THE COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

The Presidential Search

William And Mary Begins Search For 25th President

Who is the ideal individual to lead William and Mary into its fourth century and perhaps into the year 2000?

The College has had only 24 presidents in its distinguished 291-year history, and now the search is underway for the person who will succeed Dr. Thomas A. Graves Jr. and become the 25th president.

The Board of Visitors has tapped its own leader, Anne Dobie Peebles '44, the rector of the College, to serve as chair person of the search, and she in turn has selected a 16-person committee to conduct the search. The committee has been carefully assembled to reflect representation from the faculties, students, and the alumni of the College of William and Mary.

The only "deadline" the committee is operating under is one imposed indirectly by President Graves who said he hopes to retire prior to the 1985-86 academic year. He assumed the presidency in 1971, and will have served in office for 14 years when he leaves William and Mary.

But before the search committee can even begin looking for the ideal man or woman to succeed President Graves, Miss Peebles feels it must put together a profile on what that individual should be like. And that is what has occupied the first stages of the search.

Miss Peebles has written open letters to the constituencies of the College asking for their "best thoughts and...counsel as we begin to see [President Graves'] replacement." In a letter to faculty, staff and students of the College, she outlined the questions the committee would be asking over the next few weeks:

"We are beginning by asking ourselves what the College will be like in ten years from now; what manner of man or woman is equipped to lead in these exciting, changing times and what special qualifications we should seek in a William and Mary President. Later, nominations for the presidency will be sought and received, and work in verifying credentials and in evaluating performance will proceed."

Miss Peebles also wrote the presidents of the various William and Mary alumni chapters seeking their advice on the presidential search. On April 17, she and Austin L. Roberts III '69, president of the Society of the Alumni, met with a group of 12 alumni at the Alumni House and talked about the destiny of the College in the years immediately ahead.

William and Mary's 25th President in its 291-year history will occupy this office in Ewell Hall. The search is expected to take about six months. Three recommendations by the search committee will be made to the Board of Visitors which will make the final selection.

The group, which consists of alumni intimately familiar with the governance of the College, tried "to identify the strengths and characteristics of leadership they perceive to be most needed at this time in the life of the College," said Miss Peebles. "They were invited to involve themselves in identifying strong candidates for the presidency."

The alumni group is one of three "conduits" the Presidential Search Committee is using to receive information and advice as it pursues the presidential search. The Student Liaison Committee and the Faculty Liaison Committee to the Board of Visitors will serve as conduits to their respective constituencies.

In addition to feedback from these groups, the search committee will integrate information from two college-wide studies now in progress at

William and Mary: the Self-Study, which is required every 10 years by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, and the Long-Range Planning Committee which is taking a look at university policy and structure.

From these sources, the search committee hopes to get a "composite of the thoughts" of the entire College family, says Miss Peebles, before actually looking for a new president for William and Mary.

"I have tried to make it abundantly clear that all of our constituencies are welcome to make recommendations and nominations," she said.

Miss Peebles, who calls the search a "labor of love" and expects it to be a full-time job over the next several months, has already sensed the intense interest in the presidential search. She received 67 letters from people asking to be appointed to the search committee and agonized over its composition to make certain that it was a representative group.

What Miss Peebles arrived at was a committee consisting of seven members of the Board of Visitors, all of whom are alumni: Lt. Gov. Richard J. Davis '42, Jerry K. Jebo '67, Henry T. Tucker Jr. '72, Robert J. Faulconer '43, Harriet Nachman Storm '64, Colin R. Davis '50, Hays T. Watkins '82 LL.D.; two representatives from the Faculty of Arts and Sciences: Scott Donaldson, professor of English, and Vinson H. Sutlive Jr., professor of anthropology; representatives from the four professional schools; John E. Donaldson, law; John R. Thelin, education; Charles L. Quittmeyer '40, business administration; and Robert J. Byrne, marine sciences; one representative from the student body: David Fetter, a sophomore, and two alumni representatives: retired rector Herbert V. Kelly '40 and Vilma "Sissy" Mason '49.

Ten Nominated For Board

Five Positions On Board To Be Filled In Fall Elections

Ten alumni, including one current member of the Board of Directors, have been nominated for five positions on the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni.

One of the nominees, Audrey Murray Harris '60, of Richmond, is an incumbent, running for a second three year term. She is staff and research specialist with the Virginia Department of Personnel and Training.

Other nominees are Robert A. Beason '70, a trial lawyer with Maxwell Freeman Beason and Morano in Durham, North Carolina; J. Edward Gimsley '51, of Richmond, editorial page editor for the Richmond Times Dispatch; William S. Hubard '46, of Roanoke, Va., who is vice president for administration and secretary of Shenandoah Life Insurance Company and a former member of the Board of Visitors; Ellen Ticer King '31, of Alexandria, Va., a housewife and civic worker and vice president of the Olde Guard Council; Vernon L. Nunn '25, of Williamsburg, a recipient of the Alumni Medallion and former treasurer-auditor of the College; William T. Prince '55, a past president of the Virginia State Bar and an attorney in Norfolk; Elizabeth "Stevie" Bartlett St. Clair '51, of Wilmington, Del., Christian Education consultant on the staff of the Peninsula Conference of the United Methodist Church; Warren E. Winston '73, of Upper Marlboro, Md., a district executive with the Boy Scouts of America; and Douglas S. Wood '63, of Reston, Va., who is the associate director, Office of Enforcement Operations, Criminal Division, United States Department of Justice.

Elections to the Board will be held this fall and the winners will be announced at the Society's annual meeting held during Homecoming in November.

Betty Hicks Wagner '51, served as chairman of the Nominating Committee which included William G. Thompson, Jr. '28, Lavinia Pretz Phillips '59, John H. Greene '70, and W. Samuel Sadler '64.

Retiring from the Board after serving the maximum of two consecutive terms are James W. Brinkley '59, of Towson, Maryland; James E. Howard '43, of Richmond; Austin L. Roberts, III, '69, of Newport News, Va.; and G. Elliott Schaubach, Jr., '59, of Norfolk.

HOUSE NOTES

A copy of THE LIFE OF AN ORATORIO TENOR, by the late Charles Troxell '38, has been placed in the Paschall Library.

Robert Miles Parker '61, author of IMAGES OF AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE, will have a new book, entitled L.A., published this spring by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich.

Yearbooks, programs, clippings, and postcards of the 30's have been added to the memorabilia collection by Marian Jane Holl '34, and 1935 postcards depicting College buildings have been received from Mae Wright Hocutt Reid '36.

M. Carl Andrews '27, was on campus recently to attend Olde Guard Day and the OWJ meeting. He brought for the memorabilia collection his 1923 orange and black duc cap. The November 27, 1923 edition of THE FLAT HAT announced "College Colors Changed to Green, Silver and Gold," the colors appearing in the coat of arms which the Royal College of Heralds issued to the College of William and Mary in 1964. THE FLAT HAT further announced that duc caps would remain as they were (orange and black) "for the present session."

Gifts of books by alumni authors and gifts of memorabilia should be addressed to Paschall Library, Society of the Alumni, Post Office Box 60, Williamsburg, Virginia 23187.

INSIDE ADMISSIONS

THE COLLEGE RATING GAME—FACT OR FICTION

By Gary Ripple
Dean of Admissions

The reading public seems to have an insatiable appetite for publications that rank colleges. Everyone is interested in knowing how one college compares with all others whether it be in academics or football. The attempts to rate colleges according to a variety of faculty, facility and student body criteria remind one of the dash for Monday morning papers to check the sport polls. Most books and magazine articles on the subject of college ratings are interesting, fun to read and (no doubt) profitable. People have enjoyed attempts by the New York Times, U.S. News and World Report and Barron's explaining which colleges and universities are superior to others in their assigned categories. Some of these publications are better researched and written than others but all miss the whole point about the task undertaken by high school seniors. The choice of a college is a very personal matter based on individual needs. In this consideration, any one particular college might be the best for a particular student.

Imagine an independent publishing firm attempting to rank the churches in your community. What criteria would be used? Would everyone agree with the final results? Probably not because any one church can best serve its own members.

So it is with colleges. The young person must choose an institution with the correct size, location (including distance from home) and academic programs paying minor consideration to its rank or reputation. No one institution can call itself the very best for everyone while each accredited college or university has some particularly redeeming qualities which may make it just right for the young man or woman who aspires to be a member of its community.

350 ALUMNI ENJOY OLDE GUARDE DAY

R. E. B. Stewart '27, chairman of the Olde Guard Council, presented a check for $2700 from the Olde Guard to the President of the William and Mary Choir, Robert Seal '84, to help finance the Choir's trip to Europe this summer.

retiring member of the Olde Guard Council, receives a certificate of appreciation from Chairman R. E. B. Stewart '27. Mr. Stewart remarked that Mrs. Montague was his first date at William and Mary 61 years ago, and it was time that he got his first hug!

The Press And The Political System

Top Journalists Discuss The Role Of The Press At Northern Virginia Chapter Meeting

More than 350 alumni and friends attended the annual spring meeting of the Northern Virginia alumni chapter on April 11 at the Army Navy Country Club in Arlington. After dinner (left), the group heard a panel of Washington area journalists discuss "The Role of the Press in the Political System," and more specifically in a presidential campaign. Arranged by Sarah Kemp Brady '63, a member of the chapter's board of directors, and chaired by her husband Jim, press secretary to President Reagan, the panel included Judy Woodruff (above), newscaster for the McNeil-Lehrer Report; Jim Dickenson (right), political reporter for the Washington Post; and Jim Lake (below, right), former press secretary for the Reagan campaign. Bob Machen (below) '63 M.Ed., president of the Northern Virginia Chapter, welcomed the alumni to the chapter meeting.

Bob and Dorothy Machen, together with Sarah and Jim Brady, visited with alumni prior to the program.

Weidner Makes The NBA But May Not Stay

LAW SCHOOL SUMMONS 6'9" SAN ANTONIO SPUR ROOKIE FORWARD

Last year at this time Brant Weidner was worried about final examinations at William and Mary, eagerly anticipating graduation, and looking forward to getting out into the working world. Today, he could be retiring from a profession where $40,000 per year is the minimum wage.

The 6'9" Weidner played the last month and a half of the past season for the San Antonio Spurs, thus becoming the first William and Mary athlete ever to make the grade in the National Basketball Association. Despite his recent ascension to the pinnacle of sports achievement, Weidner may have already played his last NBA game. He has been accepted to three law schools in Chicago in the fall (DePaul, Loyola, and Chicago-Kent); and barring unforeseen circumstances (like a guaranteed spot on the Spurs roster next fall), he will abandon the court for the classroom.

To those who followed Weidner's career at William and Mary from the beginning, his emergence as an NBA player has to be a surprise. Tribe head coach Barry Parkhill, who as an assistant helped recruit Weidner out of Allentown, Pa., recalled: "When Brant came here he was big and strong and could shoot, but his skills were a little raw."

The potential that Parkhill and the other coaches saw blossomed during Weidner's stay at the College. "He improved as much as any player we had here," Parkhill said.

After sharing time at center with Kenny Bowen '82, for two seasons, Weidner started as a junior, winning the team's "Most Improved Player" award. In 1982-83 he earned first-team All-ECAC South honors, both for the regular season and in the conference tournament.

Anchored by Weidner's presence in the middle, the Tribe rolled to a 20-9 mark and its first post-season berth ever. His 11.9 scoring average and 7.2 rebounds per game belied his value to the team. "In his last year Brant was a great shooter and rebounder," Parkhill said. "He gave us what every team needs and would love to have."

Weidner's prowess did not escape the notice of the pro scouts from San Antonio, who drafted him the 4th round. He impressed the Spurs management in rookie camp during the summer, but a formidable obstacle stood in the way of his making the team. That obstacle was 7'4" Artis Gilmore, veteran performer and former NBA all-star. Ironically, it was Gilmore's misfortune that eventually provided Weidner's opportunity.

The Spurs suggested that Weidner get some seasoning by playing in the European professional league, which has come to serve as a minor league system for the NBA. San Antonio retained his American contract rights while Weidner took his talents to the Netherlands.

When his Dutch team was eliminated from the European Cup competition early this year, Weidner collected his pay and came home, convinced that he was all through with basketball as a career. "I had moved to Chicago, when I got settled in for law school in the fall," he said. "Then I got a call from my agent."

The giant Gilmore had gone out with an injury, creating an immediate opening for a big man on the Spurs. "They wanted to know if I could be in San Antonio in two days," Weidner said.

Like any understudy who suddenly gets a chance to bask in the spotlight, Weidner dropped everything and joined the team on March 6. Two 10-day contracts later, the Spurs signed him for the remainder of the season, keeping him on the roster even after Gilmore returned.

Although he didn't see much playing time, Weidner contributed to the frantic late season chase for a playoff berth. A keen sense of humor helped him appreciate the situation. "I don't know what our record has been since I joined the team, but we won more games than we lost. Though I don't know if you could say there was any correlation between the two," he joked.

Weidner's initiation to the big-time also drew a self-deprecating laugh. His first assignment was to match up with Los Angeles Lakers' center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the all-time leading scorer in professional basketball history. Never one to pass up a challenge, Weidner took pass on offense and promptly launched a shot. "My first NBA shot landed up in the 4th row, blocked by Jabbar," he said. "Now that was exciting."

A few nights later, in the closing seconds of a tight game against San Diego, Weidner drew a charge and converted the ensuing one-and-one to put the contest on ice. He had scored his first NBA points.

Although the Spurs playoff hopes were ultimately dashed by a loss to the rival Kansas City Kings, Weidner's good humor and candor remained unaffected. "We were close, but we blew it," he said.

In what might have been his NBA swansong, a wild 157-154 win over Denver, Weidner played a solid 12 minutes, hauling down three rebounds, blocking two shots, and hitting one of two shots from the field. "I was hoping for more time," he said.

With the season over as of April 15, Weidner has adopted a wait-and-see attitude towards his future in pro basketball. "It all depends on what the Spurs get in the draft," he said. "They want a big forward who can rebound. If they pick up some big stud in the draft, I might be out of the picture."

Bob Bass, the Spurs' General Manager and head coach, wants Weidner to play in the summer pro league in California, another proving ground for fringe NBA players. Then there's rookie camp in August.

As much as he loves the life of a pro basketball player, Weidner is looking to the future. "If it's not an ideal situation, I'll be in school," he said. "I can't afford to be trying out in November, not knowing whether I'll make the team. At that point another year of school will be down the drain."

Comparing his two potential careers, Weidner has no illusions. "I know I'm not the kind of player they'll build a franchise around," he said. "In the NBA your expenses are all taken care of. You can put everything in the bank. In law school, you're spending money immediately as an investment for the future."

He plans to put his NBA salary to good use. "As a result of playing in Europe and here, I'm taken care of for three years of law school. That's basically what I wanted to get out of it," he said.

Weidner has visited the College several times since graduation, but not since his NBA debut. "I hope to maneuver down there now that the season is over," he said.

He also recently met another William and Mary alum in an unlikely place. When the Spurs were out in San Diego for a game, several players took in an NASL indoor soccer game. Weidner noticed that one of the players on the visiting Chicago Sting team looked familiar.

The player turned out to be Mike Flood, who finished up at William and Mary in December and has excelled on the professional soccer circuit since. "I called him up after the game," Weidner said. "We'll probably get together some time this summer in Chicago."

Brant Weidner may not make pro basketball fans forget about Kareem or George Gervin, but he has already made his mark where William and Mary boosters are concerned. This past season has been the culmination of many years of hard work and discipline for Weidner. "I guess anyone who ever touched a basketball wants to end up in a position like this," he said. "Whatever happens, it's been a great experience."

Tribe Athlete Finds That Sports Help Career

SURVEY SHOWS THAT EMPLOYERS LOOK FOR THE WELL-ROUNDED GRADUATE

(Sheila Cunneen is a three-year starter on the varsity field hockey team. Elected to both freshman honor societies, a participant in the William and Mary Honors program as a sophomore, she is currently finishing her first year in the English Honors program. She has "managed" hockey, honors, and a 3.85 GPA. Sheila is also a student writer for the women's sports information office).

As a college athlete, I'm very sensitive to disparaging talk about the academic ability of my counterparts nationwide. A prevailing impression of the NCAA athlete is that he or she gets into college with sub-standard SATs, gets by without learning much, and gets out without a diploma.

I'd like to tell a different story. Mixing field hockey and English hasn't been easy here at William and Mary, but I've managed. And so have my fellow woman athletes, whether they combined gymnastics and accounting, volleyball and government, or lacrosse and biology. To a woman, we will graduate. And what's more, our sports involvement will have actually helped us enter the next stage of life.

I reached this conclusion after wondering, with just a few weeks of "junior security" left, what if any help my field hockey career would be when I approach the real world. I decided to poll William and Mary's thirty senior woman athletes, asking if they felt that their sports activities have helped them in their job searches. The answer was a unanimous, enthusiastic, (and encouraging) "Yes."

"That's the first thing they ask about in interviews. It gets things comfortable and leads into other topics," Chris Paradis said. Paradis is a business honor student who has starred for four years in both field hockey and lacrosse. Psychology major and tennis player Sally Lewe said, "They always bring up the time factor: 'We know William and Mary is difficult academically — how do you do both?' It's also good for conversation if they've played tennis before. Lacrosse defenseman Liz Somers echoed these comments, adding, "Sometimes they didn't even know what lacrosse was — but they'd always ask about it."

Sheila Cunneen (above and second from right) is a junior honor student and three-year starter on the varsity field hockey team. She polled 30 senior woman athletes and found that sports give a big boost to the job prospects of students who participated in sports at William and Mary.

"Oh yes," gymnast Nanae Fujita answered me. "They'd say, 'It seems that you've spent a lot of time with sports.' They'd also ask about the experience of winning NAIA Nationals last year." Two women who will be teaching also said that their athletic knowledge and coaching skills are in high demand.

Having gathered this overwhelming evidence of an athletic advantage, I wondered why prospective employers might favor athletes. Wendy Charlton, recruitment coordinator for the Office of Career Planning and Placement at William and Mary, told me, "There's something about being physically fit and healthy — it comes out in a good appearance, attitude, and enthusiasm. Companies see sports, individual or team, as proof that someone can work with others, even strangers. They see athletes as outgoing and relaxed."

I asked what kind of jobs seem to require these athletic attributes. "Well, all insurance companies look for athletes, and people in sales and retail. They like evidence of physical stamina, as well as healthy appearance," Charlton said. According to her, each year Proctor & Gamble asks the Women's Sports Information Director to recommend individuals. Swank Corporation, a printing and paper supply company, includes "athlete" in its job descriptions. Xerox and IBM also view sports as a plus.

Among the seniors who have landed jobs, many are in the fields Charlton mentioned. Laxwoman Jenny Lewis will be with Macy's Department Store in Atlanta, in their buyer's training program. Karen Irvin, a gymnast, has landed an excellent job with a New York accounting firm, while Liz Somers expects to work for Minnesota Mutual, a financial insurance firm.

Three women will be teaching and coaching. Six will go on to graduate school, and they also felt that sports helped them in the application process. Ann Kempfski, a volleyball player who majored in government, will be a member of the Peace Corps.

Whether in sales, marketing, education, or government, some seniors are still looking. This brings up the point that it isn't easy for these athletes to schedule interviews around their sports schedules. Wendy Charlton recalls when Mary Danz, soccer captain and goalie for both the soccer and lacrosse teams, came to her and said, "It's going to be really tough fitting in interviews before lacrosse starts, but I'll do as many as I can."

"I thought how hard it must be to have your hands tied like that," Charlton said. "But Mary kept getting pre-selected and pre-selected — sports definitely help in pre-selection, since all that the prospective employers see is the resume' — and she said she'd just keep on interviewing as long as she could." Mary has since received a graduate assistantship in biomechanics at Northern Illinois.

I began to realize that being a senior athlete looking for a job is similar to being a college athlete working for a diploma. Occasionally, you miss a practice; you pull late nighters over resumes rather than term papers; you have interview butterflies instead of pre-game jitters when there's already an exam or two on your mind. Being able to cope with future worries just grows out of four years of coping with present ones.

That brings up one last athletic quality which both Charlton and the athletes give witness to: "These women are less frantic than others," said Charlton. "They're pretty confident that the jobs will be there." Kelly Halligan, a government major and volleyball player, echoes these words. "I don't feel like I have to get a job 'right now.' The jobs will be there when I get back from Ireland in the fall." Kelly has a good chance of running into a fellow William and Mary athlete overseas, as six of the women will be touring Europe at different times. Tribe tennis player Marion Gengler will be working at Wimbledon this summer. From there, she may go on to work in tennis promotion overseas, with Mark McCormack '51, president of International Management, Inc.

Sheila Cunneen

Others will be traveling closer to home. Judy Gilbert, a fencer who will be teaching high school biology in the fall, will be going to watch the fencing at the Los Angeles Olympics. Chris Paradis' dream-come-true is working at the Rocky Mountain National Park until October. Karen Thorne, a 1984 Honorable All-American in field hockey and former basketball standout, will also be fulfilling a dream, as she bikes across the country with three others for the benefit of the Cancer Society.

I found a wide range of interests, careers, and personalities among William and Mary athletes. Yet, diverse as they were, these seniors shared a common thread: a vitality, a confidence, a "take life and grab it" attitude. Did the success associated with these traits mean that being a college athlete would insure me a job? "Sports don't guarantee a job, and I wouldn't say 'go out and join a team' just to build your resume,'" Charlton said. "No, the things that help in the "real world" come from the inside out — a sense of responsibility, of commitment; a self-knowledge and a healthy attitude."

I rest my case. And I'll wield my hockey stick with more confidence next fall, knowing that it will have served me as well as my typewriter.

SPARKLING CIDER -

THE APPLE OF HER EYE

Linden Va. — Betsy McIntyre wasn't dressed to climb the weed-entwined metal ladder up the side of a water tower. "I usually wear long pants," she said, keeping her bright green skirt from catching the wind while she gingerly maneuvered rungs in espadrille-shod feet. "You have to see the view up here. It's beautiful."

And it was.

The tower sits on the crest of Freezeland Mountain on the Northern edge of the Blue Ridge. The vista is one of hills, mountains, trees and in the distance, the city of Winchester.

The wind picked up, tousling McIntyre's frosted hair across her expertly made-up blue eyes. "I love a challenge," she said.

Obviously. That's why today, at 31, this former Virginia Beach resident is hitting the marketplace with a new, nonalcoholic sparkling apple cider. "I hope Alpenglöw will be the champagne substitute for those who don't drink," she said with typical entrepreneurial enthusiasm.

The cider, named for the reddish aura often reflected on mountains at sunrise and sunset, comes packaged in traditional champagne-shaped bottles, but alas, the bottles are topped by bottle caps, not corks. And at $2 to $3 for 25.4 ounces, it's expensive cider, considering you can buy a gallon of the uncarbonated version for about 50 cents more.

The price of Alpenglöw undoubtedly reflects the cost of carbonation and packaging because getting the apples is as easy as pie. McIntyre was standing in the middle of Freezeland Orchards, where 27,000 trees produce 600,000 bushels of apples yearly. The orchards are about three miles up a mountain from the factory in Linden.

Mountaintop and orchards are owned by Ben Lacy III, McIntyre's stepfather, whose family has farmed the land since 1906. Most of the apples are inspected and bagged in a nearby packing shed and shipped to supermarkets, including many in Tidewater.

Lacy has always envisioned a sparkling apple drink but didn't have the time to research a formula nor set up production. Meanwhile, McIntyre, having earned an art degree from the College of William and Mary, was teaching school and not enjoying it.

So when the busy apple grower teamed up with a bored schoolteacher, things began to bubble. In June 1979, the pair formed The Linden Beverage Co. in Front Royal with McIntyre as principal stockholder and plant manager.

Then there was the little matter of making the cider itself. Pressed apple cider, left to its own devices, will eventually ferment. McIntyre and a North Carolina carbonation expert came with a way to obtain the desired bubbles without the accompanying alcohol. How? It's a secret. Only one other manufacturer, Martinelli of California, has figured it out, and its product is Alpenglöw's main competition.

To get the needed capital to set up the processing and bottling plant, McIntyre applied for and was granted a $450,000 bank loan, guaranteed by the federal Farmer's Home Administration, which helps industries in rural areas. Because the new company meant 12 new jobs and a shot in the arm for the local economy, McIntyre was the first woman to get such a loan in Virginia.

(Business is booming for Betsy McIntyre '74 and her Alpenglöw, a new non-alcoholic sparkling apple cider. Since the following article appeared in the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, production has grown from 8000 cases a year to an anticipated 105,000 in 1985. Marketed initially in Virginia, the beverage, which won Governor Robb's Best New Product of the Year Award and was featured at the State Fair last year, is now available nationwide through Hickory Farms of Ohio (under the label Appleshine), Best Products and Neiman Marcus. Colonial Williamsburg, Thalhimers, Miller and Rhoads and Rices department stores have been added to the sales outlets in Virginia. And Betsy has something else to celebrate, too: she will be married on May 26.)

But it hasn't been easy.

"Having a female voice didn't help when I was filling in forms for the farmer's loan and calling all over the country trying to locate equipment," she said. "You could almost feel the men on the other end of the line freeze when I'd ask for a piece of machinery.

"When I began, I didn't know a nut from a bolt from a screw, yet I was ordering parts for machines and motors. I used to say, 'Please, somebody help,'" McIntyre said. "At this point either Dad or my brother would jump in and rescue me."

Her brother, George McIntyre, is the plant foreman and manages The Apple House, the retail outlet and antique store in front of the beverage company. Mom, Jean Boyd Lacy, also helps out in the store.

McIntyre had to learn as much about apples as she did about machinery. "Once I didn't know a Jonathan from a MacIntosh," she said.

When Lacy takes out his magnifying glass and looks closely at a tiny apple, McIntyre shares his anxiety.

"Something can go wrong at any time — bugs, storms and animals like deer and mice that eat the crops are always a problem," she said.

Lacy looked up at the clouds gathering over the mountains. "This is a very nervous day for me," he said. "A heavy thunderstorm and hail could wipe us out in 15 minutes."

He pulled the tiny apple off the tree to demonstrate, with the aid of magnification, the damage hail can do. "See that spot?" he said. "A hail stone hit it so the apple won't be perfect."

The imperfect apples, however, still retain their flavor and can be used to make Alpenglöw, which is now flowing into Tidewater markets like Be-Lo, Giant Open Air, Farm Fresh, Valu Fair and L'il Shopper.

To make the sparkling cider, a blend of many different apple varieties is used — approximately 300 bushels of apples for 1,000 gallons, the usual day's production.

Production begins when apples from cold storage are fed into a bin and then a crusher that makes the whole apple—skin, seeds, and all—into a pulp. The pulp is pulled through a big tube that looks like a vacuum cleaner to the pressing machine. Here, the pulp is laid on big pieces of absorbent cloth in flat trays stacked one on top of another under a giant press.

"The press is not a modern one but it is very efficient," said McIntyre, shouting above the noise in the factory.

The dried pulp, called pomace, is fed to horses in winter, tossed in the garbage in summer.

The extracted juices is held in a refrigerated holding tank overnight. The next day, it is filtered, goes through the secret carbonation process and is bottled ice cold. Labels, designed by McIntyre, caps and gold foil collars are the finishing touches. The bottles are then packed in cartons to await shipment.

"Probably the toughest adjustment I had to make from teaching to managing a factory was that now I'm in charge of other people," McIntyre said. Lacy reminded her of long hours as well. "Oh yes," she said. "I'm here at 7 a.m. and work until 6 p.m. and when I get home at night, I say to myself, 'Did I work that long?'"

She quickly added that she wasn't complaining. "I'm learning something new every day," McIntyre said.

She went into her carpeted office, separated from the factory by a hallway, and poured two glasses of chilled Alpenglöw into fine, slender continental champagne glasses. "Now we want to get the product out where everyone can enjoy it," she said.

WILLIAM MUNFORD TUCK '19

Legendary Virginia Politician Served In Office For Nearly 46 Years

(On the floor of the Virginia Senate recently, Senator Howard P. Anderson '40, a Democrat from Halifax, gave the following tribute to another William and Mary alumnus, the late Governor William Munford Tuck '19, fascinating politician and statesman who also served eight terms in the Congress. Senator Anderson is the greatly respected senior member of the Finance Committee.)

Mr. President, my fellow senators, just recently two of you made remarks on the true birthdate of George Washington, the father of our country, who loved truth. I ask today that you join in a salute to another Virginian, Bill Tuck, who likewise loved truth, as he saw it, and was never afraid to speak it. Frankly, he sometimes got himself into trouble because he spoke his truth so candidly, so impulsively, with such reverberating impact. He enjoyed a most remarkable political career. For 46 years he held office almost continuously. He never lost an election. Through more than twenty campaigns, each time, the citizens made him a winner.

4 terms in the House of Delegates
3 terms as State Senator
1 term as Lieutenant Governor
8 terms in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress

Many thousands of words have been written about him by historians, biographers and journalists who were captivated and fascinated by the man, his warm personality, his homespun humor, his unique style in politics and government in the period from 1923 to 1969.

One writer described him as "jovial, genial, salty, heavysset — blimplike in physical contours."

Another found him "garrulous, blustery, earthy, stout as a tobacco hogshead."

Another suggested he "had the comfortable appearance of a man who had just dined on a dozen porkchops."

The late Mike Houston, News Leader columnist, wrote: "Most of all, he is a great teller of tales, some of them tall, some of them tarnished by truth."

Another columnist — Charles McDowell, I think — surmised that no other Virginia Governor ever has enjoyed such an informal, genuinely affectionate first name relationship with so many of his fellow citizens as did Bill Tuck.

William Munford Tuck, who was born September 28, 1898, in a Halifax County farmhouse, won the Democratic primary nomination for governor in August, 1945 — one day after the first atomic bomb was dropped on Japan. Soon after the new governor took office, many Virginians began to wonder if a human A-bomb, Halifax style, had landed in Mr. Jefferson's stately and staid old capitol building.

Soon after taking office the Governor was confronted with a called strike by employees at Vepco. Advice from his aides and Attorney General was not to his liking. He vowed nobody was going to cut off Virginia's lights — he said "too many people around here are dying of the can'ts." Dusting off an ancient law giving Virginia's Governor strong inherent power in times of grave emergency, he served notice that officials and employees would be drafted into the unorganized state militia. The dispute was quickly resolved.

Then, in 1947, he spearheaded the enactment of the nation's first right to work law followed in 1948 by the anti-Harry Truman bill which caused a considerable uproar.

Perhaps the most serious uproar occurred, however, over the Tuck tax program in the same 1948 session of the General Assembly. He fashioned a tax program which included modest individual and corporation tax increases to finance improvements advocated by major Virginia newspapers. They urged editorially that long-overdue action be taken forthwith to meet pent-up needs in state mental hospitals, schools, and other institutions. The program passed — but not without a struggle in which the opposition was sparked by editorials in many of the same newspapers attacking him as the high-tax governor.

Later the Governor was asked how he felt about the experience. He responded by saying it reminded him of the case of the circuit-riding preacher who, years before, on a stormy night, sought refuge at an inn in a little town on the Northern Neck. The innkeeper had only one room left. He told the preacher it was haunted — full of ghosts — and no guest had ever been able to sleep there. The preacher came down for breakfast, clear-eyed and well-rested, the innkeeper asked what had happened. "Not much," the preacher replied. "Oh, yes, the ghosts came. I asked them to join me in a service. We prayed a while. I preached a while, we sang a while. Then I passed the collection plate. They all vanished — and didn't come back all night."

Governor Tuck was never defeated in 20 political campaigns.

When he told the story, Bill Tuck laughed, and with editorial critics, in mind, added: "They called me to preach the sermon. And I preached. But when I passed the collection plate, they ran out on me."

Someone has written that often it wasn't so much what Bill Tuck did as governor that attracted attention as it was how he did it. He was forthright, impulsive, quick to flare up in wrath, but just as quick to cool off and laugh. He harbored no grudges. He bore no malice. Critics pictured him as heavy-handed, too impetuous, too ham-fisted. Friends acclaimed him as the courageous defender of a glorious heritage. More dispassionate observers reveled in the colorful stories told by and about the "country lawyer" governor. They liked his warm humor, which tended to be earthy and self-deprecatory.

The Tuck performance as governor inspired Guy Friddell to write that when Bill Tuck went into action, it was like "a boisterous summer storm, with deafening thunder, blinding lightning and driving rain, from which the land emerged rejuvenated, all sweet, green, smiling and amazed."

Dr. William B. Crawley, Jr., Chairman of the History Department, Mary Washington College, wrote in his 1978 biography of Bill Tuck that though Tuck's conservative philosophy agreed with Harry Byrd's, he really had "the unabashed personality of populist." And that Bill Tuck was not only a country boy by birth, but always a country boy at heart, completely unaffected by his high offices.

When Bill Tuck retired from Congress in 1968, after some tempestuous and controversial years of opposing practically all liberalizing moves through the Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson administration, fellow members of the House gave him a fond farewell one day with a long hour of flowery tributes. Some of the warmest salutes came from his political and ideological opponents. A Johnson administration leader who had often clashed vigorously with him, and who had probably never voted on the same side, wound up with a simple explanation: "I can only say, I love him." This seemed to be the feeling shared by so many of his professional colleagues as well as so many Virginia people.

At the time of Bill Tuck's death last June, Editor-Historian Virginius Dabney developed this theme in a few words: "He was an able, courageous, gutsy, flamboyant and uninhibited governor of Virginia who 'laid it on the line' in no uncertain terms, and who endeared himself to many — even many of those who disagreed with him."

At around the time of his retirement, Bill Tuck was asked by James Latimer, long time and highly respected political reporter for the Times-Dispatch, to sum up his accomplishments in 46 years of politics. The question prompted another story. It reminded him, he said, of the one about the little country boy who came running home, huffing and puffing and red-faced, to tell his family about an exciting experience he'd just had. A neighbor's bull had got loose and chased the little boy down a nearby lane. The boy ran as fast as he could. The bull was gaining. The boy could feel its hot breath — and almost feel the horns. Then the boy saw they were coming close to an old tree which had a limb hanging across the lane, high enough to be well out of the bull's reach. He jumped for it. "But that limb's at least 10 feet high," a brother interrupted. "Did you make it?" "Well, the boy replied, "I missed it going up but I cotched it coming down."

At the end of the story Bill Tuck grinned and added: "I missed a lot of things going up but I hope I cotched some of 'em coming down."

Mr. President and fellow senators I hope that today we can cotch a few more votes for Bill Tuck, going up or coming down, and that this body in which he once sat, and over which he once presided, will adopt House Joint Resolution 168 in affectionate memory of Bill Tuck.

THE JOYS OF LIVING IN WILLIAMSBURG

For Many Alumni, It's The Town For All Seasons

Thomas Jefferson called it "Devilsburg," but for more recent William and Mary alumni, Williamsburg is a special place, a home away from home. Perhaps it's because the college years tend to forge us into adults, and thus become unforgettable, but that's true of any college or university.

Yet when you add the College's uniqueness as an educational institution to the beauty and heritage of the Williamsburg area, the combination is often irresistible.

Of the 40,000 living, located alumni of the College of William and Mary across the nation and around the globe, 1,500 are living only minutes away from their alma mater, as residents of Williamsburg and the surrounding areas of James City and York counties, a community of 57,000.

Some of these local alumni never left after graduation, staying for graduate school, nearby job offers and the charms of this small Southern town. For another group of alumni, Williamsburg was a place to come back to in mid-career or in retirement, because — in their hearts — they never really left it.

John W. Dayton, Jr. '50 is a retired Foreign Service officer whose work as a career diplomat took him and his family to Jordan, Somalia and Djakarta. Yet Williamsburg is where Dayton and his wife Dorothy came after he retired in 1980.

"I decided I was going to retire in Williamsburg two weeks after I came in 1946 as a freshman," says Dayton, adding that his four years at William and Mary were literally the best of his life. "I had a marvelous experience at the College."

Dayton moved his mother, a commercial artist, to Williamsburg from New York when he graduated. She worked for the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation while Dayton went on to the Foreign Service.

"Certainly, Williamsburg was a philosophical and spiritual base for me mentally while I was overseas, because my mother was here. Of course, I married subsequently (in 1954), and when we did our Stateside tours of duty — in Washington, for the most part — we had our own home in McLean, Virginia.

But I always thought of Williamsburg as home."

For Dayton, Williamsburg's physical ambience and history were compelling from the start. "I used to be a waiter at the forerunner of the King's Arms Tavern, called the Travis House. Walking back to the campus — we weren't allowed to have cars in those days — I'd walk up the Duke of Gloucester Street at 11 or 12 at night. Everything would be quiet and you know, the ghosts were there, I'm sure: Jefferson, Washington, Patrick Henry and all the rest of them."

James W. Baker '51, and his wife Elaine Campton Baker '49, are also citizens of the world who came back to Williamsburg. Baker, who worked as a reporter and education editor for 12 years with the Richmond News-Leader, subsequently joined the U.S. Information Agency, now called the U.S. International Communications Agency. His editorial assignments overseas gave the Baker family the opportunity to sample foreign culture, living in five countries and visiting a total of 50.

But once again, all roads led back to Williamsburg. "My wife and I were sitting around in Tunis (Tunisia) one day in the spring of '81 — I knew I was going to retire soon, and had set the date for spring, '83 — and we were talking about where to retire to. We thought of San Diego, California, and certain places in Texas that friends said were nice, also Huntsville, Alabama.

"Then Elaine said, 'What about Williamsburg?', and I said, 'Gee, that sounds perfect'."

Since Williamsburg was a known quantity to the Bakers, they took six weeks to travel 6500 miles across country from Seattle. "But we came back to Williamsburg, because we didn't see anything we liked better," says Baker.

John W. Dayton Jr. '50

Jim Baker can concisely count off some of Williamsburg's selling points for alumni and non-alumni alike. "Williamsburg, to me, has many of the advantages of a big city without the hassle of a big city. There are plays, concerts, sports and restaurants. I daresay that there's not another city of 10,000 that has the quantity of restaurants Williamsburg has. My wife and I aren't big nightclubbers, but there are places to go out at night here and a cosmopolitan outlook."

The Bakers also like the climate ("There are four seasons and not a terribly cold winter") and Williamsburg's proximity to urban centers like Richmond, Norfolk, Washington and New York City.

Location was a strong consideration for Ann Buckles Orteig '51, a renowned Broadway and television actress who also has been a director of public relations for Harper's Bazaar magazine. Her theatrical experience since graduation from William and Mary has encompassed plays on Broadway ("Pajama Game," and "Mr. Wonderful" with Sammy Davis Jr.), radio, Off Broadway productions, TV commercials and television standouts like "Studio One," "Kraft Theatre" and the "Red Skelton Show."

A director and writer as well, Orteig made her mind up in 1978 to take a writing sabbatical. Why in Williamsburg, when she's worked in London, Switzerland and South America, among other places?

James W. Baker '51

"A large part of my soul is here," says Orteig about Williamsburg. Another reason was Orteig's 14-year-old daughter, Yvonne. "Yvonne has a part of the South now, a few years of growing up here — a good part," says Orteig.

Still very involved in theatre since her move to Williamsburg, Ann Orteig has directed plays in Switzerland and D.C. as well as done a Shakespeare reading with Howard Scammon '34, professor emeritus of theatre and speech, at Ash Lawn. She's also gone back to her alma mater for writing courses.

Although her return with her daughter seemed spur of the moment and spontaneous, Orteig says she's learned that "it takes a long time to do something very quickly."

"People travel a lot from Williamsburg, and everything's easy," says Orteig. "You can get anywhere in no time, the people are nice, and it's peaceful. It's easy to go places, and nice to be here."

Williamsburg is also home now for Maxey B. Davis '39 (Capt., USN ret.) and his wife Dale. In fact, it was Dale Davis who brought her husband back, having fallen in love with the town when they were stationed at nearby Camp Peary in 1945. Buying property in 1975, the Davises commuted on weekends from D.C., where Maxey Davis worked for the Environmental Protection Agency until his retirement in 1980. Before taking a job with the EPA in 1965, Davis served on Admiral Nimitz's staff: both during WWII and afterwards at the Pentagon, when Nimitz was Chief of Naval Operations.

With such a broad background, it's interesting that Davis relishes Williamsburg and the College more now: "I think probably I enjoy William and Mary a little more and in a different way, because when I was a student, I was awfully anxious to get out, find out what the world was all about and make my way," he says in retrospect.

Of Williamsburg, he says, "I think you have a small town concept, still, and feeling, but if you want the feeling of a larger community, you get it with all the tourists coming in.

"And it offered a lot for me with William and Mary being here, you know. I'm on the Funtime Committee, which is the organizing committee for the Class of '39. We hold an annual reunion every year, and the Funtime Committee puts it all together."

The social opportunities for renewing old ties and making new friends in Williamsburg is appealing to alumni residents, who often have fond memories tugging at their sleeves, too.

Such is the case with S. Warne Robinson '37, retired chairman and chief executive of the G. C. Murphy Company. In 1980, he gradually phased out of the chairmanship, working three days a week at G.C. Murphy corporate headquarters and commuting by plane to Williamsburg to the house he and wife Mary Helen had purchased several years before.

Robinson says that his four years at William and Mary were "among the happiest of my life," and he has continued the association by serving on the Board of Directors of the Business School Sponsors, Inc., as a trustee of the Endowment Association and as treasurer of the Board of Directors of the Society of the Alumni.

He also finds time to do inventory control seminars on occasion with William J. Maddocks, professor of business administration. "I'm also on the board of directors for Williamsburg Landing, which is interesting," says Robinson. Williamsburg Landing is one of several developments designed specifically for senior citizens, and is scheduled to open in 1985.

A recent Virginia Gazette series on the "aging of Williamsburg" points out that the Williamsburg area, long recognized as a tourist center, is growing in reputation as a retirement haven for both local and out-of-state residents.

In Williamsburg and neighboring James City County and York County, the population age 65 and over increased 53 percent in the last decade, while the population of the 55-64 age group jumped 50 percent.

But if Williamsburg is increasing in appeal to retirees, it has many plusses for family life. "The cultural, educational and intellectual things the kids can do are incredible," says Dr. Daniel G. Jenkins '68, who with wife Cindy Price Jenkins '68 has two sons growing up in Williamsburg: Todd, 11, and Jonathan, 7. "I think it's a clean town," Jenkins adds, noting that a lot of problems found elsewhere aren't found in Williamsburg. "I don't think I'm like an ostrich sticking my head in the sand, because I see it in my practice — we live in a very special area."

Jenkins, whose practice is in gynecology and obstetrics, knew two things from an early age: first, that he was going into medicine, and second, that he was going to William and Mary. "When I was 12, I decided it would be a nice place to go to school," he says.

Married in 1969, the Jenkinses knew they wanted to come back to Williamsburg, and they did, in 1977. "I don't know that I felt much had changed," says Jenkins. "I think you seek out the things that made you like Williamsburg in the first place."

An avid sports enthusiast and contributor to the William and Mary Athletic Association, Jenkins was elected the first president of the Williamsburg alumni chapter last February. "Also put in there that I was a member of Sigma Pi fraternity," urges Jenkins. "The great love of my four years was being in that fraternity, and now it's no longer on campus."

Dr. James E. Barton '69 can be seen frequently sampling the joys of Williamsburg as he jogs along Jamestown Road or tools through the tree-lined Williamsburg streets in his Rabbit convertible. Barton first discovered the pleasure of living in Williamsburg when he came to William and Mary as a freshman football recruit in 1965. An All-Southern Conference defensive back on the 1968 team, he entered the Medical College of Virginia after graduation and received his medical degree in 1973. He now practices emergency medicine at the Williamsburg Community Hospital and is an active member in the Athletic Educational Foundation.

The alumni of all ages who have come back to live in Williamsburg and those who never left form one of the College's best natural resources, bringing their life experiences and talents with them. However, despite the services and interests of local alumni, the Williamsburg chapter is the newest, with its officers elected last Charter Day, Feb. 8.

Between 100 and 125 alumni came to the first meeting last October, and about 125 attended the February meeting. When an initial questionnaire was sent out to alumni in the Williamsburg area, respondents indicated their interests where a local chapter was concerned.

"We got answers from 'strictly social' to 'strictly service' and everything in between," says Tish Paschall '64, director of chapter programs. "I hope we'll be able to accommodate both ends of the spectrum." In addition to President Dan Jenkins, chapter officers include vice president Nancy Luzar '72, secretary Carolin Dennis '59, treasurer Don Pons '61 and members of the board of directors: Frank McDonald '35, George Gibbs '49, Jim Anthony '52, Mary Ann Schmidt '64, Nancy Hammond '76 and Rob Brinkley '82.

Are Williamsburg area alumni really the resource they appear to be where the College is concerned? "Absolutely," says Paschall. "I think that's a real indication of the caliber of people living here. The overall quality is so high that you end up with very good people doing things. It makes the overall quality of life in the community better."

Steve Bullock

"People overseas used to say, 'Well, Williamsburg is just a tourist attraction, who would want to live there?'" says John Dayton. "I'd say, 'Well, what you don't see beneath the surface of that small Southern town with that kind of museum down the street is that you have a very civilized group of people living there. You have the professional staff of Eastern State Hospital, the professional staff of the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation and the entire faculty and staff of the College. That's a very civilized group of people.'"

Add to that about two and a half million tourists annually, four military installations nearby, and major manufacturing establishments like Anheuser-Busch, Inc., and Owens Illinois, Inc. Then add international events like the 1983 Economic Summit and last month's "George Washington" mini series on CBS, which brought 18th-century Williamsburg to life for a television audience.

And for good measure, think of autumn leaves and spring azaleas. Ann Buckles Orteig put it simply, and well: "Williamsburg — it's home."

We are preparing to quit winter quarters in Denton, Texas, and head east with the birds, flowers, and baseball players. Our stay here has been unproductive in locating alumni contemporary with 1926. Of course, it is a big state, but the contemporary qualification is the main problem. There are so many more people around these days that, relatively, we are lost in the shuffle. A blatant refusal to look at facts, if I ever saw one. Once we made big noise, now it gives us a headache.

The few contemporary alumni I have found around Texas include Elizabeth Palmer Thompson in Waco, Bob Corstaphney '27, in Dallas, and Wilhemina and me in Denton. Harry Blair '29, was in Dallas until his death several years ago. I understand members of later classes are around here in some profusion, but, unfortunately, I have not had the opportunity to meet them.

I crossed the trail of an earlier alumnus while visiting in Camden, Arkansas, several years ago. Rummaging through old files in the public library I spotted an advertisement announcing the opening of a private school for young men and women. The instructor was acknowledged to be well qualified as he was a graduate of the College of William and Mary. The year of the announcement was 1854. Thus we brought education to the banks of the Ouachita.

Melvin C. "Meb" Davis, one of the Olde Guard faithful, has been "tackled" (tabbed, rather), by the selection committee of the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame. He was one of the original choices for the William and Mary Athletic Hall of Fame. A three sports star at William and Mary he played right end on the football team and James E. "Suey" Eason anchored left end. Quarterback Art Matsu '27, wasn't lacking for superior targets. Eason lives in his native Hampton and Davis lives in Richmond.

Meb was far too light in weight to even make the football squad at Norfolk's Maury High School. During the next three years he enhanced his weight and strength, playing also "college" football meanwhile. (at least the team was called the Norfolk Collegians), and Meb the only non-college player.

Then he came to William and Mary and was the second part of the nationally known "Matsu-to-Davis" combination, and Suey creating heroics at the other end position. Meb remembers many thrills including his picking up a fumble and running 81 yards against Columbia, then a national power.

Meb captained basketball at William and Mary and ran track. After college he was one of a team of collegians to play against the NFL New York Giants in an exhibition game in Richmond. The famous Bennie Friedman was the Giants' quarterback. "We got our brains beat out, 20-7. I got a hundred bucks and packed it in."

After graduation he succeeded Mac Pitt, who went to the University of Richmond, as athletic director at Fork Union Military Academy. From 1930 to 1933 he was freshman coach at his alma mater. Later he coached the Richmond Arrows semi-pro football team.

Mary C. Shotten Browning has a new address. "I am now living in a self-care home in Ashland, Kentucky. I find that it is better than living alone in my home as my daughters are too far away to be with me." Send greetings and letters to her at 1100 Bath Avenue, Ashland, Kentucky 41101.

Did you know that Olde Guard Day this year comes on the birthday of an alumnus? Thus, it should be a double celebration. I, as perhaps most of us do, agree with him on various observations. A pedestrian (in more ways than one), I quote him on walking: "Exercise and recreation are as necessary as reading. I will say more necessary, because health is worth more than learning. A strong body makes the mind strong. The object of walking is to relax the mind. You should therefore not permit yourself to think while you walk, but divert yourself by the objects surrounding you. Walking is the best possible exercise." Thomas Jefferson.

By the time this appears many of us will have enjoyed the third Olde Guard Day, enjoyed each other and the seniors selected to be our hosts. Thus the oldest and youngest of alumni span the years, linking the generations. May the seniors feel the reverence in which we hold the old school and we share in their enthusiasm for it. Wouldn't it be worth the while, at some time, to set up a forum with a representative, say, of each of the decades, say six or so, to discuss the college and its traditions, the better to pass them along? There have been times when the Alumni Board was quite representative of the several generations, from young back to old, which to great extent also served toward that end.

Diligent search has discovered one distinguished alumnus of the class of '28, the subject of a most readable article in a recent issue of the ALUMNI GAZETTE. Sandy Strother became a top Walt Disney artist and now resides in California. Mention of our yellow slicker fad stirred memories of Sandy and his art work on the back of raincoats, even in cloudless weather. It bespoke status.

Now there was another artist or two, more if all classes of artists are taken into account (omitting the bovine kind), and one was C. E. Stevenson '27, who signed his cartoons "C. E. S.". His drawings brought out the "collegiate, yes, we are collegiate" flavor of the day. In his freshman year he was listed as assistant art editor of the COLONIAL ECHO, and also was the class poet.

There was another artist whose work graced the publications. Her beauty and verve and curves could well have served as a model for other limners on campus. You guessed it. Sarah S. Berkeley '26. Her drawings spice up several old annuals.

From Betty:

Springtime! Time to wake up and send in some news. Only one person remembered us this time. . . shame on the rest of you.

Mary Edgar Calcote dropped us a card recently telling us that she is still as busy as the proverbial bee. She is singing in a senior citizen's musical production called "Saints Alive," which has already had eleven performances. Mary also plays the piano fourteen times a month for different local organizations. She is really a "live wire."

From Ed:

News from our classmates becomes scarcer all the while. I have not received any correspondence from any member of our class this year. I do know that all of us are getting older each day, though I doubt that there are many who are too feeble to write.

Our classmates will be saddened to learn of the recent deaths of two members: Franklin Samuel Wilcox, Jr., and Robert Ernest Doyle.

The former will be remembered as Student Body President our senior year. He was a member of Theta Delta Chi and a leading amateur golfer. He was employed by the Equitable Life Assurance Society as an insurance broker.

Robert Doyle was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon and for most of his life he operated his own business in his native town, McKenney, Virginia. He was married to Florence Dabney, a member of our class who survives him.

How about planning now to attend homecoming in the fall of 1984?

HAYS T. WATKINS '82 LL. D. HONORED AS TOP RAILROAD MAN

Hays T. Watkins, a new member of the Board of Visitors and chairman of the Sponsors Board of the School of Business Administration, has received the "Man of the Year" Award from Modern Railroads. Watkins, who received an honorary doctor of laws degree from the College in 1982, is chairman of the Board and chief executive officer of CSX Corporation.

SOPHOMORE AWARDED TRUMAN SCHOLARSHIP

Nancy N. Young, a sophomore from Kansas City, Mo., has been awarded a Harry S. Truman Scholarship for the 1984-85 and 1985-86 academic years. Each year, one Truman Scholar is selected from each of the 50 states and U.S. Territories, and Miss Young is this year's scholar from Missouri. The scholarship covers up to $5,000 for tuition, fees, books, and room and board in each of her junior and senior years.

MEN'S SWIMMING FUND REACHES $9,000

Many alumni have contributed to the drive for funds necessary to continue the men's intercollegiate competitive swimming program at William and Mary. At present the team is slightly over half way to its goal of $18,000 with more contributions pledged, according to coach Keith Havens '76.

Hi Classmates! How great it is to hear from you and to share your news with our fellow students of '34. Our first report is from H. Ruffner Lowman, Jr. (Ruff), from Waynesboro, Va. Ruff writes that, as far as he knows, he is the only ordained minister in our class! After graduation, he spent three years at Union Theological Seminary in Richmond where he "ran into Guy Daugherty, who was at Medical College." Ruff began his ministry in the Nitro, West Va., Presbyterian Church where he met his wife, Dot Hutchinson. They were married at the time he took his second pastorate at Olivet Church, near Staunton, Va. He received his Th.M. in 1944 and has held pastorates at Porter St. in Richmond; Mt. Horeb near Grottoes, Va. (1949-64- his longest); and in Erwin and Linden N.C. He served as associate pastor of Waynesboro First Church, where they built the home to which they have now retired. They have a daughter, Ann H. Young, a computer analyst, who is expecting her first child very soon. Their son, Ruff III, is a veterinarian for the Canadian government in Ottawa and has a son, Scotty. Ruff has spent busy years as a "supply minister" since his retirement. In December, he decided to concentrate on his gardening and growing boxwood. He belongs to the American Boxwood Society and has over 300 American and English box, many of which he has started himself from cuttings. From his home, "Lowmont," he has a view of the beautiful Blue Ridge, and the Skyline Drive and Parkway. We're happy that Ruff plans to come to our 50th reunion. He is looking forward to renewing a host of long standing friendships.

Annie Pharr Goodykoontz, Louisville, Ky., writes that "Sue, Liz, and Patty" (of our March column) are Sue Lancaster McLean, Pearisburg, Va., Elizabeth Young Clark, Bluefield, West Va., and "Pitty," Harriet Pittard Beales, Boydton, Va. (I'm sorry I didn't ask last time.) We're looking forward to seeing all of them in May and also, Betty Johnson Mathers '35, Richmond, Va., who'll be visiting her many friends in our class.

Among notes from the Alumni Office was one from the Order of the White Jacket, listing Emil O. Johnson, our gift fund committee chairman, as a director, whose term will run through Jan. 1, 1986. From all class reports, we can be very proud of the great success he is having as gift fund chairman! There was a note from Eleanor Buchanan Crouse, Paducah, Ky., saying that she hopes to attend the reunion in May. Elizabeth Leland Mason, Accomac, Va., says that she had a great time at Homecoming. She is enjoying retirement on the Eastern Shore, where her husband grows roses. She works with the Daughters of the American Revolution and with Delta Kappa Gamma as well as simply enjoying country living. Another note was from (Dr.) Frederick B. Hill, Jr., Wilmington, Del., who writes that he is active in social services. He is a volunteer Big Brother and is president of the board of directors of Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Delaware, Inc. As a hobby, he collects old sheet music of musical shows and movies. He and his wife, Betty, have three children and three grandchildren. One child, Mary Jean, is a graduate of William and Mary.

Lillian Carmine Sterling, Gloucester, Va., wrote that she and her husband, Lester, have just returned from a ten-day vacation trip to Florida with their oldest daughter, Peggy, and her family in their new van. They spent several days at Disney World and Epcot. They saw the Space Center and had a guided tour of Cape Canaveral. They visited friends and relatives along the way and toured Charleston, S.C., on their return trip. She had written the Alumni Office earlier of the summer vacation trip they had taken with daughter, Clara Jean, and her husband, Tom, to Atlantic City, N.J., and New York City, where they saw the Yankees beat Detroit in Yankee Stadium. Lillian is also "Looking forward, so very much to our . . . class reunion in May."

An interesting letter came from C. J. Davis, Rocky Mount, Va. He retired six years ago, after 30 years with the Virginia Department of Welfare and Institutions. When his wife retires this year, they are planning to take a number of longer trips. They have enjoyed one and two week trips up and down the Atlantic Coast. Their favorite vacation spot is North Carolina's Outer Banks. In addition to boating and fishing on nearby Smith Mt. Lake, C.J.'s hobbies have included gardening and working with antique furniture. He has remodeled two old homes, which he found interesting but too time consuming. A son, Charles (UVA '68), and daughter, Anne (William and Mary '75), both live in Richmond. We're glad to note that he closes, "See you at 50th reunion."

Maxine Duvel Tuve, Silver Springs, Md., writes that she looks back with fond memories to her years at William and Mary and sends her best to any of the alumni who

Search For 25th President

In selecting the committee, she noted that William and Mary is a state owned and tax supported university.

"The search for a president is a costly and very time consuming process at best," she said. "For these reasons, proximity and travel accessibility has been a factor in the selection of committees. This does not mean that the views and the participation of William and Mary alumni everywhere are not welcome and invited."

In launching the search for a president, which Miss Peebles says is the most important function the Board of Visitors performs, the Board appropriated $10,000, and Miss Peebles appointed Dr. D. J. Herrmann, professor of education emeritus, to serve as coordinator. Dr. Herrmann, who has extensive experience in personnel searches and who was at William and Mary when President Graves was hired, has suggested that the search could take approximately six months. National advertising for the position will begin in May. When President Graves was hired, the search, which was the first presidential search to be conducted by a committee at William and Mary, took five months.

The Board of Visitors will make the final selection of the next president from three recommendations offered by the Presidential Search Committee.

Coincidentally, William and Mary is not the only university in Virginia currently searching for a new president. Dr. Frank Hereford Jr. recently announced his intention to leave the presidency of the University of Virginia. In North Carolina, Duke University is also searching for a new chief executive.

If the spirits play any role in the searches, William and Mary may be one up on UVA in its search for a new president. The search committee at William and Mary held its first meeting on April 13, the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, who of course had close ties to both universities.

LEADING PSYCHIATRIST TO GIVE LECTURE

Dr. Robert Coles, called by Time Magazine, "the most influential living psychiatrist in the U.S.," will speak at the Hampton Coliseum in Newport News, Va., on Monday, May 7, at 8 p.m. as part of the William and Mary-NASA "Cosmos" lecture series. Tickets to the lecture are free, and can be obtained by calling the Office of Special Programs at 253-4084 and 253-4047.

remember her. She and her husband, Richard, a chemical engineer, have enjoyed the delight of two wonderful children. Their summer home on Chesapeake Bay has been the scene of many happy days — both in winter and summer. Maxine has done a lot of ceramics, including sculpture and wheel-thrown pots, and has participated in local exhibitions. Volunteer work at the local hospital, her church, and with Girl Scouts has kept her busy "in between times." During the last two years, her activities have been confined to home and greenhouse where she raises orchids, crocus, and other types of seedlings. They do take trips at weekends. We hope one of these trips will be to Williamsburg in May, Maxine!

A lovely card came from Virginia Drown Smith, Erie, Pa. Virginia writes that she and her business associate sold their laundry and dry cleaning plant in 1978. However, the new owner asked them both to stay on. Virginia is still in charge of "accounts receivable," which she finds interesting and not too confining, since she works just part-time. The original two plants, now one large laundry, linen supply and dry cleaning business, were started over 70 years ago by her parents and cover the Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania areas. We do hope she will manage to join us in May.

It was also good to hear from Estelle Fary Dobson Carroll, Annapolis, Md. Estelle retired from teaching in 1970, the year she lost her first husband, Scott Dobson. She married Michael J. Carroll in 1975. In what she calls a "most pleasant arrangement" — both children, Frank Dobson and Joan D. Whitely, have homes on the same property. She also has three grandsons living on the property! Her special hobbies are gardening and traveling. We hope those "complications" will be worked out and that we'll see you in Williamsburg, Estelle.

Received a really fascinating letter from Jane Dicks Coonemly, (Mrs. John W. Jr.), Alexandria, Va. Jane writes that "though the years appear to be somewhat scrambled since leaving William and Mary, they were however, filled with much laughter and joy, some sadness and heartache." But, she says, "It has always been good friends from many places and times that have made it a rewarding span of years." She worked in New York and Baltimore and at the start of WWII, entered the WAAC. She was commissioned and posted in Washington and then, for three years, in the South Pacific at Caledonia, as one of only four WAACs in the theater commanded by Admiral Halsey. She was discharged as a captain and later served with Special Services in Japan and the Philippines. After a trip around the world, she returned to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill where she received a degree in journalism and political science. In December 1955, she married an old friend of many years, John W. Connelly, Jr. of Washington, D.C. They were immediately posted to Seoul, Korea, by the Department of State. John had served there, during the period of military government, as head of the department of justice and had established the Korea Law Center. They have lived in Alexandria since their return to Virginia. Jane has been active in church and community activities. She returned to the business world as assistant to the chairman of the scholarship committee at George Washington University. She later served as director of the University speakers' bureau. She retired (again!) in 1979, but has returned, annually, to conduct the University's United Way-Combined Health Campaign, a "happy and rewarding experience." Our thanks to Ellen Ticer King '31, and classmates, Virginia Horton Beckett, Clearwater, Fla., and Helen Singer Dau, Williamsburg, Va., for persuading Jane to join us for "The Reunion."

And a note from Paul Featherstone,

Magalia, Cal., saying he will also attend our 50th class reunion!

The reunion committee has been working hard to insure that we'll have a memorable and happy time. It will be wonderful to see you in May! Till then, take care, and again, thanks to all for writing.

Henry J. Harlow retired as chief curator at Old Sturbridge Village. He is now working full time as a cataloger and appraiser for the Robert W. Skinner Auction Gallery.

James Garland Harvell (Jim) is now living in Pequot Lakes, Minnesota. I have been told that he is waiting for the golf course to open in July. Good golfing, Jim.

Galen W. Ewing was appointed a new faculty member of Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota. He is a professor emeritus of chemistry at Seton Hall University in New Jersey, where he taught from 1969-72. Previously he taught at the New Mexico Highlands University from 1957-64. He is the author of several books and articles and his book, Instrumental Methods of Chemical Analysis (McGraw-Hill), has been translated into four languages and is being prepared for its fifth edition. Ewing has also taught at Blackburn College and Union College, and has been a research physical chemist at Sterling-Winthrop Research Institute in Rensselaer, New York. He attended Swarthmore College, holds the B.S. in chemistry and physics from the College of William and Mary, and earned the Ph.D. in physical chemistry from the University of Chicago.

Dear classmates,

Did any of you recognize our own Doug Hoyt at Luncheon-on-the-Lawn on the cover of the Homecoming issue of the Alumni Gazette? I enjoyed seeing a copy of his local New Jersey newspaper which included two pictures of him in Shanghai taken 50 years apart with an article about his trip to China last summer.

Wilbur Morton's title — Admiral, U.S. Navy, Retired — impresses me, but he wrote mostly about his two daughters. "In October my wife and I visited our daughter and son-in-law, Phyllis and Michael Ryan, in their new home in Mexico City. It was an interesting stay. We got to visit a circular pyramid 2000 years old and the largest mall in Mexico. Within sight of their home (which is a five-minute drive from the University of Mexico) is a hill that General Robert E. Lee traveled around on horseback when he was a junior officer. We drove over the route that General Lee rode around on the way to the capture of Montezuma, Mexico. It was a thrill to be able to see the area and read about Lee's exploits. Dr. Douglas S. Freeman's Biography of General Robert E. Lee has the account of his activities there. Our son-in-law is Head of the Physics Department at University of Mexico and our daughter is also on the staff as assistant professor. She is doing research in methods of teaching in the Language Department. She has just completed a year as editor of Mextesol Journal, a publication of the Mexican Association of English Professors. My youngest daughter is Sheila M. Caldwell. Her husband, Ford, works for the Nalco Corporation and in 1983 was the top salesperson in the company nationwide. Sheila, in addition to running

BOB SHEERAN '67 HONORED BY BASKETBALL PROGRAM

The men's basketball program honored Bob Sheeran '67, sports information director, at its annual banquet. Keith Cieplicki and Tony Traver, junior guards, received the most valuable player awards.

her home and rearing a son and daughter, is working part-time as a buyer in a marketing company. Before giving up full time work to start her family she rose through the various responsibilities to become a store manager at the young age of 31. They now reside in Plano, Texas, just north of Dallas."

Mildred Albee Babb wrote to describe a "lovely loving" (and crowded) family trip by car from Virginia to Colorado and much sightseeing done in the scenic West. She's now "busy with community theater, bell choir, as church lay reader, Sunday school teacher, Hampton Heritage Foundation Archaeology Society (we are now excavating a site — Hampton was established in 1610), ecumenical prayer group, Bible study and baby-sitting."

From W. W. Gray: "I attended William and Mary in 1935 and 1936, also summer of 1936. I graduated from Medical College of Virginia School of Pharmacy in 1938."

Jack Morpurgo, our British classmate, is returning to America, briefly, at least. "Jack Morpurgo, B.A. '38 and Honorary D.H.L. '70, had left the University of Leeds as Emeritus Professor of American Literature and has taken up residence in London, but he is not in any real sense 'retired.' He is now Consultant Director to one of the largest tour operators in the English speaking world. He has just finished a book on William Cobbett in America, to be published in 1985 by The Folio Society, has revised and virtually rewritten the standard work on his other alma mater, Christ's Hospital, originally written by G. A. T. Allan, for publication this spring by Ian Allan Ltd., and is at work slowly, very slowly, on an autobiography Master of None for the Carcanet Press. Jack hopes to be in Williamsburg in May, with his wife Catherine, on his way to Idaho where he is to be Commencement Speaker at the College of Idaho in Caldwell. In October the Morpurgos go to Greece where Jack is to give a series of lectures on Greece and Britain. In December they plan to re-visit Australia. (Jack is an Honorary Fellow of the Australian National University.) Several honours have been heaped upon Jack. He was given by Britain's leading provincial paper The Yorkshire Post Special Literary Award 'for a lifetime of service, on both sides of the Atlantic, to literature, publishing and scholarship,' an award which the paper has conferred on only two others, former British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and the biographer Elizabeth Longford. In Idaho he is to receive his fourth honorary doctorate." Our congratulations and best wishes, Jack.

Charlie Harvell sent a delightful and unsolicited letter which gives me a perfect lead-in to our list of "lost" classmates. He says, "Your letter in the March Gazette brought to life, after all these years, many of the classmates I had forgotten. I had made firm plans to attend the reunion but something happened to prevent it and would you believe I now cannot remember what it was that caused me to cancel!" (Join the club, Charlie!) "If I have any knowledge of the missing ones you list, I'll certainly let you know. I'm writing to the class reporter for '36 to let her know where my brother from that class is located. See what your letter is doing? Charlie, you made my day!"

Here are the next 15 from our list: Marian Bradshaw Spencer, Irwin Brand, Louise Breth, Barbara Brunton Samples, Virginia Bryant Church, Lowell Budlong, Helen Cather, Robert Cheney, Dora Chun, Edward Cogswell, John Cogswell, John Coiner, Dorothy Collins, Gladys Corison, and Joanna Cory. Please let the Alumni Office or me know of their whereabouts.

I've saved a real goodie for last. George Anner sent a clipping from Boston Globe by Nardie Reeder Campion entitled "Notes re the Class of '38." "We were before: television, penicillin, polio shots, antibiotics,

MUSCARELLE MUSEUM DISPLAYS WORKS BY WILLIAM A. BERRY

Twenty-one works of William A. Berry, an artist whose colored-penciled drawings explore the pictorial potential of solid geometrical form, will be exhibited in the Spigel Gallery of the Muscarelle Museum of Art at William and Mary through June 11. Berry is known for elevating the centuries-old technique of "cross-hatch" drawing to a modern art form, according to museum director Glenn Lowry.

Frizbees, frozen food, nylon, dacron, Xerox, Kinsey, radar, fluorescent lights, credit cards, ballpoint pens. Time sharing meant togetherness, not computers, a chip meant a piece of wood, hardware meant hardware, and software wasn't even a word. Almost no one flew across the country, and transatlantic flights belonged to Lindbergh and Amelia Earhart. Women students were forbidden to wear slacks. We were before cocktail parties on campus. Before the opposite sex was allowed above the first floor. We got married first and then lived together. In our time closets were for clothes, not for coming out of, and a book about two young women traveling in Europe could be called 'Our Hearts Were Young and Gay.' Bunnies were small rabbits and rabbits were not Volkswagens. In our time there were 5-and-10 cent stores where you could buy things for 5 cents and 10 cents. For just one nickel you could buy enough stamps to mail one letter and two post cards. You could buy a Chevy coupe for $695 but who could afford that in 1938? Nobody. A pity, too, because gas was 11 cents a gallon. We were not before the difference between the sexes was discovered, but we were before the sex change. We just made do with what we had. And we were the last generation that was so dumb as to think that you needed a husband to have a baby. . . Now consider what we did have that is unknown to college students today. We had house mothers and big sisters and big brothers and dormitory rooms that were never locked. We had required courses in English. We had chaperones at fraternity parties and the joy of signing in and out with a 10 o'clock curfew except on Saturdays. We had goldfish eating. We had fountain pens and bottles of real ink. We had all the big bands — Tommy Dorsey, Glen Gray, Guy Lombardo. Unlike the remote control dancers of today, we knew how it felt to have your partner held close and double dip. We played thick 78 rpm records with cactus needles that always needed sharpening. We had Toscanini and Flagstad and Edward VIII and saddle shoes and cars with rumble seats. And when Ray Noble played 'The Very Thought of You', we melted. In the springtime of my senility, I am a misfit. I don't go in for consciousness raising or sensitivity training. I don't like to jog. I don't like pesto sauce. I don't like to pump my own gas. I'm not into 'veggies' or Yoga or Zen or Punk. My idea of a good time is to walk with a person and not jog with Walkman. I seek silence on a day when silence is as rare as a Gutenberg Bible. The man I live with is my husband and after 42 years he's still the same one. How embarrassing. There's more and I wish I could include it all. Thank you, Nardi, and thank you, George, for that warm and wonderful bit of nostalgia.

According to the Alumni Office those of our class serving as Directors of the Order of the White Jacket are Arthur B. Metheny (Bud) and Raymond T. Waller (T.). These are among the newly elected and will serve to January 1, 1982. Congratulations!

Dorothy Schmitz Chalmers will retire from her position as head of the Reference Department at the Dunedin Public Library in May, "after a very happy ten years as a working woman." Her husband, George, has been retired for a couple of years. They will stay on in Largo, Florida, which she says is a nice place to be.

Mildred Shepherd Sanderhoff, who lives in Miami, is also joining the retirement ranks in June after 25 years in public schools.

NEW YORK STAR SELECTS TRIBE

Alex Rocke, a 6-5, 185 lb. player from Long Island, N.Y., who averaged 27 points and 13 rebounds per game, has signed a grant-in-aid to play basketball at William and Mary next year. Rocke will play forward and guard for the Indians who lost only one starter from its 1983-84 team and only three players overall.

Well earned, I would say, Mildred.

Virginia Coulbourn Lee's big news is that she's finally a "grandma" to a darling little seven-month old girl, Erin Temple Lee.

Helen Vince Seay has four grandsons now. She still is on a farm near Scottsville, Virginia, trying to cut down on the farming and retire again.

Ben and Jane Brandt Wild are still happy with their retirement in Blowing Rock, N.C. They'd welcome visits from any of their William and Mary friends.

We are so thankful to learn that Nils and Gervais Wallace Brekke suffered no harm or injury when their Columbia 34 shipwrecked in a storm on March 5 at Glass Cay, Exuma, Bahamas, when they were en route to Georgetown. Their beautiful "Pauline Gervais" was a total loss as were practically all their personal property. However, they were able to wade ashore and it was another miracle that Gervais escaped having her feet cut to bits by the sharp coral which was everywhere. The two days they spent on Glass Cay "sometimes without food or water, shoes or clothes, matches or fire is another story," Nils write. They were rescued by the owner of Fisherman's Inn and the people from Barreterre and will be forever grateful to those generous and helpful people. A hairy experience, to say the least.

Frank and I returned home March 22 from a four-week trip south visiting Frank's two brothers in Fort Pierce, his sister in Key West, a life-long friend of mine in Naples, and our son in Atlanta. It was a lovely holiday, but it was great, too, to get home.

The following note is from classmate Virginia Forwood Wetter:

"Many, many thanks to everyone of you for your loyal and continued support of the William and Mary Fund. Never has your giving been more significant. With the cutback in state support, it is imperative that we narrow the gap through more generous contributions. If we each increase our pledge by ten percent or more, we shall go over the top! Let us help to preserve excellence at our College. Let's give until we really feel good." Denny.

Use your red magic marker on your November calendar! Mark the dates November 2-3-4 for your 40th Reunion. Contact your friends and plan to meet or travel together. If you need addresses, drop the Alumni Office or me a card and we'll be happy to send them along.

Wonderful responses to our request for news and we thank you:

Martha Eddy Hassel wrote: "We moved to Cape Cod in 1976 when John retired. I thought I had retired, too. Somehow I got involved with the Sandwich Glass Museum and am now a curator there and am as busy as I have ever been in my life. If any classmates or old friends are vacationing in Cape Cod, I hope they will visit the Museum and look me up — shouldn't miss the Museum as it is one of the highlights of the Cape. In spite of being way up in New England, I have managed to see some old college friends in the past few years — Emily Snyder Alexander and Sally Snyder Vermilye on trips to Washington, D.C., to visit our son, Christopher. I've enjoyed visits from Edith Burkard Thompson and George and John Entwisle. Last spring I spent two days with Barbara Gray Macondray and Stewart on my way to Australia. John met me there having traveled via London and South Africa. This spring we are going to England and Ireland." So good to hear from you, Martha.

The same to Jan Hendricks Lucas. Jan wrote that her life is "pleasantly miscellaneous" now that she and her husband have retired. They are in New Zealand hiking, golfing and visiting relatives for two months. (How's that for "pleasantly miscellaneous"? A wonderful phrase for retirement.) Jan and George have marked their calendar and plan to be at the reunion — their first.

A note to the Alumni Office from Jean Bulette Boggs states that she and her husband have a new condominium on top of Sugar Mountain in North Carolina. They have returned from their second trip to China and Hong Kong where her husband joined other urologists to meet with Chinese urologists. They also took the famous Venice to Paris Orient Express trip this past year.

When you read this, spring will have sprung in Williamsburg. Treat yourselves to some refreshing thoughts — the peppermint tulips will be lining the Palace pond; the boxwood will be so fragrant; the magnolia on campus will be readying to bloom!

The calendar may say spring, but the weather is just not cooperating. However, it is reminiscent of Williamsburg this time of year! Thanks to two faithful classmates there is some news to report. Nancy Grube Williams attended meetings in Phoenix during January and enjoyed a visit with Ann Singer Banes and Roy in their new retirement home in Sun Lakes. She detailed a beautiful home with a patio right on a pool and surrounded by golf courses. Could one ask for anything more? Ann has promised to be in Williamsburg for the 40th and also a trip east in the fall. Grubie also contacted Mac Kaemmerle Quinto in Tucson by phone. Mac is getting her Ph.D. in Anthropology at the University of Arizona and says she'll be drawing social security by the time she is able to get a job in it! She leads an interesting life and travels constantly. Grubie visited her eldest son in Kansas City en route to Phoenix and enjoyed a visit to the Truman Library.

Deeks Phipps Shryock keeps busy with her tour guide activities as a member of the Board of Directors of NAFA in Washington and as a docent at the Smithsonian. Deeks often does independent tours of Washington and environs for both national and international visitors to the city.

Pam Pauly Chinnis is still with the Alban Institute at the Cathedral and travels for the Executive Committee of the Episcopal Church. Pam has recently completed redecorating her apartment on Capitol Hill.

Grubie attended Charter Day activities in February and had a "catching up" session with Carol Talbot Egelhoff, who is very busy in many community activities, politics, and is on the Board of Visitors.

Tommy Smith and Pat have purchased a house on St. George Island, where they plan to retire and develop a little business. Tommy is still with Lockheed and has a condo in Atlanta, but they spend much time at St. George Island.

A note to Grubie from Ann Davison in Hawaii (we fondly remember those reunion orchids!) with news of the purchase of another condo in lieu of any trips last year. However, she hopes to get here this year.

ALUMNUS SERVES ON
AGENT ORANGE STUDY

A William and Mary alumnus is serving as one of the chief investigators in a study of the relationship between disease and the defoliant Agent Orange which was used in Vietnam. Lt. Col. (Dr.) William H. Wolfe '65, chief of epidemiology services branch of the School of Aerospace Medicine, is one of four principal investigators on the Ranch Hand II project, a 20-year, $30-million study of the effects of the defoliant on Air Force personnel who were part of the original Operation Ranch Hand, the code name for aerial spraying operations during the Vietnam War.

at a festive holiday brunch, in their lovely home in Bethesda, the day after Christmas. Grubie reported a fabulous occasion to meet many of their interesting friends and noted the event a highlight of her holiday season.

Also, at Christmas time, Fred Kovaleski wrote Grubie from his New York home. Fred and Manya will be in Williamsburg in May when their son, Serge, graduates along with Grubie's daughter, Nancy. Certainly, somehow they will get together during those happy times.

Dorothy Hammer has quite a reputation as an excellent tour guide. Jan Freer Scantlebury and Dick accompanied her on a trip to Italy last fall and loved it. Dottie conducts about a half dozen tours a year, as well as her annual ski trip to Switzerland.

It was nice to learn that Allen Tanner is serving on the Board of Directors of that outstanding organization, The Order of the White Jacket.

Cecy Waddell Cunningham is most excited about being back in activities connected with the College. She sees many former classmates both in Williamsburg and at alumni meetings which she attends with Scotty. It was a special treat for her to see Sue Mc Geachim at a New York gathering last fall, but the visit was all too brief.

At a William and Mary dinner recently, Cecy had the pleasure of being seated with Grubie and also Dick Duncan and his wife. She sees Dick frequently at alumni gatherings and at basketball games. Also within "chatting" distance are Jene Carr Dent in Matthews and Betty Aurell Schutz in Gloucester. Henry and Cecy work with the library in Gloucester and she and Betty are co-chairmen for the Woman's Club where they see Betty Pope Aldrich.

Cecy, you have put that prize golf umbrella to good use this year! Thanks for your enthusiastic letter. Please, more of you put pen to paper and drop me a line to include in my next assignment. I will appreciate any news to share.

Among my news items this time, there is an interesting letter to the Alumni office from R. Lee Ashton, editor of the Res Ipsa Loquitur, the paper of the Woodrow Wilson College of Law in Atlanta, Georgia. Lee, who is class of '48, writes that he expects to graduate with his juris doctor in October, 1984. Lee's oldest son Gary Lee Aston, is attending W.W.C.L. with him, and they will go through graduation ceremonies together. Lee says this promises to be a proud day for him — and it certainly should be for them both.

Lee writes also that Walter M. Henritze is also a graduate of W. W. C. L. and is a practicing attorney in Atlanta. Corky Wampler has a niece from Galax, Virginia who is a senior law student at W. W. C. L.

Leroy Canoles, Jr., president of Kaufman and Canoles in Norfolk, Virginia has just been appointed to the Board of Directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond. Buddy is a fellow of the American College of Probate Counsel, a member of the Board of Governors of the business law section of the Virginia State Bar, and a member of the Norfolk-Portsmouth Bar Association, the Virginia Bar Association, and the American Bar Association. This information comes from the Norfolk Virginia-Pilot (January 17, 1984).

Julia Woodbridge Oxrieder, librarian for the law school at the College, is featured in an interesting article from the December 18, 1983, Daily Press. Julia is a collector of Christmas books from all over the world. Accumulated over the past 20 years, some of the volumes are nearly 100 years old. "A glimpse of her library reveals everything from such classics as Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol to A Hillbilly Night Before Christmas." Julia has an interesting hobby, and she is truly one of those rare people who keep Christmas every day of the year!

Bill Helseth writes that he is sorry to have missed our big reunion last fall. He was on a business trip to the west coast at the time, and he sounds as if he is leading a very busy retirement life! He retired from the foreign service in 1980, and since then he has been a consultant to the government and lecturer on the middle east.

Last but not least, Bill (Murphy, that is) has been elected to serve on the Order of White Jacket board of directors till January '86. Maybe that means I'll get to Williamsburg soon!

Don't forget to keep in touch.

If you would like to report the news for the Class of '50, write to Frankie Martens, Society of the Alumni, P.O. Box 60, Williamsburg, VA 23187.

From the Richmond News Service via Frankie at the Alumni House comes this special information about our "own" Betsy Graves Smith. She is the newly appointed principal of Subschool V, Lake Braddock Secondary School, Va. Lake Braddock has 4300 students in grades 7-12 and is Virginia's largest school. Classmates who have read this column regularly have watched Betsy's rising star in recent years. Starting as a math teacher, Betsy became a Gifted and Talented Resource Teacher, mathematics coordinator in the Department of Instructional Services, Mathematics Department Chairman at Fairfax H.S., Va. and administrative aide at Langley H.S. She presently serves as President of the Virginia Council of Teachers of Mathematics.

Harriett Jordan LeGraff is enjoying a new challenging position. She is Director of Development at the Alban Academy of Girls, a well established (1814) independent girls' school (K-12). Another note from a fund raiser envelope flap comes from Gordon Mason. He is enjoying private practice as an ophthalmologist in Virginia Beach after being in a group practice for fifteen years in Tennessee.

Congratulations to a newcomer! The Williamsburg Alumni Chapter of the College of William and Mary. The conception of this chapter took place last October when one hundred fifty alumni turned out for the initial survey of interest party. The birth(day) party was scheduled for February '84 and elections were held. James Coleman Anthony was named a member of the Board of Directors of the new chapter. Jim also serves as vice president and a director of the Order of the White Jacket. Marvin West is also serving a term of the Board of Directors of the Order of the White Jacket.

Just a reminder: our class agent for the William and Mary Annual Fund, Camille Grimes Henderson, hopes that the class will be able to raise the percentage of givers to the fund this year. For such a great class we should do better than we have in the past.

In January, Jerry and I, along with our Bruce '80, and Kristine '82, enjoyed visiting William and Mary friends June Compton Merkle and family and Bob Sessions and Jean in Georgia. Bob's most recent project as an antique collector-restorer of Rolls Royce

NEW CENTER ESTABLISHED BY BUSINESS SCHOOL

William and Mary has established a new Center for Executive Development in the School of Business Administration, combining the work of the Women in Business Program and business programs previously offered by the Office of Special Programs. Heading the new unit is Julie Leverenz, who has been director of the Women in Business Program. John C. Jamison, dean of the School of Business Administration, said CED will serve as a means of bringing more service to the community and as a way of bringing the community more in touch with the College.

COLLEGE RECEIVES $100,000 GRANT FROM ALUMNUS

William and Mary has received a $100,000 gift from an alumnus who wishes to remain anonymous. The gift will be used for unrestricted expendable purposes to be divided between the Faculty of Arts and Sciences and the School of Business Administration. President Graves said the gift came from "one of the College's most distinguished alumni." Since the gift is unrestricted, he said, it will be invaluable in supporting the teaching and research functions at the College.

automobiles is the restoration of a WW II RR ambulance. I never knew there was such a thing. What a prize! The restoration process is tedious, but Bob and Jean commiserated with all of us over President Graves' resignation announcement. He has been a very effective college president in so many ways and always with a very personal touch. President Graves' leadership has contributed to the stature of and to the future of our alma mater. Bob, as a trustee of the College Endowment Association, has become well acquainted with President Graves. Dave Wakefield is also a trustee of that Board. '52 is well represented.

Speaking of resignations — mine did not "take" at the 30th reunion, but I am submitting it now, officially, to take effect following the next '52 column. I have thoroughly enjoyed representing our class in this way, but I do believe that a fresh approach is overdue. Let's have lots of news this spring and a volunteer reporter so that I can bow out gracefully. Thanks.

Reunion year; reunion year! Your plans are all made? Good! There'll be folks at every corner of Williamsburg wearing '54 buttons on that special fall weekend at the College.

Bette Bodley Dunker, who is still enjoying her second career teaching third grade, saw her daughter, Liz, make her debut during the Christmas season just past. Son Brad just graduated from University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

Jane Pillow is now living in Ithaca, New York. (How many moves does this make?) She and Graham have two grandsons, one in Virginia and one in Texas. She likes the chance to go south. They've recently taken up raquetball, and now a new interest — raising Burmese cats.

Last November, Denny Ivie appeared in a program of speakers at the College. He spoke on "Careers in Fine Arts." He is owner and president of J. Frank Jones/Allan Denny Ivie Associates, Inc., on Cary Street in Richmond. It is an interior design studio. Denny maintains a shop, as well, which specializes in English antiques.

John Tucker, of Norfolk Academy, has been named to the Board of Visitors. John has been a member of the William and Mary Educational Administration Study Group. John is to succeed Herbert Kelly on the Board.

Mary W. Warren
RD 1, Box 795
White Stone, Va. 22578

A corporate merger and family relocation have kept Gerhard Otten busy over the past year. His company, Puritan Insurance, wound up in Providence, R.I. The Ottens settled on a mini-farm in Putnam, Ct., complete with a couple of horses and other animals to come.

Ed Watkins can still be found in the Atlanta area. Daughter Caroline graduated from the college and now is a grad student at the University of Missouri in art history. Stuart Watkins is a sophomore at E.C.U., Greenville, N.C. Ed has completed recording the "Messiah" and "The Many Moods of Christmas" with the Atlantic Symphony.

Directors of The Order of the White Jacket have been announced. Our class is represented by William L. Person, Jr., until January 1, 1985.

Eight former William and Mary athletes were inducted into the William and Mary Athletic Hall of Fame. Included was Richard Vaughan Savage. Dick was captain of the 1955-56 basketball team, which he led in scoring with 16.0 points per game en route to the state championship. President of the William and Mary Athletic Education Foundation in 1978, he is manager of Life Insurance Company of Virginia's Savage Agency in Norfolk, Va.

Closer to home, Larry and Bobbie Lynn Wheeler spent a weekend with Phil and Nancy Fehn Booth '58 here in White Stone, Va. Nancy provided a candelight dinner that would have made Christiana Campbell hide her face in shame. It was delicious.

Come on, dear people, drop a postal and let us know how you're doing, where you are, brag about your kids or just say hello.

Bill McCray and his wife, Louise, are living in New Canaan, Connecticut. They have three children: Hunter, who is in his second year at N.C. State; Lindsey 12, and Henry 11, who are in middle school. Bill worked for IBM for 22 years and held a number of management and executive positions before leaving last fall to join ITT. He was recruited by ITT to assist in the restructuring of several of their businesses. He is presently vice president for sales and marketing for ITT Communication Services. Bill and Louise attended homecoming and our 25th reunion last fall.

Frances Frost Abbott was sworn in December 5, 1983, as the first woman elected to full term on city council in Auburn, Maine. Congratulations, Frances!

From the Goochland Gazette comes an article featuring Richard Couture. Richard is assistant professor of history at Longwood College in Farmville. He gave a lecture in February that launched Longwood's "Teacher Education Centennial." This address was part of Longwood's Faculty Colloquium Lecture Series. He is editor of the Goochland County Historical Society Magazine.

This spring students at the College had an opportunity to hear from successful graduates. As usual the class of '58 was well represented: Peter Neufeld, producer of "CATS" which is enjoying a successful New York run was at the Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall in March to speak to students interested in the theatre. Johnston "Jack" Brendel was a panelist for the Life After DOG Street programs sponsored by the Society of the Alumni and held at the Alumni House in February. At each session of the program, a panel of alumni representing the banking, legal, insurance, health care, and real estate fields discussed practical information and solutions to problems seniors may face upon graduation.

Please send me "notes" on classmates with whom you "touched base" at the reunion. I could not take notes on everyone I saw, therefore I am counting on you to fill this column with news from the real Summit in 1983, the Class of 1958 Reunion.

The Daily Press carried a nice article about Jackie Good Legg in February. Besides teaching, she is busy writing "Words Worth Eating," weekly recipes which are distributed to supermarkets in eight states. Started in 1978 through the Ukrop chain, the recipes now go as far as Wisconsin and Georgia!

Mary Jane Thomas Stokes has a very successful business as an artist. She designs note cards and sells prints of colleges, courthouses, and lighthouses. She exhibits in Richmond, Portsmouth, and Virginia Beach.

John E. Pffor of the Secret Service presented a career seminar entitled "Careers in Government" at the College in February. He has served at the White House under presidents Johnson and Nixon. As a Senior Special Agent, John often conducts investigations dealing with counterfeiting.

W. Bruce Lincoln is a professor of history at Northern Illinois University. His most recent book, In the Vanguard of Reform: Russia's Enlightened Bureaucrats, 1825-1861, is dedicated in part of two of his former teachers at William and Mary, Bruce McCully and Bill Abbot.

Lynne Hagen Clarke is hoping to see lots of friends and classmates at our reunion in '85!

News arrived that Don Lloyd is now living in Sacramento, California, and has a career in telecommunications. He is currently assigned as the marketing manager at AT&T, western division. He has two boys; one is in the Marines and one is in his last year of high school.

Col. Charles Gobrecht is in the U.S. Air Force and presented a career seminar on military and political careers at the College. He is attending the Executive Seminar in National and International Affairs. The emphasis of his career has been in the field of political-military affairs and military planning. Some of his previous assignments have been at the Air Force Academy as a faculty member in the political science department, the Air Attache at the American Embassy in London, and also with the Organizations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Gov. Charles S. Robb recently appointed James W. McClothlin to The College of William and Mary Board of Visitors. Jim is living in Bristol, Virginia, and is the founder, president, and chairman of United Coal Company. Congratulations!

Bob Resch writes from Bowie, Maryland, that he retired on August 1, 1983, from the U.S. Army after almost 21 years of active service. He now works for ARGOSystems, Inc., a Sunnydale, California, based defense and aerospace electronic warfare company.

Nancy Kent Young, of Lynchburg, has been named director of Family Service of Central Virginia. Nancy had been acting as director since August. Nancy holds a doctoral degree in education from the University of Virginia and has been self employed as human relations and management consultant to area firms in Lynchburg, Virginia. Congratulations to you, Nancy!

John Reese can be seen on the TV show "All My Children" these days. He was also seen on February 18 at the College for he was another one of our classmates who participated in the Career Exploration Day.

Thanks to Ann Smith Hughes the following news came from the Annual Theta Newsletter for the Class of '62!

Susan Griggs Bramer and E.J. visited England last spring and saw all their former neighbors. This was their first visit since they left in 1975. They are still enjoying life in Florida and being "civilianized."

Jane Lawson Hall and family are finishing out this school year in Delmar, N.Y., while Frank is starting his new job as Maryland's Secretary of Public Safety and Correctional Services. Jane teaches in a school for troubled boys and loves it. Jane is still running and has added weight training to her fitness program. The entire family will move to Maryland this summer.

Kay Christian Sills is in Travers City, MI, and has been substituting in the local school system and hopes for a permanent position. Art, her husband, has his pilot's license now and his product for nursing homes and hospitals was voted "product of the year" for Michigan. Buddy is a sophomore in high school and Carey is in the 7th grade.

Dorcas Miller Lounsbury and family are in Escondido, California. Dorcas is involved in local politics, serves on the school's Personnel Commission and volunteers at their youngest's school. She also holds down a 10-month job as lab technician at the local community college, Palomar. Anne, their oldest, was at the College for three semesters and now she has transferred to Brown University. Dan is in his senior year in high school. Ken Lounsbury '61, is happy with Lusardi Construction Co. and is the Chamber of Commerce President and Chairman of the Hospital Board.

Dorcas Brown and Paul Bankes had an opening of their Zimbabwean Stone Sculpture Exhibit at the IMF with the Ambassador in attendance. Paul is now head man in his law firm. Dorcas is still writing. Heather is a sophomore at Earlham and leaves for six months in Japan to live with a Japanese family in a fairly rural area this July. Jess is a senior in high school taking mostly honors courses.

Donna Floyd Fales is operating a tennis and golf club in Miami and Gordon is head of the Airport Services Division of A. R. A. Emerson is attending Pomfret Boarding School in New England this year.

Martha Walton High is the Diocesan Altar Guild Chairman of the Diocese of Virginia. Jack is Director of Government Marketing Affairs at Univac. Lance was co-captain of his football team at Landon and made All Interstate Athletic Conference tackle and offensive linesman of the year. Martha is a freshman at Holton Arms.

Linnea Barnes Sandstrom is the Manager of Office Services at the American Systems Corporation. Dick is Controller of C. L. Barnes in Alexandria, Virginia. Inga is in the 10th grade and Ricky is in the 8th grade.

Margie Heiney Stouffer and family are now in the Virginia Beach area.

Sue Oakley Nelson and family live in Durham, N.C. Larry and Sue were in Washington to attend a seminar on Institutional Planning. Kara is in the 8th grade and Chip is in the 4th grade.

Cynthia Isemann Buxton and family are always busy in Herndon, Virginia. Deana is in the 5th grade and Gary is in the 1st grade.

Ann Smith Hughes always saves her news for last and here it is. Ann is still enjoying her part-time work for Satellite Business Systems. Jim is busy with his job managing the American Motors account for the southeast region. Jimmy is in high school where he plays football and is on the wrestling and weight training programs.

I am anxiously awaiting notes, cards, letters, and anything you are going to send to me for the next column. Happy Spring!

ALUMNUS TO WRITE NEWSPAPER COLUMN

P. J. Budahn '71, a reporter for the Newport News Daily Press since 1973, has been named by that paper to write a weekly column. Budahn, who earned his master's degree in government from Southern Illinois University, has covered military affairs for the Daily Press, and in 1982 was named a special assignment writer. His column will offer personal views of Tidewater events and people.

ALUMNUS RECEIVES ARMY MEDAL

Newly promoted Army Col. David H. Lindsey M.B.A. '72 has been decorated with the Defense Meritorious Service Medal at Camp H.M. Smith, Hawaii. The Defense Meritorious Service Medal is awarded to individuals for non-combat meritorious achievement or service that is incontestably exceptional and of a magnitude that clearly places them above their peers.

COSTS RISE SLIGHTLY AT COLLEGE

The total cost of attending William and Mary will increase about 7.9 percent for in-state students and 11.5 percent for out-of-state students for the 1984-85 academic year. Virginia students will pay approximately $2000 per year in tuition and fees, a 12.8 percent increase over the 1983-84 academic year. Non-residents' tuition and fees will increase to $5420, or 15.5 percent more than the current year. Room and board will increase 3.4 percent and 6.6 percent respectively, bringing the total cost for Virginia students next year to $4993, up from $4626, and for non-Virginia students to $8413, up from $7540. This is the smallest increase since the 1981-82 school year.

A welcome letter came from Bangalore, Karnataka State, India, from Bonnie Agner Tinsley who is newly settled there with her husband, Cliff Richeson, after having spent three years in Singapore. Cliff is Area Service Manager in India for WABCO, a Peoria, Ill., based company which manufactures earth movers.

Bonnie has been busy promoting her book, Singapore Green: A History and Guide to the Botanic Gardens, published by Times Books International. Bonnie sent along some very favorable reviews, which note that the book is a fascinating history of one of Singapore's national treasures as well as a comprehensive guide to the Gardens. Bonnie was invited to do the book as a result of freelance writing for The Straits Times, Singapore's major English daily newspaper. Prior to Singapore, Bonnie had worked in Indianapolis as Director of Information for the Indiana Commission for the Humanities. She wrote poetry for magazines in Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky and received a grant from the Illinois Art Council to do a poetry chapbook with four other women poets. Bonnie wonders if other classmates are living overseas as the Gazette carries little news of those living abroad. She regrets that their home leave schedule won't allow them to leave India for our 20th reunion this fall, but invites any travelling classmates to a warm welcome to Bangalore.

Another welcome overseas letter came from Dan Denby from Palma de Mallorca, Spain. Dan wants to know the whereabouts of Bob Buckley, Bruce Taggart, Butch Plageman and Chip Johnson.

After leaving William and Mary, Dan went to VPI and got a Ph.D. in Statistics and Industrial Engineering. He then joined Science Management Corporation and traveled all over the U.S. for five years. He was then transferred to their Paris office for three years. He then moved to London as managing director of the firm's United Kingdom operations, again for three years.

In 1976 he moved to Spain to start his own tourism business, renting mopeds, scooters and other vehicles to European tourists. The firm currently has 12 franchised outlets and a fleet of 1,000 vehicles. Dan named a general manager to run the operation after five years and returned to consulting. He and a partner started Redirection, to assist companies in organization, data processing and corporate mergers and acquisitions. They have clients in Europe and Abu Dhabi.

Dan married two years ago and has a 14 month old son. He and his family return to the States twice a year.

On the domestic scene, congratulations to Harriet Nachman Storm of Hampton, Va., who was reappointed to the Board of Visitors by Governor Robb. Harriet is a freelance writer and trustee of the William and Mary Athletic Educational Foundation. She became a board member in October, 1979, filling an unexpired term.

Karen J. Back has a new baby, a son, born June 9, 1983 who joins two sisters, aged 6 and 10. Karen and her family live in Tenafly, New Jersey.

Mary Ann Venner Schmidt has been active in forming a local alumni chapter in Williamsburg.

Michael G. Essman of Fickling & Walker Insurance Services, Inc., Atlanta, Ga., has been elected to membership in the Young Presidents Organization, Inc. (YPO). YPO is a worldwide educational association of more than 3,900 successful young chief executives who have become presidents of sizable companies before the age of 40.

Daniel A. Armour has announced the formation of D. Armour & Assoc., an independent firm specializing in the sale of data processing furniture and accessories, filing equipment and color coded supplies and office furniture. The Virginia Beach company serves the Peninsula.

Susan Stitt is the busy director of the Museums at Stony Brook, NY.

David E. Curling and William M. Kelso of our class spoke at Career Exploration Day which was held at the College in February. Dave moderated the Advertising/Public Relations panel. He is an Account Supervisor with William Cook Advertising, Inc. in Jacksonville, Florida. Bill Kelso was the moderator of the Research and Applications panel. He is the Resident Archaeologist at Monticello, for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation in Charlottesville, Va.

David A. Barley of Williamsburg is serving on the Board of Directors of the Order of the White Jacket.

Robert P. Wolf, formerly cooperate secretary and assistant general counsel for A. H. Robins Company, has been elected vice president and general manager of the new Medical Instruments Division of the Company. He joined Robins in 1973 and is a member of the Richmond, Virginia, and American Bar Association.

Editor's Note: Your reporter neglected to mention that she is Vice President, Municipal Securities Division, Merrill Lynch Capital Markets, in New York City. Congratulations, Joanne!

I was happy to have a note from Alan Mollohan telling that he and Barbara now have a fourth son, Karl. Their other sons are Alan, Robert, and Andrew, ages 6', 5 and 3. Needless to say, theirs is a very lively household! Alan is a member of the House of Representatives in the United States Congress from the first District of West Virginia.

It's slow on news again, so please send me any tidbit of information. We're still trying to sell our house in Virginia Beach. I know out there somewhere is a person who will fall in love with it one day. Maybe by the next issue in the fall, we'll be moved!

Ed Peverell has returned to the San Francisco Bay Area to take over as Director of Market Development for Tandem Computers, Inc., a $450 million computer company in Cupertino, the heart of Silicon Valley. Tandem hired him away from a twelve year career with Burroughs Corporation, where he was Director of Marketing for the Western Region. Living in San Carlos, Eddie looks forward to traveling worldwide with this new position. He also wrote that he missed seeing Dave Davis, '68, and Jeff Thiel at a recent alumni gathering in San Francisco and hopes that any classmates in the area will give him a call at (415) 592-7413.

Having left the Georgia State Legislature to earn an MBA (Harvard, 1980), Bob Irvin is presently a management consultant for McKinsey & Co., Atlanta. Bob still has an interest in politics and last year was chairman of the Credentials Committee at the 1983 Republican State Convention.

Pam Allison Barger and Ray '69, are in Del Mar, California. Pam substitute teaches and volunteers in the community. Ray is Vice President of Marketing for Spectragraphics, a computer graphics firm. Children Stephanie, 10, and Gregory, 8, are enjoying the sun and surf. Ray and Pam hope to make Ray's 15th Homecoming reunion this fall.

Panelists for the Life After DOG (Duke of Gloucester) Street program sponsored by Society of the Alumni at The Alumni House, February 7, 8, & 9 were John Greene, Buddy Gardner, and Steve Isaacs. At each session of the program, a panel of alumni representing the banking, legal, insurance, health care, and real estate fields discussed practical information and solutions to problems seniors may face upon graduation. This was the fourth annual LADS program.

Also presented in February for the fourth year was Career Exploration Day presented by the Offices of Career Planning and Placement in cooperation with the Society of the Alumni, to provide students with practical career advice. Selected alumni served on panels which discussed with groups of students the path their careers have taken since leaving The College. As panelists were: Beth Hill Boone, Director of Studies & Curator of the Pre-Columbian Collection, Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, D.C., in the career field "Art/Fine Arts." And Joyce Stroop Moran, Good Manufacturing Practices Analyst, A. H. Robins Company, Richmond, Va., in the career field, "Research and Applications." Four others of our classmates served as career field moderators. . . for "Elementary/Secondary Education" was Judy McInturf Brown, Supervisor for English Language, Language Arts and Reading, Newport News Public Schools. . . for "International Business" was Barry Porter, Systems Project Manager, International Planning Supply and Distribution, Mobil Chemical Company, Houston, Texas. . . for "Social Service/Community Agencies," Purnell Westbrook, Vice President for Development, American Heart Association, Richmond, Va.

One of the highest awards the U.S. Army can bestow on a private citizen, the Commander's Award for Public Service, was awarded to Barbara Pate Glacel at Fort Richardson, Alaska, in February. Barbara received the award for her activities in promoting the partnership between the Army, its soldiers and family members.

As of April 2, my husband, Tom Van Dam (Marshall-Wythe Law, '73), resigned his partnership with the Hackensack, N.J., firm of Winne, Banta, & Rizzi to become a partner with the Pasamus, N.J., firm of Hartmann, Brooks, & Van Dam, which continues the practice of law under the name, Hartmann, Brooks, Van Dam, & Van Dam. Tom concentrates on corporate and commercial real estate and real estate development law.

I received an envelope of class news from the Alumni Office, and it's enough to keep our column going. Spring should be here when everyone reads this news to try to write before summer activities take over.

Susan Cahill Davies was teaching high school algebra and geometry in Burlingame, CA, until she moved to Boise, ID, in February with her husband who works for MorrisonKnudsen Co.

Post anniversary wishes to Susan Brick

Goodwin who celebrated her tenth wedding anniversary in November 1983. She and husband, Ron, have a 7 year old daughter, Carrie, and a 3 year old son, Scott. Susan stays busy selling Avon and working with St. Paul's Methodist Church where she teaches the junior choir, an elementary Sunday School class, and sings in the adult choir. They have lived in Hendersen, TX, since 1974 and she loves it, but admits it's a long way from many friends and family.

Pamela Gayle Whiting has been selected to be in the 1983 edition of Outstanding Young Women of America.

For the past four years, a Career Exploration Day has been sponsored by the Offices of Career Planning and Placement in cooperation with The Society of the Alumni to educate students on career possibilities. This year, Gail Porter Long, a television producer for Maryland Public Television in Baltimore, spoke on her career.

Here are some one liners. . . Debbie S. Dalton, who lives in Alexandria, VA, has been elected to serve as a director of the Order of the White Jacket of the College until January 1, 1987. Margaret Micholet works for the National Park Service in Boston. Doug Clark is a student at Gregorian University in Rome.

Alice Reno Malone spent eight years at the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History where she served as coordinator of the division of education and museum/education specialist. She has moved to Chicago.

Alumni in the Williamsburg area have formed a local alumni chapter. Nancy Sturgeon Luzar has been elected vice president of the new chapter.

Elaine May Kontos, husband Ken, and two sons have moved from New Jersey and are living in Dumfries, VA. They are getting settled in their new home and getting in touch with old friends. It's nice to have them back in the northern Virginia area.

I got a nice letter from Bruce Lيدر, who is an attorney in New Bedford MA. Most of his work involves personal injury and domestic relations trial work. He also works part-time for the Bristol County District Attorney's Office as a Special Prosecutor handling juvenile and child abuse cases. His wife, Jean, runs a toddler program at the Dartmouth Children's Museum and they have a son and daughter, ages 6 and 3, respectively. Bruce stays in touch with Bruce Gumbert, who lives in the Boston area and works for the Gittleman Co., a company which markets data on computer hardware and software. Both Bruces remain staunch supporters of William and Mary athletics.

Ernie Gates has been named editorial page editor of the Daily Press, leaving his position covering the Virginia General Assembly for the Daily Press and The Times Herald Richmond bureau. He has received many awards for his editorial abilities, most recently an award for his statehouse coverage. Ernie, wife Elizabeth, and their three children live in Williamsburg.

Our tenth reunion is fast approaching and it is time to start planning your visit to Williamsburg. The Alumni House will be happy to handle all the details for your room reservations (see forms elsewhere in this issue) and has invited our entire class to a dance Saturday night at the renovated Trinkle Hall. There are lots of events all weekend long — just keep looking through the Alumni Gazette for specifics. This will be a big reunion year for our class and there is usually a good turnout for a 10th, so this is the year to make the effort to attend. We locals who show up year after year would love to see those of you who live too far away to make it very often!

ROY R. CHARLES '32 RECEIVES AWARD

Roy R. Charles '32 of Norfolk, Va., has received the Award for Scouter Citizen of the Year for 1984 from the Tidewater Council of the Boy Scouts of America. The Council noted that "Charles leads others to service their community by his example" and "is committed to the youth of the community and to the youth in Scouting in our Council. Charles believes that the Scouting program develops character, trains citizens, and promotes personal fitness." Mr. Charles is owner and president of the Crestwood Corporation and the Crestwood Housing Corporation.

Speaking of locals, Williamsburger David L. Sisk was a panelist for the "Life after DOG Street" programs sponsored by the Alumni Society last February. At each session, a panel of alumni representing the banking, real estate, insurance, health care, and legal fields discussed practical information and solutions to problems that seniors may face after graduation. . . wish they'd offered that when we were seniors! Dave is the State Farm representative in Williamsburg, and lives in Kingsmill with his wife, Margery, and three children, Emily 8, Paul 4, and Mary Beth 1. David has worked for State Farm since he graduated at age 27 (he served in Viet Nam before going to college) and keeps busy with community projects. He is a member of the Colonial Capitol Kiwanis Club and chaired the Toys for Tots program this past Christmas. David also serves as the District Chairman of the Colonial District Boy Scouts and is on the board of the United Way.

Rusty Bruni was also a panelist for the "Life After DOG Street" program. Last I heard of Rusty, he was working as a dentist and living in Richmond.

Bill Koziar couldn't get enough of William and Mary: he is back as an Assistant Professor of Military Science, and will be there for the next three years. Since graduation Bill has been stationed in Washington state, at language school in Monterey, Calif. (to learn Greek), in Macedonia, Greece, and at Ft. Benning, Georgia. He said that being back at William and Mary as a professor has given him a different perspective on how the school is run, but essentially, things haven't changed much. He did say that the teachers look older, the students look younger, and the trees are bigger!

After graduation, Ron Sauder joined the staff of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, working first with the paper's Williamsburg bureau. He moved to the Fredericksburg bureau in 1982. Long interested in environmental issues, Ron has written many articles about the watermen and about environmental pressures on the Chesapeake Bay.

So much for us "locals" — did I miss anyone? Please fill me in if I did.

It's so hard to believe that it was eight short years ago that we had our graduation exercises at William and Mary Hall. Since then we've been able to keep track of a few hundred of our number, but there are many who have yet to experience the thrill of their name in print. Well, we have a few newcomers to this month's column, so let's get on with it.

PARENTS: Tom and Lisa McCauley Seelinger have recently had their fourth child who was also their first boy. Tom says they are all doing fine and would love to hear from the old gang. . . especially babysitters. Tom is closing in on five years with the Sperry Corporation as a scientific programmer in Philadelphia. He also had news of Carol Tolbert Hardin and her husband, who are in the same neighborhood. They recently had their second child, also their first boy. Greg and Sandy Fletcher have recently had their first child, also a boy. It has been a busy year for them as Greg received his MBA from Sandy's alma mater, George Mason University. He is currently studying hard for the CPA exam, for which he will sit this May.

WREN CHAPEL ARTICLE

The Alumni Gazette is preparing an article on the Wren Chapel for the June issue. Writer Lisa Heuvel '74 is seeking information from alumni who were married in the Chapel. If you have any fond memories, please send them to Lisa at William and Mary, c/o of the Publications Office, Williamsburg, Va. 23185.

LAW: Bill and Maureen Cash Moffett are presently in Abington, Va., where Bill has been recently named partner in the law firm where he works. My apologies to Bill and Maureen for not recalling the name of the firm — I'll follow it up with a note in the fall. Marian Cadden is living and working in New York City as an attorney at Chase Manhattan Bank. Henry Crider is working in the general practice of law in his hometown of Chatham, Va., where he is an associate with the firm of Davis & Shupik.

SCHOOL SERVICE: A battery of alumni have been involved in extra-curricular activities at William and Mary over the past several months. Nancy Hammond sits on the board of the Williamsburg alumni chapter. Kim Fergusson was a panelist for the Life After DOG Street program held at the Alumni House back in February. And Laurie Johnston, Lisa Anne Van Divender, and Glenn Gundersen were all participants in Career Exploration Day, also in February.

CORPORATE MOGULS: Susan Mariani writes from Dallas that she is still working for EDS in Dallas and is getting married to Terry Castle, who is from Minnesota, in May. Susan Schott Karr is further west working as a marketing support representative for Burroughs Corporation in San Francisco. Since graduation, Susan has gotten married to Cyrus Karr of Fairfax, Va., and completed her MBA at Golden State University in San Francisco. Suzanne Hall Zohuck is personnel director at Seagram's in Baltimore.

MEDICAL SERVICES: Jimmy Romano is a fourth year general surgery resident at Georgetown University Hospital, where he is completing his training that began at NYU-Bellevue Medical Center in New York City. Following this year, Jimmy will be doing a surgical fellowship at the Johns Hopkins Hospital. He says he would really enjoy hearing from old friends. Jeffrey Davis is back home in Winchester practicing dentistry. He is married and they have one daughter. And Greer Sullivan is a psychiatry resident at UCLA.

THE ARTS: Betty Browning is a museum curator at Valley Forge National Historical Park. In the same state, Jill Jensen Nee Lanen recently hosted an art show at the Blue Sky Gallery in Murrysville, Pa. Most of the works were portraits and still lifes in pastel.

THE MEDIA: Imagine our surprise recently when we picked up a copy of the Wall Street Journal and saw that Alan Gayle had been quoted on economic conditions in the Richmond area. As an economist for United Virginia Bank in Richmond, Alan is involved extensively in interest rate projections as well as general economic conditions in the state of Virginia. And as we read our copies of the New York Times, Advertising Age, and Magazine Age, John Weiner was sitting there prying with his GAMES magazine. Not merely an actor in this case, John has recently won two GAMES contests in recent months. Finally, Floyd Tilley has had an article on catfish farming accepted for publication in Mississippi Arts & Letters, a quarterly magazine. It is a contemporary satire of his experiences as a catfish farmer in the Delta region of Mississippi.

My former roommate, Bernard Leister, has recently married and has moved into a house for the first time since graduation. He and his wife are both CPA's for the Richmond firm of Mitchell Wiggins & Co. Karen Ryer Cunningham is teaching at Portland State University where she has been for the last five years, following completion of a Masters in computer science and finishing her course work for a Ph.D. at Purdue. She was married in 1982 to Ward Cunningham. Karen also does part time work at Tektronix. Paul and Katrina Kipp Pieringer are in Baltimore where Paul works at the Baltimore Gas and Electric Company's Nuclear Plant at Calvert Cliffs as a nuclear engineer. That follows 5 years as a Naval officer on a nuclear submarine. Katrina currently works for a consulting firm doing environmental studies. Earlier, she received an M.A. in Marine Biology from Boston University's Marine Program in Wood's Hole, Mass. And a postscript to last month's column, Sue Hedrick and Kauhy Henry both work for the Foreign Intelligence Branch with the Secret Service — I had neglected to mention the last part.

I hope everyone has a fun summer planned — we hope to be moving into a house sometime if all goes well. Let me go ahead and put a little bug in your ear for you to be thinking about — our 10th year reunion comes up in 2 years. There's a lot of planning that needs to go into a successful reunion. If any one is interested in getting this project off the ground, I will be glad to serve as a clearinghouse to get interested parties together. Also, in 2 more years, if not sooner, I am supposed to rotate out of this position as class reporter. If there are those of you who may be interested, please let me or Frankie Martens at the Alumni House know of your interests. Literary talent is not a prerequisite. Talk to you next fall!

Everyone must be busy this year because I have not received many letters recently! Drop me a note sometime this summer for our first column this fall.

Rick and Sue Olsen Rowland have volunteered to be our class agents to assist the college in fund raising. They report that, to date, our class is ahead of last year in giving. Sue and Rick have been living in the Washington, D.C., area for almost a year. They have found it to be quite an adjustment from living in Williamsburg! They are beginning to house hunt. Look forward to some correspondence from Sue and Rick for your contributions.

Kathryn Terry Lunsford and her husband, Charlie, had a son, Michael Grayson, born on December 30, 1983. Kathryn is taking a six months leave of absence from her job at C&P Telephone. They recently built a new home in Midlothian, Va.

Nancy Singer Smith and her husband Ben '77, had a son, Benjamin Alexander, on January 28, 1984. Nancy returned to her job as branch manager/loan officer for Heritage Savings & Loan in April.

During the fourth annual Career Exploration Day in February, three of our classmates participated in panel presentations on various career fields. Endia Browne Hall moderated the panel on counseling and psychology. Endia is a career counselor at North Carolina State University in Raleigh. Sharon F. Suchy participated on the health sciences panel. Sharon is a predoctoral fellow doing research in human genetics at the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond. Maryanne N. Smith moderated the panel on marketing and sales. Maryanne is a national account manager for AT&T Communications in Media, PA.

Roger Crook is a marketing associate for Amherst Associates, Inc. in Philadelphia. He married Susan Stiftinger in March. She is a 1977 graduate of Loch Haven College.

Steve Zeller is working for the law firm of Kirkland and Ellis in Chicago. He and his wife Leigh live in Evanston with their two children, daughter Cary, age 2½, and Brad, age 3.

Bill Ranken left the Marine Corps as a captain in March, 1983. He worked as a sales representative for Gallo Wine Co. As of January, he began travelling across the country as a market analyst for Gallo.

GOVERNMENT RE-IMBURSES COLLEGE

The College has received approximately $350,000 from the federal government to cover expenses incurred during the 1983 Economic Summit of Industrialized Nations. College facilities used during the Summit, held from May 28-30, included the Campus Center, Dupont, Yates, and Botetourt student residences, and William and Mary Hall which served as the International Press Center.

Mary Jean Kelly Lowe married foreign service officer, John Lowe, in October 1982. After receiving her masters from UVA in International Relations, she served as political officer in the Bureau of Intelligence and Research. Her current position is staff assistant to the Chairman of the Secretary of State's Policy Planning Council. In February, Mary Jean presented a seminar on careers in foreign service at William and Mary, sponsored by the Office of Career Planning. She and her husband are living in Washington but plan to return to overseas assignments within the year.

Captain Lindell Weeks has been decorated with the Army Achievement Medal at Fort Campbell, Ky. He is an aircraft maintenance officer with the 158th aviation battalion.

Greg Blus recently graduated from the Kellogg Graduate School of Management at Northwestern University.

Chip Delano is practicing law in Danville, Va.

Reid and Nancy Marker Compton and their son, Bryan Christopher, are living in the Charlottesville area where Nancy will receive her MD from UVA in May. Reid expects to complete his PhD in developmental biology this summer and then continue with postdoctoral work.

Karen Hall, executive story editor for "Hill Street Blues," and her husband Sheldon Bull, producer of "The Bob Newhart Show," visited the campus in April to talk with students interested in theatre.

John Schilling was a panelist for the fourth annual Life After DOG Street program sponsored by the Society of the Alumni and held at the Alumni House in February. At each session, panelists representing various career fields discussed practical information and solutions to problems seniors may face upon graduation.

Mark Finley and his wife, Michele, live in Pound Ridge, N.Y. Mark is a senior marketing representative for Comshare, Inc., a leading supplier of decision support software. Michele is director of design for Rose Marie Reid, a division of Jonathan Logan.

Bonnie Cross was appointed the chief accountant for Gloucester County in December. She had previously worked in Newport News for Rauch, Witt and Company, CPA. She is married to Norfolk businessman, Glenn Cross.

Rob Lundquist married Pamela Mumby in December. She graduated in 1975 from Sewanee and completed her masters in 1983 from the University of Tennessee. Rob is working towards a masters of divinity degree at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary in Evanston, Ill. Last August he visited Jerry and Mary Ellen Shields ('79) Riendeau at their Suffolk home. Jerry and Mary Ellen have a daughter Christina, born last July.

Best wishes for a great summer to all of you. Keep in touch!

I hope everyone's enjoying the spring weather — to me, it was definitely a long time in coming! This is our last column until the fall, so this should catch up on everything I've received so far.

Anne Bolling graduated from UVA Law School in May of 1983, and is now an attorney with the firm of Weinberg and Green in Baltimore. Anne worked for the same firm before she finished school and seems to be quite happy with her decision. Stan Haynes is also working for a law firm in Baltimore after completing UVA Law School.

Rachel Witmer has had some interesting

STATE AUTHORIZES PAY INCREASES

Raises totaling at least 20 per cent over the next two years of the biennium for faculty at William and Mary have been authorized by the General Assembly of Virginia. The final version of the 1984-86 budget bill calls for an average of 10 per cent salary increase for full-time faculty members during both years of the biennium. The budget allows for even larger increases for the law and business school faculties. Tuition in these schools will be raised sufficiently to permit an additional 10 per cent for the law faculty and five per cent for the business faculty. The General Assembly also voted $2.5 million for an addition to Swem Library and authorized nearly a half million dollars for the renovation and expansion of William Small Hall where the physics and geology departments are located.

travels since graduation. She lived for three years in Washington, where she worked at the Embassy of Japan, the Department of Energy and the International Satellite Organization (INTELSAT). Rachel then spent four months in Japan where she studied culture and language at Keio University in Tokyo. Last fall, Rachel entered UVA Law School where she has been extremely busy ever since.

There's news of a few other UVA Law School grads — Stephen Wood writes from Roanoke where he is completing a one-year clerkship for the Hon. James Turk, Chief U.S. Judge of the Western District of Virginia. He will start with the firm of McGuire, Woods and Battle in Richmond this summer, where he will also be joining his wife, Cindy McNair Wood, class of '81, in their new, older house. Up until now, Stephen and Cindy have been commuting back and forth on weekends — what Stephen calls the modern commuting couple! Cindy is a personnel recruiter for the investment firm of Wheat First Securities.

Jeff Oleynik also graduated from UVA Law School last May and is now working in Dallas. I also hear that Jeff was married, but I don't have the details.

George Stukenbroeker writes from Newport News where he and his wife, Susan (Maag) Stukenbroeker, class of '81, are each busy with their respective careers. George is a reporter for The Times-Herald and Daily Press, where he covers news of the local courts. Susan works for Daniel Wagner Associates, where she is a software analyst. The company does computer programming for the Navy. Susan spent two weeks last spring at sea on the USS John Kennedy as a consultant.

Richard Lacey completed a thirty week sales training program with Burroughs Wellcome Company. He is now a sales representative, based out of Atlanta. Duane Litaue graduated from the University of Alabama Law School last May and is now taking a one-year LLM program at New York University where he specializes in taxation. Duane took the Alabama bar exam this past summer. I hope the results were good!

Myde Boles will be finishing the MBA program at William and Mary this May and then starts a job as management consultant for Price Waterhouse in Richmond. In the interim, Myde plans to take a well-deserved Caribbean cruise. Myde writes that her roommate, Amy Holt, is in her second year of law school at Marshall-Wythe and recently competed in the American Bar Association Regional Moot Court Competition at Howard University. Amy's team won first place and is headed for Chicago this summer to compete in the national competition.

Kathleen Overby graduated last May from the Divinity School at Duke with her master's degree in divinity. She was ordained a deacon in the United Methodist Church and is currently serving her first charge in Greensville County for four churches.

Josephine Hoffman completed the requirements for a master's degree in gerontology at North Texas State University last year, where she received the "Distinguished Student in Studies in Aging" award. Josephine is now completing administrative internship at Maple Knoll Village in Cincinnati.

Judi Elder writes from Alexandria/Fairfax County where she has been teaching kindergarten for the last four years. Her class consists of 45 active children, yet Judi is enjoying it immensely. More exciting news — Last May, Judi was married to Tim Elmore, a George Mason graduate. Tim is data processing manager for the IRS Credit Union. Judi and Tim are living in Alexandria where she runs into quite a few William and Mary graduates.

Judi also writes that Becky (Walker) Belkoski and her husband, Joe, live nearby in a newly-purchased townhouse. Becky is quite active in the American Symphony Orchestra League.

I heard from Jan Evans who left William and Mary during our sophomore year and just wanted to bring everyone up to date on her news. Just goes to show that there is life after William and Mary! Jan completed her degree in corporate finance at the University of Alabama and then worked as a programmer in Huntsville, Alabama. In October 1981, Jan married Steven Braun and they are now living in Memphis, where Jan is installment loan operations officer at Commerce Union Bank and Steve is an account exec with Purolator.

Doug Slater is completing his third year of medical school at Duke University. Doug had the opportunity to spend three months in South America last summer.

Bonnie Lemon Hughes writes from Springfield, Virginia, where she and her husband, Mark Hughes, have been living since their marriage. Bonnie and Mark were married in April of 1983. Bonnie works for Hazelton Laboratories of America in Vienna.

David Hancock is working towards his doctorate in history at Yale, up in my neck of the woods. Mark Reed received his J.D. from Marshall-Wythe School of Law last May, while William Stuntz recently enrolled in law school at UVA. Brett Roach is on the library staff at Marymount College and is working towards an M.A. in history at Georgetown University.

Fernando Manrique was commissioned a second lieutenant in the US Air Force after graduation from Officer Training School at Lackland Air Force Base in Texas. He is now assigned at Laughlin Air Force Base, also in Texas.

Two of our classmates recently served as panelists for the 1984 Life After DOG Street program sponsored by the Society of the Alumni — Annette Harper and Vincent Boyd. The program was sponsored for the benefit of seniors at William and Mary and dealt with job and other opportunities after graduation.

In addition, Carl Meyer, Merlin Vaughan, Steve Harrison, Sid Spencer and Carolyn Yaney were panelists for the Career Exploration Day sponsored by the Office of Career Planning and Placement in conjunction with the Society of the Alumni. Carl is an account executive with Merrill Lynch in D.C., Merlin is teaching in the Williamsburg/James City County schools and Steve is a coordinator for emergency planning at VEPCO. Sid is working in Charlottesville where he is a professional recruiter for Comdial Business Communications, and Carolyn is a dancer with the Colette Yglesias Dance Company in College Park.

David Smith is completing work on his Ph.D., but wrote in primarily with some news of another classmate, Bob Patterson. Bob completed his MA degree at the University of Chicago and is in his second year of law school at Washington and Lee University School of Law. Bob will be clerking with the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Feld in D.C. this summer. Also, Bob is making plans for a June wedding in the Wren Chapel. His fiancée is Maria Almodovar, who is a first year associate with the same firm. Maria graduated from Georgetown and UVA Law School.

Lisa Jo Sagolla writes from the Big Apple, where she has been quite busy! Last summer, Lisa choreographed "Hello, Dolly!" and "Oliver" for the Plattsburgh (New York) Summer Music Theater. She taught theater, dance and music at Robert Louis Stevenson School in Manhattan in the fall; the school is a private high school for students with emotional problems. In January, Lisa choreographed an off-off Broadway musical called "Dancing on the Third Rail," as well as doing the musical staging for the show. Her current endeavors include choreographing "Kiss Me, Kate" for St. John's University, a spot as research assistant to the producer for the PBS series, "Eye on Dance," teaching dance and exercise classes, and in her spare time, attending graduate classes at Columbia University for an MBA in dance education.

KAREN HALL '78 VISITS WILLIAM AND MARY

Karen Hall '78, executive director of the successful television series "Hill Street Blues" recently visited campus with her husband Sheldon Bull who is producer of the Bob Newhart Show. Karen and her husband met informally with students interested in careers in television writing and were the guests of honor at a luncheon at the President's House. Professor Louis E. Catron, under whom Karen began her training in scriptwriting and playwriting, arranged the visit to campus.

Fritz (class of '79) and Lee (Pearson) Knapp are living in Richmond where their two sons, Cheston Brian and Eric Andrew, keep them quite busy. Lee taught 7th grade history in Henrico County until last June and is now involved in a small cottage industry making folk art objects and other crafts. Fritz was also teaching at St. Christopher's until last year; he is now working in the brokerage business with the firm of Anderson & Strudwick. Lee also wrote that Liane Armstrong was married to Brian O'Donnell. They are now living in Chicago while Liane completes the requirements for a physical therapist and Brian finishes at Northwestern Medical School.

Tammy Krcelic is working as a research chemist with the Blackman-Uhler Chemical Division in Spartanburg, SC; Tammy is the first woman to hold such a position there. Pam McIntire is working towards (or may have already received) her master's of environmental management degree from Duke through which she received a fellowship from Champion International. Nancy Tammi also received the Southwest Forest Industries Fellowship at Duke. Nancy is completing the requirements for a master of forestry degree.

Nancy Vehrs is on the administrative staff of the Woodburn Center for Community Mental Health in Annandale. Last summer, she spent her vacation visiting Annie Walton in Wyoming. They took the grand tour of the state, visiting the Grand Tetons and Yellowstone, in addition to several historical sites.

Well, this should do it for now! In case you haven't seen something mentioned that you had written a while ago, keep in mind that, with my changes of address, things may have gotten lost; so drop me another line! (Just thought I'd mention that I won't be moving this year!) Enjoy the summer and I hope to hear from you all real soon.

By the number of letters received for this issue of the class newsletter, I would venture to guess that the Class of 1982 has discovered the arrival of spring. There is nothing better than time spent away from the professional world (and wool suits) to enjoy warm weather.

Of course, classmates like Christian and Evelyn Stanten Andree enjoy a warm climate almost year around at their residence in Italy. Evelyn writes that she now, by necessity, speaks fluent Italian, and plans to try it out on alumni when she and Christian return to the States for Homecoming this fall. And then there is Terry Leftwich, who teaches second graders in Chesapeake and makes her home one mile from the coast of Virginia Beach. It seems Terry has also found a way to preserve that time-honored college tradition of going south for Spring Break. When her elementary school goes on spring recess, she is heading for Florida. . . . Living in Florida on a more permanent basis is Mark Brandt. Mark is a biochemistry grad student at the University of Miami and as many Floridians are prone to say, wrote that "The weather here is great!" Another grad whose livelihood will be affected by the weather is John R. Hyle, Jr., who is working on his commercial pilot's license in Richmond.

I always wondered what I would do when letters from classmates inevitably dwindled down to a handful. I found the answer to be as simple as reading the newspaper. We all know that the College of William and Mary, and the achievements of its graduates, are newsworthy, but it's great to see some of its most recent graduates receiving favorable press. Cathy Walker, for example, made the local news in January as the legislative assistant to Delegate Chuck Lacy of the Virginia General Assembly. Cathy has just recently accepted a position with the State Democratic Party of Virginia, which will keep her in Richmond full-time. The Richmond newspaper recently did a great article on William and Mary gymnast Scott Gauthier, who is now the gymnastics coach at James Madison University. Under Scott's direction, the JMU team is improving both on the mats and in the classroom.

From the Army and Air Force Hometown News comes word that Airman First Class Martha Dickens graduated from the USAF Financial Management Specialist course, and will now be stationed at McChord AFB in Washington state. For those who missed the article about Brett Leake in the Richmond paper, and the reprint in several others, the April issue of the Alumni Gazette is required reading. The article profiles Brett, sporting a new moustache, and his new career as a comedian. Brett has been successfully taking his comedy routine to clubs throughout the Richmond and Virginia Beach area, and will soon head for the comedy clubs in Washington, D.C. And from there to New York and Los Vegas?

Making the alumni news publications are Samuel D. Barham, IV, Frank C. Robert, Jr., Bev Carson, and Winston Faircloth, all of whom spoke at Career Exploration Day last February. Sam is in banking with Wachovia, Frank is teaching, coaching soccer and has almost completed his Master's degree, Bev is a sales representative for Clairor products in Charlottesville, Dale is a marketing representative with XEROX in Lynchburg, and Winston Faircloth is a campaign portfolio manager for Metro United Way in Louisville, Kentucky. Rob Brinkley also made alumni news as a director for the newest alumni chapter in none other than Williamsburg, Virginia! The annual Life After Dog Street program was held recently, and Gabrielle Brooks served as one of the panelists who spoke to seniors about post-grad life.

Through college publications I learned that Brian Gordineer had been awarded a $1000 prize for an essay he wrote while an undergrad. The award was made by the Huguenot Society. Brian is currently an MBA student at William and Mary. M. Diane Mallardi is an associate editor with Worldwide Information Resources, a news wire service and consulting firm in D.C. Roz Pardee is employed by Thalhimers in Richmond, although she frequently travels throughout the region. Bea Trapasso serves as an aide to Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro on Capitol Hill. Sheila Flynn will be leaving for Washington, D.C., soon to begin work with the State Department as a Foreign Service Officer.

Marcia Seymour and Jack Horst '81, are engaged, and once married will be moving from Washington, D.C., to New York. Lisa Zanetti, a student at Georgetown's School of Foreign Service, lives in D.C., but is said to be making a permanent groove in the road between there and Norfolk, where Rob Kravitz is a grad student in Environmental Chemistry. Tom Wheatley is contemplating getting a Master's degree, and for the time being is working in a paint store in Vienna. William Naphy is attending a Baptist seminary school in Ft. Worth, Texas.

JAMES HARRIS NAMED HASEROT PROFESSOR

Dr. James F. Harris Jr. has been named the first Francis S. Haserot Professor of Philosophy at William and Mary, filling a newly-endowed position in the department of philosophy made possible by a gift of $200,000 last year by Dr. Francis S. Haserot, a former member of the department. A graduate of the University of Georgia and Vanderbilt University where he received his Ph.D. Harris served twice as a visiting scholar at Oxford University and has received six research grants from William and Mary and two grants from other organizations. Dr. Haserot, who died last fall, taught in the philosophy department from 1936 to 1947. His gift was made in honor of former William and Mary presidents John Stewart Bryan and Alvin Duke Chandler '22.

Paul Solitario and his wife, Laura Wortman Solitario, are living in Atlanta, Georgia, where Paul is in banking and Laura has just taken a new job which allows her to travel nationwide. On a recent trip to Virginia Beach and Richmond, Laura and I met and traded news about the Class of '82. Tracy Deering lives in the same apartment complex as Paul and Laura, and all seem to be enjoying constant company from William and Mary grads and friends from the North. As for me, I am back in the First District working for Congressional candidate John McGlennon. My "vacation" in Washington, D.C., was a great experience, both personally and politically, and if nothing else, I learned just how many William and Mary grads live there. There were so many from the Class of '82 that I was afraid to try and recall too hastily the whereabouts of everyone I spoke with, or heard from, or heard about. So, as promised, a Class of '82 Washington D.C. summary will be included in a future issue of this newsletter. From my office here in the First Congressional District of Virginia, to each and every one of you throughout the United States and abroad, I wish you continued success, continued prosperity, and I WISH YOU WOULD WRITE!

LAYCOCK HIRES TWO NEW COACHES

Head football coach Jimmy Laycock '70 has announced the hiring of Mike Kolakowski and Sean Kelly to fill the vacancies on his staff. Kolakowski will take over the defensive secondary, replacing Dan Smith who was named defensive coordinator at the Citadel.

Kolakowski was a part-time coach at William and Mary in 1981-82, and for the last two years has been at Morehead State. Kelly takes over the offensive backfield from Tom Brattan who has shifted to the offensive line, replacing Bill Stewart who has been hired at Navy.

JOHN JAQUELIN AMBLER, '25, of Richmond, Virginia, died February 12, 1984. He graduated from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1928 and served as an Episcopal minister for several churches in Virginia and Maryland until his retirement in 1969. For sixteen years, he was chaplain of St. Agnes Episcopal School for Girls. He was a Boy Scout leader and an active member of the Masons and various historical and genealogical societies.

THOMAS PUTNAM CHAPMAN, JR., '25 A. B., died March 17, 1984, in Fairfax, Virginia. Following his graduation, he was principal of Fairfax Elementary School for several years and deputy revenue commissioner of Fairfax County for one year. In 1936, he joined the Circuit of Fairfax County as chief deputy clerk. He took over as clerk of the Court in 1945, retiring from that position in 1967. Active in numerous professional and civic organizations, he had also been the county's first general registrar. Survivors include a daughter.

FRANCES BEALE SAUNDERS (CHISOLM), '29 A.B., died September 30, 1983, at her home in Newport News, Virginia. At William and Mary, she was president of Chi Omega and a delegate to the sorority's national convention in 1928; vice president of the German Club; editor of the Women's Student Government Handbook; and a member of the Panhellenic Council, the Flat Hat staff, and the Y. W. C. A. A graduate of Columbia University as well as William and Mary, she taught briefly at South Norfolk High School. From 1932 until 1940 she was an instructor of freshman English at William and Mary's Norfolk Division (now Old Dominion University). Survivors include a daughter; a son; two sisters, Jane S. McMurrin, '39, and Elizabeth S. Greenman, '36; and two brothers, one of whom is Robert M. Saunders, '37.

MURRELL HARRISON TEMPLE, '30 B.S., of Richmond, Virginia, died November 4, 1983. A member of Sigma Phi Epsilon and Phi Beta Kappa at William and Mary, he was a financial assistant for Reynolds Metals Company and its subsidiaries. Survivors include his wife Marguerite; a son; and two daughters, one of whom is R. Susan Temple Davis, '66.

FRANKLIN SAMUEL WILCOX, JR., '30 A.B., of Gulf Stream, Florida, died February 27, 1984. At William and Mary, he was a member of Theta Delta Chi, Omicron Delta Kappa, and the F. H. C. Society, and president of the Men's Student Body. He was a Navy veteran of World War II, attaining the rank of Lieutenant Commander, and a retired insurance broker for the Equitable Life Assurance Society. A noted amateur golfer, he twice qualified for the U.S. Amateur golf tournament. Survivors include his wife Mary Elizabeth; a son, Franklin Samuel Wilcox, III, '66; a daughter, and a sister.

L. EWELL CRAWFORD (RAMSEY), '33 A.B., of Gretna, Virginia, died March 5, 1984. A transfer from North Carolina College for Women, she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, the Literary Society and the Y. W. C. A. at William and Mary. She was for many years a librarian for the Gretna public schools, retiring in 1977. Active in the Red Cross and in various community and historical organizations, she received the Alumni Medallion in 1946. She is survived by one son.

IRVIN JOSEPH UPSON, '34 B. S., of Virginia Beach, Virginia, died March 24, 1984. A member of the track and football teams at William and Mary, he was a teacher and coach at several high schools in Tidewater before his retirement. At the time of his death, he was a salesman with George Tait and Sons Company. Survivors include his wife Elizabeth; two daughters, Mary Elizabeth U. O'Brien, '63, and Margaret Jane U. Berdahl, '70; and a son.

DOROTHY JEAN LANDON (HERBST), '44, died after a long illness on December 24, 1983, at her home in Essex, Connecticut. A member of Pi Beta Phi at William and Mary, she served during World War II with the National Aeronautics Administration (which later became N. A. S. A.) in Hampton, Virginia. Following the War, she worked for several years for the Yale University Admissions Office. She moved to Essex in 1954, and for 17 years was an assistant town clerk, retiring in 1979. Following her retirement, she earned her degree from Goddard College in Vermont and then worked briefly at the Women's Center in New London, Connecticut before being taken ill. Active in many community and feminist organizations, she was a former board member and president of Gateway Counseling Services, a nonprofit family mental health and family help agency. Survivors include her husband Robert, a son, and a sister.

MILDRED CARY CLOSE, '45, died March 3, 1984, in Washington, D.C. She was a retired employee of the Central Intelligence Agency, with 30 years of service. Survivors include her mother, Mildred Cary Lane Close, '24; two sisters; and five brothers.

LAWRENCE PHILIP VERBIT, '59 B.S., died of an apparent heart attack on December 31, 1983, at his home in Binghamton, New York. At William and Mary, he was a member of Sigma Nu, the baseball and cross-country track teams, the Chemistry Club, German Club, and Balfour-Hillel Club. After earning his Ph.D. in organic chemistry from Bryn Mawr College in 1963, he joined the faculty of the State University of New York at Binghamton. A chemistry professor there for 19 years, he was, at the time of his death, teaching the only course in the United States on science reporting in the mass media. A specialist in the area of chemical contamination, he was a consultant to the City of Binghamton and the towns of Kirkwood and Colesville on the effects of toxic contamination and other environmental concerns. He was well-known for his willingness to make complicated scientific language and issues understandable to the public, and he was frequently asked for advice and assistance by local reporters, government officials, and citizens. A member of numerous professional organizations, he was the author of many articles and publications, his most recent book being Organic Structural Analysis. Survivors include his wife Lucille, a son, a daughter, a stepson, and a stepdaughter.
