THE COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

THE SUMMIT

William and Mary Braces For Historic Meeting Of Heads Of State

The period between Commencement in mid-May and the beginning of Summer School in early June is normally a quiet time at William and Mary. But all of that will change this year, for, as most of the world knows by now, Williamsburg will be site of the 1983 Summit of Industrialized Nations from May 28-30.

William and Mary is co-host, with Colonial Williamsburg, for the event. William and Mary Hall will serve as the International Press Center for the Summit, which will bring to Williamsburg the leaders of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Canada, Italy, and the president of the European Economic Community. This will be the Ninth Economic Summit — and the first to be hosted by the United States since the Second Summit was held in Puerto Rico in 1976.

In addition to the Presidents, the foreign ministers and finance ministers, as well as a small army of aides, will attend the Summit. An estimated 4,500 newsmen and technicians will cover the event.

Although the meetings themselves will be confined to the Colonial Williamsburg area, which will be cordoned off to the public for security, William and Mary Hall will be connected by closed-circuit to the Summit. And on the final climatic day, May 30, the heads of state are expected to come to William and Mary Hall to meet with the press and summarize their discussions.

William and Mary first learned that it might be a part of this historic occasion when White House representatives came to the College in August 1982 for a brief tour of its facilities. Williamsburg was one of several sites under consideration. Others included Keystone Resort in Colorado, Yosemite National Park in California, Lake Placid, N.Y., Jackson Hole, Wyo., and several other western sites.

In October the White House announced that Williamsburg had been selected because of its excellent hotel and motel facilities, the experience of local officials, including those at the College, in dealing with international figures, and the excellent facilities in Colonial Williamsburg and at the College for accommodating meetings and the press.

Preparations started almost immediately for the Summit, which is expected to cost approximately $7 million. In early April, the Summit staff set up headquarters in the Campus Center — in the basement and on the second floor — and stationed Marines at the doors to guard access to the areas which they occupy.

Under the overall direction of Michael McManus, a deputy assistant to President Reagan, the organizers have a mammoth undertaking on preparing for the Summit. Preparations involve the facilities of three nearby airports, 5,500 hotel rooms, 200 cars, 25 miles of new telephone lines, at least 600 phones, construction of a large press center in William and Mary Hall with briefing rooms for each of the seven governments represented, 2,500 miscellaneous staff people (from advance men and technicians to drivers and security personnel), and food facilities around the clock for reporters.

In addition to the Campus Center, Summit officials have been in and around William and Mary Hall preparing for the hordes of reporters and backup personnel for the Summit. According to one report, more than $1 million will be spent on preparing the Hall to serve as the International Press Center. David Charlton '73, director of auxiliary enterprises, estimated that $350,000 had already gone into the building by May 1 in general remodeling work and in installing air conditioning in areas that were not already cooled. The main arena of the Hall will serve as the primary staging area for press conferences while the adjacent rooms around the perimeter will be remodeled and air conditioned for individual press centers for each of the seven countries. Summit staff members have moved into the offices formerly occupied by administrators and coaches, who moved their operations to other areas on campus including the library. One staff member, Bob Sheeran '67, sports information director, has relocated to the press box at Cary Stadium.

While the relocations have caused minor inconveniences, the disruption to the campus has been kept to a minimum. Commencement, for instance, will go on as scheduled in William and Mary Hall, although parents may find parking a bit more difficult since some 60 media trailers will take up about 100,000 of the 240,000 square feet in the parking lot.

Duane A. Dittman (left), vice president for university advancement, serves as the College's representative on the community task force coordinating the Summit, which is headed by Norman G. Beatty, vice president for media and government relations, at Colonial Williamsburg. Charles M. Holloway (right), director of university communications, is chairman of the College task force, while Albert O. Louer '67 (standing) is director of the Colonial Williamsburg Press Bureau, (Colonial Williamsburg photo)

Other than parking, the Summit hasn't "caused us a bit of trouble," says W. Samuel Sadler '64, dean of students, whose office administers Commencement. "We've had good cooperation and from the beginning they understood the importance of having the facilities available to us."

In some respects, Sadler says the presence of the Summit has even improved Commencement weekend. Since the Commencement dance couldn't be held in the Campus Center, the White House helped the College locate a large tent in Washington so that the dance could be held in the Sunken Garden. The tent, which the Summit staff will subsidize, will have a floor large enough to seat 600, with a bandstand, serving area, and dance area. In William and Mary Hall, robing rooms that the College has had to cool with portable air conditioners will now have permanent air conditioning as a result of the Summit.

In addition to William and Mary Hall, the networks are expected to broadcast from sites on the Ancient Campus during the Summit. Today, Good Morning America, and This Week With David Brinkley have all expressed an interest in originating from the Wren Building and nearby areas.

In effect, William and Mary will be tied by television to all parts of the Western World and Japan during the Summit, since foreign networks, in addition to the American networks, will beam news from William and Mary Hall.

"The Summit will bring increased attention to William and Mary, not only in this country but worldwide," says Charles M. Holloway, director of university communications, who is serving as the chairman of a College task force which is coordinating William and Mary's involvement in the Summit.

Larry Eastland, director of operations for the Summit, addressed the Board of Visitors at its April meeting.

"We're grateful to be here," said Eastland. "I am here to serve the President of the United States, and he will be here to serve you. I hope that when we leave town in six weeks we will have conducted ourselves in such a way that you will be glad to have us back again in the future."

Responded Herbert V. Kelly '40, rector of the College: "You will always be welcome to come back to William and Mary."

President's House Celebrates 250th Anniversary

Series Of Events To Open With Publication Of Rouse Book

The Friends of the President's House at William and Mary has scheduled a series of events to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the famous home, the oldest president's house on any American campus. Alumni are invited to attend the events which are:

June 24th

The Friends of the President's House and the Junior Woman's Club of Williamsburg will sponsor a benefit luncheon to launch Parke Rouse, Jr.'s book on the social history of the house entitled, A House for a President. The luncheon will feature the plantation menu served in the Virginia Room of the Williamsburg Conference Center with waiters in 18th century attire.

October 28th

"Music of the President's House" will offer a day of music in the house to be performed by talented musicians from the college and the community and will consist of chamber music of the 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries.

October 29th

A black tie dinner will have Clement Conger, curator of the White House and State Department reception rooms, as its keynote speaker.

January 1984

A special exhibit of "Furnishings from the President's House" will be seen in the college's new Muscarelle Gallery; in addition a series of educational seminars on 18th century music, history, literature, and fine arts will be offered.

I WISH TO BE PLACED ON THE MAILING LIST FOR THE FOLLOWING:

- June 24th Book and Author Luncheon
- October 28th Day of Music in the President's House
- October 29th Black tie benefit dinner
- January 1984 Special exhibit and educational seminars

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

College Compares Favorably With Ivies — Except In Money

by Aubrey '47 and Sissy '49 Mason
Co-chairmen, William and Mary Fund

William and Mary has long been perceived as qualitatively comparable to the Ivy League schools. Those eight universities have solid academic programs, highly competitive admissions policies, respected faculties, and are steeped in the traditions of their generations of educational services.

Because William and Mary's image and quality are consistent with those of the Ivies, the College is often assumed to be a private institution. Five of William and Mary's top ten competitors for "accepted" students are Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Dartmouth, and Princeton. Medical and law schools compete for our graduates and their success rates are extraordinarily high.

As further evidence that this perception is valid, William and Mary is included in a new book listing those state colleges and universities which rival the best private institutions in America.

What clearly separates us from the private Ivies, however, is private support.

Unlike our 290-year tradition of academic excellence, our tradition of "replenishing the well" is a relatively new one. While the private Ivies have been asking their alumni for money for generations, William and Mary alumni have only within the last few years been solicited aggressively for support of their alma mater. Harvard and Yale have hundreds of millions of dollars in endowment generating income for their programs; William and Mary has only just reached $24 million. Dartmouth, with a similar-sized alumni body, raised $8 million through their annual fund drive last year; William and Mary's 1982-83 goal, by comparison, is $640,000.

The College's 1983-84 operating budget is $52 million. $19.3 million has been allocated from the State's General Fund, and another $30.5 million will be derived from tuition, fees, and auxiliary enterprises. The remaining $2.2 million must come from private support — either indirectly, as income from general endowment, or directly, as annual expendable gifts.

The current William and Mary Fund must provide $640,000 of that $2.2 million required to meet the needs of next year's operating budget. Success will also bring to the College an additional $40,000 in personal gifts from the Board of Visitors who have challenged alumni to increase their giving, as the Board has done, to reach this goal. To date, we are at $490,000, with $150,000 to go to claim success.

If you have not made your gift to the William and Mary Fund, please do so today. If you have already given, and are in a position to do so, please consider a second gift.

We have all benefitted from our College educations, and we invite you to join us in returning to the Alma Mater of a Nation a generous share of its investment in us.

We have all drunk from wells we did not dig, and been warmed by fires we did not build.

Choir Concert Set For June 11

Concert Will Highlight Alumni Choir Reunion Weekend

The William and Mary Alumni Choir will present an All-Star Alumni Concert on Saturday, June 11, at 7 p.m. Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall. This admission-free concert will be open to the public on a first-come-first-seated basis. (Audience capacity at Phi Beta Kappa Hall is under 800.)

The concert will be a highlight of the Alumni Choir Reunion weekend. Members from all past choirs since 1946 — both those who served under Dr. Carl A. "Pappy" Fehr and those who were directed by Dr. Frank T. Lendrim — will be represented in the 130-voice ensemble which is gathering for a weekend of four rigorous rehearsals, food, fellowship and fun. A second important mailing has been sent to those fellowship and fun. A second important mailing has been sent to those of past choirs who have expressed an interest in attending this reunion. Dr. Lendrim is currently on sabbatical leave in England. Dr. Fehr, who will be directing the alumni choir, and his wife Alice will be honored during the weekend in tribute to their Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary.

The hour-plus program, which will begin with Dr. Fehr's arrangements of "America the Beautiful," will include Brahms' "Schicksalslied," Mozart's "Regina Coeli," two 8-part pieces — "Crucifixus" by Lotti and a Mueller arrangement of "Now Thank We All Our God," "Madame Jeanette" by Murray, "Shenandoah" and the spirituals "He's Got the Whole World in his Hands" and "Roll Jordan Roll." Other selections familiar to past choir members will round out the program. Tracy Russell '60, now completing doctorate-level courses in music at Northwestern University, will accompany the group.

A brief reception will follow at Andrews Gallery Foyer.

It Was A Grand "Olde Guarde" Time At College

More Than 350 Attend Second Annual Olde Guarde Day

"This isn't the Olde Guarde, it's the Fun Guarde," said Mary Evans '83 (at right with R.E.B. Stewart Jr. '27 of Portsmouth and Sherri Sell '83). Mary and Sherri are members of the Alumni-Student Liaison Committee which helped organize the second annual Olde Guarde Day at William and Mary on April 14. The day included a tour of the Muscarelle Art Museum, a reception and luncheon, and a program in the Commons at which President Graves (above) gave a talk on recent developments at the College. But the big attraction of the day was simply the opportunity to renew old acquaintances and make new ones. Below, Athletic Hall of Fame members Lelia Chewning Ratcliffe '32 of Richmond (left) and Katherine F. Lam '31 of Norfolk (with Clyde Ratcliffe) remembered when they served as presidents of the student body at William and Mary on successive years, while (middle) Keith Cieplicki '85, a member of William and Mary's basketball team, listened as Melvin C. (Meb) Davis '28, Richmond, and E. Ralph James '16, Newport News, recalled their athletic exploits at William and Mary. Davis was a football star at the College and James played baseball and competed in track.

The William and Mary Choir, directed by Carol Longsworth, performed for the Olde Guarde following lunch and a slide show presented by the Alumni-Student Liaison Committee.

Former President Dr. Davis Y. Paschall '32 and Mrs. Paschall of Charles City County, Va., (Agnes Winn '31) enjoyed a visit with Fay P. LeCompte '30 of Portsmouth (left) while above James M. (Suey) Eason '28 of Hampton and Ralph K. (Kit) Larson '28 of Norfolk recalled Eason's athletic exploits at William and Mary in football and baseball. In top photo senior class president Carolyn Finnochio addressed the group after lunch.

PLAY IT AGAIN, MR. VARNER

Popular Band Leader Celebrates 30 Years With Alumni Surprise Party

When William and Mary band director Charles R. Varner was a young U.S. Navy musician stationed in Norfolk, he used to drive through College Corner in Williamsburg at night on his way to Washington.

Looking out his office window at Ewell Hall, "Chuck" Varner says, "The headlights would shine on the ivy on the wall right down there." In a way it's symbolic that the professor most responsible for the development of William and Mary's marching and symphonic bands should be able to look out his window and capture such a memory. Over the past 30 years, he has been a musical fixture himself to many William and Mary alumni now living across the nation and abroad.

But Professor Charles Varner doesn't take himself — or his thirty years — too seriously. Eyes twinkling, Varner says, "I'm not particularly proud of lasting 30 years. Length is no virtue except when you consider the alternative."

His voice takes on a serious tone as he adds, "There's nothing I'm proudest of, except my association with the youngsters, and my good feelings about them. I'm just proud to have been associated with first-class kids — they have to be to slog through mud."

And it was the "kids" — many of whom now are alumni — who reciprocated that affection this spring when they honored Chuck Varner with a surprise reception at the Carl Hibbard Memorial concert. The reception, organized by Michael Pollock '73, of Arlington; Michael Smith '73, Richmond; and Jim Anthony '52 of Williamsburg, the drum major of the William and Mary Alumni Band, marked Varner's 30 years at William and Mary with accolades from even the President of the United States who, with Mrs. Reagan, sent "our congratulations for this special occasion."

"While you can take pride in this tribute," wrote President Reagan, "your greatest satisfaction must derive from the many students with whom you have shared gifts as an educator. This event is a wonderful opportunity to show their appreciation."

In fact, this was the second time band alumni had honored Varner. In 1978, they threw a party on his 25th anniversary.

When he came to William and Mary in 1953, Charles Varner had already had a lot of marching band and music education experience. He earned a bachelor's and master's degree from Northwestern University, and was director of instrumental music for the Stanbaugh schools (elementary and secondary) in Michigan.

In his first year at the College, the new assistant professor had 32 marching band players on the field, compared to the 115 players, twirlers, drum major and flag corps members who marched last fall.

Working with such a small number his first year didn't prevent Varner from letting the other team know who was on the field. "They'd make a W, put the hats down, march off to the side and make an M with their bodies," he says.

Did he ever miss not having a band the size of Ohio State's or other large universities? Unhesitatingly, Charles Varner says, "I never missed it — I worked with a monster situation at Northwestern University, working with the staff in the summer on the All-Star Band. We did Buckingham Fountain in lights, three sets of battery-operated lights in a battery park around each player's waist.

"The fountain was changing hues all the time, like Christmas-type lights on cords — I'll never forget it. I saw marching formation charts like you wouldn't believe."

A member and former state president of the College Band Director's National Association as well as a member of several other professional organizations, Varner was founder and director of the William and Mary Band School until it ended in 1978, and that is another of his fondest memories and achievements. In 1979, he celebrated his 25th anniversary as the Williamsburg United Methodist Church's director of music, on "Chuck Varner Day." It's a position he still holds.

And at William and Mary, in addition to the marching and symphonic bands and his courses in music education, there's another band Charles Varner directs, founded in 1953, almost as soon as he hit the front door at William and Mary. It's the Stage Band, which had its real origins in his love of jazz and the "Big Band" sound. As a high school musician in Ohio, Varner played in dance bands with professionals who'd played big time bands like Glenn Miller's and Benny Goodman's. He had started playing clarinet at nine, and picked up sax later.

In the 1940's, Varner played with Lionel Hampton's band — "Lordy, I'll never forget that" — and as a William and Mary professor, he has continued to keep his hand in with professional gigs. "Doc Severinsen (of the Tonight Show) is a fantastic musician. Six or seven years ago, I played with him and his group at Virginia Beach, and he's a phenomenon. Some of the notes he plays are off the horn for some guys."

Varner's love of music began early, so early that he doesn't even know when it hit him that he wanted to become a musician. "I really don't know, because that's all I ever wanted to be." Music led him to his wife, Phyllis, who also taught music in the same Michigan school system, and it led him to William and Mary. "I came down for an interview. It was Easter time, and there were six feet of snow in Michigan. The flowers were blooming here, and I said 'That's for me!'"

It is for the Alumni Band that Charles Varner saves both special praise and special affection. "I thoroughly enjoy getting out there with the Alumni Band each Homecoming. Those guys and gals are just like a firehorse, even after years away. Sometimes we don't even get the chance to practice beforehand, but they just get out there and have a good time."

It's all part of the homecoming former students get from Charles Varner every time they see him. "It's really great," he says, "to have the opportunity to work with young people and have them come back to visit, to get to talk with them and see their careers progress."

Lisa L. Heuvel '74

Volleyball: More To It Than Meets The Eye

Sandy Craig Excels In A Sport That Requires Theory And Action

Volleyball. Nearly everyone has played it at one time or another in school, at a picnic, on the beach or in someone's backyard.

But, "there is a lot more to it than most people realize," emphasizes William and Mary senior Sandy Craig. And Sandy should know. She has played four years on the women's varsity volleyball team.

"Volleyball requires a highly coordinated group of six people," explains the Tribe co-captain. "There is a lot of theory involved and there are plays — planned courses of action — just like other team sports."

The theory portion of volleyball should be no problem for Sandy, who was elected to Phi Beta Kappa last semester. Her 3.75 cumulative grade point average is the highest among chemistry majors. She has been accepted at the Medical College of Virginia for next fall where she plans to specialize in either pediatrics or nutrition.

A native of Norfolk, Sandy first took up volleyball as a sophomore at Norfolk Catholic High School. She also played softball, her first love, for three years.

After entering William and Mary, she planned to continue her softball but found there was no varsity team. So she tried out for the volleyball team.

"Most of the girls on the team were from the North where volleyball is much stronger in the schools," explains Sandy. "As a freshman I was pretty far behind and had a lot of catching up to do."

Seeing very little playing time as a freshman, the following season she started substituting regularly as a center back on defense.

"I wasn't big enough for the front row," says the 5-foot 5 brunette. "The back row requires someone who is quick with good side-to-side motion and who can dive for balls."

"I guess my major strength is diving for balls which means a lot of scraped elbows and knees. Volleyball is a non-contact sport with the other team but there is plenty of contact with the floor."

Sandy, who plays left-front on offense (the team receiving the serve), stresses that volleyball is a game of specialization. These are setters, spikers and hitters on offense while others are trained for certain defensive positions. Although players must rotate positions as in a backyard game, once the ball is served they can move anywhere on the court.

"The setter is pretty much the brains of the team," explains Sandy. "She can detect the weaknesses of the other team and is the one who usually calls the plays."

The Indians posted a 21-22 overall record this season and finished third in the State Championships. With herself and Donna Hajost the only seniors, Sandy sees the Tribe being even stronger next year.

With scholarship aid and being able to recruit, the program has made great strides during her four years, but Sandy admits to mixed emotions about it.

"It is a thrill for me to see the team developing," she says. "The level of the players coming in is much improved. The coaches don't have to start with the basics anymore. It used to be they got raw talent and developed it, but now they get it already developed."

That's what leads to Sandy's conflicting feelings.

"I probably wouldn't have a prayer of making the team if I were just entering school," she adds. "I think maybe the person with the raw talent who needs a chance to develop is being cut out."

Sandy admits volleyball has been a great learning experience for her. "I feel I have made a lot of progress in the sport and that is a big accomplishment for me. It came easy in high school but I really had to work here. I found that if you work and work it will eventually pay off. I also learned to budget my time."

"I had to work harder at volleyball than I did to make Phi Beta Kappa," Sandy adds. "Don't misunderstand me. PBK was a big thrill. But I knew if I studied enough I could make A's, but there was no assurance that I could ever be good at volleyball."

Certainly volleyball has not been Sandy's whole life at William and Mary. She has been active in Gamma Phi Beta sorority and the Chemistry Club where she has tutored students. She even managed to play intramural softball for two years.

Sandy also plays guitar in a church folk group in Norfolk. She returns

Sandy Craig (with ball) and with her the William and Mary volleyball teammates posted a 21-22 record this season and finished third in the state championships.

home as often as she can to play for Saturday night Mass.

But when she looks back on her years at William and Mary, Sandy admits the volleyball team will be her fondest memory. "I was very close with the girls on the team and I will always cherish that."

"The reason I have done so well here," concludes Sandy, "is that the people who train you both academically and athletically are really great. They can all pull a lot out of you."

With Sandy Craig, they got the maximum.

Secretary Dole To Address Commencement

Elizabeth Hanford Dole, United States Secretary of Transportation, will deliver the 1983 Commencement address at William and Mary Hall during graduation exercises scheduled at 2 p.m., Sunday, May 15, in William and Mary Hall.

Receiving honorary degrees with Mrs. Dole will be Walter G. Mason, former member of the Board of Visitors and a former rector of the College; Ivor Noel Hume, antiquary and resident archaeologist for Colonial Williamsburg; and Kenneth Nebenzahl, an internationally recognized expert on rare books and the history of cartography.

Mrs. Dole is the nation's eighth secretary of transportation. Nominated by President Reagan, she won unanimous Senate approval and was sworn in Feb. 7, 1983.

Prior to accepting the cabinet spot, Mrs. Dole was Assistant to the President for Public Liaison.

Bruce Goes Home, But Leaves Barry The Ball

Barry Parkhill Becomes Head Coach As Penn State Lures Brother Bruce

Their players used to call them "BP1" and "BP2," and they look so much alike that even their most devoted fans could be forgiven for mixing up their names. But next season it will be a little less confusing around William and Mary. "BP1" has gone home to State College, Pa., and "BP2" is the new No. 1 kid on the block in Tribe basketball.

It took Athletic Director Jim Copeland only three days to name Barry ("BP2") head basketball coach after his brother Bruce ("BP1") had accepted the head coaching position at Penn State in State College where the two brothers grew up. After William and Mary's most successful season in 32 years, Copeland said the decision was one of the easiest he had ever made although he had resisted taking the easy way out.

"I tried looking at it from as many different areas as I could," Copeland said. "I wanted to resist doing the easy thing (naming Parkhill immediately) because it was the easy thing."

But after talking to the players, who were unanimous in their support of Barry, 31, and numerous others who called to recommend his appointment, Copeland called the coach back from Pennsylvania, where he was signing a prospect, and offered him the job.

Even other coaches who called to inquire about the opening voiced their support of Barry. "You'd be surprised at the number of Division I head coaches who called, either for themselves or on behalf of assistants, and they'd add 'but you've got a good person there already,'" said Copeland.

Bruce, who had been at William and Mary for 11 years, accepted the Penn State head coaching job on April 9 after he had been selected from more than 150 applicants to succeed Dick Harter. In six years as head coach, Parkhill had an 89-75 won-lost record, capped by a 20-9 record and an invitation to the NIT last season.

Barry had been with Bruce as an assistant coach for five of those years, recruiting many of the players who form the nucleus of what should be another strong team next season. Barry said he doubted that most observers will recognize any difference in coaching philosophy between himself and his brother.

"I believe in the system we have," he said. "I know it, and that makes my job easier. I won't have to teach 14 guys a new system. I'm not going to change something that has proven successful. My philosophy is the same as Bruce's: do what it takes to win basketball games."

Barry has been doing pretty well at winning basketball games for most of his life. The son of a star basketball player at Penn State in the '40s, Barry concentrated on basketball from the fourth grade on, according to his father. His dad knew he was hooked when he borrowed the snow shovel one afternoon to clear a couple of feet of snow off a court three blocks away.

"After that," Barry's father told the Alumni Gazette when Barry first came to William and Mary, "I knew it was time to put a court in the back yard, with a light of course, so he could play all night."

A high school standout, Barry was recruited to Charlottesville where he helped keep the University of Virginia in the national spotlight despite tough competition in the cutthroat Atlantic Coast Conference. Then came graduation, a two-year stint with the Virginia Cavaliers of the old ABA and one more with the Spirits of St. Louis. After a year as an assistant coach at Virginia, Barry came to William and Mary in 1978 as an assistant to his older brother.

Barry loses only two starters off of last season's ECAC-South championship team — Brant Weidner and Mike Strayhorn — and leading scorer Keith Cieplicki leads a returning contingent of six players who saw considerable action in '82-'83. In addition, the coaching staff believes it has signed four recruits who potentially form the best recruiting class in several years at William and Mary.

"It's not like the cupboard is bare," says the new coach. "This is a very good situation."

A year ago, Bruce was head coach at William and Mary and his brother Barry and Tom Brennan were his assistants. Now all three have head coaching jobs in their early 30s. Bruce is at Penn State, Tom Brennan took the head coaching job at Yale last year, and Barry is the new head coach at William and Mary.

"It's a great credit to Bruce," said Barry. "He laid a very good foundation here."

"General Grant, General Johnson And Me"

Tom Meredith '41 Is A Builder With A Worldwide Reputation

Brigadier General W. Thomas Meredith '41 describes himself as an engineer and farmer which he considers a very happy combination.

He started as a farm boy in Brandy, Virginia — home of three generals: "General Grant, General Johnson and me!" He began his engineering career at the age of 17 when he became a mule driver on the construction of the Skyline Drive.

"I drove four-in-hand mule teams, dumping dirt." Since then he has built everything from airbases to tunnels all over the world, both in military and civilian life.

As president of Parsons Brinckerhoff Construction Services, Inc., Meredith has been project manager for constructing a tunnel under Philadelphia that will connect the commuter rail system. The $260 million project involves over 40 prime contractors. He's also overseeing the Tampa Sunshine Bridge and a similar one in Bangkok. There's also a tunnel in Norfolk. . . and the list goes on and on.

"We're designing some hard rock tunnels in Colorado, too," he said.

Like many alumni, Meredith had connections with William and Mary before he enrolled. His father, a school principal, had a student named J. Wilfred Lambert '27, whom he encouraged to attend William and Mary.

"My father considered Lambert a second son," Meredith said. "I consider him the oldest living member of our family. He's not a blood relative but he's family." Lambert, of course, went onto a distinguished teaching and administrative career at the College.

Meredith spent only one year in Williamsburg before going off to join a Pittsburgh Pirates' farm team.

"I didn't know what the hell I wanted to do," he said of his short but happy college career. "I liked to play baseball and chase girls."

"I had an extremely happy experience at William and Mary," he added. "I came on a football scholarship although I'd never held a football before."

"That was the beginning of a fraternity of men in my life." One fellow ballplayer was also a fellow waiter at Trinkle Hall.

"Bud (Arthur Metheny '40) and I waited tables together, although he'd already signed with the New York Yankees."

Another William and Mary friend, Tom Martin '51, is now Meredith's attorney in Warrenton.

In 1941, at the age of 20, he volunteered for the Army and began what ended up being 32 years of service although it took him a few years to settle in.

"I found I was still a country boy, and it served me well," he said. "The next thing I knew, I was on my way to India. I was surprised to find the British there."

He returned to road building when he went with General Stillwell back to Burma after the city fell.

When he left the Army in 1945 he joined the Virginia Department of Highways in time to help build Shirley Highway in northern Virginia.

Within two years, however, he was back in the Army. When the Air Force separated from the Army in 1949, Meredith went with the Air Force.

As president of Parsons Brinckerhoff Construction Services, Inc., General W. Thomas Meredith '41 has built everything from airbases to tunnels all over the world.

"First thing I did was go to Saudia Arabia to build the first airstrip there," he said.

From 1950 through 1960 he was involved in the development and buildup of the Tactical Air Command and Strategic Air Command.

His thesis for the War College brought his work to the attention of the Pentagon. Written on moving troops and constructing facilities as fast as possible, it became a determining factor in his service in Viet Nam.

"The Pentagon called me about it in 1965," he said. "They needed to be able to put combat troops in a given area at a given time."

"My troops and I were responsible for getting the facility — airbase or whatever — built and into operation as quickly as we could."

He also developed the two Air Force combat engineering forces: RED HORSE and PRIME BEEF and commanded RED HORSE in Southeast Asia.

From there Meredith went into heavy construction of all kinds, including the building of the Air Force Academy. He was also involved in development of The Peace Corps.

"We developed the standards for the Peace Corps: What a country needed, first, what they would need in the future. I'm proud to say we still use those standards."

He makes his last assignment in the Air Force sound almost easy. But as an assistant in the office of the secretary of defense, he was responsible for operation and maintenance of all military — Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines — facilities worldwide. That's a lot of grass to cut — 25 million acres of real estate.

He had one small argument with the way the Air Force does things — he didn't want to retire.

"I put 32 years into the service, and I would have put 40 more," he said. "Mandatory retirement is out of kilter and I'm a good example. I was 'too old' for the Air Force, but I went on to become the president and chief operating officer of a major corporation."

Meredith certainly has not slowed down since leaving the service. The day he made brigadier general at Langley, he married his second wife — if not the girl next door, the girl from the next farm over the hill. They have built a home on her family property outside Warrenton where she raises horses and he raises cows and a few pigs.

"I don't ride any more. The ground's too hard and too far away. But I've got my own beagle pack and a driving horse. I've started collecting buggies and restoring them."

He's down to only 20 head of cattle, four broodmares and a couple of pigs but since he's still so active in engineering, it's just as well. When you've got a project in Bangkok, you can't always run home to take care of the daily chores.

"I don't expect to retire," he said. "If you retire mentally, you start to go downhill. Engineering depends on mental activity on top of the physical."

He's not too tired to work though: "When they say the time is right for the salmon to run in Scotland or anywhere, I'm gone."

It also leaves time for projects at home, like the new swimming pool. He wanted to be able to swim in the winter, so Meredith built a dome over it.

"There's a fireplace at one end, too. It's wonderful. My wife doesn't like it when the beagles run through, though."

Meredith says of his construction operation: "We don't build, we oversee. It's just common sense — logistics and forces."

"One of the key things in construction management is getting rid of the heavy and monstrous claims. They're not necessarily a part anymore, if the project is professionally handled. You can save the client a lot of money if it's handled properly. The market place demands that today."

It's all very simple for the country boy from Brandy and sounds a bit like the philosophy that got him to William and Mary.

"You took advantage of opportunities and worked like hell."

"My father was one strong influence on me, a very great man. He told us to do it well or don't do it at all. He had a strong sense of integrity."

Jane Vehko: In A Class By Herself

'81 Marshall-Wythe Graduate Clerks For Supreme Court Justice

When Jane Vehko enrolled at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law in the fall of 1978, it was with a wait-and-see attitude. "Can I do this or not? Do I like it?" she asked herself. Three years later, she had her answer. As editor-in-chief of the law review and the top graduate in her 1981 class, Jane Vehko went from stunning success in law school to stunning success in the legal profession: She became the first student from Marshall-Wythe to clerk for a United States Supreme Court Justice, namely Sandra Day O'Connor.

Actually, no one at the nation's oldest law school is particularly surprised by Jane Vehko's momentous legal achievements thus far, according to Dean William B. Spong, Jr. "Jane Vehko is among the most outstanding students who ever attended Marshall-Wythe," says Spong without hesitation.

"I suppose this was forcibly brought home to me during her second year," he adds. "I asked one of the best students in her class what his ranking was. He said he was first. I said, 'I thought Jane Vehko was first.' He replied, 'Oh, she's in a class by herself. I'm first of all the rest.'"

Considering her enviable law school academic record, Vehko was indeed a one-woman honor society. She was the recipient of the Webber Diploma, given by the law faculty to the student judged to have the greatest professional promise; and winner of the Trial Advocacy Award given by the Virginia Trial Lawyers Association.

A native of Louisiana, Vehko says her route to a legal career was an unusual one. She majored in religion at Southwestern at Memphis, a small, liberal arts Presbyterian college, and although the Phi Beta Kappa graduated with distinction, she left school not knowing exactly what she wanted to do. "So I took a few years off and decided that law school and being an attorney would be challenging on a long-term basis," she says.

How right she was. Vehko met Justice O'Connor in 1981 when the latter was a California jurist visiting Williamsburg for a law school symposium on state courts. Judge O'Connor obviously went away impressed by the encounter, since she offered Vehko the traditional one-year appointment a few months later, for the 1982-83 term.

"Most people in my position come from clerking for a Federal Court of Appeals Judge," says Vehko, who herself was clerking for Judge James C. Hill at the Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in Atlanta when tapped for the job. She and her husband, John, discussed the move to Washington and decided it would be a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

"We knew what I would be getting into at the start," says Vehko. "We were aware that we would have to spend a lot of time apart." However, the couple decided to take a one-year lease on an apartment five blocks from the Court, and John, who had been studying for an engineering degree in Atlanta, transferred to George Washington University for the duration.

After her year is up, Vehko will take up private practice in Atlanta with the firm of Bondurant, Miller, Hishon & Stephenson.

Jane Vehko '81 JD is the first Marshall-Wythe graduate to clerk for a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The former editor of the Law Review is clerk to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Unlike the clerks in some chambers, Vehko and her colleagues are able to take a more active role in discussing the orally argued cases. Even if Vehko is not working directly on a case, "the clerks in our office are aware of other cases" and meet regularly to discuss them. "Justice O'Connor's chamber is one of the few that do that," Vehko adds.

The role a clerk plays in the day-to-day decisionmaking of the Court "varies from chamber to chamber," according to Vehko. Speaking for the clerks in her office, she says, "We have a lot of input before the oral arguments are given. The clerk will read the briefs and write what is called a bench memorandum. It's a discussion that includes, among other things, a recommendation on how Justice O'Connor should vote.

"We also have time to discuss the case before the oral arguments," says Vehko. "We play an advisory role then."

The Justices sit seven times a year for two-week periods to hear oral arguments. On Mondays through Wednesdays the arguments are presented and on Wednesday afternoons, the Justices hold their renowned secret "conference," during which they cast preliminary votes on the cases heard that week.

As the junior member of the High Court, Justice O'Connor is the doorkeeper, notetaker and official scribe for the rest of the Justices at the Wednesday conferences, says Vehko. As most Court observers know, the Chief Justice, if he has voted with the majority, may assign a justice to write an opinion or may opt to write it himself. If the Chief Justice does not vote with the majority, then the most senior justice in the majority makes the assignment.

"Once an assignment is made to Justice O'Connor, the clerk who has been assigned to work on that particular case is responsible for submitting a rough draft of the opinion," says Vehko. Justice O'Connor then edits or changes the draft, perhaps returning it to the clerk for more information, or rewriting. The clerks may do additional research, make changes or rewrite the draft until the arduous process is complete and an opinion is ready to be published.

"In other chambers, justices may write their own first drafts. It varies," she says. Fortunately, the whole process is streamlined through word processors, which the clerks use to do all their own writing. "We can create or establish our own files and get a print-out of the slip opinions of cases," says Vehko.

Even with the tremendous time savings of word processors for storage and retrieval of information, Vehko admits that the workload is "incredibly, incredibly heavy." She works 12 to 14 hours a day, arriving between 8 and 9 a.m., having dinner at her desk between 8 and 9 p.m., and leaving between 10 p.m. and midnight. "I work a little less on Saturdays and Sundays," she says, "and I try to have dinner at home with my husband at least one night a week."

According to Vehko, this year's caseload has focused a great deal on criminal procedures and fourth amendment issues. However, another issue facing the Court has become a concern of virtually all the Justices — the Supreme Court's overwhelming caseload. "It's a real problem," says Vehko. "There have been at least six justices in the last year — which is very unusual — who have spoken out on the Court's crushing workload and how there needs to be reform. It's not humanly possible to hear all the cases without working oneself into the grave."

April and May are "probably the peak times" in the work load of the Court. "Most of the backlog of opinions outstanding which have not been published occur in the spring. After an evening talk in Williamsburg recently, Vehko jumped in her car for the three-hour drive home, with barely enough time to get ready for another 14-hour day. She seems to mind not all.

"I really enjoy the work. I see such a variety of types of cases. I enjoy debating with the other clerks about cases, and the discussions with Justice O'Connor before the oral arguments are presented. That's really fun and stimulating."

"I chose Jane as a law clerk because of her remarkable record," said Justice O'Connor. "She has achieved the highest ranking as a student at every level of her education, from grade school through law school. She has also found time to be active in outside activities, for example, her church. She has integrity, she is mature in her outlook and a highly capable attorney. She has the qualities which make her a fine choice as a law clerk."

Illinois Educator Named Dean

John M. Nagle, assistant dean of the College of Education at Northern Illinois University, has been named dean of the School of Education at William and Mary.

He will assume the post July 1, succeeding James M. Yankovich, who is returning to full-time teaching.

Nagle, 42, is also a professor of educational administration at Northern Illinois, the second largest public university in the state, with an enrollment of 25,000.

A graduate of Hamilton College, Nagle received his bachelor's degree in English in 1962. In 1963, he received an M. A. T. degree from Harvard University in the teaching of secondary school English. In 1969, Nagle obtained his Ph.D. in educational administration from the University of Pittsburgh, where he was a William A. Yeager Fellow in the College of Education.

From 1969-75, Nagle was a research associate at the Center for Educational Policy and Management at the University of Oregon.

Linda Lavin Returns For Nostalgic Visit

TV's Alice Spends A Day With Students And Faculty At William and Mary

She may not live there anymore, but it was obvious that, when TV's Alice returned to William and Mary for a nostalgic visit on April 5, she felt good about going home again.

Alice of course is Linda Lavin '59 who came back to William and Mary for the first time since she graduated nearly 25 years ago. At President Graves' invitation, the star of the long-running hit CBS comedy series "Alice" spent a day with students, faculty and friends in the William and Mary Theatre who have followed her rise to stardom in the theatre, television and the movies.

Accompanied by her actor husband, Kip Nevin, Miss Lavin spent the morning with students and faculty in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall where she learned about acting under Howard Scammon '34 in the '50s. In the afternoon, after lunch in the President's House, she gave a press conference and attended a roundtable discussion sponsored by the Women in Business Program. She completed her day with another session with students and then attended a dinner in her honor in the Great Hall.

Miss Lavin described her college years at William and Mary as "a very special time in my life. . ."

"I know that my history here is very moving to me," she said. "It's where I began; it's where my adult life began; it's where my independence began; it's where my life as an actress began."

Miss Lavin said she waited so long to return to campus because she wanted to make a contribution when she did come back, and President Graves had told her that "he thought my visit would be valuable."

"I never wanted to come back as an old person," she said. "I just wanted to leave my time here in a capsule of happy remembrances. When I was a student, I never found visiting alumni attractive, and I didn't want to be that person everybody makes fun of."

"But I am that person and I'm sitting here at lunch today saying, 'Remember when we had curfews'

Remember when we couldn't have cars and had to be in by 10.' I said 'Goodness, this is just what I didn't want to be doing and I'm doing it!'"

Recalling her theatrical training at William and Mary, Miss Lavin said that she was involved, from her freshman year, in educational theater. She described that period as important to her career because "college is one of the few places that give you a chance to fail. You do a lot of it in life and you have to know it is OK and that you are not going to die."

"The actual practical stage work was the stuff that gave me the most satisfaction," she said. She performed Shakespeare "in the round" in old Blow Gymnasium because the theater building had burned, and "Summer and Smoke" was, she recalled, "theater in the triangle because it was performed in the lobby of Ewell Hall."

"Some wonderful and innovative things were done because we had no theater. So that's something that means a lot to me. I can hear myself talking about this experience and I'm proudest of the innovations and the way adversity was faced by the most creative people."

Miss Lavin became a noted stage actress in New York, earning a Tony nomination for "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," before moving to California where she was a guest star in a number of television series. Since beginning "Alice" seven years ago, she has also starred in several CBS "Movies of the Week" including the highly-rated "Like Mom, Like Me," with Kristy McNichol.

Although Miss Lavin had not visited William and Mary since she graduated, she will be back again much sooner: before she departed, she accepted an invitation from the Society of the Alumni to serve as the Grand Marshal of the Homecoming Parade in Fall of 1984 which will mark her 25th reunion year.

Linda took time in the afternoon to join in a discussion on women's issues sponsored by the Women in Business Program whose director is Julie LeVerenz (at Miss Lavin's right). Throughout the day, Linda was gracious and accommodating as she signed autographs (left) and talked to her many admirers. (Photos by Barbara Ball and Robbie Ray, Virginian-Pilot)

Linda, with her husband, actor Kip Nevin, spent the morning with students and faculty in the Theatre Department in Phi Beta Kappa Hall (above). Later, she renewed acquaintances with Howard Scammon '34, retired director of the William and Mary Theatre, and visited with Mamie Ruth Hitchens '61, Williamsburg, (left) and Edna Gregory Cataldo '61, Fairfax, Va. All three played the role of the Widow Huzzit in the Common Glory.

Montreal And Old Quebec Getaway Weekend

Dates: September 2-5, 1983

Cost: $555 per person,
based on double occupancy

Get ready for an unforgettable travel experience! Tour Montreal (second only to Paris of the French speaking cities of the world) and Old Quebec with William and Mary alumni and friends. Tour highlights include:

- September 2 - Upon arrival in Montreal via U.S. Air, prepare for Montreal By Night. A great evening combining the finest of food and drink with an historic adventure. Relive the boisterous pleasures of old Montreal under the French.
- September 3 - A full day sightseeing tour of Old Quebec City. This ancient capitol still breathes with the atmosphere of the early French regime. Alongside the historic battlements of the old city a vibrant modern city thrives. Opportunities to shop the famous boutiques.
- September 4 - Full day tour of greater Montreal including such sights as Notre Dame, Olympic Stadium, Mount Royal, the St. Lawrence Seaway and Old Fort St. Helens.
- September 5 - Depart beautiful Montreal for return flight via U.S. Air.

This trip includes:

- Deluxe accommodations in the Montreal Sheraton
- Dinner on September 2; gourmet luncheons September 3 and 4.
- Round trip air fare from Norfolk
- Portage, all transfers and all taxes.

NEW ENGLAND FOOTBALL AND FOLIAGE WEEKEND

Dates: October 7-10, 1983

Cost: $475 per person,
based upon double occupancy

Football, feasting, fall foliage and finding bargains — you loved it in 1981, so by popular request, we are offering you this wonderful weekend, NOW EVEN BETTER!

Highlights of the weekend include:

- October 7 - Morning flight from Norfolk to Boston, transportation by private motorcoach to the New Higbea Hotel in Hanover, New Hampshire. Evening at leisure.
- October 8 - Transfer to Dartmouth fieldhouse for pregame luncheon, then enjoy William and Mary vs. Dartmouth. Return to hotel for overnight.
- October 9 - Depart Hanover for a leisurely drive through the glorious fall foliage of the White Mountains of New Hampshire to the Maine Coast and the Lookout Hotel in Ogunquit, Maine. Stops will be made along the way at the famed outlet stores of L.L. Bean, Bass Shoes, Hathaway shirts and more. Fantastic lobster feast at the Lookout Hotel — two lobsters per person!!!!
- October 10 - Breakfast at hotel, then depart by motorcoach with more stops for shopping, ending at the fantastic Quincy Market in Boston with opportunities for shopping and sampling the myriad of food offerings. Transfer to Logan airport for return flight to Norfolk via Piedmont.

We were delighted to receive a note from Birchell Hilton. To paraphrase the Chinese, "long time no see" or "no hear" for that matter. Birchell has retired (who has not) after an extensive career in education. He is still going strong according to reports which do not clarify this as being by 1926 or 1983 standards.

John DeShazo has again written to say he and Eldon "Cutie" Christopher lunch every Tuesday at Lowery's in Tappahannock and will provide luncheon for any classmate who shows up. Wilhemina and I nearly made that luncheon enroute to the "Homecoming" last fall. However, we arrived on Wednesday and John said the offer holds only for Tuesdays. John expressed concern over the content of 1926 vital statistics published in the Gazette, no births. Now that is a question, not a good one, but a question. Perhaps the stork just prefers higher class numbers.

Wilhemina and I, again spending the winter in Texas, eased down San Antonio way last week celebrating our third anniversary. Enroute we stopped in Waco to lunch with Elizabeth Palmer Thompson. Another guest was Dr. Alice Anne Coleman Brunn '71. Mrs. Brunn received her doctorate in psychology from Baylor University and is now attached to the University staff in Waco. William and Mary people do get around. I understand there are five other alumni in Waco.

Elizabeth had learned that the Baylor summer school in London, England, planned to present a Baylor T-shirt to the new prince. She concluded that such a shirt was not the appropriate thing. The boy should have a T-shirt from the college chartered by his namesake. A telephone call to the College Shop in Williamsburg produced an infants T-shirt with William and Mary and the Seal emblazoned upon it. In time, this was sent to the new Prince William and Elizabeth was happy to show us the letter of acknowledgment and thanks which she had received.

"Caddo" Kelly Brewster '24 triumphantly sent me a postcard from St. John's Island, Florida, where she now resides. "Caddo" has broken her wrist in some fracas and my card was in the first output following the injury. "Caddo" and I carried the William and Mary torch for a few years in Wilmington, Delaware. Her brother was the late "Bob" of our class.

Another William and Mary alumna whom I see frequently is Johanna Trammell Guenther '60, a resident of Dallas. "Jody" switched from Fine Arts to Library Science and received her master's at North Texas State University. She now is attached to the staff of Baylor University as Director of Learning Resources, Baylor School of Nursing in Dallas. I was startled to learn that Learning Resources in a nursing school comprise much more than books. Some of those models made me a bit queazy. Through the evolution of family relationships, "Jody" is now my daughter. In fact, I now have a son, a daughter, and five grandchildren. All in three years. John DeShazo, are you listening?

Of yellow slickers and other things. . . . Meeting and mingling with current students and faculty members on "Ould Guard Day" (I find that spelling is old in "ould" Virginia writing), is one of the many rewarding pleasures of the occasion inaugurated in 1982.

Do the undergraduates envision themselves, on meeting us, as themselves a half century hence? No? (Well, neither do most of us, even now.)

Do we peel away five decades and see ourselves in school again?

Probably, a "smidgeon" of both and even more and better, a meeting of minds with youth of life as it is today.

A link of generations.

That the younger generations are interested in us, our todays and yesterdays, comes to light when, as a number have done, they say they have enjoyed reading our class news.

"Yellow slickers" or oil skins.

Mention of them in a previous column has prompted enlightening response.

First from John Branch "Dauba" Green (of the Greens "of Surry County, suh," as older brother Larry was ever heard to say).

And a bit more from William Greenwood Thompson, Jr., our Class and Olde Guard leader. Bill became the William and Mary distributor of the oil skins as agent for Whichard Bros., of Randolph Street, Norfolk, suppliers to old salts of the sea. It helped him pay his college expenses. (Organizer that he is, don't be surprised if soon we have something like "The Society of the Yellow Slickers." Oil skins would be appropriate, especially on the many rainy days that descend on Williamsburg.)

A thousand and 25 thanks to "Dauba" for taking the trouble to write and thus to share his recollections:

John Branch Green
802 St. Christophers Road
Richmond, Virginia, 23226

"Dear Kit,

"Your interesting class report in the current Gazette inspired me to prepare a little missive. I don't know why I have been so remiss in replying to your requests that '28ers drop you a line since writing is one of my main diversions as the 'golden years' roll by.

"Reference to yellow slickers in your letter was of particular interest. You undoubtedly remember not only the autographs, but also the colorful pictures and decorations that graced them. The flappers of John Held, Jr., were the most popular subjects. There is an interesting sidelight on that custom.

"My best friend, classmate, and fraternity brother at William and Mary was Terry Crossfield '28. During his earlier days of our freshman year he roomed with a boy named Sanford 'Sandy' Strother '28 in Monroe Hall. Sandy was quite talented, and dozens of slickers on the campus were adorned with his handiwork. He only stayed at William and Mary a year or two and some years later he became one of the pioneer animators for Walt Disney. In the Thirties and Forties I saw a number of Mickey Mouse cartoons in which he was given credit as one of the animators.

"I don't know what happened to him, but some months ago I suggested that his career might make an interesting story for the Gazette. Either they didn't agree or couldn't locate him, since a story was never forthcoming.

(Gordon Campbell '29, distinguished Norfolk attorney, recalls another popular slicker artist, Earle Garrett '29, whose motif was an Indian head.)

"Sad to state, those slickers were prone to melt and run together with old age and I well remember discarding mine in the form of a gummy mess."

Sincerely,

Daube
John Branch Green

HOUSE NOTES

Alumni have generously donated copies of their books to the Paschall Library. Recent gifts include: THE KIDNAPPED CHILD, a biographical novel by Caroline B. Sinclair '24; MADISON COUNTY, VIRGINIA, A REVISED HISTORY, by Margaret Grim Davis '61; and BRAVEST SUR-RENDER, A PETERSBURG PATCH-WORK, by Catherine Copeland with photographs by P. Hairston Seawell '37. Dr. Robert Maidment, Professor of Education at William and Mary, has added his latest book to the library's collection, STRAIGHT TALK, A GUIDE TO SAYING MORE WITH LESS.

COPING WITH PEER PRESSURE (N.Y.: Richard Rosen Group, 1983), is a new book by Leslie S. Kaplan '78 EdD.

Harry B. Van Sciver, Jr. '32, has given a 1928 college receipt to the memorabilia collection. It shows fees for the fall semester of 1928 including $50 tuition, $61 room rent, and $108 board, and other fees totaling $303.75.

The Society appreciates gifts of books by alumni authors and memorabilia of college days. Correspondence should be addressed to Frankie Martens, Society of the Alumni, Post Office Box GO, Williamsburg, Virginia 23187.

NEW CHAPTER

Over fifty alumni and friends gathered recently at Belle Grove near Front Royal, Va., for an organizational chapter meeting and a program given by Carol Ten Broeck on the President's House. The following officers were elected: Ron Singleton '73, president; Anne Sager '49, vice president; Jack Herring '58, secretary; Victor Carbough '51, treasurer; Henry Broughton '42, Jean Lacy '44, Frances McFall '49, Tom Burke '52, and Joy Stiles '79, board directors. Area alumni should contact one of these officers to become more involved in planning the chapter's program of events.

BILL LINDLAW HONORED

William F. Lindlaw '78 outgoing president of the Baltimore/Annapolis alumni chapter, receives from Tish Paschall '64, director of chapter programs, a certificate of appreciation from the Society for his service during the past year. The chapter held its annual spring meeting at the Center Club in Baltimore with Dr. Graves as speaker. Susan Vanderlinde '73 is the newly elected president of the chapter.

"Dauba" previously added to the store of lore about "our times" — the reawakening of the College of William and Mary in Virginia.

Laura Starbuck Whitehead Young, who was from Chatham when she joined the class of '28, now a hand bookbinder and conservator of international recognition, was kind enough to respond to my request for recollections of coed campus days. Her account is vivid and I hope that it some day can be shared with others.

Life as we male students saw it has been depicted by "Dauba," as he notes in his letter: "I did five or six pages on life on the campus as I remembered it. Gordon Vliet asked that I send a copy, which I did. I hope it is filed away just in case some historian of the future wants to know what went on (at William and Mary) back in prehistoric times. To me it is all interesting, but I sometimes let myself realize that the present generation would find it extremely dull and boring."

(Comment: I could argue "Dauba's" last point. rktl)

Others of our class have enriched the treasury relating to college days — fairly recently James "Suey" Eason, of Hampton, and Robert Randolph Jones, of Richmond.

So the rest of you, polish off your rear view mirrors, look backward and record what you remember. Forget literary style and write just as you would to a classmate, in letter form.

For instance, who can tell me how the yellow slicker fad began?

And the bloomers that our coed athletes wore. . . when were they dropped?

And other fads and foibles. Anecdotes. Sayings.

Alumni of all classes, even those of '83, should contribute to the "college life library." When, for instance, did the first student wear jeans to class?

Additional from John Branch Green:

"Our class is dwindling to a precious few. I look at the COLONIAL ECHO and am appalled at the numbers no longer alive. I cannot convince myself that I am an old man, but . . . I have to admit it. I have a Pacemaker and recently underwent an operation for cancer of the colon. I have cut my driving down to short neighborhood trips, unable to attend Homecomings and Olde Guard Day.

"My last position was as vice president and branch manager of Franklin Federal Savings and Loan Association, Richmond. In 1969, after 15 years, I retired. During retirement I have been rather active as a volunteer

Law School Alumni Return For Spring Weekend

A beautiful Williamsburg weekend was the setting for the Spring Reunion for law alumni on April 22-23. This occasion marked the second spring reunion organized by the Law Alumni Association. George W. Campbell, Jr., past president of the association, welcomed the alumni and encouraged them to support the event.

"Spring is a special time in Williamsburg," Campbell said, "it is a time to renew friendships and reminisce in a relaxed setting on a beautiful spring weekend." The program is designed to give us a chance to meet the faculty, Campbell noted, "and to give us an update on recent changes in the law."

The Reunion program was organized around five seminars conducted by the law school faculty. Topics covered by the seminars included constitutional law, criminal law, civil procedure and tax law.

Following the seminars, the Law Alumni Association met and elected its slate of officers for the coming year. Elected for 1983-84 were K. Maxwell Dale '75 president; Robert S. Parker, Jr., '70 president elect; William L. Lewis '76 treasurer.

Dean Spong made his annual report to the alumni outlining his plans for the future. Of special concern to the alumni, the Dean noted, was the organization of a private foundation for the support of the law school. He described the formation of the foundation which was recently organized by the alumni to provide a vehicle for the development of an endowment. Comparing the endowments of the other good law schools in the region, he noted that Marshall-Wythe was still far behind. The purpose of the foundation, said the Dean, was to bring the endowments up to an adequate level of support for the education program at the law school.

The Reunion concluded with a luncheon in the Great Hall attended by more than 100 alumni, faculty and their spouses.

Several members of the William and Mary Law School Association gathered for a group photo after their meeting in the National Center for State Courts building. They are (left to right) Bill Lewis '76 JD, treasurer; Tim Coyle '74 JD, Mike Kris '71 JD, Art Walsh '73 JD, Bill Prince '57 JD, Max Dale '75 JD, president, and Don Grey '52 JD. Below, Professor Emeric Fischer '63 JD was one of several Marshall-Wythe faculty who gave seminars for the returning alumni. Professor Fischer spoke on tax law.

Above, George W. Campbell, Jr. '74 JD, outgoing president of the Law School Association, welcomed alumni and introduced faculty members who gave five different seminars. Among the faculty were Richard A. Williamson, associate dean of the law school (below with Campbell). The weekend also included a luncheon on Saturday in the Great Hall (bottom right) which Dean William B. Spong Jr. and Mrs. Spong attended, along with Professor Frederick F. Schauer (at Mrs. Spong's right).

50TH REUNION MEETING

NORTHERN VIRGINIA OFFICERS

Charlie Bish '74, past president of the Northern Virginia alumni chapter, installed new officers and board members at the April annual meeting at which Dean William B. Spong was principal speaker. The new group included Bob Machen '63, president; Brian Costello '75, vice president; Jeanne Rose '33, secretary; Tom Dabney '73, treasurer; and directors Sara Brady '64, Chuck Pallow '70, Don Kassio '79, Jim Rees '74, Terry Seay '74, Dan Ellis '76, Laurie Bond '77, Ron Riggins '78, Marisal Lambert '80.

at St. Mary's Hospital nearby, editing the Auxiliary News Letter. I have logged more than 5,000 hours over the years." (He also is active in his church, and is well remembered by alumni of St. Christopher's School in Richmond, his first job after being granted a Gulielmi et Mariae in Virginia sheepskin, and teaching at St. Christopher's until 1953.)

"Our son, John Branch Green, Jr., is a geological engineer in Denver, Colorado, and father of two boys. Our daughter, Elizabeth, is married to an electronics engineer, having a Ph.D., his firm consulting the Defense Department. They have a daughter and two sons.

"Betsy (that's Betsy Price, W&M '29) and I spend the quietest lives imaginable. We used to spend summertimes at our Fluvanna County farm, my mother's old home.

"I am going to make a special effort to attend either Olde Guard Day or Homecoming this year, particularly since I have a pile of stuff I want to give to the Alumni House, some of which was Larry's." (Larry C. Green '25, a most memorable "man about campus" also.)

Chater Day 1983 to your class reporter was a special delight this year, what with riding up from Norfolk-Portsmouth and back with Lawrence "Red" I'Anson, retired Chief Justice of Virginia. We covered many a subject, past, present, and future. His views and leadership have been powerful influences in making our laws and courts across the land more effective. It delighted us all when his Alma Mater selected him to be the recipient of an Honorary Degree several years ago.

And Edward Lewis Lamberth, retired superintendent of Norfolk's Public Schools, how elated I was to see him in the audience when I spoke before the Norfolk Lions Club. I think he was the one to start the applause before boos could arise.

P.S. You Coed '28ers, send me some fodder for the grist mill, and I hope that particular trope will bring results so you won't be subjected to any more mixed metaphors, or tripe. Might even discourage punning.

Clas sof '28. . . '28. . . '28. Rah! Rah! Don't hesitate.

Notes from Betty:

At last it's great to be up and out, on three legs instead of six with a cast thrown in for good measure. The cane has replaced the walker and that's a welcome change. Being knocked down by a car is a traumatic experience, but one thing good came out of it is the fact that one realizes one has so many concerned friends. Thanks to everyone who remembered us with cards and notes.

During our enforced "hibernation," we were pleased to have a visit from Ed Trice and Bernice, who were in Petersburg for a church convocation.

In Millison Finney's chatty letter, she said that she loves and enjoys her quiet life on the "shore."

We have had phone calls from Louise White Johnson and Lucy Boswell Crymble. Louise reported that her daughter has just been elected president of the Raleigh, N.C., Junior League. Lucy May reported that her daughter has just received a degree in engineering and is teaching in a college near Ft. Lauderdale, Florida; this, in spite of having been out of college many years and rearing a family. We are sure that both Louise and Lucy May are proud of their daughters. Sara Ann Everett Woolford writes that all is well with her and her family.

Notes from Ed:

From Elizabeth Vaiden Rehmann, a Newport News native who now resides in San Antonio, Texas, a note written at Christmas time stated that she and her husband had a wonderful trip to Honolulu last year. They also spent a week in Miami at a "Super Hotel." She reported that her daughter and her family are now living in Okinawa. Elizabeth reports further that she and her husband spend much of the time enjoying life with friends.

A letter from Dorothy Doggett Taylor states that she enjoys looking through each issue of the Gazette for familiar names that she associates with her days at the College. She says they spend their summers in Maine and winters in Rhode Island upon settling down after many years of travel.

Leroy Ober recently received national recognition from Civitan International for securing a total of 50 new members in the last ten years for the Norfolk, Virginia, club. Nice going, Leroy!

Bernie and I spent much of February traveling from Jacksonville to West Palm Beach, visiting relatives who visit us in the summer. This is a nice exchange at a minimum cost. We have a great time together.

Betty Lanier has had the cast removed and she is much improved. Keep your chin up, Betty.

I have good news. Lee Chewning Ratcliffe was one of five hundred inducted into The College of William and Mary Athletic Hall of Fame on Saturday February 5, 1983. It is no surprise to anyone for she was the best athlete in women's sports of our time. She made nine letters, excelling in basketball and hockey — track, tennis and swimming.

Lee was president of Student Government, a member of Motor Board, on the executive Council of the Student Body. She was May Queen and active in her sorority.

After graduation Lee returned to Richmond. She was the Lucky Strike girl of the 30's with her picture on posters and billboards. She was one of the founders of The Tuckahoe Womans Club and past president of the 1300 member club. She is married to Clyde Ratcliff, Jr., President of Richmond Arena, Parker Field, and they have two sons and three grandchildren.

Lee was on the committee for the 50th reunion and was unable to attend the final events due to sickness in her family. We are glad to hear they are all doing fine now.

I have a letter from Bentley Hart, '33, requesting the address of 'Dutch' Heltzel, I have sent him William Heltzel's address in Newport News.

Have a great summer — hope to see you at Old Guard Day, April 14th.

Mrs. Lawrence W. Lippincott

How good it was to hear from you, Classmates! My first note this time was from Mary Evelyn Acree (Fleetwood Farm, Millers Tavern, Va.). Mary writes that even though she withdrew from the College after her first year (credit transfer snafu), she has had one of the best times of her life and would have returned, except she thought it a shame to waste her mother's money — "It was the depression, remember?" — only how well! "However, after marriage and four children — all in college, I got my degree in Pol. Sci. - History in '63 from VCU, the same year I had a son and a daughter graduating from William and Mary." Congratulations, Mary! We'll happily welcome you back for our 50th — do come! Have fun this summer on your trip to London.

My next note was from Mary Hunter Talmann Lamb (Petersburg, Va.). Mary Hunter writes that she is a retired librarian. She is a member of the Cockade Garden Club and Christ and Grace Episcopal Church Circle. In addition, her hobbies of gardening, needlework, and books keep her well occupied. She attended the 50th anniversary of the Alpha Chi Chapter of Gamma Phi Beta in January in Williamsburg, which was fun. Her main traveling recently has been to Nags Head, N.C., and to Virginia Beach. (Great!) She had a pleasant surprise last summer when Lloyd Langbauer '35, and his wife, now living in Ft. Lauderdale, stopped by for a visit. Be sure to attend our 50th class reunion next year!

It was also great to hear from Joseph R. Turner (Scottsville, Va.). He says, "Life is sweet and retirement makes it more so. My activities are limited for the most part by voluntary inertia." Joe and his wife, Dagmar, moved to Scottsville in 1979. "It is a real nice community populated by fine, friendly folks," Joe writes. Dagmar is busy in local women's organizations. He belongs to the Lions Club and the Charlottesville-Highland Chapter of the William and Mary alumni. Most of their trips are to Atlanta and to Washington to visit children and grandchildren. About the latter, Joe writes, "I can brag with the best." We'll all be looking forward to seeing you, Joe, in '84, but hopefully — without those canes!

Had a nice "happy birthday" note from Annie (Pharr Goodykoontz). She had been so distressed to read the news clippings about Jefferson. They recalled our residence there in room 206 in '33-'34. She regretted, as did I and all other alumni and friends of the College, that such a landmark had to meet such a fate. "I was really so glad that there was no loss to life and that the fire was not the fault of any student," Ann wrote.

I heard more about the fire from Frances Norvell Spindle Harris, who is living now in Williamsburg. Frances wrote of her concern and recalled gym classes held years ago in the basement (of Jefferson) with Miss Roberts, Miss Barksdale, and Professor Tucker Jones. Frances wrote that she has hastened to the Red Cross Building with clothes and a donation. "I compliment the students who displayed discipline beyond words to express," she says. "It is nice to have some of the very fine college students living in my building," 'Th Heritage'. They remind me of my student days at William and Mary." She also wrote of seeing "Fiddler on the Roof" — "one of the best College performances I have seen." From the Charter Day Program enclosed, I judged she had also had the pleasure of attending those exercises in February. I am so happy that she has recovered from a recent bout with pneumonia and was enjoying the first signs of spring as she walked down the Duke of Gloucester Street. She sent us all best wishes for a happy summer vacation. Thank you, Frances.

It was nice to hear from Harriet (Council Mead '35) again, after she had read the March report. Harriet writes that, hopefully, her book, "The Irrespressible Saint," will be published this summer. The Orlando Cathedral of St. Luke is helping to raise publication money.

A note from Alumni House noted that a recent issue of The Laurel of Phi Kappa Tau had announced the selection of the All-Time Phi Kappa Tau Football Squad. Otis Douglas (Hague, Va.) was named to the first team.

A clipping from the Daily Psess noted that E. Eldon James, a Hampton attorney, has retired as chairman of First Peninsula Bank and Trust Co. James, one of the four founders, was elected chairman in 1973 and has been reelected every year since. He will remain a member of the board. He was quoted as saying "The idea of a locally owned, controlled and operated bank gave birth to First Peninsula. . . nearly 13 years ago. From the beginning I have 'lived' with the bank and seen it grow to a successful and respected position in the community. . . I now step down with a deep sense of pride and confidence in its future."

Emil O. Johnson (Irvington, Va.) has been inducted into the Athletic Hall of Fame. The Daily Press clipping said "A three-year starter in football, he played end on three of coach John Kellison's outstanding teams. Formerly director of the manufacturing division for the I. E. DuPont Corp., he retired in 1971 after 36 years with the company. He is past member on the Board of Trustees, Endowment Association and is a member of the President's Council. . . and the recipient of the Alumni Medallion in 1973."

Just as I am typing these notes comes this news from Lillian Carmine Sterling. She writes that she is sorry to have missed Homecoming this year — the first she has missed in many years, but her grandson was married that very day in Herndon, Va. She and her husband, Lester, will celebrate their 45th wedding anniversary at their home, "Sterling Harbor," in June. They are expecting their four children, nine grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Among them will be daughter, Carolyn Sterling Rilee '67, and her family. The Sterlings are also planning a vacation trip to New England in August. Happiest of anniversaries, Lillian and Lester.

I have also just received an enjoyable letter from Faith Burbee Vogel (San Rafael, California). She and her husband, Fred, attended Homecoming in '76 and visited the Daus at that time. Helen Singer Dau, Faith writes, has been one of her dearest friends through the years, as also has been Harriet (Council Mead '35).

Last year the Vogels went to the Scandinavian countries and to Russia. This year they plan to go to China, India, and Nepal. But, I'm happy to hear, it will be Williamsburg in '84 for our 50th, My 11-13, 1984.

Frances Harris wrote about the opportunities of living in a college town. We share some of those opportunities here in Norfolk with the Armed Forces Staff College and Old Dominion University near by. We've not only had the pleasure of hearing Dr. John Patterson of the Department of Government of the College of William and Mary lead the discussion on "Lebanon" in our Great Decisions program, but we heard Ambassador Jerry North from the Staff College, on "Nuclear Proliferation" and Dr. Christine Drake, director of the geography programs at ODU, on "Africa."

I also had the opportunity of auditing one of the most interesting and challenging courses I've ever taken, during the first semester at ODU, "America in an Interdependent World." The course was taught by Dr. Drake, who is a top-notch teacher — a British native married to an American minister, (whom she met when both were on assignment over seas). She received her degees from Oxford and from Rutgers and thinks none of us know enough geography. She is certainly right, I think, after my course with her! She really shook up many of my entrenched conservative ideas; and sharing the class with a young woman from France, a young man from Japan, and one from Somalia, as well as, a number of other bright, young American graduate students was a treat and renewed my faith in today's young people.

Let us hear from all of you! Have a lovely spring and a happy summer.

SENIOR CLASS GIFT

Larry Michaels and Carolyn Finocchio, both members of the Class of '83 — William and Mary's newest group of alumni — presented a $10,000 pledge from the Senior Class to Harriet Reid, director of career counseling at the College. The gift will provide the College with a Discover II, a computer-based career guidance and information system.

RICHMOND DELI DINNER

Margaret White Winchester writes that she may move back to Virginia. After teaching French and English for 25 years, she retired in 1981. Her husband died in 1980. Since her retirement, she has been travelling. She has been to Europe twice, and also to New Orleans. She has three sons, David, Donald and John.

Thomas Richards writes that immediately after his marriage, he went to work for General Electric in Syracuse, New York, and that he lived there until he retired in 1980. He and his wife then moved to Florida. They love it there, especially the warm climate, after 35 years of cold and snowy weather in upstate New York. Tom has one son who works at the Kennedy Space Center on the Space Shuttle Program. As they live close to one another, Tom and his wife are able to get together frequently with their son and his wife.

Louis (Lou) Plummer was honored by being one of five new members who was invited to join the College of William and Mary Athletic Hall of Fame. He was a four-year letterman in track and held the two-mile record for several years. Following graduation, he coached football, baseball and basketball, for six years at the junior high level in Hampton, followed by two years of coaching track and football at Newport News High. After serving in the Army during World War II, he taught for ten more years at Newport News before joining the faculty of Old Dominion University in 1956 where he was an assistant professor of physical education and coached cross country and track. He was promoted to full professor in 1969 and was named director of evening and summer programs in 1972. He retired in 1975, but continued to work part-time in academic advising.

John W. Bunting writes, "Have we abandoned the mid-October date for Homecoming? I should think the vibrant autumn color and mild weather of October would attract more alumni than the uncertain November weather."

Jean Wilson Clark says she is having a wonderful time being retired. She does painting, weaving, sewing, photography, travelling and bird watching, almost anything except housekeeping. Her husband, Robert is still working. They are both part time farmers. They have four children and two grandchildren. She says she enjoyed the class of '35's reunion in 1981 but could not make the class of '36's reunion.

(Ed. Note: Homecoming 1983 will be October 21-23.)

Happy Spring to each of you classmates. At this time of year I always remember how beautiful the College is and am homesick for it — even after 45 years!

Alvah Hunley Galbraith wrote from Norfolk: "I retired at the end of 1982 from my position with the Lafayette Villa Health Care, one of Norfolk's largest and most prestigious health care facilities. At present, besides working as a volunteer at the Villa, I am attempting to put together a few ideas I've been nurturing for quite some time into book form. This is proving to be a very ambitious project. Future plans include traveling in the United States and abroad. My first planned trip to New York City at Easter was a retirement gift from the Villa management. A theater buff for the past 30 years, I have been traveling to New York City whenever possible, mainly for the shows. In May a cross-country bus trip of 32 days follows. Then, if I'm not too tuckered out and penniless, there is a beautiful trip to England and its environs coming up in September that I'm very keen on taking. My only regret in my gadding all about is that I may be forced to have my cocker spaniel, Dennis, kennelled for periods of time while I'm away from home, as unfortunately I have no family at all to care for him."

OCTOBER 21-23
HOMECOMING
YOU'RE INVITED!

And from Heywood Mercer in Palm Beach Shores, Florida: "After 35 years of operating General Motors and Chrysler dealerships in Ohio and Florida, I sold out in November of '81 and retired from the automobile business. Six months of inactivity pushed me into the factory-built home business in Boynton Beach and I am enjoying every minute of it. All four children are out of the nest except for the youngest, Michelle, who was graduated from Stanford last year. She is presently in Peru attending the University of Lima on a Rotary fellowship."

I have talked with Bert Capps Sheeran by phone several times recently. Husband Bob has been oiling since last summer, although he was able to attend Homecoming last fall and went to all the football and basketball games. Their daughter, Marian Sheeran Markham, is a teacher in Williamsburg and received her Master's degree from William and Mary last year. Bob Jr., is a William and Mary graduate and is now Sports Information Director for the College. The Sheerans lived in Pennsylvania until moving to Williamsburg four years ago, but Bert says they haven't missed a Homecoming for 30 years! Bert is already calling friends in the class to urge them to attend this year. She mentioned Barbara Shepler Dallas, Barbara Nicholas Elliott, Grace Crider DeVenne, Frances Jenkins Taylor, Nita Ligon Morse, Robert Dew, Gil Piquette and Clyde Cridlin. In her own breezy way Bert demands to know why we don't all do some calling. Great idea, Bert; let's start those calls and/or letters to the classmates we're in touch with and make plans to meet them at the College on October 21, 22 and 23.

Plans are currently underway for our 45th reunion. A committee was selected and met at the Alumni House in March. Bert Capps Sheeran accepted the chairmanship, Mildred Albee Babb, from Hampton, is vice chairman, and Virginia Betts Chapman, Smithfield, will serve as secretary treasurer. As you can tell, the committee was selected from those who live close to Williamsburg, Dr. Carney Pearce, of Petersburg and Virginia Beach, is a member of the committee and there will be others who were unable to attend the initial meeting. Watch the May and June issues of the ALUMNI GAZETTE for further details on our accommodations at the Motor House and for the class events reservation forms.

At the end of his letter, Heywood Mercer wrote: "Thank you for asking me to write about my favorite person — me. I thought you'd never ask." Well! That took me back somewhat and made me realize that perhaps

I owe you all an explanation. For several years, before each letter in the Gazette is due, I've sent postcards, more or less at random, asking the news. Many of you have responded, but please don't wait to be contacted. Consider yourself asked now. The Class of '38 needs you and your news.

Late flash from your enthusiastic chairman, Bert Sheeran:

"We are the Class of '38
And this is our fate
To all of you everywhere
We still hope that you care.
Our 45th is on the books
And we expect to see your looks.
Plans have been made and we need you all
Because the '38s will have a ball.
So please, dear ones, answer the call."

Our next report will be in the September issue, so let's have lots of letters as a get-reacquainted exercise for Homecoming.

I did so appreciate the long, friendly letter I received out of the blue from Carrie Massenburg Stevenson. She and her husband, Howard, who is retired have been living in Ormond Beach, Florida for the past six years. Carrie was emphatic in saying she's not retired. She has a step-son who is a senior at the University of Florida and the youngest boy now 18½ is studying art at the local Daytona Beach Community College and running the camera department part-time at Walgreen's. She says if she can survive until he is 20 then she'll know she can make it to our 50th class reunion which is a promise she's made to herself!

Last September she and Howard had a wonderful three weeks in Germany. They saw friends in Bonn whom Howard had known at the American Embassy 24 years ago, and they also spent time in Garmish and Berchtesgaden. She "adored" Berchtesgaden and they have reservations at Hotel Alpenhof for April 1984. In the meantime she's studying German which she says is lots of fun.

Carrie, along with all of us, was shocked and saddened by the fire which so heavily damaged Jefferson Hall. I'm sure we never realized how important those late night fire drills were. Thank Heaven there were no injuries.

We received a Valentine Letter from "Cookie" and "Casey" (Caldwell) Cason which was a delayed Christmas message — (I had a fellow feeling as my notes were late, late too this year). Poor Cookie was a "Sick Chick" for a couple of weeks just before Christmas with flu and pneumonia, so no wonder no letters got out. Fortunately she was on deck to greet an adopted baby boy into her son, David's family just before she took to her bed.

She reported that the rest of their year was great. They went to the Masters, took some golfing week-ends in Florida, went to California in August and on a cruise to Mexico in September to celebrate their anniversary. She had "resisted that for 6 years and with good reason — I gained a pound a day and after the 3rd day I was living on Tums!! I have a compulsion to show no restraint when food that is already paid for is presented."!! She says Casey has bought a fishing boat so they've been busy fishing and golfing. She "thinks" her golf is improving slightly but her score isn't! Of course they enjoyed Homecoming. Have a great summer.

I have lots of good news from the Alumni Office:

Arthur "Bud" Metheny, former athletic director and head baseball and basketball coach at Old Dominion University, was inducted into the school's Sports Hall of Fame at the fourth annual induction ceremonies February 27 at Scope. A former member of the New York Yankees, Bud is enshrined in his fourth sports hall of fame. He's already a member of the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame, the Tidewater Baseball Hall of Fame and the William and Mary Hall of Fame. He was also the first player to be honored by the Yankees with a "Family Award," presented to former players who have continued an affiliation with baseball and youth. Congratulations, Bud!

Emily Edgerton Gladstone writes that her eleven year old granddaughter who lives in Gainesville, Georgia, is expressing interest in attending William and Mary. Emily lives six months of each year in Naples, Florida, where her former roommate, Helen Gudebrod LeGrande and her husband, Ned, also live. They see each other every week at least. Hi, Emily!

Bill Lenton and Sarah have both retired and are living in Leesburg, Virginia, and close to their three daughters and their families. They stay busy with volunteer work, gardening, working on their house, attending plays and concerts in Washington, taking a few extension classes, a little traveling, church choir, etc. The welcome mat is always out to classmates. Neat!

Vance Fowler retired as Navy Captain, 1967. After 15 years working for Sea Pines Plantation Co. he has retired again. He's still very active in tennis and golf officiating. He plays lots of golf, and takes part in stage acting, church work and gardening, in that order. (my note).

Geraldine Gorden Grandy is now residing in The King's Grant section of Virginia Beach, and they are pleased to be near family and college friends. They visited their "youngsters" on the West Coast during the Christmas holidays and hope to take advantage of some alumni trips in the near future.

Virginia Hoyle Irby and her husband, Sam, made two very interesting, educational and enjoyable trips last year — the first to Columbia, South America, visiting Bogota (fascinating) and Cartagena (relaxing) — then a five-week trip to China (Peking, Shanghai, Canton), Macao, Hong Kong, Japan (Tokyo, Kyoto, Nikko, Mt. Fuji), and ended in Hawaii which included a 7-day cruise around the Islands on the U.S. Constitution. Sounds wonderful!

Frank and I are celebrating our 40th wedding anniversary May 1st. Our children have invited us to join them and our grandchildren at Snowshoe for the weekend and then Frank and I are going to The Homestead for the balance of the week. My, how time flies!

Love hearing from each and everyone, so keep the news coming to me.

"I have a T-shirt to prove that I am a survivor of Hurrican Iwa at Honolulu where Dunbar and I spent the holidays with our son and his family," Sally Bet Walker Lawson.

Jane Harden Hanson has been honored as the Chamber of Commerce's choice of Potomac Citizen of the Year Award. She received an engraved plaque, plus citations from Governor Hughes and the Montgomery County Council. Her volunteer activities would fill an entire page. Jane, we are proud to know you.

My suitemate, Jeanne Jefferson '41 (Brown), was here this week for a visit, and we rehearsed old times. Her address is 1401 East Girard, Englewood, Colorado, 80110. She would love to get back on the Alumni Gazette mailing list, and connect with a Denver William and Mary group if there is one. 1941 class secretary please note.

A new Cultural Center, known as the Mathes Center, in honor of my parents has opened; so my new job is helping to plan and implement Art exhibitions for this marvelous new facility. Little ole Escondido is finally growing up, culturally speaking.

Spring greetings! Magnolia blossoms are on their way.

Jean Boyd Lacy represented the College in April at the inauguration of the president of Shenandoah College.

A press release brings updating on Jerome E. Hyman. Jerry has been elected senior vice president and general counsel of Pan American World Airways. He will remain in New York and retain his position as a senior partner of the international law firm of Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen and Hamilton. Among his other activities, Jerry is a trustee, vice president and member of the Executive Committee of the Practicing Law Institute, and a fellow of the American Bar Foundation. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and the Harvard Law School Association.

Frances Pendleton Elliott is among those who send best wishes and hopes for success to Class Agents Marilyn and John Entwisle.

Notes from some of your classmates:

Hugh Harnsberger: Hutch retires from Chevron Research Co. in February, 1983 to become an independent consultant in catalyst and new technologies. Wife, Doris Miller Harnsberger, '43, continues as science teacher in San Anselmo's Junior High School. Three out of four sons are now married, and we have 3.5 grandchildren, all grandsons."

Winifred Gill Geesey: "Don and I have moved from our home on the Monterey Bay in Santa Cruz, Ca., to a five-acre property in the farmlands of Watsonville, 15 miles south down the coast. We house our neighbor's two lambs, and I hope to sell antiques in our large barn. Come see us at 365 Carlton Road."

Margaret Horn Booth: "Son, Walter, married in May, 1982 in West Chester, Pa."

Edith Burkard Thompson: "My husband continues as an attorney in Upper Darby. Our son, a nuclear physicist, is with Laurence Livemire Lab in California and our daughter is a freshman at the University of Vermont."

Gloria Brush Miner: "I am pleased that my husband, Bob, and I will be visiting Williamsburg more often now, since our younger son, Douglas, and his wife, Rita, live there. Doug is an area manager and music director at Busch Gardens. I look forward to seeing old friends."

J. T. Sadler: "I took a University of Virginia 'Sea Cloud' jaunt about Italy last summer. Hope one of these days to take a William and Mary 'Sea Cloud' jaunt about the Carribean."

Marge and Wayne Gibbs had a marvelous traveling swing across this country in their Airstream trailer. They left their home in Carolina Trace, Sanford, N.C., last June and should be returning to it now, ten months and thousands of miles later. Marge was generous enough to send a brief journal of visits with alumni. (It hurts not to have space to include all of her wonderful descriptions and witty comments!) Here goes:

"We stopped in Edmonds, Wa., and visited with Betty Jones Morrow, '43, and her husband, Jim. B.J. and I worked together in Chicago for CBS Radio (WBBM) after William and Mary. . . We had a fine visit and watched a pretty sunset over Puget Sound from their lovely home.

"When we got to Marin County, Ca., we contacted Tillie and Chuck Gondak. Chuck is a great tour guide. He showed us all around his home territory, including Sausalito, San Quentin, San Rafael, Sleepy Hollow, Frank Lloyd Wright Community Center, etc. and Meadow Country Club, where he and Tillie 'burn up' the golf course with their fabulous play. Chuck is recently retired from Pacific Bell. Hugh Harnsberger and Doris, '43, and Janet Campbell Barbour, '42, joined us at the Gondaks and we had a good time talking over old and new times.

"In September Sheila Stewart Ehrlich, '45, and her husband, Ed, picked us up at our trailer, parked at a great RV park right in downtown San Francisco. They showed us Nob Hill and some of the other fabulous other nighttime views of San Francisco.

"We were in Santa Barbara twice and both times Marguerite (Tooker) Shields was a superb hostess. Tooker and her husband, Frank, have a lovely hilltop home overlooking beautiful Santa Barbara and Bay. Tooker chauffeured us on a marvelous tour of the scenic highlights. She works at the hospital there.

"In October we visited Russ and Natalie Sanford Hill, '43, at their pretty home in Woodland Hills, L.A. Nat and I jabbered a lot about old times and friends and caught up on family news. Nat and Russ are avid golfers.

"We were in San Diego October 23rd for our son Dave's wedding.

"After a great week in Beja-Calif., Mex., at the beach with 11 other Airstreams from the San Fernando Valley area, we returned to California and spent Thanksgiving (sans trailer) in Palm Springs with Ed and Patricia Nichols Cucuru, '42.

"We spent the month of December in San Diego to be near son and bride.

"After attending the Rose Parade we started back East via the southern route. We have had a good three weeks in the Rio Grande Valley. We leave tomorrow for San Antonio, Houston, Galveston and will be parked at the Mardi Gras for an Airstream rally, where we will be parked at the New Orleans City Stadium. Hope to see Roney and John Morton, Alumni House architect, who live in Louisiana. We'll spend the month of March in Fort Myers, Fla., where we have a permanent spot for our trailer. We generally see quite a few William and Mary friends there. We'll return to Carolina Trace in April. It's been a great trip!"

The calendar tells me that spring has arrived, and what could be more beautiful than the daffodils and tulips announcing the season. It also reminds me it is time for another newsletter and there is definitely a scarcity of items to report. Allison and I have just returned from a week's visit to Copenhagen and surrounding countryside and enjoyed ourselves immensely.

Awaiting me was a letter from Emerson Barrett answering my request for news about his activities. I wish I could quote his entire letter, but bits and pieces will have to suffice. Buck remarried in 1968 and he and Ruth have a 13 year old son, Bruce. They are now living in Williamsburg which he described as "America's most beautiful town" and had a desire to someday find a way to live there. After the war, he attended the University of Maine, graduate work at the University of New Hampshire and M. I. T., followed by a career in Personnel and Labor Relations. He is now the proud owner of a campground and thirty acres on Jamestown Road, hopes to teach a course at the College, besides some consulting work, and developing his "newly acquired hammer and saw skills." Thanks, Buck, for your prompt reply. . . . do wish others would follow your example.

Julie Bristow wrote she had spent three weeks in England last fall and came home with lots of ideas for her garden from the areas in Devon and Cornwall she had visited.

Invitations are out for our son's wedding next month, so we are anticipating that happy occasion in Virginia Beach. Certainly all of you, have something of interest to share with all of us, so please remember to write me in the near future to be included in my next offering.

Two of my students dashed in to class today with the news that a William and Mary classmate of mine was their minister at Trinity Episcopal Church last Sunday! Dabney Carr who is at the seminary in Alexandria sent us his regards and confused my sophomores considerably by telling them that he and my husband, Bill, had both married "one of the Jones girls" — and that we were sisters (in Chi Omega, that is). Bill and I would love to hear Dabney preach, but we are usually at Trinity Episcopal Church in Lancaster whenever our traveling back and forth permits. Tina Jones was probably with him here in Manassas, but somehow Dabney didn't give her a chance to explain how Dabney and I happen to be sister and brother-in-law! And here I have started off with two "old grads" not even in our class of '48!

OCTOBER 21-23
HOMECOMING
YOU'RE INVITED!

We do plan to have dinner with one member though next Saturday night. Phyllis (Struse) Shook and husband, Henry, will be at the Tides Inn over the Easter weekend, and they, Shu's mother Alice Struse and daughter Amy, have very hospitably invited us over. We hope to see the Johnsons, Ted and Emil, too. We will be in very special company as Emil has just been elected to the William and Mary Hall of Fame.

Henry and Shu have recently become grandparents. Son Marc and his wife, Cindy, have a fine baby girl, Lindsay Collins, born on St. Patrick's Day.

A note from Elise Cappelmann Gruver brings news of her family. She writes that it's been a busy year as she continues to serve as a director of First Virginia Banks, Inc., helping — as a special project — to establish this corporation's matching gift program. She continues by saying that son Bob married in April 1982; and daughter Katie, in September 1982.

We were disappointed that Bill missed Career Exploration Day on February 12 this year. This was the weekend of "The Big Snow." As luck would have it, I was snowbound in Richmond and he, in Manassas. We never have managed to be snowbound in Williamsburg. This time we missed it by hours. Wouldn't that be delightful?

Walt Raymond writes that last July he joined the National Security Council as a senior staff member. This group, which is located adjacent to the White House, is the President's principal foreign policy advisory body under the direction of Judge William Clark, the President's Special Assistant for National Security Affairs.

Last January DeWitt Boyd retired after thirty-two years in the yellow pages and sales business with Reuben H. Donnelley, a Company of the Dun and Bradstreet Corporation.

Herb Chandler and Cindy enjoyed seeing Belinda and Joe Zass after the Rutgers game.

Also last January Shirley Lyons Hardwick visited Bill and Pat Jones Warner in Fort Worth. During the summer Shirley visited with Ruth Barnes Chalmers who was in London for the Wimbledon tennis matches.

As I have been assigned the additional job of coordinator of English studies for my school, I regret that I must resign the job of class reporter. I do hope that a classmate can start reporting for our class as soon as possible. It has been a pleasure receiving your news and writing the class letter for the past three years.

As promised, here's more about the Loyal Crew of '52, who were at our 30th, but first a "thanks" to Roy Anderson who submitted a logograph created by one of his Washington-Lee H.S. art students to complement the Loyal Crew of '52 slogan I had suggested for our use for reunion communiques and activities. Due to a series of unfortunate circumstances the "logo" was not used. I'm hoping that it can head this column for this issue.

Omitting someone from the listing of reunionites was inevitable and regrettable, but I omitted more than I suspected. Here are the ones I caught: Jack Custer of Salem, Va., is Sales Consultant for CBS Publishing Group. He is also a mathematics consultant and editor for the Group. Carroll Turner Kurtz and husband, Ed, came from Richmond, VA, for the reunion. They have two grown children. Carroll is active in civic and church volunteer work. In the small world category, they

ALUMNA HONORED

Geraldine O. Garner '68, Coordinator of Cooperative Education at Virginia Commonwealth University, has been awarded the 1983 Ralph W. Tyler Research Award by the Cooperative Education Association at the Association's annual conference in Toronto, Canada. The Ralph W. Tyler Research award was established in 1981 and is presented in recognition of research that has contributed significantly to the field of cooperative education.

COLLEGE COSTS RISE

The cost of attending William and Mary will rise by 7.6 per cent for in-state students next year and by 12 percent for out-of-state students. The Board of Visitors approved the increases, which will mean $328 more (to $4,626) for Virginia residents and $808 more (to $7,540) for non-Virginians, at its April meeting. The Board adopted a 1983-84 budget of $47,011,465.

ALUMNUS JOINS MERRILL LYNCH

Terry K. Glenn '63 has joined Merrill Lynch Asset Management, Inc. as Executive Vice President-Mutual Funds Administration. Glenn will be responsible for all administrative matters pertaining to mutual funds, including legal and financial matters, shareholder processing and equity trading. He will also serve as liaison with the Investment Company Institute, the trade association for the mutual funds industry, and with all mutual fund boards.

sat next to Barbara Smith McTaggart on a plane bound for England last summer. Barbara lives in Kent, England. How could I have overlooked the Homecoming "regulars" Charlotte Walker Hill and Burt. After working for the Federal government (NASA), the city treasurer of Newport News, and the Newport News public school system, Charlotte has retired to a life of homemaking and volunteering. The latter includes church, Junior League of Hampton Roads, the Peninsula Arts Association and American Association of University Women. Former class reporter, Jan Dickerson Sanford and husband, Dennis, were among the Florida contingent of reunionists. They have become retailer/owners of a toy/hobby store along an ocean highway in Florida. (I could have given you a free commercial had you been more specific). Three years ago they purchased and opened the store, and they have been enjoying a big tourist trade since then. Jan is also a member of the Kappa Kappa Gamma national convention committee. Very active in reunion activities were Bill and Ann Davis '54 Strum. Bill is the auditing manager of Avon Products, Inc. He works at the Newark Branch in Delaware. The Strums have a new home in Wilmington. Identifying Rose Dwyer Schlemm, sitting in front of me at the football game with her husband, Norman, was no problem. In talking with Jane Kerwick Beil I learned that she is a new accounts and customer representative at Virginia National Bank in Norfolk. If anyone is looking for a competent sailing buddy give a holler to George Emerson. He sails on the Great Lakes whenever asked. He also gardens, and he claims his most frivolous action last year was having a spa installed in the back yard for wife Peg's (Ives '53) "special" birthday. George, along with many others, suggested, "Let's keep 'em coming' back every 5 years!" Good idea.

Recently I had occasion to talk via phone with Alice Williams Phillips. Seems it was lucky for her that she fell and fractured her elbow in January. In the routine pre-op work up for that injury a lung tumor was discovered. So Alice is recuperating from two operations, is not smoking anymore and is a bit breathless (for a change). Speedy recovery, Alice. Did anyone else see Dave Wakefield's picture in the 1/3 page ad in the Wall Street Journal? While reading the Journal in a New Orleans hotel room Dec. 7, 1982, I was pleasantly surprised to "spot" Dave, looking very distinguished, pictured sitting at his desk in the new Morgan Bank Delaware of which he is President. The bank is a subsidiary of J. P. Morgan and Co., N.Y. In recent phone conversations with Camille Grimes Henderson and Bruce I learned that he is Vice President of International Banking for Manufacturers Hanover Bank, NY. I have known that he travels worldwide and have suspected that he held a prominent position in banking. Not bad for Class of '52 having two prominent bankers. Any more of you hiding out there?

In the event any of you receives a request/invitation from The College to represent it at the inauguration of a college president in your vicinity, let me be the first to urge you to accept. I was so called upon last fall and attended the inauguration of David Adamany, formerly of Univ. of MD, as President of Wayne State University, Detroit, MI. In addition to the interesting people one meets and the educational seminars one attends, the frosting on the cake is processing in the order of the founding of one's educational institution. I was proud to be No. 2!

Hear ye, hear ye! An "eyewitness reporter" is needed from our class for the William and Mary Choir reunion in June. Call me - reverse the charges, or write. Everyone else WRITE, please.

Having just attended an all day leadership program at the College, and loving the chance to be there again, I am reminded of what a visiting resource person said. "We relate to our school in terms of the way we saw it when we were 18 to 20 years old." Think about that, and then remember how all those people you knew in your dorm or passed on the way to class, or spent Saturday evenings with, would like to know where you are in your life today. It's much easier to write to your Class Reporter than to search for addresses and then get out some 20 letters. We'll do it all for you. We'll even pass along addresses if you like. You might shock one or two people enough to cause them to write or call you.

Bette Bodley (Dunker) has remained in Greensboro, still teaching third graders and thinking it's great. Her youngest, Liz, has gone off to Meredith College in Raleigh. Son Brad is a senior at Carolina, and her parents are now situated not too far away.

For a number of years, Williamsburg's Chief of Police was Andy Rutherford, class of 1954. He is now in another position, that of Supervisor of Grounds for Eastern State Hospital. The grounds are 160 acres and 40 buildings, housing 1,500 patients. It was from 1966 to 1976 that Andy held the job heading the police department of Williamsburg. The job was unique, as is the city, which not only attracts a million or more visitors each year, but frequently hosts heads of state from nations around the world. That means all kinds of security and secret service people; then there's the military in the area who have their military police. Add to that the College and such big events and small crises that connect college and town.

Andy left the campus to put in his time in the military in 1953, not to return as a full time student, but to have a vital and long-lasting relationship to the College.

Leslie Smith, now living in Dunwood, Georgia, is working for the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations in Atlanta.

Career Day on the campus took place in February, and on the program were John Tucker, who is Headmaster of the Norfolk Academy, and Althea Iliff (Wagman), Research Associate Professor, University of Maryland Medical School at the Maryland Psychiatric Center in Baltimore.

Howard Golwen wrote two newsy letters which were delightful. The first got shuffled off to temporary obscurity in the midst of mid-winter, cabinfever housecleaning. The second was promptly propped on top of the typewriter and here you are! Anne Golwen is a member of the Class of '83, followed by brother John, a freshman, both at the College. Anne lives at the Kappa Kappa Gamma house, justifiably proud of John, who's president of his pledge class for Pi Kappa Alpha. Howie and Bettie reports a certain dearth of alumnae in Memphis, so if any of you are in their area, "come see us."

Dave and Ginny von Breitenfeld Ferre are about to celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary by exploring the Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. Bon voyage on the trip, of course, but especially for the road ahead toward another happy 25 years together.

James N. Hubbard is chairperson for Leisure Studies P.E., at Christopher Newport College. He's also State Outdoor Track Director, V. H. S. L. Busy person.

Margaret Bunting Jenkins is head of a Navy Satellite Civilian Personnel Office. She can now dust the frame around her new Masters degree.

Dr. Louis (Bud) Fisher is about to complete "Constitutional Conflicts Between Congress and the President" to be published by Princeton University Press. In 1982, he received the National Distinguished Service Award from the American Association for Budget and Program Analysis.

Dr. Joyce Outten Davis has been elected president of Southern Seminary Junior College, the only private two-year college in the state. Joyce is married to Dr. James Davis, professor of English at V. M. I. Their children, Gregory and Elizabeth, are students at the University of Virginia.

Milton and Alice Glover Glasser are in the midst of a graduation-wedding whirlwind. Laurie will do the traditional tassel-flip to bouquet-toss, practically in the same breath. Miltie is quite happy at Loyola. Milt and Alice still entertain thoughts of a New Orleans vacation. Think positive.

Dr. Allen S. (Bud) Gardner wrote of his daughter's graduation. Sharon attended Denison University. Robert, 19, will shortly wind up his freshman year at the University of Vermont, while 11-year-old Stephen approaches seventh grade.

Ed and Belinda Watkins are still in the Atlanta area. Caroline graduated from college in May, while Stuart wraps up his freshman year at East Carolina University.

Gerald L. Gulley is Director, Vocational Placement, Anderson County Schools. He's a member of the Anderson County Board of Education, with his B.S./M.A. from the University of Tennessee.

Bobby Jo Peters and Bob Zahn have six kids in college, which must be a record of some sort. Not to be outdone, Bobby Jo is also in college, majoring in Antiquities. Brian, the Zahn's firstborn, was married in September and now lives in Salt Lake City. Brian visited my apartment in a very small baby tote, back before any of us knew that antiques were, and now, we are!

David Clark, son of Alan Clark, studied for sophomore exams at Ludwell. Susan is a high school senior. Alan visited with Dr. George Cicala, professor of psychology at the University of Delaware. George had just been nominated to be department head.

Jane Dougherty Marfizo hasn't exactly been standing still. She is a member of the board of trustees of the Dauphin County Library System and a member of the task force on Community Psychiatric Inpatient Service of the Dauphin County (Pa.) Mental Health/Mental Retardation program. She was elected vice president of the Lower Paxton Council of Republican Women and has announced her candidacy for the office of Register of Wills of Dauphin County. Do you ever have time to just sit down, Jane?

Christine Anne Montgomery has returned to home territory from Kenya. She took a long tour down the Nile and tried to decipher hieroglyphics. Christine had spent time previously in Uganda, where she did research for her dissertation.

Sally Joan Waller Jaeger is Director of Consumer Affairs for Lincoln National Life Insurance, Co. She married Stretch Jaeger in January, 1982. The union brought together nine children ranging in age from nine to 29. To top all that, she was chosen for Who's Who of American Women. Three Cheers for you, Joni!

Spring is definitely in the air in Williamsburg: Your 25th Reunion JCommittee felt its full effect when it met at the Alumni House on March 5th. The committee worked on plans for what promises to be the most exciting weekend since the "Colonial Festival" in 1958!!!

OCTOBER 21-23
HOMECOMING
YOU'RE INVITED!

One of the tasks for the spring is to locate all the members of the class the Alumni Office has been unable to contact. I will be listing these classmates in the next issues of the Gazette. If you know where these classmates are, please ask them to contact me or send me their correct mailing address. We want to contact everyone for this event, and this is an excellent opportunity to touch base once again with the College.

The following people have not been located:

Daniel Kevin Byrne; Julia Wellborn Bigges Moreau; William Joseph Dunn; Sandra Reed Fahringer; Sarah Elizabeth Howard; David Anson Pierce; Michael Emery Downs; Karen Howard Hymo; Anne Marr Pfingstag; Dakota Darlene Thornton; Chadwick Weatherford Henry (c'mon, Chad, where are you hiding?); Mary Roberts Denbo, Joy Sarrapede; David

Keith Smith Hilmo reported (on the flap of the contribution envelope/William and Mary Fund, hint, hint) a small, but crazy reunion of Chandlerites last summer. Kathy, Julie Youngquist Fisher, Jean S. Madsen and Ann Rixey Boyd, '53, enjoyed a get together at Julie's in Morago, CA, later spent a few days at Lake Tahoe "roughing" it at Dollar Point in a $240,000 "cabin" and wound up at a Champagne Brunch at Treasure Island, San Francisco, compliments of Ann's Admiral friend. Hilmo was the $$$ winner in Reno; Julie, the super tour director; Jean, the trip photographer, and Ann was the organizer of the reunion. Too bad you couldn't be with us in "Billsburg" with such spirit.

BEST PRODUCTS PROMOTES HUBERT FAULCONER '76

Hubert L. Faulconer Jr. '76 has been promoted to the position of director of financial reporting and corporate accounting for Best Products. Faulconer, a C.P.A. joined Best in 1979 as an audit supervisor, and most recently served as manager of financial reporting and fixed assets. Best is the nation's largest catalog showroom retailer, offering jewelry and brand name merchandise at low prices.

Crowley; Nancy Quigley; Charles McKay; Richard Roberts; Alan Lau; Frank Hellman; Nadine Dazell Soto; Edward Miller; Edwin Horne; Thomas Johnson; William Stone; Charlene Baumbach Smith (Charlewe, we know you really haven't lost touch!); G. Anthony Jaffe; Norman Hopkins; Marlene Marden; Walker Watkins; Charles Sheldon; Shirley Smith Shoquist; Suzanne Jarvis; Barbara Jenkins; Louise Retta Martin (Honey Martin, please let us hear from you!); Edward Dupuis; John Graham; Martha Thrift Tolstick; Benjamin Sel; Richmond Murray; and Richard Hattersley.

Charles McCauley; Mary Louise Conlogue; Thomas Moore; Mary Mylorie; Walter Stosch; Barry Goldman; Myria Colvin; Beatrice Easton; Isabel Martin; James Crouse; Carolyn Guerard; Nancy Obert; Betty Ann Senic; and Jane Marie Vilseck.

Charles Wallace Wood is presently Assistant Director, Personnel of the Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System. His son, Steve, graduated from William and Mary in 1980; his daughter is presently a junior at the College.

Our famous Denys Grant adds another honor to his list. Denys has recently been inducted into the College of William and Mary Hall of Fame. Denys, a three-year starter at guard, was first team Academic All-Southern Conference in 1955, 1956, and 1957.

Barbara Holcomb Lange is Special Projects Coordinator for the Broward County Tourist Development Council in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

A heart-warming article on Pete Decker appeared in the Virginian Pilot and the Ledger Star in August, 1982. Peter is praised for his ventures in many philanthropic areas, but the article focused on his widespread efforts in the Tidewater area to raise money for St. Jude's Hospital in Memphis, TN. He has worked closely with Danny Thomas in this project. His most publicized venture was four years ago when he was asked to take President Carter and his party on two Virginia fishing excursions.

Please make plans now to meet your old roommate, your ex-pin-mate, or your favorite professor on October 21, 1983. We expect to see you there!

I recently had a letter from Nancy Boggs Cress, '61. She loves her nursing job at Lutheran Medical Center in Golden, Colo. Laurie Shaffer Bottoms is also enjoying her work as Chairman of the English Department at Choate. Over Thanksgiving, Ed. Henderson had the pleasure of seeing Steve Lopez, '62, and Dick Woodhouse, '64, in Washington, D.C.

I hope that you all have a very nice summer, but spend part of it writing me the news! I'll be in Nags Head, N.C. for a week in August.

How sad it was to hear about the fire that gutted Jefferson Hall on January 20! Jefferson was my first introduction to college life. I can remember that day in September, 1958 when I arrived with my parents to unload my worldly possessions at the front door of Jefferson. The reality of the dorm assignment letter was now staring me in the face. Jefferson Third Center was to be my freshman home. I could hardly wait to see this room with its own private bath, the only one on that floor. It turned out to be the smallest room in Jefferson. After a month or so Barbara Ann Aubry Walsh, my roommate, and I finally applied for bunkbeds to replace the two single 1930's vintage iron beds which took up all the floor space. We adjusted to our Third Center room; along with yelling "Man on Third" every time your father came to visit and those annoying fire drills! Thank goodness for those annoying fire drills in 1958 and in 1983! No was was injured in the fire which was a real miracle! We can always replace Jefferson Hall in the future but we could never have replaced any loss of life.

I heard from another resident of Jefferson who was in my orientation group, Tommy Anderson Fairweather. Tommy lives in Enterprise, Alabama. She has moved thirty times in twenty years. She finally finished college in 1975 as she left in 1959 to marry a West Pointer, Bob Fairweather. She has taught in Fairfax, Va., and in Ozark, Ala. She was nominated as Teacher of the Year in Ozark and was in the state competition. She is a consultant in Gifted Education and has given workshops in Alabama and Florida. She is also writing articles for professional journals and for popular magazines. She has two books in the making. Her son, Bobby, will graduate from the University of Alabama this spring. Daughter Beth is a freshman at The College and lives in Barrett.

Tommy mentioned in her letter that Bill Shuler was the featured Scientist of the Month in September in Discover Magazine.

Marshall Acuff lives in Riverside, Ct. He was elected Senior Vice-President of Smith Barney, Harris Upham and Co., Inc. in December, 1982.

Julie Guinane Hinchey lives in the Richmond area with her husband and two children, ages 7 and 9. Julie has recently returned to work full time as a real estate agent.

Bill Kucewicz and Betty Joseph Kucewicz '63 have moved to Beaumont, Texas. Bill will be heading the Trust Department of Texas Commerce Bank in Beaumont. Betty is teaching math in a private school. Their sons, Joe and John, are ages 14 and 10. Bill and Betty would like to hear from any William and Mary alumni in the Texas area.

A great column came my way about Charlie Woollum. Charlie is in Lewisburg, Pa., where he is in his eighth season as the head basketball coach at Bucknell University. Prior to Bucknell he coached at Newport News High School, Ferguson, and Old Dominion University. Charlie is doing a great job at Bucknell and by now probably has moved toward the school's best ever of 110-99. The Bison offer no athletic scholarships so Charlie has a real challenge of recruiting all of his great players. Basketball is moving on to the next generation of Woollums. Charlie's son, Bobby, a sophomore guard, averages 14 points a game at Lewisburg High School.

Pril Nash Brown and family are still in Florida where their Hickory Farms business is doing very well. Their two children, Alden and Evan, are 5 and 9 years old.

Susan Griggs Braman and C.J. have settled in Titusville, Fla. C. J. retired last year from the Air Force and is working for Pan Am World Services. Susan has been substitute teaching at the local high school.

Also in Florida are Margie Heiney Stouffer and John. Their children are Marion, a freshman at Dartmouth, and Willie, a junior high football player with straight A's.

Lynn Eads Black is the Director of the Episcopal Day School in the Brownsville area and is working on her Master's in Counseling. Sara is a sophomore and one of the editors of the yearbook and also on the swim team of her school. Kiley is in junior high and is 5'10" and plays basketball.

AP APPOINTS SUE CUNNEFF '74

The Associated Press has named Sue Cunneff '74 as its general broadcast editor with responsibility for all scripted news services produced by the AP for its 5700 member radio and television stations. She also will be in charge of editorial operations of AP's cable television wire. At William and Mary, Ms. Cunneff was manager of WCWM when it won honorable mention in the Armstrong Awards for coverage of the 1972 election. She received the Rex Smith Scholarship Award for journalism and was awarded membership in Phi Beta Kappa. She joined the AP in 1979 as a news and feature writer on the national broadcast desk.

Kay Christian Sills visited the Northern Virginia area last June from Michigan. She got together with many of her Theta sorority sisters while she was there. Kay finished her M.A. in Elementary Reading. There are an abundance of school teachers in Traverse City, Michigan, and she's wondering what she will now do. Buddy is a freshman in high school and is starting his own rock band. Cary is playing the oboe and piano.

Bunny Becker Harrington lives in Crozet, Va., right outside of Charlottesville. She has presented quite a number of papers and started a piece of research into the micro-economic effects of inflation. She has traveled to Argentina to study their rate of inflation. She has her first of three books coming out — Modern Portfolio Theory and the Capital Asset Pricing Model: A Users Guide. The second book, Corporate Financial Analysis, will be in English and in Japanese. A trip to Japan is on the list of travel plans to promote the new book.

Larry and Sue Oakley Nelson live in Durham, N.C., with their two children, Kara, age 13, and Chip. Sue is still doing volunteer work in many areas.

Paul and Dorcas Brown Bankes have become interested in African stone sculpture and have formed a corporation with a Zimbabwean friend and had a very successful show at the Janet Fleisher Gallery in Philadelphia last spring. Heather, their oldest daughter, is a freshman at Earlham in Indiana. Jess is a sophomore in high school.

Ann Smith Hughes and family keep busy in Northern Virginia area. Ann works part time for Temporarily Yours. Jim is the Regional Manager of Hank Forssberg Advertising. Jimmy, age 14, plays football on a county championship 125 lb. team and Scott, age 11, enjoys basketball.

A nice letter came from Howard and Betty Smith '43 about the Order of the White Jacket, Inc. Our class has only three members: Greg Evans, Dr. Dave Gatti, and William Mirguet, Jr. We know that our class had many more people who were in service while they attended The College. If you are interested in finding out more about this relatively new organization for alumni, you may write to Howard M. Smith, President, Order of the White Jacket, Inc., P.O. Box 60, Williamsburg, Va. 23187.

Mary Bradbury Maloney wrote from Kingman, Kansas that her family enjoyed a trip to Washington, D.C. and Williamsburg, Va. last summer. They saw Kay Bonner Drews and Ken in Washington. Kay received her law degree from American University, graduating with honors. Mary also visited Tish Paschall in Williamsburg. Tish is Director of Chapter Programs on the alumni staff of the college.

William M. Kelso, Resident Archaeologist for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation in Charlottesville, Va. participated in the third annual Career Exploration Day in February at the College. The program, presented by the offices of Career Planning and Placement in cooperation with the Society of the Alumni, is designed to provide students with practical career advice.

Fredrica Dudley Rice is completing her Ph.D. dissertation on Ralph Waldo Emerson and expects to graduate in June. Fredrica and her husband, Steven, have a son, Paul Silas, born October 16, 1982. The Rices live in Seattle, Washington.

Richard C. Goodwin is an attorney in private practice in Annapolis, Maryland.

The Class of 1964 may take a special interest in the Atlanta Falcons this football season as Dan Henning was named head coach of the team in February. Dan quarterbacked the William and Mary Indians of our era and has had a successful career in NFL coaching for the New York Jets, Miami Dolphins and the Super Bowl winning Washington Redskins.

William F. Overacre of Lynchburg, Va. has been elected 1983 President of the Virginia Association of Realtors. The association is Virginia's largest trade association, with more than 18,000 members. Bill and his wife Judy have three daughters, Deborah, 17, Christina, 12 and Joanna, 9. Bill is a director of the National Association of Realtors and is vice chairman, MLS Policy for 1983. He also is past chairman of the Central Virginia Planning District Commission and a member of the Central Virginia Transportation Planning Commission.

Finally, a very welcome letter from Sharon Bieler Kallweit whose successful toy business, The Playmill, based in Dover-Foxcroft, Maine has required travel all over the country. Sharon's son, Haakon, 13, is an outstanding gymnast, having been N.Y. State champion for two years, Eastern Regional Champion, and is competing this spring at the national level in Eugene, Oregon. Sharon's younger children Kaia, 9 and Myan, 6, will join Sharon in her business travel this summer. Her husband Henning has a Naturopath degree and a preventive health practice in Bangor, Me.

One of Sharon and Henning's most interesting projects is a 6,000 square foot "underground" house. The house has a single heat source, a wood stove which is a Russian Fireplace, a 7,000 brick mass which holds its heat for days. The house has become a point of interest for Scout troops, women's groups and school tours. The house is enabling residents of a cold climate to view an alternative to expensive heating. I hope to see Sharon on one of her trips to New York and hope to hear from many of you before the next column.

Genevieve McFadden Carter is still in Starkville, Miss., where her husband Brad is Chairman of the computer science department at Mississippi State. Their daughters Elizabeth and Helen are now ages 13 years and 11 years. Genevieve is involved in volunteer work and enjoys camping, books, gardening, needlework and bridge.

Grace "Gigi" Guin Schiff is presently employed as an interior designer/space planner for Southwest Business Interiors, a commercial design firm in San Diego. This past Christmas she hosted the William and Mary alumni party for the San Diego Chapter.

Lynn Dievendorf has been promoted to lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Army and will be stationed at the Pentagon. Lynn, his wife Sallie Moore Daggett '69, and their family will be moving from Newport News to Fairfax County in June.

Robert Sigafos is practicing dermatology at Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif. He is testing a new drug for male baldness — hoping he doesn't have to use it himself. Bob heard from Bryan West at Christmas, and Bryan is teaching English and living in Spokane, Wash. with his wife and four children.

Kathy Hollingsworth Reese and Mike are in Columbia, Missouri with their daughters

BRICKELL NAMED FIRST CITIZEN

Dr. Edward E. Brickell, a member of the Board of Visitors of the College and superintendent of Virginia Beach public school system, has been named First Citizen of Virginia Beach for 1982 by the Virginia Beach Junior Chamber of Commerce. Brickell, who has been superintendent since 1968, was cited "not only for excelling in the field of education but also for devoting much of his time to civic affairs." A former Rector of the College, Brickell has "contributed substantially to the health care, recreational and civic betterment" of Virginia Beach.

MELLON FOUNDATION GRANT TO COLLEGE

The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation has appropriated $160,000 to William and Mary for support of the programs of the Institute of Early American History and Culture which the College co-sponsors with the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation. Of the total amount, $100,000 is in the form of a two-for-one challenge grant for endowment and $60,000 for current expenses at the Institute. In order to receive the full $100,000 endowment gift, the Institute will have to raise $200,000 in matching endowment money. The grant is the second the Institute has received from the Mellon Foundation. In 1978 the Foundation donated $200,000 to the College for establishment of the Institute's first endowment.

Carrie, 15 years, and Lori, 10 years. Mike is Director of Employee Benefits and Personnel Information for the University of Missouri System. He has earned his MBA at the University and also works as a consultant. Kathy is a staff psychologist at Stephens College, as well as in private practice. She earned her Ph.D. in counseling psychology at the University of Missouri in May 1982.

Congratulations to Ted Hanson on his recent appointment to a newly created General District Court seat in Virginia Beach. He received unanimous endorsements for the post from the General Assembly House and Senate Democratic caucuses. Ted's term as judge will begin July 1.

Saturday, February 12 was Career Exploration Day at the College. This is a program presented for the third year, by the Office of Career Planning and Placement in cooperation with The Society of Alumni and is designed to provide students with practical career advice. Selected alumni serve on panels to discuss with groups of students the path their careers have taken since leaving the College. Our classmates who served on panels were Tim Sullivan, government/public administration; Walter Wenk, health sciences; Wilford Kale, journalism/media; and Robert Huggett, research.

This is the last issue of the Alumni Gazette with 1966 class news until next fall. Have a nice summer!

83 OCTOBER 21-23 HOMECOMING YOU'RE INVITED!

Lee Wadkins Vliet has joined the faculty of The University of Kansas School of Medicine-Wichita. Lee is an assistant professor in the Department of Psychiatry and director of Consultation Liaison Services and Sexual Medicine. Her residency was completed at the Johns Hopkins University, Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences.

Marilyn Massey Coates has worked for the Richmond Public Schools as a teacher and as an administrator of children with learning disabilities since receiving her M.Ed. in Special Education from the University of Virginia in 1970. Marilyn and her husband, James, have a daughter, Melissa, who will soon be one year old.

Douglas Jacobson was elected president of the Florida West Coast chapter of the Institute of Internal Auditors. Doug has two daughters.

Camilla Gardner Levien is living in San Diego, Ca., where her husband, Hank, a commander in the Navy, is stationed. The Levien's children are eleven, nine, seven and three. Camilla is active in church work in the Navy Relief Society. Her work with Navy Relief consists of social work as well as direction of one hundred volunteers.

Barry E. Cressman is completing his tenth year as senior pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Titusville, Pa., "Birthplace of the Oil Industry."

Springfield, Ill. is the home of Susan Beville Huffman, her husband, Gary, and their daughters, Heather, 5, and Claudia, 2. Susan teaches fifth grade language arts one half day each day. She also runs two to three miles each day.

Al Ritter, and his wife, Bridget, live in Norfolk where he is vice president in charge of finance at Landmark Communications, Inc. and she working in her own flower arranging business. Their son Tripp is eleven, and their daughter Caroline is seven.

Several members from our class participated in Career Exploration Day at the College in February. Career Exploration Day is designed to provide students with practical career advice. It is presented by the Offices of Planning and Placement in cooperation with The Society of the Alumni. Ben Pomeroy, manager of Field Management Development for Colonial Life and Accident Insurance, Co., Columbia, S.C., was moderator of the Sales/Marketing panel. Joyce Hill Stoner, director of the University of Delaware/Winterthur Museum Art Conservation Graduate Program, Newark, DE, was a member of the Arts/Fine Arts panel. Richard Owens, assistant to chairman, John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Washington, D.C., was a member of the Performing Arts panel.

Do make plans to come for our 15th reunion October 22-23. If you have any suggestions for our reunion, please send them to me and I will pass them along. Have a good summer, and PLEASE WRITE!

Jim Callahan wrote to say he has been with Aetna Life and Annuity in Washington, D.C. for 10 years marketing tax shelters to public school systems and non-profit associations as well as business insurance programs and pensions to corporations. He has been Aetna's national sales leader for several years, a member of its President's Club and has been named his agency's most valuable associate. In May, 1982, he earned attendance at Aetna's first International Seminar in Monte Carlo, Monaco. His William and Mary activities include raising funds for the William and Mary Athletic Educational Foundation as Northern Virginia vice president. He also assists the Tribe Football Coaching Staff with recruiting in the metropolitan D.C. area. Jim is married to Marty Vann '69 who has a free-lance photography and ceramics business. The Callahans have a daughter, Carly Brette, 9 months, and a son, Troy, seven years. The family lives at 7761 Lomoor Road, Springfield.

Gregg A. Hansen has been elected second vice president, group executive for Pilot Life Insurance Co. by the company's board of directors.

Douglas M. McGraine was elected vice president and controller of Combe, Inc., an international consumer products company located in White Plains, New York.

After 10 years in Lynchburg, Deanie Kahl Challen, her husband Rich and their three children; Richie, 10, Betsy Dean, 7, and Jonathan, 4, moved to Snellville, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta. Rich is director of research and development at Chromatics, a color graphics computer company. Deanie says the family is slowly becoming involved in church, school and community activities.

Kay Atkins Kemper is director of Government Relations for Old Dominion University. She does extensive volunteer work for the Children's Hospital of the King's Daughters in Norfolk. Other activities include serving on the long range planning committee of a private school and working for Harborfest, Norfolk's annual waterfront festival.

In November, Eddie Peverell was appointed senior regional sales manager for the Western Region of Burroughs Corp. at Irvine, Calif.

Last year, Norm Spurling fulfilled a longtime dream — he climbed the pyramids of the Yucatan. For the past four years, Norman has been working for Raven Systems and Research in Washington, D.C. The company has been developing a large bibliographic data base for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

A part time student in William and Mary's MBA program, Patsy Simmons Cartwright is back in Williamsburg as a merchandise consultant for Recreational Management and Development, Inc.

Bob Browne, Frank Fulgham, Mike Carver, and Roger Lee — Where are you Andy Emert wants to know! Recently appointed Audio-Visual Coordinator and Technician for the University of Virginia School of Education Andy and wife, Susan (James Madison Univ. '70), have two children — Jennifer, 10, and Brian, 7.

Dick Krempasky is currently the Chief of the Procurement Branch, Commerce and Legal Services Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Federal Railroad Administration. (Phew—hope I put commas in the right places!) Dick attended law school at University of Md. until 1973, then served in the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the U.S. Army from 1974-78 at Ft. Benning, Ga. and then Ft. Drum, N.Y. In 1974, Dick married Ramona Oshatski and they have three children — Katrina, 6, Rachel, 4, and Laura, 16 mos.

Back in the States after 3½ years with Uncle Sam in Germany — Reid Williamson is now at the Headquarters of the Army's Intelligence & Security Command (INSCOM) at Arlington Hall Station. Reid is still in the management/organization efficiency business and hopes his job will take him travelling once again. While in Europe, he did manage to put 100,000 miles on his car and the highlight is one for the Guinness Book of Records. September 7, 1982, Reid and friend, Susan Rose, drove from Monaco to Holland. They were the first people to drive through ten countries in one day. Guinness wrote them that their trip was the 1-day auto record!

Career Exploration Day is a program presented by the office of Career Planning and Placement in cooperation with The Society of the Alumni to provide students with practical career advice. February 12 was the third annual Career Day at the College and two of our classmates were panelists advising the undergrads. Purnell Westbrook, Vice President for Development, American Heart Association in Richmond, Va. was speaking to students interested in Social Service/Community Agencies. Sandy Fagan, Director of Bacon Street, Inc. in Williamsburg, spoke to students interested in careers in Counseling/Psychology.

I have a couple of first time contributors, so that's good news. John and Linda Jones Ramler were married on August 3, 1974 just after Linda earned her Masters of Social Work degree at Virginia Commonwealth University. John earned his M.D. from MCV/VCU in 1975 so while Linda worked as a social worker at the VA Hospital in Richmond, he did his internship in Newport News and then his residency in Family Practice in Richmond, finishing in June of 1978. Then they moved to Alexandria and John worked for the Alexandria Public Health Department and Linda went to Georgetown University for a Masters in Philosophy, which she got in June, 1982. In the meantime, one and only son, Stephen, was born in 1980. In August, 1982 John joined the Air Force and the family is now enjoying living in Panama at Howard Air Force Base.

Linda Stone went from Williamsburg to South Carolina to Washington where she has been living in Spokane for the past four years. In South Carolina she completed her Masters in City and Regional Planning at Clemson University and decided to try someplace new. Her something new was moving to the Northwest and taking a job as a Senior Program Planner/Evaluator with the Spokane County Community Services Department, where she still is. Her job involves planning, resource development, contracting and program monitoring for services such as mental health, alcoholism and drug abuse. Sounds like a diverse job that takes her to hostile neighborhoods where she knocks on doors to promote group homes for emotionally disturbed children, takes her to the negotiating table for contract awards, and takes her to public meetings that she holds to solicit input on social issues. She enjoys it. On the homefront, Linda was married in May of 1981 to Michael Nuess and they own a 1908 vintage in-town house. She is on a Neighborhood Design Task Force to develop a plan for the neighborhood. Michael is a carpenter, but his real career is involved with their corporation, Teleologics, and the development of a prototype "geodesic bioshelter," a solar geodesic dome with plant and fish culture capabilities that they hope to complete this year. . . just in time for their first child, expected in mid-July. It was nice hearing from you, Linda. Let us know when your baby is born.

From Irene Diamont, I found out that she is practicing law in New York City at Cahill Gordon & Reindel, doing general corporate and securities work. Her husband, Gerald McLaughlin, is a full professor at Fordham Law School. Their new son, Mark, was born in May, 1982; and they are living in Brooklyn Heights.

Tomeka Watkinson Gipson is an Education and Quality Control Coordinator for Clinical Lab at Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville, N.C. She and husband, Leon, would like to change professions to full time sailboat sales and services. In the meantime, they sail whenever they can, but must have a power boat, too, because their two afghan hounds prefer the power boat to sailing.

Steve Keller got his M.D. at MCV in 1978 and is now the Director of the Pediatric ICU at the Department of Pediatrics at the Fairfax Hospital in Fairfax, VA. After four years in Rochester, NY for pediatric training, Barbara, daughter Lauren and Steve are happy to return to Virginia and would love to see old friends coming to the D.C. area. Their address is 2780 Sikes Court in Falls Church, VA.

Virginia Koch is also in the medical field. She is cytogenetics technologist at the Genetics Department at Eastern Virginia Medical School. She married John Cann in June of 1980 and moved to Virginia Beach in early 1982.

A one-liner from Helen St. John—she was awarded a Ph.D. in Medieval Studies from the University of Toronto on November 26, 1982.

The Alumni Office sent me an interesting article from the Richmond Daily Press about Phil Mosser. He played football for a while with the Montreal Alouettes and then went into sales. Ten years and a lot of hard work ago, he opened his own construction company on a shoestring budget and has made the company go. Actually, the storyline of the article is that Phil's picture is featured in the

CAROL ANN HILTON '80 NAMED FUND DIRECTOR

Carol Ann Hilton '80 has been named director of annual giving at Wagner College in Staten Island, N.Y. Before assuming her new position, Hilton, who did post-graduate work at the University of New Mexico, served Wagner as director of corporate relations. She joined the Wagner staff in 1982.

HARBOR CRUISE

The Norfolk/Virginia Beach chapter of the Society of the Alumni will sponsor a dinner/dance harbor cruise aboard the NEW SPIRIT on Saturday, July 16, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. The cost of $21.00 per person includes a sumptuous buffet, lively entertainment, and a chance to mingle with old friends and fellow alumni. Alumni are invited to join in the festivities by sending a check to Mary Beck, c/o Goodman Segar Hogan, One Commercial Place, Suite 1100, Norfolk, Va. 23510, or by calling Mary at (804) 727-0661 between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. All checks must be received by June 10 in order to reserve space on the 600 passenger ship 30 days in advance.

1983 Male Calendar (he's September). The calendar is the brainchild of two coaches in the Norfolk area and they took photographs and then polled young ladies to see which men would make the final cut. I guess Phil is as appealing as ever; and if you live in the Norfolk area, they would probably appreciate the boost in sales if you bought one. (By the way, everyone is dressed.) It's nice to know you're alive and doing well, Phil. Sorry I didn't see you at Homecoming.

In February, William and Mary had a Career Exploration Day and several of our classmates represented various career fields. Harry Lee Cross was there from Harry L. Cross, Jr. & Sons Real Estate Co. in Suffolk, VA. Larry Leightley, Plans/Policy Coordinator for the U.S. Department of State, was there and he lives in Vienna, VA. Frank Roche, from Falls Church, VA is a Moderator, Project Manager for the National Museum of American History at the Smithsonian Institution.

Mary Kizmore is General Manager of the York Town Crier, which won accolades in the Virginia Press Association awards competition. The paper received the Sweepstakes Award for winning the most writing, photography and design awards among weekly newspapers of under 5,000 circulation. Congratulations to the entire staff.

I got married in March and have been busy reorganizing my belongings while carrying on a normal life. One of the things I'm involved in and really enjoy is teaching English as a Second Language. I teach two times a week and love it. As usual, I'm always happy to get mail from you — so keep writing.

Seems as if the Class of '74 is participating in the Baby Boom in a big way. Kaethe Post Ferguson and husband Don are expecting their first child this summer; so are Tom ('75) and Kathy Wilke; so are Bill and Mary Bobbitt Richardson. John and Elizabeth Shank Hollis are looking forward to No. 2 in the fall. I don't know if everyone realizes that when you send a baby announcement to the Alumni Gazette office for inclusion in the "Vital Statistics" section, the Alumni Society sends your baby a William and Mary t-shirt. So don't forget to notify either me or the Alumni Gazette office directly.

Wendy and Tom Watkins have a new baby girl. Catherine Reeves Watkins was born on January 10. Tom and Wendy recently moved from suburban Evanston to a bigger place in Chicago, closer to work.

John and Lynn Adams Hostetler are in the throes of building a new house in Chambersburg, Penna. where John has his own physical therapy practice.

Richard Hodsdon and Russell Brown are living and working in real estate sales on Hilton Head Island in South Carolina. That sounds like a year-round vacation to me. From nearby Charleston comes word from Janet Hall Gallagher ('75) and her husband Carroll Gallagher. Carroll is doing a 3½ year residency in Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery at the Medical University of S.C. Their first child was born last November: Katherine McNeal Gallagher.

Moving up in the world: Dave Durden has been promoted to Mid-Atlantic Regional Sales Manager for Stouffer Foods, headquartered in Cherry Hill, N.J. Dave and his wife and son were living in North Carolina before he was transferred.

Jeffrey Owens was appointed Area Manager-Wholesale Marketing for Sun Refining and Marketing Company. He lives in Phoenixville, Pa. and is active in Junior Achievement and United Way.

Byrd Smith Heaton lives in Virginia Beach where she works for Virginia National Bank. Byrd was recently promoted to accounting officer level II, and last year received her MA from ODU. She is currently serving as the vice-president of communications for the National Association for Accountants and was certified as a management accountant in May of 1982.

Jacqueline Hertling Romero has been employed by AMF Inc./Apparel Equipment Division for the past four years, originally as an export administrator but promoted last year to Advertising and Marketing Research Supervisor. She will receive her MBA from VCU this summer. Active in the Bread for the World group and the Richmond Catholic Single Adult Club, Jackie is in the process of adopting a little boy from Colombia, South America.

Betty Cooper Anderson wrote for the first time since graduation to update us on her activities. After William and Mary, Betty went to graduate school at U. Va. and got a masters degree in Speech Pathology and Audiology. For the next 6½ years, she worked in Charlottesville as the speech pathologist and audiologist for a pediatric group. In 1981 she married Ross Anderson, then a Ph.D. engineering student at U. Va. who now works for Vepco. Betty and Ross live in Varina, near Richmond, where Betty is thoroughly enjoying being a homemaker. She writes that the single most significant thing that has happened to her since graduation has been developing a lasting relationship with Jesus Christ.

Betty ran into her William and Mary roommate not long ago at the grocery store. Jeannie Meade is finishing veterinary school and will return to Varina to work.

Mary Thomasch has been living and working in Idaho for the past two years fulfilling a childhood dream of running an orphanage by working as a residential staff member at a group home treatment program for troubled teenage girls. She's also enjoying skiing in the Sawtooth Mountain Wilderness and trips to San Francisco.

Keep me informed, folks. Are you taking a nice vacation trip this summer? Moving to a new house or apartment? Being promoted to that position you so richly deserve? Increasing the size of your family? Send the details!

Hey sports fans, our class agent, Glenn Gundersen, wanted a little plug in this month's column for the William and Mary Fund. Everyone should have received a letter from Glenn in January about this endeavor, and he just wants to encourage our participation for the current year. So let's get on the stick and help make Glenn's job, and the College's, a little bit easier with our donations. Sounds like a winner, Glenn!

LAW: Jeff and Lynn Sconyers bought their first home recently after moving to the great Northwest. They write that Jeff is busy with his law practice, and Lynn is working with a hospice program in Seattle. Kevin Monahan completed law school in May 1982 at Florida State and is currently serving as a captain in the Air Force JAG. Kevin is stationed at Hurlburt Field in Fort Walton Beach, Florida. Ruth Drew Davis writes that she graduated from the University of Puget Sound Law School in May 1982 and is currently working as an associate in the firm of Ferenz, Williams, Gruskin & Ashton in Agana, Guam. She and her husband, Richard, moved to Guam in June 1979. They live in the village of Ipan-Talafofo near the beach and hope to travel while out there. Proving that it is a small world, John Schmidtke also graduated from the University of Puget Sound School of Law, in December 1982. Finally, after 2 years in Dallas with the EPA, Janet McKinnon has entered law school at Harvard. She says that law school is challenging and rewarding and that Massachusetts winters are a real shock.

TEACHING: Janice Marshall writes that in the past few years she has taught English in Japan, worked in the D.C. area and studied in Florence, Italy. She says that she is now back in the D.C. area looking for work. Karen Kreutzinger Waggener has been teaching high school French for the past two years and spends her spare time sailing, water-skiing and snow skiing. Her husband farms about 2000 acres in Southeast Missouri. Mickey Kersey Naff lives in Ferrum, Va. and teaches in the business department at Ferrum College. Her husband, Wes, owns his own real estate company.

FINANCE: Betsy Hanlon was seen in D.C. recently where she works for Communications Satellite Corp. (COMSAT). Betsy is the manager of financial analysis for this evolving company. And congratulations to Butch Falconer in his promotion to Director of Financial Reporting and Corporate Accounting with Best Products. He formerly served in their audit area as well as the financial reporting and fixed assets areas.

HAWAII: Debra Harris Kaye is living in Kaneohe, Hawaii after getting married earlier this year. She met her husband while Scuba diving. According to Debra, he was the instructor and she was the student. And on a recent trip to Hawaii, Floyd Tilley reported that he engaged in that little known sport of lava surfing. Floyd says that he only suffered second degree burns and that his numerous rides were "worth every blister."

Janet Leary is working for Tenneco Chemicals in Piscataway, N.J. and attending Rutgers' Toxicology Program. Mary Daly Einkauff has been in Iowa City for the past 3½ years with her husband, Michael. She is presently the Program Manager with the American College Testing (ACT) program, and Michael is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Religion at the University of Iowa. Scott MacLaren is in his second year at the William and Mary Graduate School of Business and for the second year has won the Elizabeth George Fellowship. Prior to school he had worked for 3 years in the F.W. Woolworth management training program in Richmond and with a proprietary house painting business.

I hope every one has a safe summer, and if you have a few minutes, please pencil down a few thoughts so we can share them in next fall's first column.

This will be our last column until fall. Keep writing this summer! Plan now to attend our 5th year reunion at Homecoming, October 21-23. Watch for important details in the May and June issues of the Alumni Gazette. We will be planning reunion events this summer; anyone interested in helping please send me your address and phone number.

Michele Macaraeg will be finishing her PhD in computational fluid dynamics at the University of Tennessee Space Institute this term. She passed the comprehensive written exam in 1981 and will complete the orals this year. Her dissertation is a mathematical model of an experiment to be conducted aboard a later space shuttle flight. She may have an opportunity to become a payload specialist aboard this flight to monitor the experiment. Her work is under contract with NASA Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

I hope many of you were able to watch the final episode of MASH in February. Karen Hall was among the group of writers for that series and her success has led her to MTM productions as the executive story editor for "Hill Street Blues" on NBC. In August, Karen plans to marry Sheldon Bull, producer of the CBS series, "Newhart." Karen was featured in a recent issue of the Gazette if you would like to know more of her success in Hollywood!

Mark A. Williams graduated from Washington & Lee Law School in 1981. Since then he has been an associate with the Roanoke firm of Woods, Rogers, Muse, Walker & Thornton. In April, he joined the Roanoke City Attorney's office as Assistant City Attorney.

Ed Rule is a Disbursing and Sales Officer on the USS David R. Ray, a destroyer stationed in San Diego, CA. James (Red) Smith is also stationed on the same ship. They have had tours in the Indian Ocean, to the Philippines, Pearl Harbor, and Australia. In Jan. 1982, Ed married Maria Talley from Arlington, Va.

Robert and Sheryl Lukasik Bass are working together in Northern Va. They have recently added a new deck to the second floor of their new home in Manassas. They are looking forward to enjoying it this summer along with Wolf Trap and the Washington zoo. Robert and his associate went to the Super Bowl this year to see the Redskins win! Sheryl stayed home to recover from having four wisdom teeth removed. They have had an eventful year so far and look forward to seeing friends throughout the year and Homecoming this fall.

David Samuels married Patty Vallone in January, 1979. David finished law school in Ohio and was recently commissioned into the Navy JAG corps as an ensign. He will attend officer training school this summer and then begin a career as an attorney with the JAG. They have a 2 year old daughter, Kimberly Celeste. Chris Weglarz, who is now in Pittsburgh, is her godfather.

OCTOBER 21-23
HOME COMING
YOU'RE INVITED!

Jenny Runkle Carver and her husband, Ken, are both professors in the School of Business, Montana State University. They have been in Bozeman for 2 years and say the skiing is great!

John Cooper received his MBA from the University of Illinois in 1980. He is working as Product Manager for Counselor Co. (bath scales) in Rockford, Ill.

Catherine Sentman is working in Washington, D.C. as the Public Relations Coordinator for the Folger Shakespeare Library.

Beth Howell is with Science Applications, Inc. where she was recently promoted to Computer Scientist. She was awarded an independent research and development project and will be principal investigator on the project, "An Expert System Demonstration in Information Fusion." She is engaged to Neil Groundwater who is a senior software engineer at Analytic Disciplines, Inc. When they visited the family in Hollywood, Beth was treated to her first earthquake! They plan to be married around Labor Day and will live in Sterling, Va.

COLLEGE WINS EMORY GAME

A team of undergraduate students from William and Mary has captured first place in the industry division in the 18th annual intercollegiate business game sponsored by Emory University. Computer simulated, the game ran for five weeks with 28 competing colleges and universities making the kind of decisions a business firm would be expected to make in such fields as marketing, production, and finance. The team, led by Professor Jess Tarleton (at far right) of the School of Business, sent its decisions in twice a week for a simulated period of two-and-one-half years. Displaying the award with the students is Dean Charles L. Quittmeyer '40 of the School of Business.

KOREANS HIGHLIGHT COLLEGE

A group from the Korean Broadcasting System recently visited William and Mary to prepare a 50-minute program on the College that will be shown in South Korea. The program is the first in a series about university life that will focus on small, large and medium size institutions in various parts of the world. William and Mary was chosen to participate because of its reputation as a prestigious academic institution and its unique historic heritage, according to Chongham Kim, a professor of government who helped the crew while it was at the College.

Joe Agee is still in Hilton Head, S.C. but he is now involved in real estate sales. Previously, Joe was selling time sharing condominiums.

Jack Clifford has opened his office for the general practice of law in Midlothian, Va. He was formerly associated with the firm of Marks, Stokes & Harrison. During the 1983 session of the Va. General Assembly, Jack was clerk for the Courts of Justice Committee of the House of Delegates.

Debbie D'Alfonso and Kim Iriate have both been selected to attend the American Graduate School of International Management in Arizona.

Career Exploration Day was organized by the Offices of Career Planning and Placement and was held February 12 at William and Mary. Many alumni gave their time to represent various disciplines on discussion panels. Endia Browne participated on the panel for Counseling/Psychology. She is placement counselor for N. C. State University in Raleigh, N.C.

There are a variety of ways in which you can offer support to William and Mary. Financial support is the most obvious. The Career Planning and Placement offices need your help as well. If you can provide time, information or any type of contact between your company or field of service, contact Stan Brown or the Alumni Office. You can also contact me when you send in news for the Gazette and I will forward it to the College.

I hope all of you have an enjoyable and safe summer! Remember HOMECOMING - OUR 5TH YEAR REUNION - OCTOBER 21-23. See you then!

It's already May, but I can't say that I know where the last four months have gone. I've heard that the years go by faster as you get older and I'm beginning to see the truth in that saying! With the advent of May also comes the last of our class news until the September issue, so I'll get caught up on most everything that I've heard to-date.

As for myself, as of the end of May I'll be moving... again! It's become almost a ritual for the last two years, but not one that I can say I enjoy. As I'm writing this, I'm not sure where I'll be living, so for the time being, use the address above, or Pam Lunny, 11 Great Oak Lane, West Redding, CT 06896. I've been making plans for a trip to England this summer, as long as all goes as expected. My first time overseas, so I'm excited as well as a little anxious! Hope to have quite a few stories to tell!

Pixie Hamilton is back at school after having worked for two years for an environmental consulting firm in Virginia where she was doing hazardous waste research. Pixie is in a two year graduate program in civil engineering at the University of Virginia, due to finish in the fall of 1984.

Jeff Sluyter is at Columbia University in New York where he is working towards a Masters degree in international affairs. Last I heard from Bill Childs, he was at the American Graduate School of International Management in Glendale, Arizona where he was in the Masters program. He had nothing but praise for the school — between the curriculum and the numerous nationalities and cultures represented, not to forget the sun, he was having a great time and found it to be a challenging yet extremely rewarding experience. Bill also found time to play on the soccer team, with players from Italy, France, Norway, Brazil, Ecuador. . .

Karen Tolson has been working as a legal secretary for a Washington, D.C. firm, and has still found time to perform in several community theatres — one of her past parts was the lead in "Bus Stop." Karen had news of several other classmates. Denise (Trogdon) and Fereol de Gastyne are expecting a little de Gastyne this spring. Congratulations to the proud parents-to-be! Sheryl Anderson was promoted to the position of "executive" in a tax executives' professional corporation. Sheryl is still writing at least one novel and formulating ideas for a couple of film scripts. Emily Bell is an assistant musical director for students' shows at the University of Maryland, and accompanies dance classes on the piano. Susan Burns has been teaching junior high school English and theatre in Virginia Beach since graduation. She has directed two of her own plays for the students' regional one-act play festival; one was rated "superior," the highest honor to be given at the festival. Congratulations, Susan! Mike McLane will be finishing (or may have already finished!) his Masters in journalism at the University of Florida where he has performed in "South Pacific" and "Godspell."

Chase Sizemore is currently in law school at Brigham Young University Law School where he is writing a treatise on negligence law for the BYU Law Journal. Prior to his return to law school, Chase worked for Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. in Washington, DC. Even after he completes his J.D., Chase plans to further his education in international taxation and business.

Christine Kurtz recently completed her Masters program in anthropology at the University of Michigan as well as fulfilling the requirements for the Specialist in Aging Certificate from the Institute of Gerontology. She found time to work at the Washtenaw Adult Day Care Center which enhanced Christine's interest in formulating her career plans around care for the frail elderly.

For those of you in the Roanoke area, be sure to tune in to the 11 o'clock weeknight newscasts on Channel 7, WDBJ-TV, for the anchor person will be none other than Becky Riddle! Becky was a news reporter for WFIR radio before joining WDBJ. She will also be producing WDBJ's "Ahead at Six," and the newscast at 11 o'clock. Congratulations, Becky!

Susan Butler writes from Harrisonburg where she has been working as a customer service representative for R. R. Donnelley & Sons, a printing firm. Sue has really enjoyed her job there. She has some exciting news — she'll be getting married in May. Sue's fiancé is from her hometown, but, in case you didn't know, she grew up in the Philippines. She went to high school with her fiancé, but lost touch for several years until last summer through a touch of fate. Her fiancé recently finished graduate school at Cornell and just started in the foreign service. They were hoping to be assigned to Malaysia where they would be nearer their hometown. Sue also writes that Lisa Russell will be in the wedding. Lisa had been working at Wake Forest in Winston-Salem but moved to Roanoke where she is now working for a law firm.

If anyone's travelling in the vicinity of Memphis, Tennessee, be sure to visit Naomi (Okinaka) and Al Heck. Naomi and Al were married last June in the Wren Chapel and are now settled in Memphis. Naomi graduated from Penn State last summer with her Masters in environmental pollution control and is now working as a chemist for Buckman Laboratories while Al has been busy with med school at the University of Tennessee Center for the Health Sciences. Al is in his third year and, although it's a challenge at times, he enjoys it very much.

Melissa Bird has been stationed overseas with the Army for the last couple years. She was first stationed in Frankfurt as a financial management officer and then moved to Karlsruhe, West Germany, where Melissa was a service platoon leader. Karen Brissette was able to visit Melissa, and together they travelled around the German countryside.

Karen Fritz writes from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where she has been busy with law school at Marquette University Law School. Karri is also a representative to the Student Bar Association there and president of the legal fraternity. As if that wasn't enough, she's also working as a circuit court intern and a research assistant in international business transactions. Last summer, Karri moved back to Washington, D.C., while she worked in the Office of International Activities for the Smithsonian, also at the National Museum of African Art where she drafted many of their legal documents, and at the Consumer Protection Center as an arbitrator in consumer-business disputes. In her spare time (spare?), Karri also worked on a Law Review article at Georgetown University. Somewhere in there, she managed to take time out for a trip to Nags Head, then up to New England and back to Dallas, before heading back to school. She had a great time and seems to be enjoying everything.

Just to update some news I reported in the last column: Cathy (Welch) and Dean Kurtz are proud to announce the arrival of Matthew Dean, born in January. Congratulations!

Well, that's about all for now, folks! Hope you all have a fantastic summer. Mark your calendars now for Homecoming — October 21-23, 1983. Maybe I'll make it down this year. Be sure to keep in touch over the summer — hope to hear from quite a few people.

This seems to be a difficult time of the year for many of the Class of 1982. I received a number of letters from gainfully employed grads who are beginning to realize, with some dismay, that even the best employment benefits do not include a Spring Break! Here's hoping that wherever each of you are, and whatever you're up to, you can find a little spare time to take it easy and enjoy spring — even if it's not in Fort Lauderdale.

Spare time for some members of the class is being taken up with wedding plans. Richard Choate and Cynthia Vick will be married on April 9 in Courtland, Va. On June 4 in Charlottes, S.C., Paul Solitario will marry Laura Wortman. Anne Clark and Howard Murrell are engaged, as is Martha Spong, who now resides in New York City. Mike Wright and Kelly Wagner's engagement party brought many '82 grads together for what one guest said was a night of "toasting picture-taking, and chandelier decorating." Their wedding is planned for September.

A few letters arrived from classmates who sounded so busy I'm surprised they found time to write. (But I'm glad they did, or this column would be a lot shorter!) Bev Carson wrote of her new job as a sales representative for Clairrol products in Charlottesville, and of "camping" in her new, but empty apartment. She knew a little about a lot of '82 alumni including Peyton Pond (an MBA at Virginia Tech), Elynn Pearson (UVA Med school student), Julie Maley (working for a PhD in Genetics at the University of Colorado), Jan Mallison (Proctor & Gamble representative in Maryland), Colin Pulley (in the family business of Nottaway House furniture), Carole Carver (a Manager for Shamrock, and in the planning stages of a big trip to Europe), and Chris Weiler (who came down to Williamsburg in February to help her freshman sister move out of the fire destroyed Jefferson Hall dorm).

Winston Faircloth wrote to let me know that Skip Nolan is an MBA student in Northern Virginia, and that West Africa is the current home of Peace Corps volunteer Patrice Failor. The incredible thing about his own job is that since graduation he has worked in Alexandria, VA., Pittsburgh, PA., and Louisville, KY, as part of an internship program with United Way, Inc. He will also be travelling to Charleston, SC, and then New Orleans, LA, before the year is out. He admits to being "homeless," but feels very lucky to be one of only a dozen students selected nationwide to participate in the program.

The most "interesting" letter I got was one from Dave Ardis. It included a blackmail note concerning an enclosed photograph, but no news about himself. C'mon Dave — send me some real news (and I want the negative!).

Add to the growing list of '82 grads in Washington, D.C., the names of Cheryl Hess (banking), Mary Sheil (rooms and works with Anne Benton at AMS), Susan O'Sullivan (on "the Hill"), Susan Shinn (front office trainee for Sheraton Hotels), and Kath Henry (who writes great letters about other William and Mary alumni such as Chris Cherry '81 and John Bloom '81, also of D.C.). I ran into Cindy Suhr and Vivian Schreffler at William and Mary where they had taken a weekend refuge from the big D.C. snowstorm in February. Both were enthusiastic about life in D.C. except for its Williamsburg-like lack of suburban snow removal equipment.

While in Richmond during the 1983 Va. General Assembly session, I found classmates working, studying and 'politicking' at the state capitol. Beth Comstock is working for a TV cable company which films legislative sessions. Randolph Beales coordinates special programs for the Governor's wife, and is involved in a fundraising drive for increased William and Mary faculty salaries. Lisa Trevey and Donna (Fenwick) Hopkins are at MCV, while Cassie Price (of Red Carpet Travels), Wendy Kidwell (of the Tobacco Company Restaurant), and Cheryl Newman (of the Chesapeake Cable Company) share an apartment and 'the Slip' nightlife in Richmond. I spoke with Paul Daus, who is now the Richmond sales engineer for Air Products and Chemicals, Inc. Brad Pollok and I met unexpectedly at a Richmond political dinner. Guests included the Governor of Va, top state officials and keynote speaker/Presidential candidate John Glenn, but I was impressed by the appearance of none other than Mark Moseley of the Super Bowl Champion Washington Redskins. I thought that was really 'something' until I learned that classmate Buff DeBelles, the Tribe's color commentator for Basketball games, had actually gone out to California for the Super Bowl as part of the official WVEC-TV Press Corps. Now that's impressive!

The climate and job opportunities in Texas and Arizona are enticing other grads to head west permanently. Susan Ridenour is the Project Coordinator for Funding Information Library in San Antonio, Texas, and rooms with 2nd Lt. Karen Johnson, who is earning a Masters in Physical Therapy with the U.S. Army. Sue invites all area alumni to get in touch with her, and can't say enough about the city she now calls home. Michael Duday is a Business Development officer for Great Western Bank in Tucson, Arizona, and

ALUMNI WIN MELLON GRANTS

Two recent alumni have received Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities for graduate study in the 1983-84 academic year. Maryclaire Moroney '81, who is employed in the Littauer Library of government and economics at Harvard, and Timothy J. Payne '82, who is currently working toward his certification in secondary school English at William and Mary, are the recipients of the awards which include a $7,000 stipend plus tuition and standard fees during the first year of study and are renewable for a second year. Miss Moroney plans to study either at Harvard or Yale toward a degree in Renaissance literature while Payne plans to work toward a degree in English literature at the University of Virginia. Both are Phi Beta Kappa members who majored in English at William and Mary. The College is one of 12 colleges and universities to have two Mellon award recipients and the only university to have two scholars in English who received the award.

DON REILLY WINS NATIONAL HONOR

Don Reilly '85 of Fairfax, Va., has won the 1983 Irene Ryan National Scholarship, symbolic of the nation's top college actor. Chosen by a blue-ribbon panel of casting directors from NBC, ABC, CBS, MTM Productions, Universal Studios, and several independent casting agencies in New York, Reilly, a sophomore at William and Mary, won out over 10,000 students who entered the competition. Earlier Reilly won the regional competition held in Blacksburg, Va. He won the national competition in Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., over 11 other regional finalists.

Mike Dwyer joins a select group of students in Glendale, Arizona at the American Grad School of International Management.

Frequent trips to Williamsburg in March gave me the opportunity to learn of and congratulate Doug Martini on his acceptance to UVA Med School. He will be joining Tom Martin there, as well as grad student Henry Cochran. Chris Mast is doing grad work at William and Mary in order to add a Geology major to the Biology major she has already completed. She is rooming with Lora Jean Masters. Seen at a recent MBA party there, Chris says she is studying hard, but still finds time to play an occasional game of tennis. Tom Dunbar, also in Williamsburg, is yet another '82 grad who became one of the great "first years" at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

I'd like to close these class notes with a reminder of the pledge made by the Class of '82 to purchase library books for the college. Recent cutbacks and ceilings on spending for higher education make the need for updated library resources more crucial than ever. Remember how frustrating it was to research a paper with inadequate source material, or a limited number of book copies available?

It would be great if we were the last class to have to go through that, but realistically, we can only hope to alleviate the problems for future classes, and perhaps in doing so, set an example for future class gifts. I think it suffices to say, however, that none of us are millionaires at the age of 23. I'm literally going to be scraping together nickels and dimes to pay for my education and living expenses in the next year, but I hope you will join me in setting aside some of that hard earned money to spare future William and Mary students some grief. Thanks, and keep the letters coming.

DEATHS

ADAH ANITA LOTTI, '24, of New Market, Virginia, died July 16, 1981. After leaving William and Mary, she attended the University of Virginia Medical School, earning her degree in 1925 as a member of the University's first medical class to include female students.

ELIZABETH ROGERS BOGGS, '26 A. B., of Onancock, Virginia, died July 6, 1982, as a result of cardiovascular disease. A retired teacher with the Accomack County and Norfolk school systems, she was a former head of the English department at Norfolk's Maury High School. She was a member of Market Street United Methodist Church. Survivors include several nieces and nephews.

JULIAN A. ETHERIDGE, '31, of Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, died January 7, 1983. A native of Hickory, Virginia, he was a member of Lambda Chi Alpha at William and Mary.

FRANCES WILLIAM HULL, '33 B.S., of Gardner, Massachusetts, died November 27, 1982 of cancer. A member of Omicron Delta Kappa and Pi Kappa Alpha at William and Mary, he served in the U.S. Navy as Lieutenant during World War II, earning several awards and decorations for his service in Japan and the South Pacific. He was Treasurer-Controller of the Seaman Paper Company of Massachusetts, retiring in 1976. Following his retirement, he continued to work as a consultant in the fields of management and taxation. He was active in numerous professional and civic organizations, and was listed in Who's Who in Finance in the East. He was a former member of the Parish Council and a Lector of Sacred Heart Church. Survivors include his wife Miriam, a daughter, and two sons.

KATE EDWINA CLARY, '34 A. B., of Richmond, Virginia, died in January, 1983. A teacher, she earned her M. A. from Columbia University in 1941. Survivors include two aunts, Sidney G. Clary, '43, and Mary Edwina Clary Wood, '48.

EDWARD P. BACON, '37, of Hillsboro Beach, Florida, died of a heart attack on May 17, 1980, in Honolulu, Hawaii. A native of Bridgeton, New Jersey, he lived for a number of years in Ocean City before moving to Florida in 1978. In addition to William and Mary, he attended Pierce Business College in Philadelphia. An army veteran of World War II, he was employed by Ferracute Machine Company of Bridgeton until his retirement; he was also an accountant in private practice. He is survived by his wife Ruth; a daughter; and a brother, John F. Bacon, '34.

LINDA ACREE WADDILL (SIMPSON), '38 B. A., of Delray Beach, Florida, died August 19, 1982. A native of Danville, Virginia, she was married to the late Jay Francis Simpson, Jr., '36.

JEAN ELIZABETH GEORGE (SYKES), '39, a long-time resident of Glen Cove, New York, died in November, 1982. Highly active in community affairs, she was awarded the 1,000 hour pin for 15 years of service as a volunteer worker at the Community Hospital of Glen Cove. Along with her husband, she was a generous supporter of the College. In 1970, she established the William F. George Scholarship Fund at William and Mary to assist out-of-state women; this fund was established in memory of her father, who had borrowed on his life insurance to send her to William and Mary. In 1974, she was a member of the President's Council. She and her husband moved to Greenwich, Connecticut in 1980. Survivors include her husband Macrae, two sons, and a daughter.

FLORENCE ROGERS JOYNES (STROUD), '39 A. B., of White Plains, New York, died March 28, 1983. A member of Delta Delta at William and Mary, she was a native of Norfolk. Survivors include her husband William, a daughter, and a brother.

VINCENT JOSEPH LUSARDI, '40 B. S., of Brookneal, Virginia, died March 31, 1983. A member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon at William and Mary, he was a native of Cranford, New Jersey and a veteran of World War II. Until his retirement in 1975, he was a Chevrolet dealer. At the time of his death, he was mayor of Brookneal, Chairman of the Board of the Brookneal Central Fidelity Bank and a member of the Board of Central Fidelity Bank. He was an active member of the Class of '40 Reunion Committee, participating in numerous alumni and class functions. A member of St. Elizabeth's Catholic Church, he is survived by his wife, Carolyn Moses Lusardi, '40; one son, Vincent J. Jr., '81; three daughters, Jean Carolyn, '67, Virginia L. Cox, '73, and Teresa L. Colbert; one brother, and one sister.

JUNE ELIZABETH LUCAS (CLANCY), '41 B.S., died November 20, 1981 at her home in Branford, Connecticut. At William and Mary, she was a member of Alpha Chi Omega and Mortarboard; president of Women's Student Government; and, in 1941, May Queen. A retired school librarian, she had worked for many years for the Branford Board of Education. She was a member of St. Mary's Church and Delta Kappa Gamma. The widow of Stuart J. Clancy Sr., she is survived by two sons and two daughters.

PRUDENCE WAYNE WHITE (QUARLES), '42, died of cancer on January 10, 1983 at her home in Gainesville, Florida. After leaving William and Mary, she earned her undergraduate degree from the University of Virginia in 1943. Survivors include her husband James, one daughter, and two sons.

EMILY CHRISTINE RENTSCH (BRYANT), '48 A.B., died January 20, 1982, in Minneapolis, Minnesota. A sociology major at William and Mary, she earned her M.S. in Social Service from Boston University in 1951. That same year, she married Robert H. Bryant, '46. She served in various positions in the field of social work in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Minnesota. She is survived by her husband, a daughter, and two sons.

JAMES BASIL SAWYER, JR., '51 B. A., of Hampton, Virginia, died March 19, 1983 in Richmond. A member of Phi Kappa Tau at William and Mary, he continued his education at the College following his graduation, earning his B. C. L. from Marshall-Wythe in 1954. A lifelong resident of the Peninsula, he was a partner in the Hampton law firm of James, Richardson, James, Sawyer and Quinn. He was a member of the Virginia State Bar Association and a member and former president of the Hampton Bar Association and the Hampton Roads Assembly. Survivors include his wife, Janet McGowan Sawyer, '53; two daughters; two sons; his mother; five sisters; and three brothers.

DOYLE MAURICE LEVY, '52 B. A., of Norfolk, Virginia was stabbed to death in early February, 1983. At the time of his death, he was a mathematics teacher at Booker T. Washington High School. Prior to his becoming a teacher, he worked in a furniture store. Survivors include a brother, David B. Levy, '45.

JEAN SIMES (SHERMAN), GRAD, of Long Island, New York, died May 15, 1982. She earned her B. S. from New York University. Survivors include her husband Vincent, and a sister, Janet S. Tribble, '33.
