The Biggest and The Best'

1974 omecoming Wilford Kale 166

Homecoming 1974 will feature the biggest and the best of "The Good Old Days." In addition to the fun and fellowship of old friends and familiar places, the Alumni Society, with strong student support, is developing plans for a Homecoming Parade which will harken back to the William and Mary days of yesteryear.

As a special feature, the Society has arranged for the appearance of the eight-horse Anheuser-Busch Clydesdales and wagon. It will be the first time in recent history that a major outside unit has participated in parade activities at the college. This culminates 16 months of planning by the Society.

This year the Board of Directors of the Alumni Society agreed to recognize outstanding alumni by naming them honorary parade marshals and to have them ride in the parade. This year Virginia Gov. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., '36, Lt. Gov. John Dalton '53 and Chief Justice-designate Lawrence l'Anson '28 have been designated honorary marshals and have accepted the invitation to appear in the parade.

Gordon Vliet '54, executive vice-president of the Alumni Society, said that with the appearance of the three top Virginia state officials and the special participation of the internationally known Clydesdales, along with renewed student enthusiasm, this years Homecoming Parade promises to be one of the biggest and best in the past 20

The parade, which begins at 10 a.m. along Duke of Gloucester street, with its theme "The Good Old Days," will help set the tempo of the two-day Homecoming activities, explained Vliet.

For the expected thousands of former William and Mary students who will return to the Williamsburg campus, Homecoming offers through its class reunions an opportunity of fellowship

Special recognition will be given this year to the class of 1924 which celebrates its 50th reunion. Class headquarters will be at the Williamsburg Lodge along with the 25th reunion class-the class of 1949. Other classes meeting for organized reunions are 1929, 1934, 1939, 1944, 1954, 1959, 1964 and 1969 meeting for its 5th. Alumni are welcome as always.

Athletics have always been a part of the college life here at William and Mary and naturally are an important-part of all Homecoming activities. Two special events have been arranged between alumni and current William and Mary varsity athletic teams.

Friday afternoon members of the NCAA championship tennis temas of 1947-48 will play the 1974-75 William and Mary varsity tennis team at the Adair Courts on the new campus. Also Friday afternoon the varsity soccer team will face an alumni team at the soccer field at James Blair Terrace, followed by an exhibition match against a touring German team.

As usual the Alumni Society will sponsor the annual Alumni Golf Tournament, to be played at the Colonial Williamsburg Golden Horseshoe Course. Awards will be presented to the winners this year of the men's and women's low gross and low net.

The William and Mary "Big Green" will face the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers University on the Cary Field gridiron at 2 p.m. Saturday in the renewal of a rivalry which began in 1954. William and Mary

Daugherty and Dalton Will Receive Medallions

Daugherty

A distinguished member of the Mayo Clinic and the lieutenant governor of Virginia will receive the 1974 Alumni Medallion at Homecoming on the weekend of October 19.

The medallion will be conferred on Dr. Guy W. Daugherty, class of 1934, and the Honorable John N. Dalton, class of 1953.

Awarded for service and loyalty to the Society, the Alumni Medallion is the Society's highest honor.

A specialist in internal medicine with a particular interest in cardiovascular diseases, Dr. Daugherty served for 12 years as head of the section of cardiovascular disease at the Mayo Clinic.

The Alumni Medallion

Currently, he is Professor of Medicine, Mayo Medical School, and recently was appointed the Hill Family Foundation Professor of Community Medicine.

In recent years, Dr. Daugherty has turned his attention increasingly to the problems that attend the delivery of primary medical care. He has been instrumental in the development of certain satellite facilities and outreach activities of Mayo.

Born in Richmond, Dr. Daugherty holds degrees of doctor of medicine from the Medical College of Virginia and master of science in medicine from the University of Minnesota. His early childhood was spent in Chesterfield County where his father was a physician.

Following internship, he practiced for a time with his father in West Virginia. In 1941, he entered the Mayo Graduate School of Medicine as a fellow in internal medicine. After serving in the Medical Corps of AUS from 1944-47, he was appointed to the staff of Mayo in 1947 as consultant in medicine.

Daugherty served as a member of the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni for six years. He was Fund Chairman the year of the New Era Drive that included raising money for the Alumni House. A younger sister and three of his children all are alumni of the

A former member of the House of Delegates and the State Senate, Dalton was elected lieutenant governor of Virginia last November at the youthful age of 41. He was recently listed by Time Magazine as one of the nation's outstanding emerging young leaders.

Dalton showed early signs of leadership at William and Mary, serving as president of both the Student Association and his junior class. He was also a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, and he served for six years as a member of the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni (1960-66) and as vice president of the Board in 1966.

Dalton served as a lieutenant in the Army from 1954-56. He received his law degree from the University of Virginia in

In 1965, Dalton was elected to the House of Delegates from Virginia's sixth district. Serving there for seven years, he won election to the State Senate from the 37th senatorial district in 1972, and moved into the lieutenant governorship last year.

Dalton has been a member of many prominent state commissions which studied such issues as the courts system, strip mining, the handicapped, police salaries and retirement benefits, and the status of women.

Dalton and his wife Edwina have four children, ages 16, 14, 13, and nine.

Dalton's father Ted received the Medallion in 1969, and his uncle is currently a member of the Board of Visitors.

holds a 2-1 edge, winning the last meeting in 1957 by a 38-7 score.

Special Homecoming events will begin on Thursday night, Oct. 17, with the third annual meeting of the Order of the White Jacket (OWJ). The order, founded in 1972 recognizes those William and Mary students who worked as regular (or substitute) waiters or headwaiters in the college dining hall. Nearly 200 men are current members of the OWJ. M. Carl Andrews, '27, is current President.

This year's speaker for the OWJ event will be Governor Godwin, who while a student at William and Mary, also worked in the dining hall and is an OWJ Member.

On Friday night, the alumni will hold its annual dinner meeting at the Williamsburg Conference Center at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Thomas A. Graves Jr., William and Mary president, will address the alumni on the "state of the college."

This year's recipients of the Alumni Medallion--John Dalton, '53 of Radford, Va. and Guy Duagherty '34 of Rochester, Minn .- will be honored during the annual Registration for Homecoming will begin at 9 a.m. on Friday and Saturday mornings at Alumni House. Law School Alumni Registration will be held at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law beginning Saturday from 9-11:30 a.m.

Saturday's Homecoming Day schedule is crowded with many outstanding events. The activities begin early with a pre-parade reception and continental breakfast for alumni, family and friends at the President's House. President and Mrs. Graves will host the affair.

Following the parade, Luncheon on the Lawn will be held at Alumni House. The Board of Directors will hold an open meeting at noon for those alumni who wish to view or participate in the board meeting. There will be an opportunity for alumni to voice concerns or support, at that time, for a wide-range of alumni events and activities.

The annual Alumni Dinner Dance at the Virginia Room of the Williamsburg Conference Center will formally conclude Homecoming Weekend.

Winners of many national awards and participants in dozens of parades and events annually the Budweiser Clydesdales will appear in this year's Homecoming Parade as the College and its thousands of alumni salute Williamsburg's newest attraction-the Anheuser-Busch Brewery and Busch Gardens complex.

The horses and especially prepared float won the top award last New Year's Day in the annual Tournament of Roses Parade in Pasadena, Calif.

The Clydesdales will be stabled at the Busch property and will move to the site of old Eastern State Hospital prior to Saturday's parade.

Although of pure Scotch ancestry, the Clydesdales are now also raised in the United States and Canada. A Budweiser Clydesdale must be bay in color and have all four leg stockings white with a white face. The horses are usually three or four years old before they can join the hitch.

The Clydesdales average 2,300 pounds and stand between 17 and 19 hands high. Their shoes are specially made from a 4 3/4 pound piece of steel that is almost two feet long and an inch and a half wide. The harness for the eight-horse team is worth close to $30,000.

Six men-driver, assistant driver and four chauffeur grooms-care for the Clydesdales when they travel. Ten horses are taken on each trip to ensure that eight are definitely available for the hitch which pulls the large Budweiser wagon.

The horses require 1,100 pounds of oats, 200 pounds of wheat bran and an 80 pound bale of hay per horse per day. They are the most widely traveled horses in the United States, averaging 40,000 miles per year in three 40x80 foot vans especially built for them.

The appearance by the Clydesdales is the only scheduled Virginia event for the horses in 1974.

The Historic Sundial

In the center of the new campus in a quadrangle formed by modern academic buildings is a gift from the past--a sundial that has monitored time at The College of William and Mary for over 150 years.

The history of the sundial dates back to April 15, 1815. It stood on a wooden pedestal in front of the home of president John Augustine Smith. Smith, a physician, was the first college president who was not a clergyman and with his interest in scientific matters, it is thought that he was influential in obtaining the sundial.

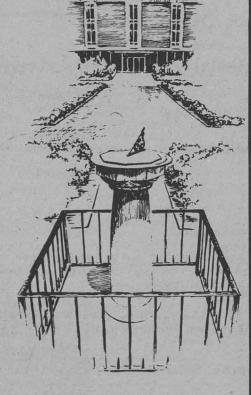

In April, 1859, William Barton Rogers, an ex-professor at William and Mary and founder of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, wrote to his wife of a fire that badly damaged the Wren Building, and noted that the sundial had escaped unharmed.

For protection during the Civil War, the sundial was sheltered by Chaplain William H. Gilder and was returned by Gilder's children in 1889.

It is believed that the sundial was moved during the restoration of the 1930's to the rear of the brick wall behind the Wren Building. In August, 1971, it was moved again to its present location.

It is not known who made the sundial, but it was hand engraved from a piece of naval bronze and apparently made for this locality.

There'a a chart for reading the sundial at the base and it is fascinating to see how accurately the shadows cast by the sun on the dial can be interpreted.

Tennis Champs Return for Homecoming

Several members of the 1947-48
William and Mary tennis team -- the team that won just about everything there was to win in the world of intercollegiate tennis - are coming back to campus for Homecoming.

Howe Atwater, Bob Galloway, Bob
Doll, and Jim Macken will play members of the current William and Mary tennis team on Friday afternoon, October 18, on the Adair courts on the new campus.

Nearly thirty years have passed since the 1947 team swept to 41 consecutive victories and the NCAA Championship. In addition, Gardner Larned won the national singles championship and he and Tut Bartzen teamed to win the doubles title in the Dixie Loop.

Other members of the team, coached by Dr. Sharvy Umbeck, were Fred Kovaleski, George Fricke, Lyman Chennault, and Bill Ozenberger.

Potential

An effort to assess the potential for greater private financial support for William and Mary has been undertaken by a nationally known firm of consultants, Brakeley, John Price Jones, Inc. of New

Staff members of the firm will interview key alumni and others associated with the College, including members of the administration, faculty and student body, over a period of several weeks. A report from the firm is due in January, 1975, for review by the administration and the Board of Visitors. The study, which will cost $12,000, is being financed from private funds of the

A comparable study, conducted in 1967 by another firm, Marts & Lundy, Inc., was inconclusive.

Alumni Join Faculty

Several alumni are among the new members of the faculty and staff who joined William and Mary this fall.

Three alumni have been appointed lecturers in law in the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. They are J. R. Zepkin, a district judge residing in Williamsburg; R. Gordon Scott, a Newport News attorney, and Mark Stanley Dray, an attorney from Richmond. All three men received their law degrees from William and Mary. In addition. Dray received a masters degree in law and taxation from the College.

Another William and Mary graduate, Linda Lee Allmond, has been appointed an instructor in business administration. She graduated from the College in 1972.

Beth Ann Bliler, a 1973 graduate of William and Mary, has been appointed an assistant reference librarian, Miss Bliler also holds a graduate degree in library science from Indiana University.

Other new appointments to the faculty include Arthur B. White, a high level official in the Internal Revenue Service, as professor of law; Gregory M. Capelli, a doctoral candidate 'at the University of Wisconsin, as assistant professor of biology; Eric Herbst, who received his doctorate from Harvard in 1972, as assistant professor of chemistry; John J. McGlennon, a doctoral candidate at Johns Hopkins, as assistant professor of government; and Gary Garofalo, with a Ph.D. from University of Pittsburgh, as assistant professor of economics.

In addition, the College appointed Kay Jean Domine, a graduate of the University of Michigan with an M.A. from the University of Wisconsin, as its new archivist. She replaces Herbert A. Ganter, an alumnus of the College, who retires

New Graduate Dean Appointed

William E. O'Connell has been appointed Associate Dean for Graduate Studies of the School of Business Administration at William and Mary.

He succeeds Marvin M. Stanley, who requested the opportunity to return to fulltime teaching status in the school. The appointment was made by Dean Charles L. Quittmeyer.

O'Connell, who holds degrees from Manhattan College, Columbia and Indiana Universities, was awarded the J.D. degree in June by the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. He joined the faculty in 1969 after teaching at the University of Connecticut. He was promoted to associate professor in 1971. His teaching and research field is financial management. Mr. O'Connell is a former head of the School of Business Administration's Department of Management.

College Names Choir Director

William and Mary's new choir director is Dr. Frank T. Lendrim, former chairman of the music department at Kenyon

Lendrim, who joins the William and Mary music faculty as an associate professor this fall, succeeds Dr. Carl A. "Pappy" Fehr, who served as the College's choir director for the past 29

A native of Patterson, N. J., Dr. Lendrim received his undergraduate degrees in music and music education from Oberlin College, and his master of music and doctorate degrees from the University of Michigan.

He was appointed instructor in music at Kenyon in 1961 and held assistant and associate professorship positions there teaching courses in music fundamentals, music history, and organ. He also served as director of the college choir and was organist there. He was named chairman of the music department in 1971.

Dr. Lendrim has studied in England and on the Continent under a grant from the Ford Foundation and in 1970 he studied at the Royal School of Church Music in Croydon, England, while on sabbatical leave from Kenyon. He served as choral director in a Ford Foundation Summer Institute for underprivileged high school students in North Carolina and has held organist and choirmaster positions at churches in Detroit, North Arlington, N.J., and Sayville, N.Y.

Kenyon to Fill Harrison Chair

An authority of both American and ancient Greek political thought will hold the James Pinckney Harrison Chair of Hisotry at William and Mary for the academic year 1974-75.

Cecelia Marie Kenyon, who has been Charles N. Clark Professor of Government at Smith College, Northampton, Mass., since 1969, will offer an undergraduate course in problems in modern history in the fall, dealing specifically with "The Anglo-American Background of the Political Thought of the American Revolution." Her spring semester course will be open to graduate students only.

Prior to joining the Smith College faculty in 1948, Dr. Kenyon was a teaching fellow at Radcliffe College where she received her M.A. and Ph.D.

Dr. J. T. Baldwin '32, Biology Professor, Dies

Dr. J. T. Baldwin '32, professor of biology and former longtime chairman of his department died suddenly on September 3, two days before his 64th birthday. Dr. Baldwin had served on the faculty from 1937 until 1939, and rejoined it in 1946.

The recipient of an Alumni Medallion, Dr. Baldwin was a botanist and responsible for the development of the college campus into a living museum of specimen shrubs and trees. Some of his plantings, including Dawn Redwood trees, were known throughout the nation. He frequently conducted walking tours of the campus for garden clubs and other visitors, focussing on the various species of Boxwood which he had cultivated.

He was also known within the campus community for his continuing contact with many of his former students and his constant interest in their varying careers.

A Phi Beta Kappa, he was listed in Who's Who in Science and was a member of an array of organizations devoted to botanic study and plant genetics.

Joseph Henry Lonas, an American of the clear-headed and rather laconic sort, came to Berlin twenty years ago on a Fulbright scholarship. Originally, he wanted to intensify his understanding of life modelling, and there also exists a stone sculpture from 1954 that reminds one of Brancusi and - in Berlin - of Karl Hartung. Two years later, Lonas produced an abstract figure and shortly thereafter a model for a memorial in Auschwitz, studies in which he confronted certain sculptural problems that have occupied him almost exclusively since then and that probably have bound him to the city in which he discovered them. He stayed here, and for a long time he has not been an American in Berlin, but rather a Berlin sculptor.

He found one of these problems not in the figural structure but in the bottom part of a crystal-like form that became a kind of building block for him ("Lar", 1956). He used this in sculpture and relief as the basis of positive and negative spatial volume; one is remotely reminded of cubism. Eberhard Roters spoke of a "cubical chain reaction".

The real problem since 1957: voluminous forms are contrasted antithetically with technical and constructive, spatially descriptive elements. One work, done in 1962, is called "Synthese": the supporting construction, towering, sharply angular, precise, and spatially tectonic, carries a bronze volume made of cubical but also amorphous and organic forms.

To be exact, these opposites are not blended but can be said to be in discussion, in conversation, but never in argument with each other. Various materials come to the foreground as the bearers of this thesis and antithesis: bronze and steel, brass and liquid plastic; the Kurt Schumacher memorial in Tegel (1968-70) is made of concrete and concavely and convexly bent metal

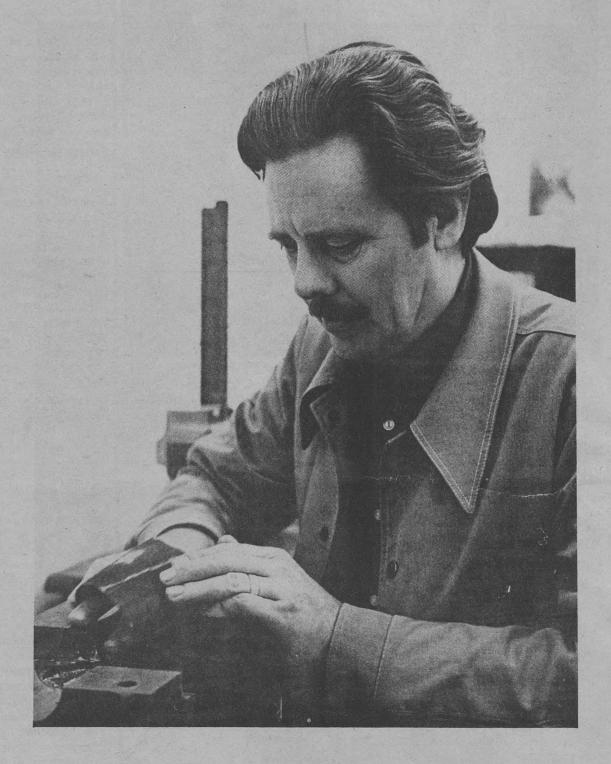

Just as at one point the cubical forms experienced a kind of chain reaction, now this is happening to the constructive elements. Lonas did not only discover and invent original closing and locking mechanisms for them, with which they can be rearranged and transposed in various spatial constellations, but the individual elements also have become more precise as well as more complicated with the use of the metal bending machine and other precision machines. His latest sculptures, still antithetical, consist of up to seven parts with almost endless variation possibilities. The actual synthesis has continuously moved closer: it can be found in the diversity and variability of the sculpture, whose limits Lonas never Even where the work is flexible and locks in place in various ways, this has nothing to do with kinetics. And even where technical precision is essential for production, the artist never subordinates himself to a machine. He does not use prefabricated parts, if only, as he says, "not to take away the fun" that exists in designing: sketches as if by an engineer, models in wood or styrofoam as if by an architect. Proteus, the changeable, uses the most modern machines, not the other way round. Lonas is concerned actually with the sculptural problem, with the synthesis of spatial description and volume, combining various sculptural ideas. He solves this problem as no one else does with the most modern aids that his time can offer him and over which, in an exemplary way and in every sense of the word, he has total command.

JOSEPH LONAS--Twenty Years in Europe

"I enrolled in the College of William and decisive in my development." Mary in Virginia, where I had planned to devote myself to painting, but under the over to sculpture."

Carl Roseberg remembers Joseph Lonas as one of his outstanding -- perhaps the outstanding - students in nearly 30 years of teaching sculpture at William and Mary. Lonas credits Roseberg with changing his direction as an artist.

Roseberg first met Lonas when he enrolled in Roseberg's three-dimensional design course. With an eye for talent, Roseberg encouraged Lonas in the direction of sculpture.

"He had a natural talent and inclination," remembers Roseberg, "and once he got into sculpture, he really took hold." Lonas, Roseberg adds, was not only a talented student, but one of the hardest working he ever taught.

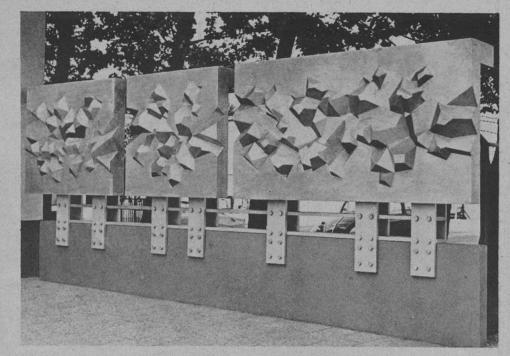

Roseberg continued to influence Lonas' career after he graduated from William and Mary in 1949. He advised

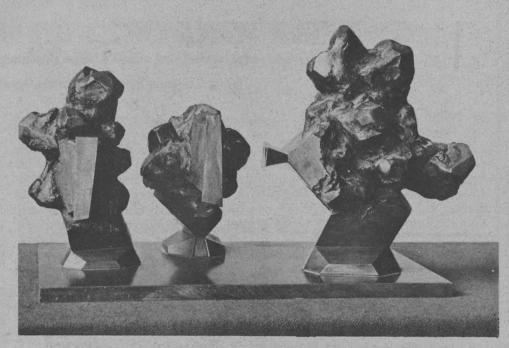

"In 1946," writes Lonas in an him to go to the University of Iowa and elaborately produced publication marking study under Roseberg's former teacher his 20th year as a sculptor living in Berlin, Albrizio. Albrizio, recalls Lonas, "was Lonas interrupted his studies at Iowa to serve in the Korean War. He returned influence of C. Roseberg, I soon changed and completed his master of fine arts degree in 1953. The same year, he received a Fulbright scholarship to study at the Institute of Fine Arts in Berlin.

> Lonas has left Berlin on occasion since 1953, but for the past two decades, the city has been his home. Berlin has been good to Lonas, and he has been good for Berlin, establishing himself as one of Germany's outstanding talents.

> Since the fall of 1963, I onas has taught at the Institute of Fine Arts in Berlin. He has held a number of exhibits in Germany, displaying the fruits of his talent and workmanship that are pictured in part on these pages, and which are captured in the words of two of his admirers, Thomas Kempas and Heinz Ohff. The material here is printed from the program "Lonas: 20 Jahre in Berlin," a copy of which the artist has inscribed to "My dear friend and teacher, Carl Roseberg."

Joseph Lonas and I wanted to make an interview with a tape recorder; however, in the beginning, the recorder had a malfunction, and later on when it was working again, our conversation had so progressed that a repetition would have been paralysing. The following is the summary of our reflections.

Lonas is a slow but constant worker. In the beginning, he concentrated on the figurative sculptural tradition, then reduced the natural form to a cubical, crystal-like composition, and later produced organic-vegetative and technical-constructive free forms. The fusion of these two latter aspects is his long-range sculptural problem. From each accomplishment, new forms are not suddenly developed, but slowly, step by step. His work from 1954 on, about seventy sculptures, demonstrates consequence and continuity.

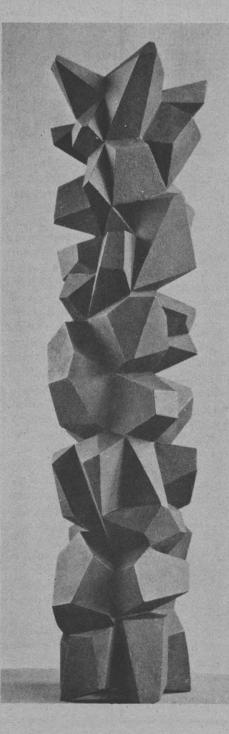

A sudden change to new trends is not to be found. "I don't jump on the band wagon." It was never his intention to have an enormous production. Time pressures and concessions would be, to him, in contradiction to the precise development of his ideas and their realization, to the discovery and control of technological props and new materials, and to careful workmanship. Considering the conditions of the art market, the results of this working-habit lessened the possibility of sales for a relatively unknown artist. "Even before my job at the HfbK, it was possible for me to work without depending on the commercial market, because my wife earned our living."

The cost of his sculptures is relatively high because of the extensive workmanship. Mass production of his work would be technically possible but very expensive. "I am very interested in designing sculptures in connection with architecture; thus, I have been able to show my work to the public. Although this concedes certain limitations, there is still enough acceptable freedom. Fulfilling the conditions of building-plans, specific sites, and team-work can be of great stimulation."

In designing memorials and such sites as demonstrated in Auschwitz, Dachau, and the Kurt Schumacher memorial in Berlin-Tegel, Lonas has shown the ability to incorporate content.

In his design for Dachau, he incorporated numerological symbolism, which was often used in early Christian architecture. He used the numbers 8, 4, 4:

8, the sign of eternity; 4, for the four million who were murdered; and again 4, symbolic of the four corners of the earth from whence they came. Lonas found a clear sculptural formation for the symbolism by using eight steel girders which support four square urnal containers, and four girders shift to the center and thrust skywardly. At the foot of each double support, there are four flat stones inscribed with a memorial text in four languages. The conception of sculptures for public places is subject to certain conditions and requirements which are coordinated with the sculptor's basic ideas in determining the design. The formal aspect is accentuated, but is not necessarily dependent on readable content. Although the total significance of a sculpture may not be simultaneously or equally understood, Lonas would hope that it may evoke a process of communicative value.

"Troika" in 1965 was the beginning of a development for the rearrangement of sculptures. It is a clear intention to engage the spectator. At first, a simple connecting mechanism is used, then later, locking devices are designed to facilitate the variable mobility of the sculptural form. Pieces can be changed around, the user can suit his own imagination and discover new combinations.

The way in which the different parts are arranged determines the meaning of the entire sculpture, so that a wide scale of impressions can be found — from calmness to aggressiveness.

The given variations of the static elements (which have nothing to do with kinetics or any kind of process progression) stimulate reflection in accordance with the effect of the environment and in regard to materials and form.

The sculptures of Lonas are conceived with a sense of harmony — not just a formal yes or no — a harmony between contrasting forms either organic-technical or amorphous-constructive; they are constructed out of materials such as bronze and liquid plastic, or brass and steel, between soft and hard forms. The endeavor to formulate a synthesis is accomplished; it is the permanent problem of his work. "I am opposed to thinking and acting in only one way. To find a new way means, for me, the synthesis of the antitheses."

The idea of harmony is mostly realized in the variable sculptures; there is no longer the best of all possibilities but the choice between many possibilities with equal quality. This relativity of the absolute corresponds to the premise which denotes the changeability of things.

The Year the Ladies . . . .

Dr. Kimbrough

Dr. Janet Coleman Kimbrough was not only one of the first women to enter William and Mary with the class of 1918 but one of the first to graduate. She whizzed through the College in three years, graduating in 1921, and then entered medical school at the University of Virginia, one of the pioneer females at that institution, too.

Dr. Kimbrough was one of approximately 20 women in the class that entered in 1918. Everything was a little disorganized, she remembers, because 1918 was a war year, and many of the men at the college were there as a result of an army program. After the first semester, about half of the 50-60 men enrolled at the College in conjunction with the program did not continue after the program was ended.

Altogether, there were no more that 125 students at the College when the year began, and after the Army program ended, there were probably not more than 100, including both women and men.

The men, Dr. Kimbrough remembers, eyed the girls with some suspicion, but no real hostility. "The alumni were source of the only hostility," she recalls. "The men students were not really sure whether they liked the idea of us being there or not."

Nevertheless, the men soon found there were some benefits to a female influence on campus. For a time, the girls were allowed to have the men over for a social hour right after supper each night. They would come to Tyler dormitory and dance with the girls for about an hour. In those days, recalls Dr. Kimbrough, the students "really danced."

That soon ended, however, because of public criticism of excessive frivolity at William and Mary. The boys could come visit in the sitting rooms, but the dancing was discontinued.

Tyler dormitory represented the source of some legitimate irritation against the women by the men, according to Dr. Kimbrough. It was the newest residence on campus, and the men had lived in it only two years when the College took it away and gave the building to the women in 1918. The other dormitories were rather old and rundown, remembers Dr. Kimbrough. "Their irritation was legitimate, and it had nothing to do with co-education," she says.

Although the women were treated cordially, they still had to form their own organizations on campus. The men did not let them in the literary societies, for instance, although Dr. Kimbrough remembers that one of the societies sponsored a debate on coeducation and invited the women to it.

The trouble was, the man who was appointed to speak for the women's side was a pre-ministerial student and anti-feminist. He began his talk by announcing there was nothing to be said for the side of the women and then launched into a tirade on women's dress (then entering the flapper age) and how it distracted men from more serious endeavors such as study.

Women probably never were accepted on a co-equal basis during Dr. Kimbrough's time at the College, but they soon had to be reckoned with because of their numbers. In her second year, there were 60, in her third year 150.

Dr. Kimbrough was one of the outstanding achievers among the women in the first class. She went on to earn her medical degree in 1926. She practiced for many years and now is retired in Williamsburg where she retains close ties with William and Mary.

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That beginning with the session opening in the fall of the year nineteen hundred and eighteen, the college of William and Mary in Virginia shall admit properly prepared women to its collegiate and normal courses, and upon graduation shall grant them degrees upon the same terms as those upon which like degrees are granted to men."

by Helen Cam Walker '64

"We deeply regret to imprint upon the pages of our history, the melancholy fact that we are the last class to graduate from this old college before it is defiled by co-education," mourned the historian of the class of 1918. Beginning in September, 1918, women would enter William and Mary on equal terms with men in accordance with an act passed by the Virginia General Assembly in March of that year. "This was an event which changed the whole complexion of the College," lamented another male student. "From the day the first woman put her dainty foot within our venerable precincts, from that day the William and Mary tradition ceases . . . .

Despite the anguished cries of the traditionalists, the admission of women marked the start of a new and prosperous era for the College-an era of steadily increasing enrollments, larger state appropriations, and significant federal aid

Although the story of the decision to admit women and of their first years on campus lies buried in old records, yearbooks, catalogues, and newspapers, it contains surprisingly modern overtones. The issue of women's rights was as hotly debated in 1918, when suffragists were making a final push for the Nineteenth Amendment, as it is in 1974. Opening William and Mary to female students was part of the general struggle for women's equality as well as an attempt to save the school from economic collapse.

World War I had a disast rous impact on the College. Enrollments dropped sharply as thousands of young men were drafted or opted for high paying wartime work. During the 1917-18 academic year only 131 students attended the College; another 96 belonged to the Students' Army Training Corps. A mere ten men received their bachelor's degrees and six their Teachers' Diplomas that June. There was talk of closing the Williamsburg campus and moving the school to a point nearer the population centers of the state. Small wonder the Board of Visitors had already voted to allow women to attend the 1917 summer term!

The question of admitting women to the regular session of the College arose in the General Assembly in January, 1918, in the form of bills introduced by Delegate William B. Fitzhugh (Northampton and Accomac) and Senator Aubrey E. Strode (Amherst and Nelson). Strode, whose bill eventually became law, was a staunch advocate of women's rights. In the same legislative session he sponsored a bill-ultimately defeated to open the graduate and professional schools of the University of Virginia to women and supported the similarly unsuccessful attempt to admit females to the Virginia bar.

"Frankly," Strode had written President Lyon G. Tyler in December, 1917, "I see no good reason why the Courses at your College should not be open to women on a co-educational basis, and it seems to me the time is opportune to move in that direction." Fighting off all amendments designed to delay or weaken his measure, the Senator argued for co-education "on an out-and-out basis of justice to women . . ."

The co-education issue sparked a lively debate. The Richmond Times-Dispatch, no friend of uppity women, predicted defeat for both the William and Mary and the University of Virginia bills. But whereas the University students and alumni stood solidly against women, the William and Mary community divided. President Tyler supported the Strode bill. So did a majority of the Board of Visitors, though one Board member, Delegate James N. Stubbs of Gloucester, tried to postpone the decision to 1919, and failing that, voted "nay" on the final ballot. The alumni opposed the change, according to the Virginia Gazette, but they did not press their case in Richmond with the same fervor as their UVa counterparts.

The author of this article, Helen Cam Walker, is a 1964 graduate of William and Mary. She is now an assistant professor of history at the College.

Fortunately for the women, a majority of the legislators either agreed with Senator Strode's 'justice' argument or went along with Senator Gunn (Henrico, New Kent, Charles City, James City, and Williamsburg) who "supported the bill as an emergency measure" even though he had no use for co-education. The Senate approved the measure 21 to 13; the House concurred 57 to 33.

Surprised by the passage of the William and Mary bill, the Times-Dispatch took comfort from the fact that the University, at least, had "been saved from petticoat invasion." The paper hoped Virginia women would be satisfied with their admission to the "ancient and illustrious" institution in Williamsburg, but feared that in the next legislative session "the same old battle for their 'rights' will be waged all over again." The Virginia Gazette worried about long-dead alumni turning in their graves, for co-education was a radical step indeed. "Yet what less is to be expected in these days when women aspire to all the rights and all the privileges of men, their place, their power, and their might--?" the Gazette asked resignedly.

Once the legislature had made its decision, the College moved quickly to prepare for the new students. The Board of Visitors voted in April to establish a Home Economics Department so as the qualify for federal funds under the Smith-Hughes Act. Work began on the conversion of Tyler Hall into a women's dormitory, and President Tyler and Professor James Southall Wilson were dispatched on a two week tour of assorted women's colleges ranging from Sweet Briar to Radcliffe. "Enquiries were particularly directed along the lines of student government and organization and the duties and qualities of a Dean of Women' Tyler reported on their return.

When the first women, about twenty in number, arrived in September, 1918, they were greeted by Dean of Women Caroline F. Tupper, a Radcliffe Ph.D. and associate professor of English, Edith Baer, professor of home economics, Bertha Wilder, women's athletic director, a welcoming editorial in the Virginia Gazette, and quite a few hostile men. To some male students co-education was a "doubtful blessing" and "a dismal situation." Others felt even more strongly, if a letter from an irate alumnus, J.E. Wilkins of Newport News, is to be believed.

It has come to my attention several President Tyler in January, 1919) that many male students of William and Mary College are opposed to co-education, and are not giving the female students that chivalrous treatment that gentlemen should accord ladies.

In a recent debate held by one of the literary societies, to which the young lady students of the College were invited, the most insulting language was used, and I am informed that one speaker said that the faculty was in sympathy with the insurgent movement to rid the College of female students.

"Where is the College spirit of 95 to 98 when the students of William and Mary stood for right, justice and highest ideals?" asked Wilkins.

Despite this hostility, women quickly made their presence felt on the campus. One woman served as associate editor of the Colonial Echo in 1918-19; other participated in College dramatics. They established a basketball team, the Women's Student Council, with Miss Martha Barksdale as president, and the Alpha Club, whose motto was "The first, but looking to the future."

The second year of co-education found women receiving three of six merit scholarships--Miss Barksdale held the Chancellor Scholarship--and one woman earning her M.A. Not for two more years, however, would the men admit that "the women students have in no way lowered the academic standards at the College." During 1919-20 women also fielded a hockey team and established the Whitehall Literary Society for Women. (The men had two such societies--Phoenix and Philomathean.) Important personnel changes included the replacement of Miss Tupper with Bessie Porter Taylor, Social Director of Women and the appointment of Mrs. Beverly B. Munford of Richmond, to the Board of Visitors.

In the fall on 1921 women students were able to move into Jefferson Dormitory, built especially for them with state money. They doubtless rejoiced that Tyler was no longer "the center of their social life," as the 1919 catalogue had proclaimed. Women that year could join a second female literary society, the YWCA, local sororities, and the debating team. Properly attired in their "black bloomers, white middy blouses, black ties and rubber soled shoes," they could participate in a wide range of athletic activities. The physical education times during this month (he wrote department offered "various forms of gymnasium exercises, folk dancing, basketball, field hockey, baseball and tennis," while the Women's Athletic Council supervised an active intramural program. Of course, not all women were intellectuals and athletes. Those who clung to the traditional values and virtues of the Virginia lady could join the Edith M. Baer Home Economics Club. Its motto: "To Make the World More Homelike."

By the spring of 1922 there were 674 students enrolled at the College. Women accounted for half the senior class, several women served on the faculty, and the distinguished reformer, Kate Waller Barrett, had been added to the Board of Visitors. Even the men finally conceded,"... we could not well recognize William and Mary without her women students."

Came to Campus

Dr. Chandler

Rawls Byrd

D. Gardiner Tyler, nephew of the president of William and Mary at the time the first women entered and a grandson of the former U.S. President, wasn't at William and Mary when the women first entered in 1918, but he had a good perspective on the event. Tyler enrolled in 1916, spent the year 1918 at an officers training program at Virginia Tech, and then returned in 1919 and went on to graduate from William and Mary in 1920.

Tyler remembers that he didn't particularly like the idea of girls enrolling at William and Mary. Coeducation was an entirely new idea in Virginia, he remembers, and while the men liked the women to come as visitors, they were not enthralled with their permanent status as students.

Still, Tyler, like other men on campus, soon came to realize the benefits. "I fell in love with one of them," he recalls.

The women did provide the men with diversions. Tyler frequently visited in the sitting rooms in the hall that bore his family name. One time, he remembers, some boys, in collusion with some of the girls in the hall, set off a fire alarm at 2 a.m. "We were on the outside looking in," he recalls.

Tyler went on to a law degree at the University of Richmond and a career in private practice and in the attorney generals office of Virginia. He is now retired and lives near Charles City, Va.

One of the students who came in with the 1918 entering class also had a famous name -- Alvin Duke Chandler whose father succeeded Dr. Tyler as president. Chandler spent only one year at William and Mary, went on to graduate from the Naval Academy and a distinguished career in the Navy returning in 1951 to follow in his father's footsteps as president of William and Mary.

Now retired in Virginia Beach, Dr. Chandler has only fond memories of that year the girls entered the College.

"The girls were unusually good," he recalls. "They were genteel in every respect, and they fit in at the College very well."

To prove his point, Dr. Chandler recalls a strike by the students on campus. Only the men participated. "The girls had nothing to do with it," he says.

Part of the reason may have been the way they were regulated. They had to be in their dormitories early in the evenings. Lights went out at 10:30 p.m. for the girls, around midnight for the men.

"They were so well regulated," said Dr. Chandler, "that in those days they didn't try to run the College."

Rawls Byrd, a retired school superintendent living in Williamsburg who has a school named after him in the Colonial Capital, graduated in 1918 -- the last class of all males. In his recollection, the graduating class was entirely against the coming of coeducation at William and

"I believe we were 100 per cent against it," he remembers, "but there is no question it was overwhelming."

Byrd attributes the attitude to the resistance to change, the fact there was less sophistication in those days, and the feeling that "the girls would upset our lives."

"I know they would have upset me as a student," says Byrd, "life would be disturbing with them around."

Still the girls came and prospered, and so did William and Mary. Most of the men and women of those years went onto distinguished careers, probably none the worse for wear - and perhaps a little better off -- for having experienced those pioneer years of coeducation.

Alumnus Elected to State Senate

Robert L. Myers III, class of '51, has been elected to the State Senate of Pennsylvania from the 31st district which consists of portions of Cumberland and York Counties.

Myers, a graduate of Dickinson Law School, was elected in a special election to serve the unexpired term (until Nov. 31, 1976) of the late Senator George N. Wade.

Myers' wife, Polly, and their three children, who live in Camp Hill, Pa., attended the swearing in ceremony. Exuding pride in the new senator, Mrs. Myers said she was "terribly proud" of her husband, who, she said, she knew would do a "conscientious job."

'51 Graduate Dies in Auto Wreck

Miss Nancy Ramseur '51, dean of admissions at Christopher Newport College in Newport News, was killed this summer in an auto accident—while vacationing in England.

Miss Ramseur became dean of admissions at CNC, a four-year branch of William and Mary, in 1970. Prior to that appointment, she was acting registrar and director of admissions. In 1960, she worked at William and Mary in the registrar's office.

Miss Ramseur received her A.B. degree in Spanish at William and Mary and her M.Ed. degree in guidance at the College in June, 1966.

Speir Appointed Appointed to Canal

A graduate of William and Mary, David A. Speir, AB, 1947, has been appointed Superintendent of Schools of the Panama Canal Zone. The newest member of the Council of Chief State School Officers also holds an M.Ed. from the University of Florida. He has also studied at Georgia Military College, the University of Havana, Cuba, and Florida State University

He is married to the former Peggy Overstreet. Their son, David III, was born in Bell Hospital, Williamsburg, on May 16, 1947, during final examinations. They also have a daughter, Beth, 23, who attends the Canal Zone College.

The Speirs have made their home in the Canal Zone since 1951. Mr. Speir has been a teacher of history, counselor, assistant principal, principal, supervisor of instruction, and assistant superintendent prior to being named Superintendent of Schools. The Division of Schools he heads has twenty-five schools ranging from kindergarten through college, 13,000 students, 1200 employees including nearly 700 teachers, with instruction given in both Spanish (5 schools) and English (20 schools).

Mr. Speir is a member of the American Association of School Administrators and Phi Delta Kappa.

YEARBOOKS WANTED

Requests have been received from two alumni who wish to get copies of yearbooks lost or destroyed. If any alumnus has an extra copy, he is requested to get in touch with the Alumni Office, Box GO, Williamsburg, Virginia 23185.

Mrs. Ruth Cashion Hundley wishes a copy of the 1921 Colonial Echo, and Mrs. Francis Riley Denton would like a copy of the 1927 Colonial Echo.

The Alumni Office is particularly interested in receiving copies of 1900, 1901, 1902, 1906, 1907, 1909, 1911, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1918, 1919, 1922, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, and 1935.

Any alumni who have copies of any Colonial Echos which they no longer have a need for, are asked to forward them to the Alumni Office.

Two Magazines Carry W M Stories

William and Mary has received attention in two prominent women's magazines recently -- Glamour and Mademoiselle.

In a small article on the activities of college students during the summer, author Peggy Schmidt of Glamour noted that Bee Cumby, a pre-med student at William and Mary, spent her summer in Valdez, Alaska, teaching Sunday school and in several Indian and Eskimo villages further north.

In a much lengthier article on William and Mary, alumnae Cathy Calvert '69, an assistant editor for Mademoiselle, explored the College of the '70s against an historical backdrop in the August issue of the magazine.

Miss Calvert spent several days at William and Mary this past spring researching the article.

We were shocked and saddened to learn of the death of Marion Milne Barba in June. Marion has been such a loyal alumn and a Kappa sister. I know that our class joins in extending our sympathy to John.

Dora Bouldin Harvey writes that her husband, who was Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Austin, Tx., died in 1972. She has since moved to 265 E. Elmview Pl., San Antonio, where she is director of religious education at St. Mark's Episcopal Church.

Betty Holt Nelson of 36 Royce Ave., Middletown, N.Y., writes that her older daughter, Nancy, is a dental hygienist and has been married five years. Her younger daughter, Pamela, just graduated from S.W.N.Y. at Cortland, N.Y. and was married in August.

Mary Holmes Hall writes from 12 Fiora Dr., East Rochester, N.Y., that she is the Media Center librarian in the local high school. Her husband, Bud, is Manager of Regional Claims Dept. of the Hartford in Rochester, N.Y. Their daughter, Debbie, a 1970 William and Mary alumna, is in graduate school at Indiana Univ., son, Doug, is a sophomore at Geneva College and youngest son, Chuck, is a freshman in High School. Mary's twin sister, Billie, is teaching and living in New Castle, Pa., near her daughter, Sue, and her family and is the proud grandmother of two.

Congratulations are in order for Frank Raflo (P.O. Box 448, Leesburg, Va.) who has been selected as the Loudoun Times-Mirror Citizen of the Year for 1973. A member of the Loudoun Board of Supervisors, Frank's 30 year career of dedication to community affairs has reached a new stature with his deep involvement in land use planning. Over the years he has served on every kind of committee and his involvement and leadership have borne much fruit. Frank and his wife, Frances, who also operate a clothing store, have four children.

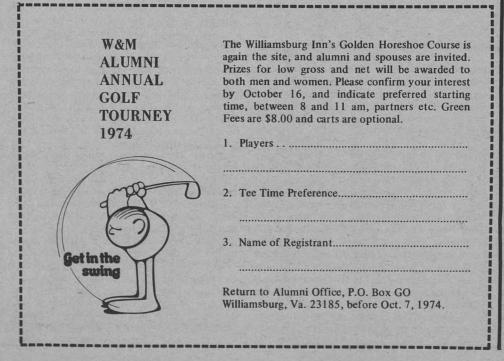

We had a wonderful visit from Jean Clarahan Bratton who drove over from Marion, Va., and spent a long weekend with us in June. Her husband, Frank, has been transferred to Chicago and they are now living at 2133 Birchwood Ave., Wilmette, Ill. Just prior to their move my Frank and I flew out to Chicago for a visit with my sister and brother-in-law and more recently had a short stay in Plainfield, N.J., with another sister.

Jack and Ann Garrett's eighth grandchild was born May 27 to their daughter, Terry, and Jack Cassidy in Staunton, Va. They expect No. 9 in the fall so I imagine they'll be losing count one of these days.

A word about Homecoming this year - Jack Garrett has reserved a room at the Hospitality House across from the Alumni House for the class hospitality headquarters, so let's plan to help with the tab for the room and snacks. If we each put in a small donation, it won't be a strain on anyone and we will have a central place to party. Do make plans to attend and get your ideas ready for our 35th in '75!

It's great to hear from you good people and let's have some more news for the next time.

Harlie H. Masters of Spring City, Pa., has generously answered my plea that long-lost class members write in some news. Harlie says that he retired in December from his Civil Service job with the United States Army Medical Materiel Agency. Since the agency was moving to Maryland, he preferred to remain in Pennsylvania to be near his oldest and youngest children, as well as four grandchildren. After a very short retirement period, he found work as a substitute teacher in the secondary schools and is finding it a rewarding and challenging

Harlie returns to Williamsburg for Homecoming on each even-numbered year and is looking forward particularly to our thirty-fifth reunion. He mentions seeing Bob Aldrich and Gus Winder at meetings of the Alumni Society's Philadelphia Chapter. Thanks for writing, Harlie!

Congratulations to Richard J. Davis of Portsmouth, Va., who was elected Mayor of that city in June, 1974!

Edgar J. Fisher, Jr. has been honored in Richmond, Va., by the Virginia Council on Health and Medical Care. Ed completed twenty-five years of voluntary service to the Virginia Council and was presented a placque, which cited him for distinguished and meritorius service. He was praised as being Virginia's best known, most highly respected and admired lay leader in the field of public health, bringing the organization from one defunct in funds to the "fat cat" or voluntary health organizations in Virginia. The Council has become the model for similar campaigns in other states. Our class is proud of you, Ed!

Mrs. Joan Blaine duPont of Easton, Md., has recently been appointed to the Board of Advisors of the National Trust for Historic Preservation. She is secretary of Historic Annapolis, Inc., and a member of the Anne Arundel County Committee of the Maryland Historical Trust.

News from Decks at Sandbridge - Herb and Bev Kelly here for August - Nancy Outland Chandler has a cute round house. Harrell Morris and Jean McPherrin Morris have also beach house here (like a barn); Hunter Andrews here for a party and told of a party at Will Grover's. Nat and Mary Jane Coleman were there. Picked up news of them at Greenbriar too. They live in Greenville, Tenn. Micky working with art and movie programs.

Ann Hitch Kilgore, Mayor of Hampton, Va., was one of thirteen mayors talking with President Ford. Dick Davis is the new mayor of Portsmouth, Va. and much in the news. Buddy Newby is back in Norfolk and has a consulting Milt Greenblatt called from Williamsburg the other day - coming to Homecoming. Also coming are Herbert Smith and Martha Macklin Smith. She's been in news much from Hot Springs defending her title on the golf course.

Carole Talbot Eglehoff also at Sandbridge for August. Connie Curtis Laws here for a day back from stay at Mt. Lake with children, Recently Ebie Berkeley Harrison and Bob at beach from Philadelphia. At various gatherings were Pete Whittemore and Jane Whittemore, Jean Shoenwulf Preston (full of life on boat and at Tides Inn). She sees Nancy and Dixon Foster. Also saw Jodie Koonsman Haycox and Jean Boyd McIntyre (daughter a freshman for next year).

We are planning on Homecoming also are Brunners, Griffiths, Williams and Tillars. See vou there.

Hello classmates - Where have you been since last Homecoming? News of you is rather sparce. Let's try and catch up.

James L. Bray (Jim), associate professor of education and resident director of the Governor's School of North Carolina, has recently had his seventh one-act play, "The Blue and the Gray, and the Black", accepted for publication. He has authored over 30 television scripts, and his plays include "A Vote for Arnold Harris", "A Cry of Crows", "The Counting People", and "Princess O'Toole". Jim as we all know was associated for some 18 summers with "The Common Glory" both as actor and director of publicity. He lives in Winston-Salem, N.C., with his wife of 25 years, Virginia, and two sons, David and Brian.

Also in North Carolina, Jouett Vernon Cosby Summerell. Fayetteville, has recently received a Doctor of Ministry degree from Union Theological Seminary.

And in Charlotte, N.C., Charles Price Acker has joined the Interstate Securities Corporation as an account executive. He has worked with several brokerage firms in the region.

Back in Virginia, Charlotte Walter Fitzgerald has been awarded the degree of Master of Science in Education by Old Dominion University, Charlotte resides in Norfolk,

Also in Norfolk, Frederick Herman has been elected chairman of the Virginia Historic Landmarks Commission. He has been a member of the commission since its establishment by act of the General Assembly in 1966. After William and Mary he received his Ph.D. from the Fletcher School at Tufts University and has taught at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Old Dominion University and Virginia Wesleyan College.

Jack Hight, Palm Beach, Fla., has recently been elected to the Board of Directors of Allied Capital Corporation, a Washington-based small business investment company. Jack received a master's degree in foreign affairs from George Washington University, and was an administrative assistant to President Johnson when he was a senator.

An exciting note from Jack Fritz. He has retired as Dean of Liberal Arts for the Madison Campus of Fairleigh Dickinson University in Jersey, and has returned to full-time teaching as professor of British and early American history. In recognition of his services to the University, a John H. Fritz History Seminar Room has been established at Fairleigh Dickinson. It is decorated in the colonial American manner with a portrait of Jack over the fireplace. Always involved, Jack has been appointed chairman of the Morris County American Revolution Bicentennial Committee. The Continental Army wintered there in 1777 and 1779-80. Recently Jack was in London as an invited guest to the marriage of Princess Anne and Captain Mark Phillips, both of whom are his personal friends.

William H. Saunders of Rochester, N.J., has had a book published, MECHANISMS OF ELIMINATION REACTIONS, co-authored with A. F. Cockerill, and published by Wiley-Interscience.

Robert S. Trigg, has left Armstrong Cork Co. and has opened his own office for the practice of law in Lancaster, Pa.

And finally a warm note from Wilma Spevak Galbraith, Scotch Plains, N.J., echoeing how we all felt about our 25th reunion. She thought we all looked so great and had such fun - Let's do it again!

Mrs. Robert R. Morrison (Phyllis Reardon) 912 Jamaica Way Bakersfield, Calif. 93309

Sure hope that everybody has had a nice summer and will send along information of who you might have run into. One evening in July Bob came home and announced as he walked in that he had a surprise. It was Bill Low, who is Manager of the Occidental Petroleum Office in Houston. It was really great to see Bill and talk about remember when. We also decided that we should plan on going to our 25th in 1975. Hope the rest of you are planning too.

Joe Brinkley has been named to the post of associate executive director of The Lighthouse, The New York Association for the Blind. Joe has done a variety of interesting things including secretary-treasurer of the Alfred P. Sloan Founcation and vice president of the American Farm School in Greece. From 1961 to 1967 he was with Free Europe, Inc. Joe and his wife live in Manhattan.

John Watson has been recently appointed to the position of Director of Research and Circulation for Medical World News, Contemporary Surgery, and Contemporary Ob/Gyn. John lives in Norwalk, Conn., with his wife, Ida, and daughters, Linda, Debra and Kathleen. Laurence Johnson has been appointed Marketing Director of Bread Products for Interstate Brands Corporation. Laurence and his wife live in Shawnee Mission, Kansas. For those who aren't familiar with this name just think of Dolly Madison, Weber, Millbrook, etc. and the Charlie Brown commercials. The Johnsons have three children.

Gurth Blackwell, has been elected Vice President of the Marine Midland Services Corporation (a bank). Gurth joined the bank in 1957 and was elected an assistant secretary in 1961, assistant vice president in 1965 and vice president in 1969. Gurth, his wife and two sons live in Webster, N.Y. Please plan to send a note to me before the next issue. Summers are hectic but also a good time for catching up with old friends, even if only by mail. Don't forget to start planning for

Mrs. J. Mitchell Brown (Marguerite Huff) 6720 Deland Drive West Springfield, Va. 22150

Hello, all you alumni of 20 years!

Those attending Homecoming will no doubt see Sandy and Pete Crenier who are making plans as Jay and I are. Sandy says they have a daughter, Kim, in Purdue, having completed one year. Son, Ted, is a junior now in high school. Pete is now district sales manager in New York for A.E. Staley Co,'s Consumer Products Group.

Alan Canfield and wife Jeanne have moved to Beaverton, Ore. Alan is working with Standard Insurance Co. He had spent 16 years with his previous company, ten of them in California. The change was a welcome one. Their son, Doug, has his own small business of tying fishing flies. He calls it "Doug's Bugs",

Pete Griffin has established his own law practice in Lock Haven, Pa.

Don Jenkins who lives in Richmond, has been elected chairman of the Virginia section of the American Chemical Society. After attending William and Mary, he received his Ph.D. from Northwestern University. He is with A.H. Robins Co. as director of scientific development.

Drexel Enterprises has named Carl Taylor as director of store planning. He has been able to travel widely in Europe as the recipient of a Parson's scholarship and an architectural grant. He has taken courses in retailing and architecture at New York University and at Columbia.

John Laughlin of Richmond, Va., in June was promoted to a newly created post of General Marketing Manager of The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company of Virginia. John has been with the company for 20 years holding positions of increasing importance.

Carolyn Mason Flowers of Lynchburg, Va., writes that her oldest child, James Andrew Flowers, III (Andy), is a sophomore at the College this fall.

D. Thomas Reel of Lancaster, Pa., holds the position of District Manager, Central Pennsylvania for Northern Virginia Pathology Laboratories.

Aubrey H. Fitzgerald of Newport News, Va., in the late spring was victorious in the councilmanic elections.

Mrs. N. Davis Wrinkle, Jr. (Polly Stadel) 2230 Conte Drive Midlothian, Va. 23113

Greetings from your new but old secretary. I take this job eagerly anticipating lots of letters and telephone calls brimming with news from all of you! On behalf of all the fifty-eighters, I want to thank Beth Meyer Fox for all the years of keeping us together in spirit. Through three class reunions, Re-Echoes, and sixteen years of putting it all together, we are most grateful. You have done a great job, Beth. Thank you!

Davis and I are in Briarwood, Midlothian, Va., just outside of Richmond. Our two boys, 11 and 7, and I trek into Richmond to St. Christopher's School where the boys attend and I teach Fourth Grade. This makes a lot of togetherness in our family and a busy life. I still enjoy my activities in the Junior League of Richmond and...summer... my time to revive and catch up! "Pappy" Fehr's choir reunion and retirement celebration in May, The Fehr-Well Fest, was a special Homecoming in itself. Aggie Vassos did a fantastic job spearheading the entire event. Hundreds of alumni were back, and our class was especially well represented. B.J. Nunn Knight had an open house for the fifties at her home in Williamsburg the afternoon of the festivities - a great time to catch up with everyone. Movies of our Spring choir trips were shown. It really did seem like a movie revival, The Spring of Fifty-Eight! Merritt Ierley made us all very proud as the College choir performed his work, Some Lines from Psalm 71, written especially for Pappy's retirement. Ginny Fleshman Gada was there from Raleigh, N.C., where she and Preston are in their new home. Betsy Stafford Elliott and Frank lent great support to the Alumni choir as did Ruth Barton Peterson. Ruthie and her attorney husband live in San Francisco. Ruthie has been president of the San Francisco Theta alumnae and is active with the Florence Crittendon Home board. She and Joe see friends from the College at the Forty-Niners games (Barbara and Terry Slaughter among

Bill Buyrn, formerly with a law firm in Norfolk, has opened his own office for the general practice of law in Chesapeake, Va. He and his wife, Boni Lyman, '65, live in Norfolk with their daughters, Heather, 8, and Laurie, 5. They enjoy building and refinishing furniture, gardening and sailing in the bay.

Callie Dean Woodring of Ann Arbor, Mich., writes that she and her husband, Doug, and three children have over the last two years switched from the academic life in Ann Arbor to the artist's craftsman's. Their new lifestyle includes living, working, marketing and traveling together as potters.

Edgar Wilson Kirby, III of Charlotte, N.C., this year was promoted to Vice President by the North Carolina National Bank.

Donna Floyd Fales of Miami, Fla., in April was selected as Captain of the U.S. Federation Cup Team. This is the fourth time she has headed the tennis team. This year's competition, for women of all countries, was held in May at the Tennis Club, Naples, Italy. She and her husband, Gordon, have three children.

Mrs. Paul S. Murphy (Joanne Arnett) 8 Beech Tree Lane Bronxville, N. Y. 10708

Greetings, Class of 1964. I hope you are all reserved and prepared for our tenth (can you believe it!) reunion this October. A debt of gratitude is owed to Ginnie Peirce Volkman who has written this column ably and faithfully for ten years. Ginnie has "retired" from teaching and from this column in order to care for new daughter, Kate. She and Al will attend Homecoming with Bill and Bobbie Mulcahey Frazier of Rockville, Md. Bobbie will return to teaching French this fall part-time following last winter's birth of William Jr. Gretchen Scherer Israel will also return to teaching French at Northern Virginia Community College this fall, following the December birth of son Andrew. Gretchen and Skip also plan on attending Homecoming.

Susan Trice Feiglein writes that she is leaving teaching in order to pursue a career in her first love, statistics. Her husband, Mike, graduated from law school and is happily associated with a Philadelphia, Pa., law firm. Susan and Mike have two children and are planning to attend Homecoming.

Terry Price Campbell writes of her doings since 1964. She received an M.Ed. at W&M in 1965 in Guidance and Counseling, then worked for three years as a guidance counselor in Virginia Beach, Va. She then returned to graduate school, receiving an M.Ed. in Deaf Education from UVa in 1969. Terry is presently a doctoral student in Speech Pathology and Audiology at UVa and is employed as a clinical audiologist at the UVa Hospital. Terry was married in October, 1973, to Lewis E. S. Campbell, '60, who is in the doctoral program in Science Education at UVa and is beginning his own farming business.

Jane Pierpoint Lynch left her position of Staff Assistant to the President where she had been since the inauguration of President Nixon in order to care of her two-year-old, Ashley. She is now in the midst of planning a move to Phoenix, Ariz., where her husband, John, has accepted a management position with Hughes Airwest Airlines.

David Mims is living in Columbia, S.C., having received an MBA from the University of South Carolina, and is a marketing representative with IBM. He and his wife, Anida, have two daughters, Laura, 5, and Meredith, one.

Michael Carter Bartlett is a librarian with the Fairfax County, Va., public schools. Michael has two children, a son, four and a daughter, nine months.

Victoria Williams Giraud lives in Agoura, Calif., west of Los Angeles. She has two children, Heidi, four, and Hansi, two. Her husband, Hans, is a civil eingineer with Los Angeles County.

Susan Judkins Gravely and her husband, George, '62, are living in Bridgeport, W.Va., following their June marriage. The Society of the Alumni office played a part in this romance, in that George contacted the office two years ago trying to locate Susan, who hadn't been heard from since going to Liberia following graduation to serve in the Peace Corps. He traced her to Chicago where she had returned to teach in 1966. Susan received an M.A. in Supervision and Administration from DePaul University in June just prior to her marriage.

Patty Vaught is in Spain, pursuing studies toward a Master's Degree from American University in Spanish.

Barry Fratkin became Director of Athletic Promotions for the College in July. Barry will assume responsibility for athletic ticket sales to individuals and groups.

Finally, I will be writing this column in the future, having "inherited" the job from my "friend" Ginnie, so I would appreciate hearing from you. Please drop a note telling where you are and what you're doing. I do hope to gather much first-hand information at Homecoming, which I urge all who can to attend.

Mrs. Timothy J. Sullivan (Anne D. Klare) 110 Duer Drive Williamsburg, Va. 23185

ALU/INI GAZETTE of the Clege of William and Mary

VOL. 42, NO. 3

WILLIAMSBURG, VA. 23185

SEPTEMBER 1974

The Petticoat Invasion

The Class of 1918

Equal rights for women is very much in the national spotlight today, and for this reason part of this issue of the Alumni Gazette is devoted to an excellent history of the place of women at William and

The equal rights for women issue is also a major topic of conversation on the campus. An Affirmative Action Advisory Committee, appointed by the President, worked last year to study whether there was evidence of discrimination against women and minority faculty and employees. The committee's report concluded that more can be done by the College to assure that vestiges of discrimination were removed, and that steps could be taken to improve career opportunities for women and minorities.

One focus of its study was the complicated matter of faculty salaries. The committee found what it contended were examples of salary discrimination against women, and disagreed with an administrative finding that such discrimination did not exist. The matter will be studied again this fall. In a nationally important study, sociologist Michael Faia of William and Mary found that salary disparities between men and women had narrowed from 12, to only two per cent in the four years that American colleges and universities had mounted affirmative action programs.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare this fall will further explore its proposed guidelines which would carry out the so-called Title IX of the 1972 Civil Rights Act. The guidelines cover discrimination by sex in athletic programs, admissions, housing, social regulations and other aspects of college life. HEW already is investigating a complaint that William and Mary has discriminated against women in its intercollegiate athletics program, but no resolution of that complaint is expected before decisions on HEW guidelines, after October 15.

The College now maintains a 50/50 enrollment balance, although many years ago there were three men for every two coeds. Social regulations apply equally to men and women residents, as the result of abolition of curfews, although individual residence halls develop their own rules to insure privacy and security, subject to administrative review.

A half-time Affirmative Action Coordinator, who reports to the President, will join the College in October to work with both the advisory committee and others involved in the matter. Budget restrictions facing the College prevented it from establishing a full-time coordinator's position, so an existing vacant administrative post was split in the process of filling it.
