the Junior League of Washington, and am in my third year of working as a City Planner for the City of Alexandria. Doug continues to sail every weekend in Annapolis and is the Director of Federal Marketing of Compress in Washington.

Please write . . . especially if you have never been included in our class letter.

You may be asking "Why such a short column?" No, I didn't run out of paper, or time, but I did run out of news. The grapevine has shriveled up. Now, the only information I get is what you send me. It doesn't matter whether you know me, or whether you think your news is "important" or "interesting" — just send it. If you don't want to write about yourself, you can tip me off as to what your alumni cronies are up to. And write often (at least once a year). Everything will get in. Now on with the sparse flashes for this month....

Greg LaBell is serving with the Army in Heidelberg as an information specialist. "I enjoy the Army and Germany very much and expect to finish my tour of duty here in two years." Working for Ma Bell is Diane Lindsey Hickey, a staff employee of the C&P Telephone Company's Engineering Dept. in the Washington area. Digging back through some old cards, I find the following people listed simply as "teacher": Lane Winfree (Alex.), Sue McGowan (Ga.), Jane Overstreet (Bedford, Va.), Anne Bedford Tamea (Philly), Christine Beck (Va.), and John Fawcett (Wheeling, W.Va.).

Had a phone call from John Hempel recently, and we discussed his exploits. After receiving his M.A. in Biochemistry from the University of Richmond last April, John now finds himself "basically unemployed." (He turned down a chance to study the peacetime uses of napalm for Dow). In between ditch-digging stints, he sallies forth from Annandale on exotic adventures. On a recent foray, John nursed his Packard to the Annual Packard Club Convention in Detroit, where he reveled in the glories of American assembly-line production and shed a nostalgic tear during a tour of the old Packard Factory. Then it was off to New England, where he found himself in the company of Cathy Bryan, Kenny King and others in a Winstead, Conn., bar. There they spent a fraternal evening swilling beer and munching a peculiarly intoxicating form of ginger cookies. A good time was had by all.

Joe Daragan called with the news that he has gone off unemployment compensation and is now a "Management Trainee" for the Mid Atlantic Coin Co., which runs numismatic nooks in various department stores. Eventually, however, Joe hopes to "leech onto the Government again" if he can find a suitable job. Before his discharge from the Navy last Spring, Joe had worked his way up to Yeoman Third Class. His final tour of duty took him to Sardinia for participation in a series of War Games code-named "Dawn Patrol '73." This bit of military whimsy was based on the eventuality of "a Bulgarian attack on the Northern Greek frontier." Joe had the crucial post of Radiotelephone Communicator on the Flag Bridge (that's the place where the whole shebang was directed), and he had the "tremendous honor" of relaying the very commands uttered by the Fleet Commander, Rear Admiral P.S. McManus (now ret.). (I forgot to ask who won). Afterward, Joe visited Athens, Barcelona, and Nice, then "we hit Cannes and the French Alps, where I ran around a la Heidi." His souvenirs from these escapades include a box of Havana cigars and a cask of Lepanto Brandy.

That's all for now. A good Christmas season to you all!

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Just a short note to commend the Alumni Board and its President Randy Davis for the top job they have been doing for the Alumni Society. The remodeling and furnishings for the old KA House is quite an achievement as well as many of the other innovative changes. Has any consideration ever been given to bringing the classes together every four years rather than every five? Everyone returning might then have some direct association with each class.

Homecoming was another top job, keep up the good work. Cordially yours

Howard M. Smith '43
