It happened in the fall, and in the winter, and when no one was aware. It spread across campus with the passage of September, October rains, and balmy December afternoons --- surviving the heights of a heart-stopping football season, and the depths of an astounding drop-out rate.

It materialized into a myriad of forms --- including big concerts, cheap flicks, and a new curriculum. It invaded all areas of life in the form of one Thomas Ashley Grans from Harvard.... Quite literally, it blossomed and grew in the Spring.

It was an awakening; a consciousness; a baptism. An awakening that meant a new way of looking at the world, and at William and Mary, in particular. A consciousness of the importance of individual contributions. A baptism into a time of genuinely lowering our voices. This was a year when William and Mary grew up.

1971-72: a year that was manifested in a frame of mind. A year that meant walks to Lake Matoka, long bike rides, and many hours spent alone. Not a year free from conflict and worry, but one of self-measurement and a larger perspective. A year of peace and quiet.

Some called it a party, while others hailed it as a greening. Specifically, the new attitude was a product of strong campus leaders who were able to generate great loyalties. It was the result of a new emphasis on people-to-people relationships.... A new attitude that revealed a willingness to recognize a goal, work towards it, and stick out the rough spots. Quietly.

1971-72: a year that meant long nights, little limelight, and few medals. A year when people finally listened to each other, realizing that compromise wasn't synonymous with cop-out. A year of being quietly committed and intimately involved.

1971-72: a year when people came first, when empty rhetoric just didn't make it, and when the good times were more important than the bad.

"Those were the days, my friends, we thought this'd never end; we'd sing and dance forever and a day..."

1971-72: a year when football was big, and when students supported it. Not exactly in the rah-rah, wear-a-three-piece-suit fashion, but casually. There weren't too many who felt that it was

Umkip to show up in Cary Field and root the Tribe on to victors. Or to make flash cards for an impromptu half-time show. Ultimately, the promise of a football power was broken, but fans loyally backed their team right through the last seconds of the Richmond game.

1971-72: a year when those at William and Mary took stock, and realized that change comes first from within. A year when people took the time to do things together --- just because they wanted to.

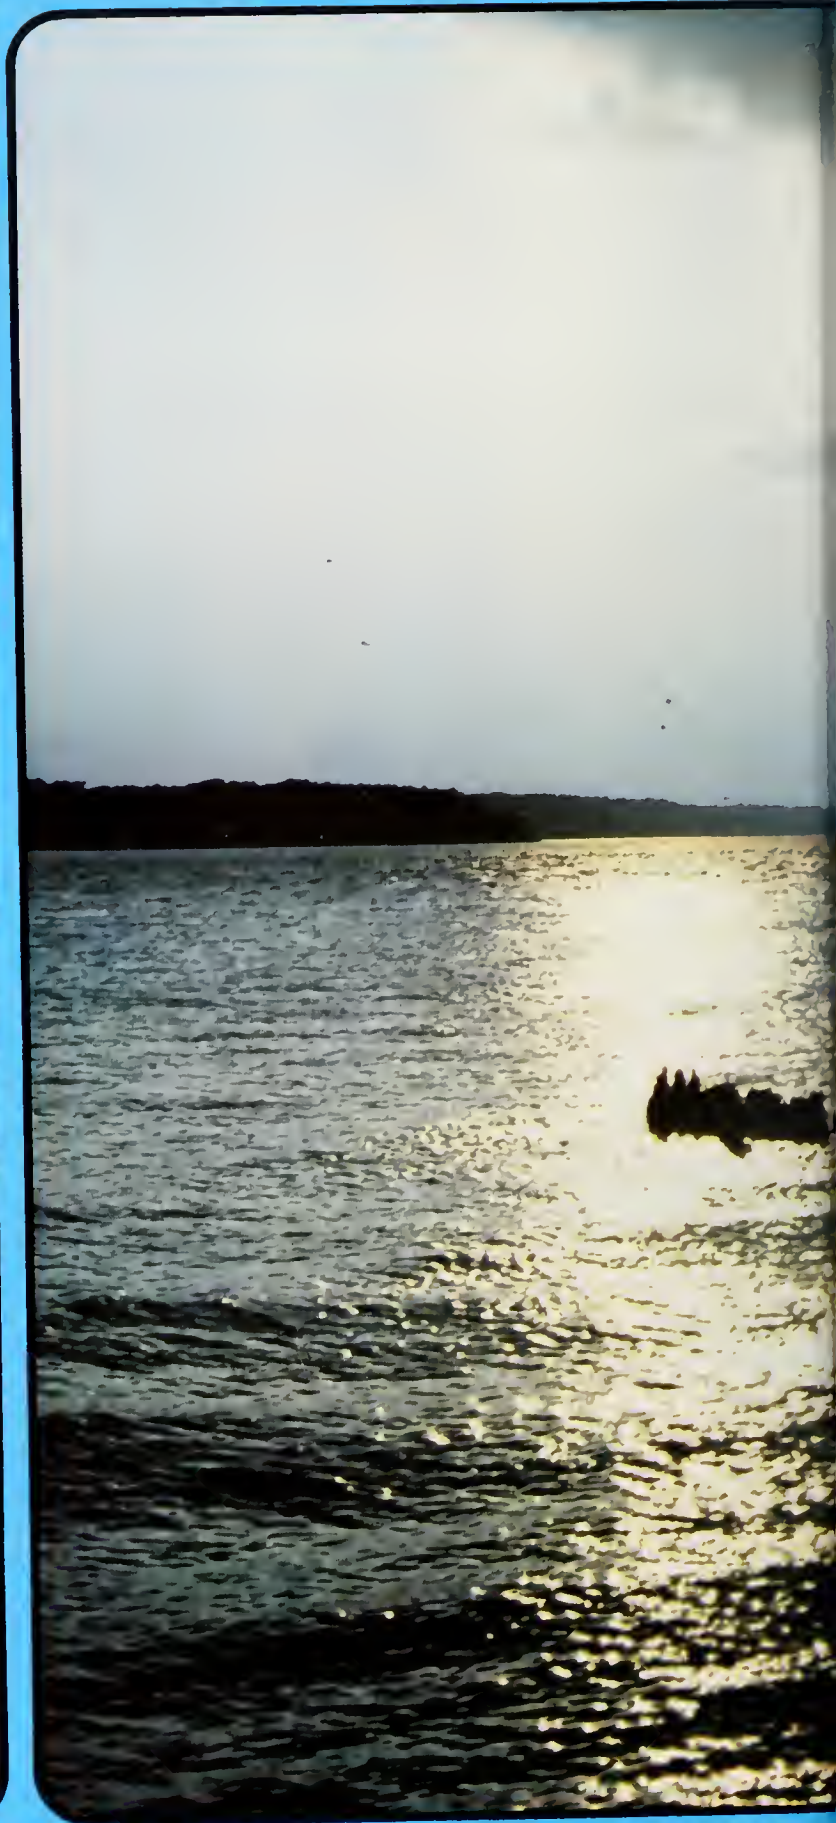

1971-72: the year that brought Sly and the Family Stone, Baby James Taylor, Fleetwood Mac, the Harlem Globetrotters, and Rod Stewart to the 'Burg. When big-time concerts and big-time prices became realities at Her Majesties Normal College. And the year when William and Mary Hall started down the long road towards paying for itself.

1971-72: Dates that meant a 279-year heritage versus the knowledge that this year's first graders will graduate from high school in 1984.... A year that meant moving away from the adolescent growing pains involved in the transition of moving from a college to a young university. And perhaps back to a College again. A maturation process that touched such philosophical problems as re-defining the College's role in the state educational system, and hit home on very real problems like drugs, sex, and abortion. A year that meant reconciling a decade of construction with the individualism of the Seventies.

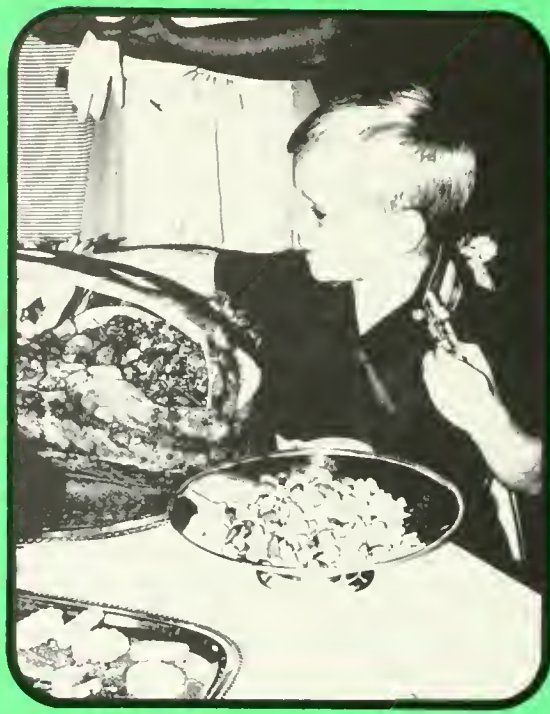

1971-72: A year when William and Mary learned much --- primarily, perhaps, about herself. A year when past anxieties and frustrations were cast off, and a tentative sort of resolution and direction established. A year when ideas and enthusiasm abounded, matched only by personal leadership and implementation.

1971-72: a year when the old pieces fit together in a new pattern.

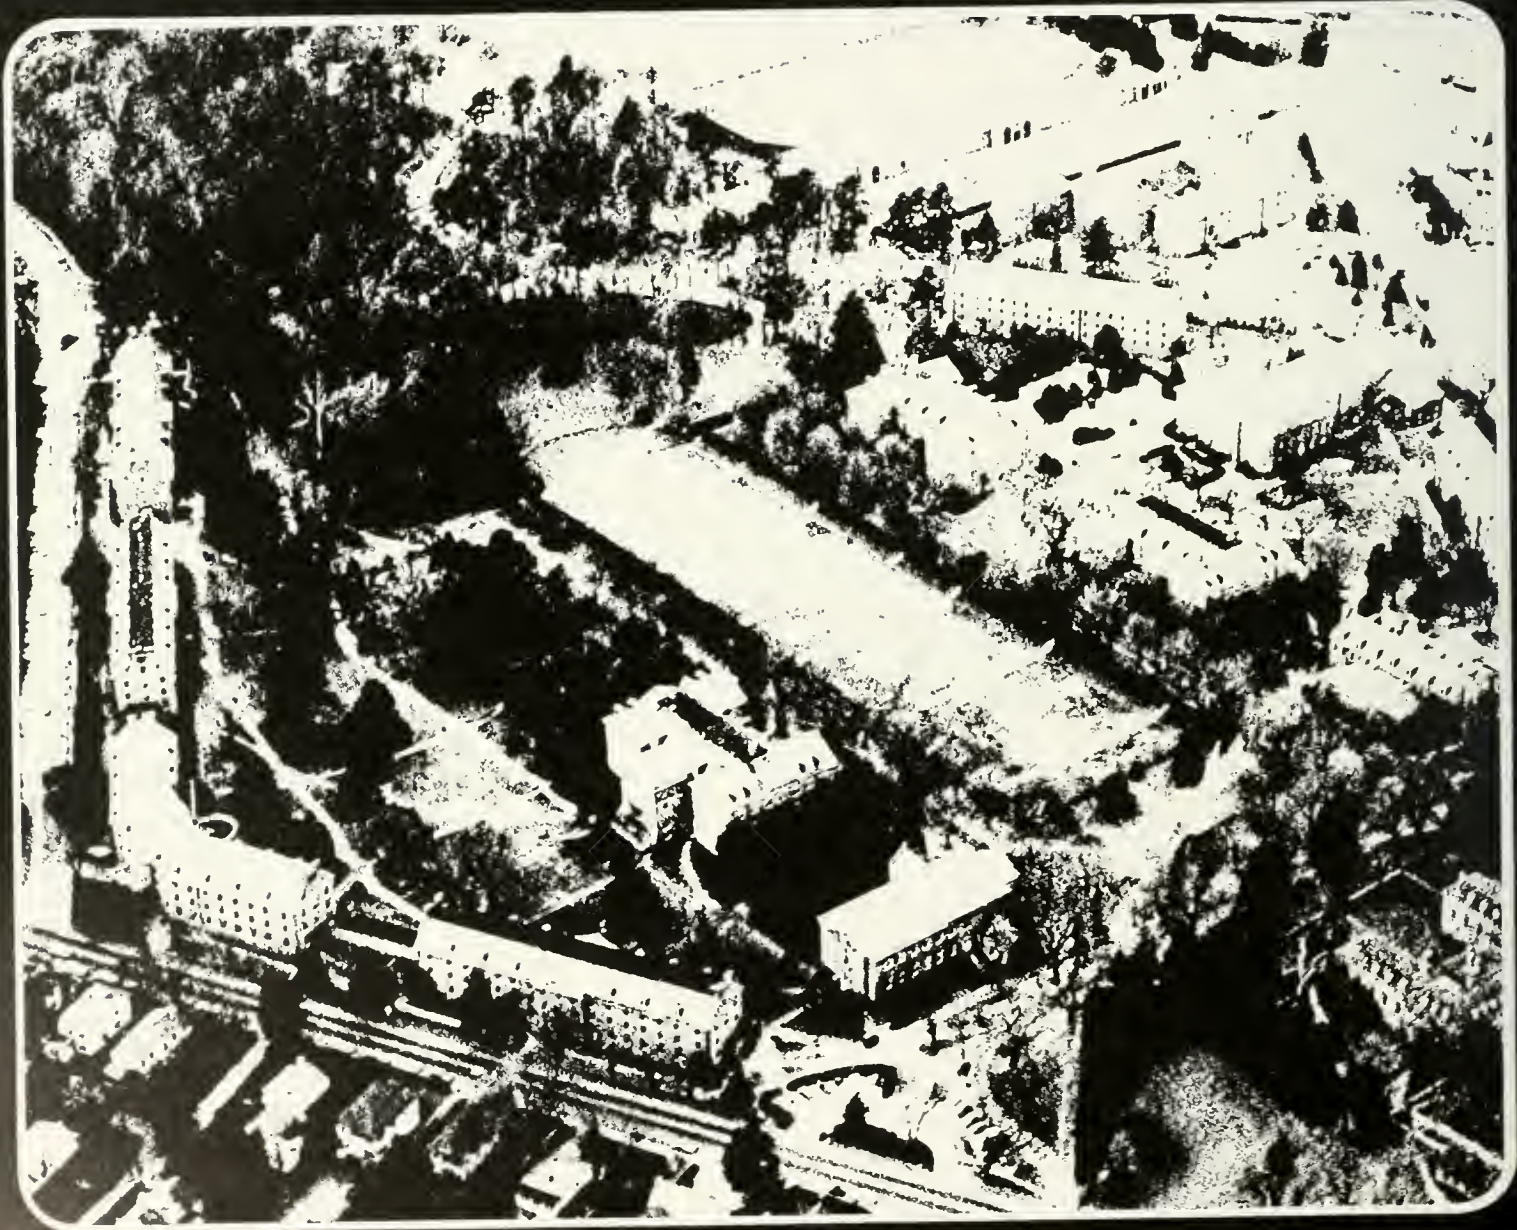

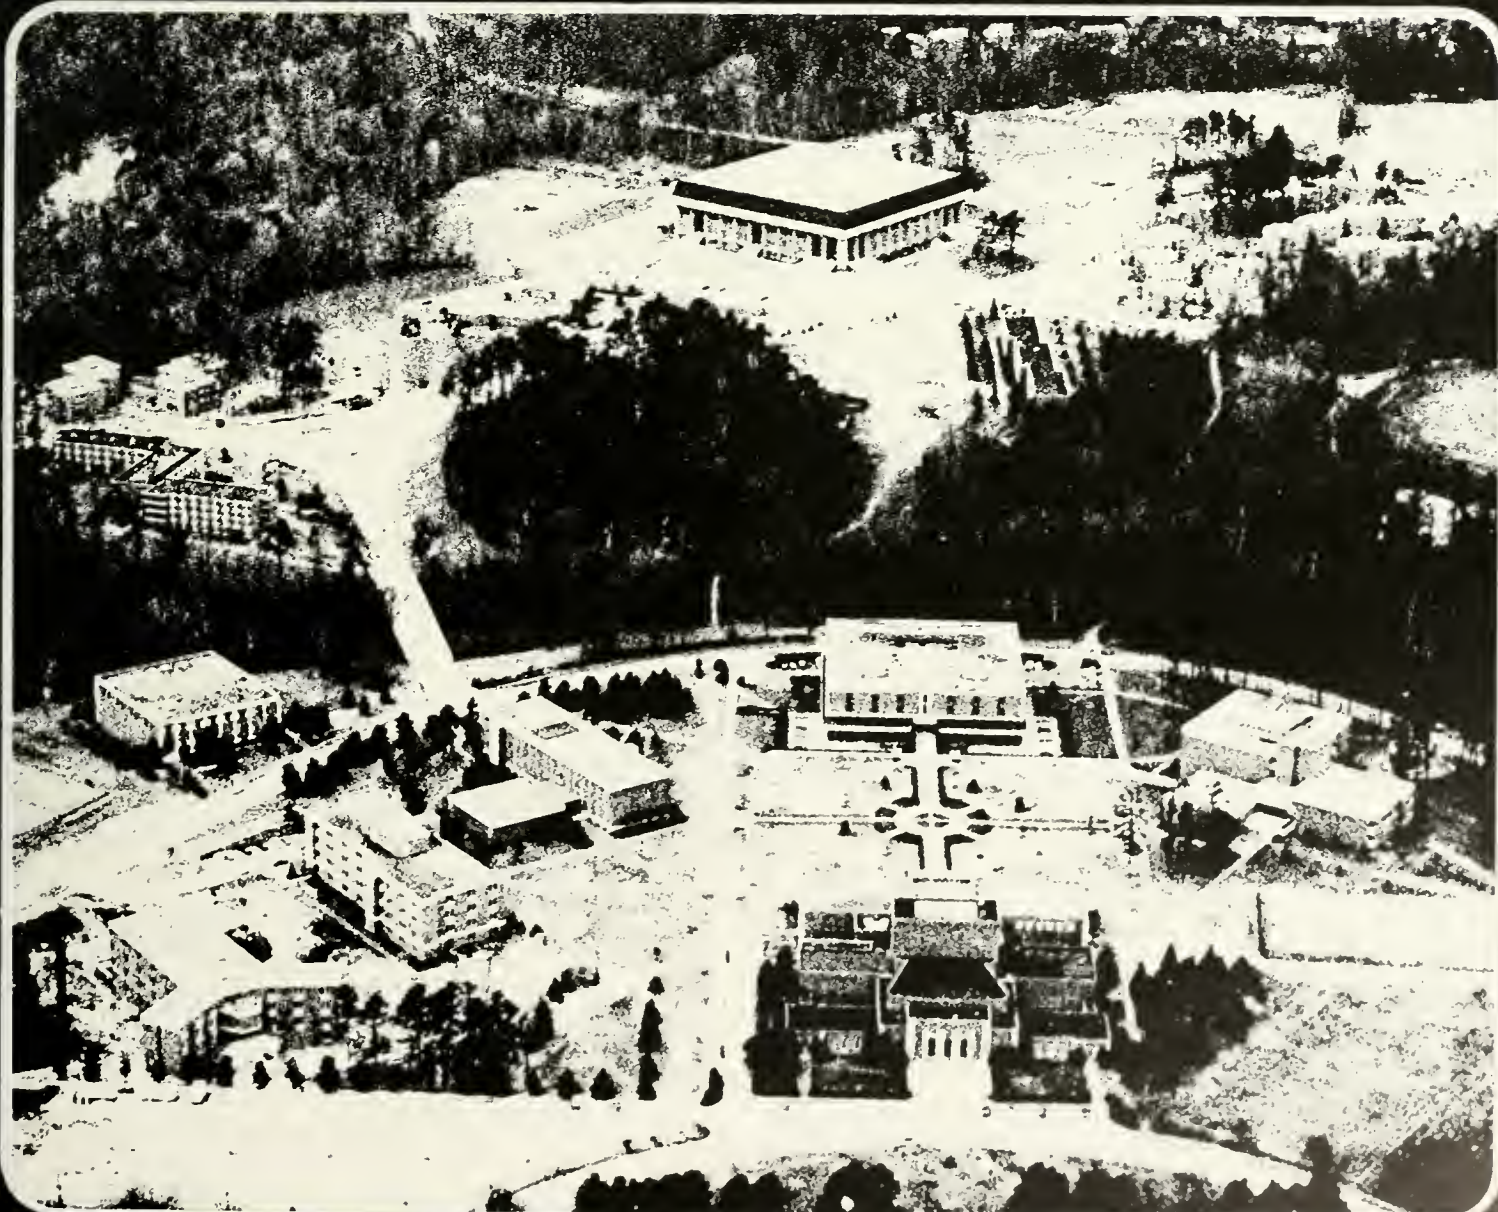

The pitter-patter of little feet and the boom of Wren Cannon echoed all the way to Richmond. As Andrew and Eliza Graves turned what had been the sight of one million Instamatic snapshots into a real live playground. Serving as miniature ambassadors for one Thomas Ashley Graves, Jr. -- 24th President of William and Mary.

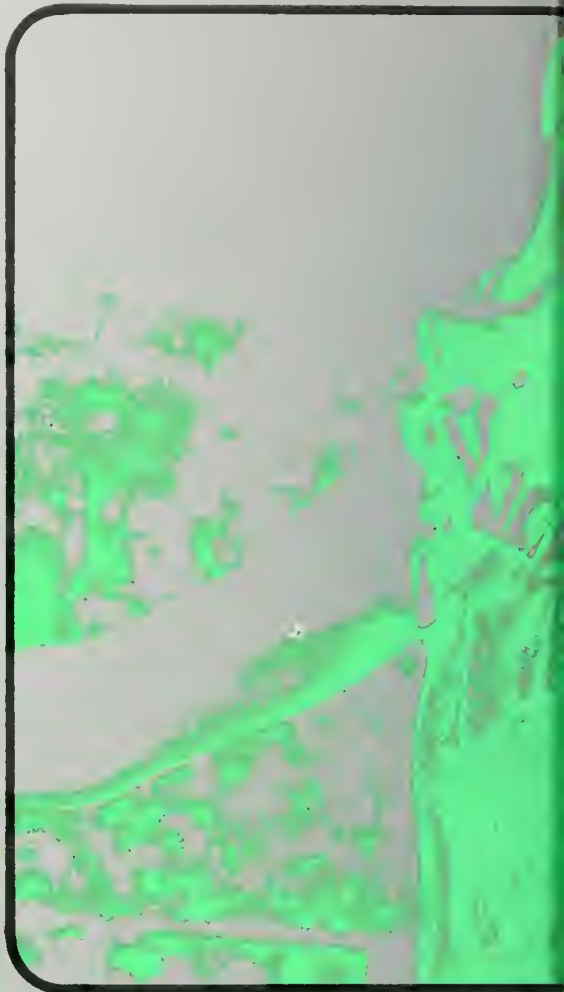

A President who didn't fit the image of one who headed the nation's second-oldest institution. A man who began the year saying, "He handed me an ice cream stick that saved my life". A man who brought his wife to O.D. for dinner, and appeared in the Frat Complex on Saturday night. A President who made the time to listen. A man who captured a school's imagination in a year that might well be titled "The Yearning of Tom Graves."

caused problems. Denying Charles Evers permission to speak at Graduation precipitated bitter controversy. President Paschall's choice of local Congressman Tom Downing marred his last Graduation ceremony. 1971. A dual graduation of sorts. Evers spoke at Blow Gym in the morning. "Official" ceremonies were held that afternoon in Wren Courtyard. Students in attendance reflected their own polarization over the issue. Some were gowned, some were not. Many hissed. Still more applauded. Half were somber. Half laughed. The only thing in common after that four-year trek was a diploma.

for Dupont residents. Six-thirty a.m., Monday through Friday meant compressors, sledgehammers, drilling, and bolting next door as the ex-sorority complex went up. Pipes, scaffolding, dust and dump trucks all covered the new campus. As the last phase of a four million dollar building program neared completion. Temporary inconvenience, permanent improvement. Behind Jones, the new social sciences building rose out of the mud. Designed to ease the cramped spaces in James Blair. Symbolic of shifting the educational emphasis.

Endless comments about pollution. As students cycled, recycled, collected trash, and spit out an equivalent amount of verbal garbage. Campus trash containers were rarely filled because conservation only ranked as a leisure time activity. Nothing could have been more polluted than Crim Dell or Lake Matoaka. Or Cary Field during and after a football game.

Every new sign on campus proclaimed that vehicles would not inhabit a particular space. Students and professors alike were slapped with yellow tickets, and a Motor Vehicle Board was established to handle numerous appeals. Erasing chalk marks from tires or moving cars every hour to keep the City policemen away was the price students had to pay to forego the Green Machines.

Easy riders. Potholes covered Campus road beside the fraternity complex. And Phi Beta parking lot. Causing miniature lakes each time it rained—making green busses later than ever. The transportation solution was: cycles. Rack after rack of two-wheelers between girls dorms. Required lights, horns, and Williamsburg tags. City policeman would chase female riders to check on their "registrations."

Every model imaginable. From 10 speed English racers to little brothers cast-offs to BSA dynamos. A cheap way to get places. A neat way to spend an afternoon.

CW:

Colonial Williamsburg. Two words symbolizing sixteen hundred and ninety-three different things to William and Mary students. Great shopping on DOG Street. Good cycling in the spring. High prices and grey buses. A work-study program with the King's Arms Tavern provided jobs for men. Hostess positions were available for some women students in the exhibition buildings. The Colonial Capitol: where in the 1970's one could find a black, a farmer, and a tourist from the Bronx sitting side by side on Patrick Henry's bench. As America's noble yarn was spun. Going to school in Colonial Williamsburg meant not looking twice when guys wore silk stockings and buckle shoes to the laundromat.

Tourists: a fact of life involved in being a William and Mary student. Armed with Brownie and Instamatic cameras, they nosed, posed, and asked endless questions. About real, live college students as well as history. Standing campus jokes were titled "How to Misdirect a Tourist in 100 Different Ways."

No one could deny that the sightseers added a heretofore unknown dimension to life in the Colonial Capitol. This was the year when Virginia was for lovers and when the 'Burg was most definitely for visitors.

Poverty was a popular word in 1972. Everyone decried it. Some did something about it. Circle K and WATS ran Day Care Centers at Chickahominy and on campus. Various organizations took families under their wings. The Flat Hat ran a series of articles on the plight of College employees. Poverty in Williamsburg seemed synonymous with one word: black. And oftentimes students were so busy reading about racial and cultural minorities that they failed to see Prince George Street, one block behind sorority court—one block from lily-whiteness.

There stood Webb's Grocery, Triangle Restaurant, and a weatherbeaten, crumbling "Negro" health center. Posing a sharp contrast to the white affluence just one street over. Blackness in Williamsburg came in many forms. Rainclouds darkened skies in the monsoon season called Fall. Blacks dressed in colonial clothes in their servant roles for Colonial Williamsburg and thousands of tourists. And William and Mary Blacks sponsored dances and speakers to keep the wobbling Martin Luther King Scholarship on its feet.

A hardnosed examination of the college's varsity athletic program. That came out of a disappointing, almost bitter football season Holtz walked out, Lester Hooker moved to a new position as Director of William and Mary Hall. Jim Root from New Hampshire and Ben Carnevale from NYU moved right in as replacements. In actuality, the shifting meant a de-emphasis of varsity sports. Football scholarships were cut back, and the William and Mary Educational Foundation was encouraged to find another name.

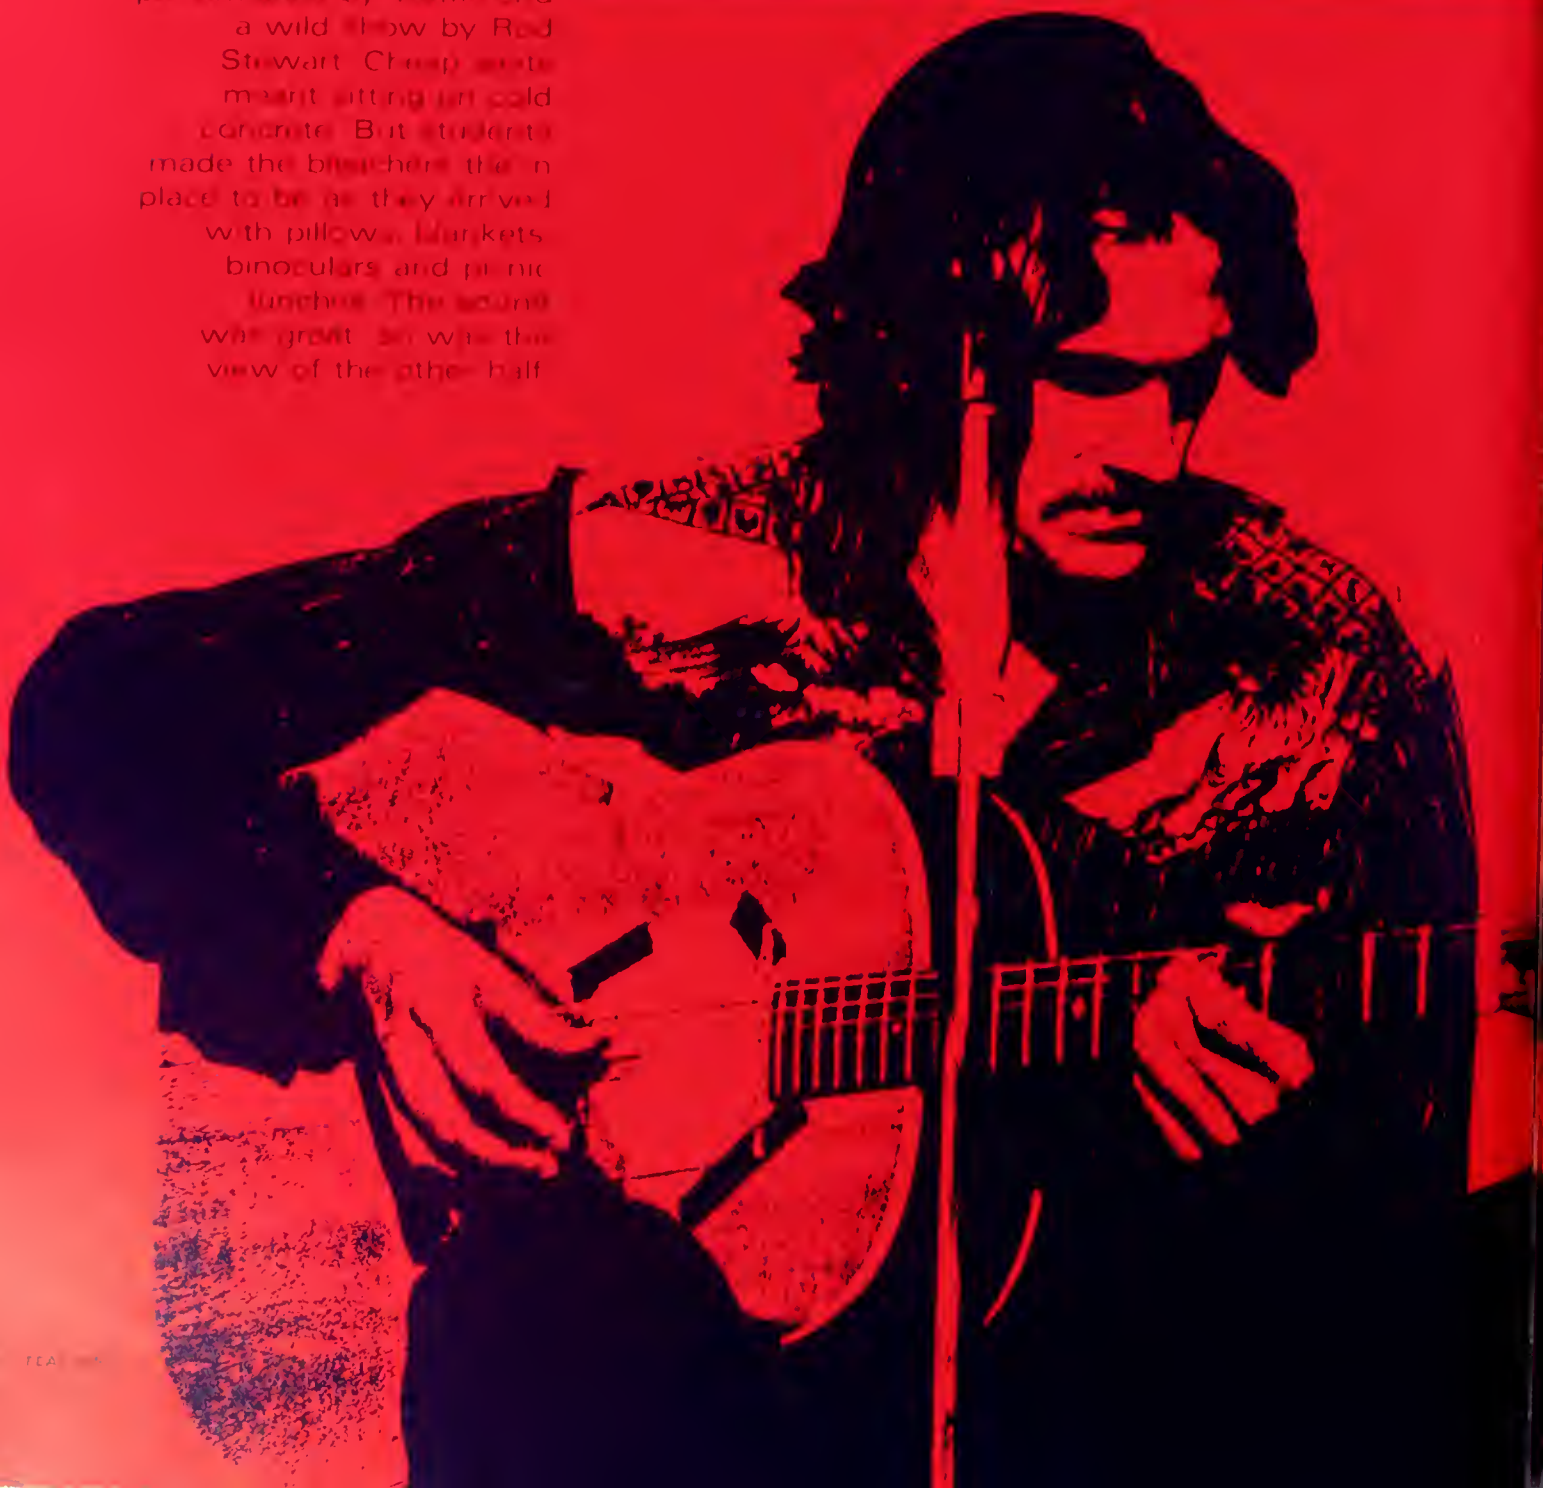

Rained out. Cancelled. A bum concert. All part of the washed-out Homecoming that hurricane Ginger bestowed on Tidewater. Weeks prior to October 23 were alive with hammering, pasting. And rampant school spirit. Also, renewal of the traditional question: Is Homecoming for the students or the alums? Which resulted in the retention of a Queen and her Court. Queen: Jackie Sivertsen. Senior princesses: Anne Iarrobino, Jean Henry. Junior princesses: Tammy Lucas, Donna Schumaker. Sophomore princesses: Donna Follini, Barb Rambo. Freshman princesses: Jan Rivero, Jody Riggins. Saturday afternoon: a whale of a win for the Tribe over VMI. Saturday night: a rocking fraternity complex. Filled with alums. Monday morning: nine rain-soaked floats on sorority porches.

The only thing sunny about Homecoming was Jackie's smile.

Reimbursement

for a no-show Homecoming Concert. Deep Purple didn't like the acoustics in the hall—alias Jock Palace. A three-hour interlude by Sweet Baby Jane's Taylor. Also a decent performance by Traffic and a wild show by Rod Stewart. Cheap seats meant sitting in cold concrete. But students made the bleachers the in place to be as they arrived with pillows, blankets, binoculars and picnic lunches. The sound was great, so was the view of the other half.

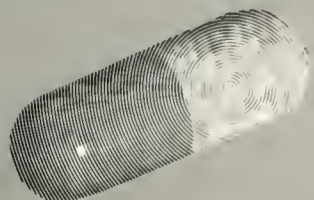

Dope.

Here. At William and Mary. Whether Richmond liked it or not. Mostly grass, but enough acid to get around. And it wasn't really much of a secret. In the whole context of a quiet year though, the uproar settled down. No major busts on campus prior to March 1. NIH Doctors Peterson, Bunney, and Brown, testified before the National Committee on Marijuana and Drug Addiction. Their research findings: no ill effects. An interesting conclusion considering that Ralph Nader was finding ill-effects in almost any other item available to the consumer. Phisohex caused brain damage. Lomotil used by the astronauts proved too highly addictive. Feminine deodorant sprays caused infections. Marijuana simply wasn't a big topic of conversation. Projection: Legalization. Meaning that the tobacco retailers in Winston-Salem can use their blue printed plans to roll the stuff. That the time-honored institution of buying a keg and drinking oneself into oblivion will pass in diffidence to the "blow your mind game." Fraternity and sorority favor catalogues will feature waterpipes, rather than mugs. That "freaks" may have begun one of the true American grass roots movements. Equivalent only to prohibition.

There was alcoholism, reliance on tranquilizers, and obesity at William and Mary. So, too, was there a drug problem. Traditionally, the community has organized help groups such as Alcoholics Anonymous and Weight Watchers to treat these persons. So, too, did Williamsburg organize a Drug Action Center. Located in a rooming house on Richmond Road. Equipped with a Hot Line for emergencies. Started by College students who cared enough to listen long into the night. DAC members considered an acid habit no worse than any other habit. Discussion groups for those who tried to kick it. No hand holding. No mothering. No narcs. No records. Just help if you wanted it. One rule: you came straight and stayed that way during the sessions. Decent community support and funding. Professional management by specialists. An operation on the conviction that "maybe just talking about it would help."

The War was a dead issue. For those with low numbers, missing brothers, and departed friends, the moral rage lived on. Expressing itself in moratorium activities, political campaigns and draft counseling, Captain America arrived just as the old tricks of "transferring" right out of sight thrived. But for Americana—Nixon's troop withdrawal had successfully defused the issue. And baby, that's where it was at.

Answer the lousy phone!

Dormitory life. À la William and Mary. Whether it was in the complex or on campus, it brought the new experience of waiting forty-five minutes for a shower and then having it overflow. Walking half a mile to do laundry. And having six adapters and extension cords per outlet. Turning the halls of Barrett and Jefferson into dining rooms at 5 PM. And the halls of Bryan Complex into one big party. Circuits blew as hotplates were plugged in, so alternate cooking schedules were devised. Theft problems in Chandler and Landrum kitchens, and the frat complex. Padlocked refrigerators and cabinets. Constantly ringing telephones. Banging radiators. Blaring intercoms.

Escaping to the library for a once-a-week study marathon. Bee-bopping down the hall to oldies but goodies.

At times, frustration.

As a suitemate's stereo plays Carly Simon's "These are the Good Old Days."

Jerking sleepily at the stubborn front door as the 8:05 Ludwell bus leaves you behind. Running to the PO once, or maybe twice a day. Then standing in that damned General Delivery line just to have the mail-lady say no. Breakfast only when you have a test. But lunch at the Delly or The Wig. Or maybe High's if you've got to study for a quiz. Dinner at 5. Crotty Brother's established dining hour. George's, too, if a table is available. If not, it's Rousso's or a half hour wait. Then attempting to study at the Libe. Fat chance. Wednesday nights: heading off to Happy Hour at the Pub. Thursday morning always comes too early. Your particular brand of the Williamsburg routine.

Academic Hassle.

In September it seemed that the malaise of 1971 was over. The sunny Tidewater weather had truly brightened spirits at Her Majesty's Royal College in Virginia. Or so one thought until October. When frost and mid-terms hit, the drop-out rate soared. One wondered if the old, "look at the guy on your left, now look at the guy on your right, only one of you will make it" prophecy had fulfilled itself. Dropping the D grade really put the academic screws on. Rumor had it that either U.S. News and World Report or Newsweek had bestowed the title of the nation's No. 1 pressure cooker on the College. No one could ever find the article. But everyone believed it just the same.

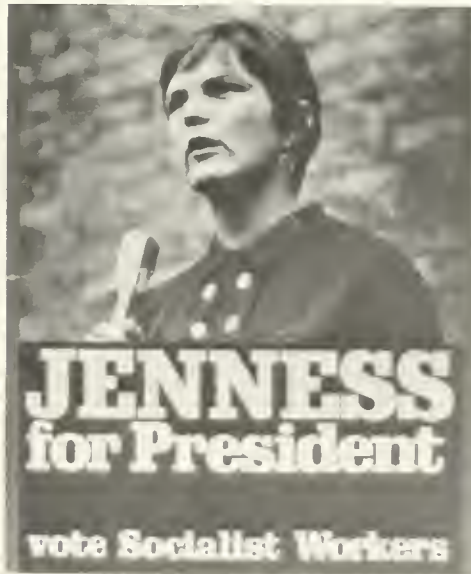

Monsoons struck Williamsburg for 7 straight days in October. And again November. And December, ad infinitum. The weather behaved like a fickle female who got warm, then froze, then changed her mind and rained. Barefeet were practical in December as well as January exam period. Umbrellas were an essential all year because sunny mornings weren't to be trusted.

Cancelled:

Shirley Chisolm and Sam Ervin. Two major political figures scheduled as campus speakers. Neither appearing because they were too busy in Washington. But Dick Gregory made it. For the second time in three years. Fred Harris came, too. HHH: Holton, Howell, and Humphrey. All on campus. In the town where American politics began. William Ruckelshaus appeared to talk about environmental protection. So did Saul Alinsky on new radicalism, and Linda Jenness for the Socialist Worker's Party. CORE's Roy Innis came to blast white complacency. All without hassel or questions of moral turpitude. Perhaps a sign of the times.

Ice birds

reigned over the pre-inauguration festivities. The Campus Center Ballroom looked as it never had before. Complete with orchestra, fresh flowers, and VIP's in formal attire. To honor the Graves and their parents.

Saturday morning, February 5, 1972. Charter Day. Dr. Graves takes his oath of office on the College's 279th anniversary. Flanked by a field of dignitaries representing 106 academic institutions. And a very considerable number of students.

September primaries meant Professor George Grayson's defeat at the hands of incumbent Russell Carneal. November elections in Williamsburg and James City County saw Jack Edwards, George Cole, and John Donaldson grab seats on local boards. State-wide, it meant that the same people who had returned Independent Harry Byrd to Washington in 1970 sent Populist Independent Henry Howell to Richmond in 1971. Remnants of the Byrd-machine came out of the woodwork to support Kostel, as Holton laid an egg with Shafran's defeat.

Party politics was mortally wounded in the Old Dominion.

You've come a long way, baby.

For William and Mary, 1971-72 meant, perhaps, the last gasp of the old guard. Only the seniors had memories of "the way things used to be."

When girls wore dresses, came in at curfew, and memorized the W&M Woman page by page. When freshman Ducs sang, and danced, and spouted priorities to upper-class hazers. When cars were outlawed, girls rolled their long hair nightly, and Spring Finals was the biggest social event of the year.

All to the sounds of 39-21-46 and Marvin Gaye. Instead, the ancient College went the way of all things.

Anti-heroes like Captain America cycled onto the scene.

Navy bells, flannel shirts, and trucking boots replaced V-necks and loafers for the rugged look. Beaded macramé belts supported low-slung tie-dyed pants, as hand-crocheted shrink vests topped the outfit off. Shags were sported by male and female alike—another symbol of the great sexual revolution.

Grass and hash were smoked to the heavy rock of YES or Jethro Tull, and bags of munchies devoured as Melanie sang about her brand new key.

It was the social scene of the seventies. Peculiar, and fad-ridden to be sure. Relative to time and place, however, it was no different than any age before.

Making the house a home: a year when changes finally moved beyond committees. Sophomores were released from mandatory board; under pressure, Robert English revealed that $88 of each student's General Fee went to varsity sports; and Gov. Holton appointed four new members to the Board of Visitors. Vice President Lambert announced his approval of a no-curfew system, then disclosed personal plans for retirement. As President Graves announced that Black author Ralph Ellison would speak at graduation. In themselves, small steps. But taken together, indicative of a very new attitude at William and Mary

Sports

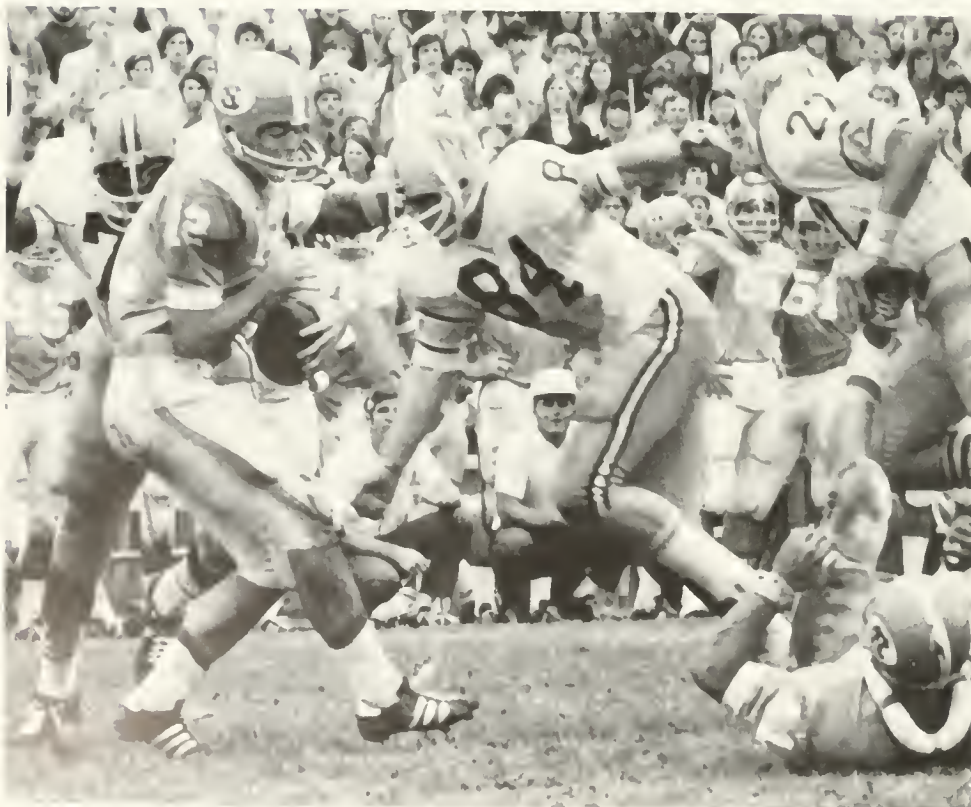

If the story of 1970 was the Impossible Dream, then

1971 was the year the dream finally ended for William and Mary's hopes of national prominence. Pre-season favorites to repeat as Southern Conference champs, the 1971 Tribe had every mark of a winner: experienced seniors, talented underclassmen, and a young dynamic head coach. By the close of the season, the Indians had lost six games to fourth-quarter slumps, their Tangerine Bowl ticket to Richmond, and their head coach to N.C. State. An identical 5-6 mark was cause for rejoicing in 1970, but for Lou Holtz and his ambitious Indians, 1971 was a nightmare.

At first the Indians could do no wrong.

They started the 1971 season with three impressive conference wins, the first a 35-28 dumping of the Citadel. Phil Mosser rushed, caught passes and returned kickoffs for 220 yards and two touchdowns. Last year's field general Steve Regan again sparkled, passing for 99 yards including a touchdown pass to flanker David Knight. A week later the invincible Indians traveled to Greenville, N.C., to register an impressive 28-10 win over East Carolina. Regan and Mosser again provided the offensive punch, but the defense, led by safety Paul Scolaro, was the key to the Tribe's success. Coach Lou Holtz praised the performances of two sophomores: running back Billy Gardner, who filled in for injured Todd Bushnell, and punter Russell Brown, who averaged 43 yards per punt in seven kicks against the Pirates. Continuing their drive for the Southern Conference crown, the Indians rolled over Davidson 40-13 in their home opener. Flanker David Knight put on a one-man show for the 8,000 fans with two successive spectacular receptions of Regan aerals. Paul Scolaro intercepted a pass and blocked a punt to lead the Indians' defensive unit, and defensive end Andre Polly scored on a 14-yard gallop after recovering the blocked punt. The kicking game excelled as Russell Brown continued his booming punts and sophomore Mike Dodds booted two field goals, one from 43 yards.

To the surprise of nearly every sportswriter in the nation, three-touchdown underdog William and Mary pulled off a 14-3 upset of Tulane in the Sugar Bowl stadium. The victory gave the Tribe a 4-0 mark to equal its best start in history. Senior Dennis Cambal filled in for injured star Phil Mosser and starred in his own right, scoring both Indian touchdowns. The Tribe defensive unit held the Green Wave of Tulane to only 119 yards total offense, and managed an exciting goal-line stand in the opening minutes of the third quarter.

The Tulane game proved to be the high-water mark of the 1971 season.

A case of fourth-quarter blues:

The Indians got a taste of what was to prove a very bitter tendency as they blew a 14-point lead in the last period and succumbed to West Virginia, 28-23. After a first-half standoff of 7-7, the Tribe dominated the third quarter behind the running of Phil Mosser and Dennis Cambal while posting a 21-7 lead. The defense, however, could not make the lead stand as the Mountaineers used a 66-yard punt return and the running of Kerry Marbury to shift the momentum and eventually scored three touchdowns in the final period. A late Indian rally died on the West Virginia 10-yard line as the clock ran out.

After dropping a sloppy 41-30 decision to Virginia Tech, the Indians returned to Cary Field to post a 12-7 Homecoming Day win over VMI in the rain. With Steve Regan injured, sophomore John Gargano led the Tribe to its fifth victory of the season. Phil Mosser ran through the mud for 92 yards to pace the Indians' attack.

It was the Tribe's final victory.

In road games against three tough non-conference foes, North Carolina, Wake Forest and Temple, the Indians scored a total of 77 points, only to have victory slip away in the final quarter of each game. Disappointed and tired, the Tribe came home to face Richmond in the championship showdown.

The price of tangerines was too high for William and Mary as Richmond stole the Southern Conference crown and Tangerine Bowl berth with a thrilling 21-19 upset. The Indians appeared in command as John Gargano led a 60-yard drive for a touchdown in the opening minutes. Richmond bounced back with two first-quarter tallies as big full-back Barry Smith blasted holes for tailback Billy Meyers. The third quarter breathed new life into the Indians as Steve Regan scored on a sneak, but a missed extra point left the Indians trailing 14-13. After Richmond missed a field goal,

John Gargano fired a 50-yard pass to David Knight to set up Phil Mosser's second touchdown of the day and give the Indians a 19-14 lead, but a missed two-point conversion ultimately proved fatal to the Tribe's title hopes. In a fourth-quarter rally reminiscent of last year's heroics by the Indians against this same team, Spider quarterback Ken Nichols led Richmond the length of the field and scored the winning touchdown himself. A final attempt by the Tribe to pull out the victory failed as Mike Dodd's 44-yard field goal attempt sailed wide. Richmond got the tangerines, N.C. State got Lou Holtz, and the Tribe got a disappointing end to what had once seemed to be a year of destiny.

Although William and Mary's Tangerine Bowl berth slipped away this year, Indian fans could take hope in the future. The reason was one of the finest freshman football squads to assemble in Williamsburg in several years, a group called by many sportswriters

the cream of the crop of 1970's scholastic athletes. Coach Ralph Pucci's charges posted a 3-2 record during the 1971 campaign.

The Baby Tribe's first contest of the season was a 35-22 conquest of U.S.M.A. Prep. Frank Prochilo scored three touchdowns for the Papooses, the third one erasing a 22-21 deficit in the fourth quarter. East Carolina proved a less cordial host in the Baby Tribe's next game, handing them a 21-7 setback. The lone Indian score was on a spectacular 76-yard pass from Bladergroen to wide receiver Bruce McCutcheon, but the William and Mary squad was unable to maintain a consistent drive all afternoon and could not score again. The Papooses rebounded with a 32-0 whitewashing of the Richmond Frosh in their first contest at Cary Field. Two quarterbacks shared the spotlight: Bill Deery staked the Baby Tribe to an early lead with a 56-yard run in the opening quarter, and Bladergroen again found McCutcheon with a touchdown aerial, this time from 49 yards away. Fullback Jim Maskas and Frank Prochilo provided a strong running game as each gained over 100 yards. The defensive unit sparkled, twice trapping the Richmond quarterback for a safety. Their next foe, Virginia, took to the air lanes to pin a 28-18 loss on the Papooses. Quarterback Bladergroen rambled 52 yards for a score and McCutcheon latched onto another scoring aerial, but it was too little and too late in the game to reverse the outcome as Cavayearling Chris Turner passed for 177 yards and a touchdown. Unlike the varsity team, the Baby Tribe ended their season on a triumphant note, setting back the Apprentice School 33-7. Jim Maskas scored twice as a halfback, then switched to quarterback to pitch a touchdown pass to tight end Rich Pawlewicz. Top rushing honors for the day went to Jim Krebs with 143 yards.

Something new on the William and Mary sports scene:
an English import called rugby.

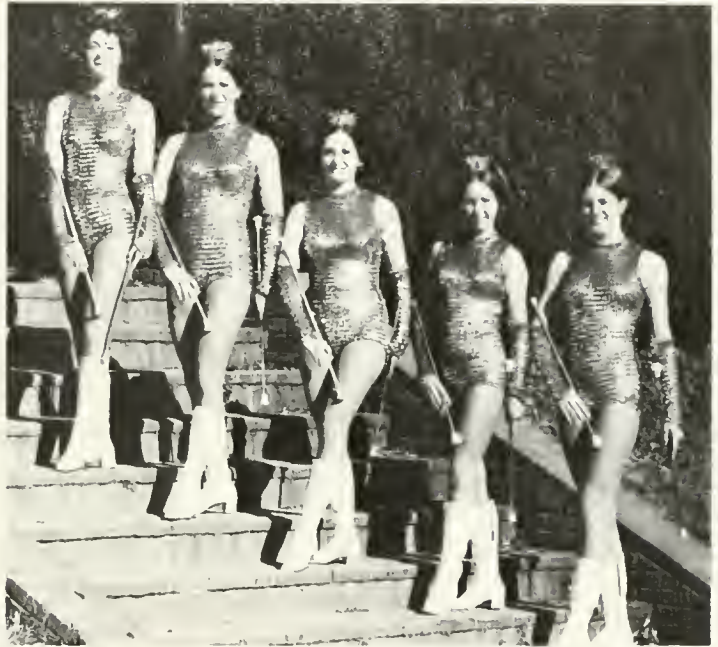

Jocks, ex-jocks, and prospective jocks met on Phi Beta field every afternoon to learn the manly sport of rugby. Lots of new terms, new rules, new ways to break bones and bruise muscles. Scrums and throw-ins, kick-offs and wins, all taught by a couple of U. Va. grads.

Old hands at the sport grimaced at the confusion that reigned at Indian rugby matches, while newcomers to the sport grimaced at the pain and found out why American football players wear protective pads and helmets.

No blocking for the ball carrier is allowed in rugby, and the defense is allowed to use anything short of ballistic missiles to bring him down. No wonder the guy with the ball is always passing it to somebody else.

Contradictions

marked the season. On one hand, a high level of skill and individual drive. On the other, an inability to pull it all together. Captain Paige Reid's season was a series of ups and downs. Generally, a versatile attack. With a scoring defense. Great ball control and superior stickwork. But it couldn't match Longwood's stamina. Or Roanoke's persistence. An average First Team record: 3-3-1. Team play finally shaped up in the Tidewater Tournament. Individual talent abounded. Ten players selected for Southeast. Second Team wins were commonplace. Only one loss to East Carolina. Captain Nancy Buhrer's team kept the Varsity hustling. Backed up by Nancy Tienken's spirited Third Team. A reserve squad firmly established in College hockey tradition.

Something new and different. Coach Ann Lambert introduced varsity Volleyball to William and Mary. Despite its infancy, a pretty successful team emerged. Power volleyball. Which meant new techniques. Floating serves and knee pads for digs. A 3-1 record at the Sports Tournament. Only home match was a win over Madison. But inexperience took its toll. Madison rallied and won the first round at State. A psych session. And then a wipe-up in the Consolation finals. Third in State went to the newcomers.

How do you lose a race by running too far?

Steve Snyder knows how. His first-place finish and new course record at VPI were both disallowed when it was discovered that he missed a turn on the course and ran 80 yards farther than everybody else. That technicality gave the host Gobblers a one-point win over the Indians and proved to be the only blemish on the Harriers record in 1971 as they once again dominated the southeastern cross country scene. The single defeat was twice avenged as the Indians finished first in the NCAA District 3 meet ahead of North Carolina and VPI, and a week later captured eight of the first ten places in the Virginia State Meet to relegate the Gobblers to second place in the state. As they had several times during the season, Ron Martin and Steve Snyder led the Indians across the finish line in both meets, and received strong backup performances from Bill Louv, Jay Gsell, and Tim Cook. Martin and Louv finished strong two weeks later as the Indians captured fifth place in the IC4A Meet in New York, and then helped the Tribe establish themselves as one of the top teams in the nation with their sixteenth place finish in the NCAA Championships in Knoxville.

No other sport is like it.

You don't practice cross country, you experience it. It's not like shooting baskets or running through football drills. Alone with the forest, you become part of it, swishing softly through branches that reach out to touch you. Squirrels glance up, not really believing that you've come without a gun or trap, that you wish only to live in peace with them. Leaves and branches break the sunlight into countless colors that have no names and that dance across your body as you glide down the hills and around the huge oaks, splashing through the quiet streams that feed the forest. It's a spiritual experience of man's oneness with nature, an experience that only those who daily run for miles through the forest and across the fields can appreciate. The competition involved in running cross country is not really the point of the whole thing—the point is that you love it.

Few coaches are happy with a losing season, but soccer coach Al Albert could hardly be too upset with his team's 6-7 mark. Of the Tribe's seven losses, five were by one goal and two of those were in overtime; the only embarrassments were two losses to tough ACC foes North Carolina and Virginia. Furthermore, the 26-man roster included only two seniors and four juniors, so virtually the entire team returns for next season. Coach Albert stressed the role of the team's four juniors as pivotal to success in 1972. Boro Djordjevic may move from fullback to goalie, and halfbacks John Sterrett and Mike Berbert will be joined at midfield by sophomore Gary Duggan, who missed the entire season due to a leg injury.

After an opening loss to North Carolina, the Indians battled Eastern Menonite to a scoreless tie in regulation time, only to lose in overtime 1-0. Rebounding for three straight wins, the Tribe broke the .500 mark for the only time during the season. Sophomore Mike Yapp scored twice against Hampden-Sydney, and goalie Chris Gilmore stopped a penalty kick.

Scoring ace Don McCarthy

scored the lone goal in the Tribe's 1-0 conquest of VPI. After dropping their next four games, the Indians shut out VMI 5-0 and later that week notched a tough 4-3 win over East Carolina to propel them into the Southern Conference title game against Davidson. The Wildcats prevailed in a hard-fought contest, 1-0.

Maybe the Indians should have stayed at home all season.

Of the eleven contests played in William and Mary Hall the Tribe came out on top in seven of them, among which were several upsets. But when the Indians took to the road, they could only manage two victories out of fifteen away-games. In the first of four straight home games, the Tribe knocked off pre-season conference favorite Furman with a 110-91 decision. Jerry Fisher repeatedly went inside against taller men and finished with a game-high 25 points as all five Indian starters tallied in double figures. After a loss to Wake Forest, the Indians used a strong performance by Jeff Trammell to up their conference record to 2-0 by defeating the Citadel. In their final home game of 1971 against nationally-ranked Virginia, the Tribe keyed on Barry Parkhill and held him to one of his lowest point totals of the season, but could neither contain his teammates nor score themselves and succumbed 82-62.

Mickey Mouse and his friends entertained Coach Mitchell and his team at Disney World in Orlando, but they couldn't help the hapless Indians win any ball games. The Tribe returned to Williamsburg from their southern trip only one victory richer, that a 94-67 scalping of "The Harvard of the South", Stetson College. Three straight losses to Jacksonville, Georgia Tech, and Rice preceded the victory over Stetson in the first round of the Tangerine Bowl Classic, and the next night the Indians watched the championship slip away from them in a two-point loss to Miami of Ohio. Things got worse before they got better as the Tribe dropped two conference games in the Carolinas, losing to Davidson 81-68 and to the Citadel 68-59. After their swing through the South, Richmond seemed like home to the Tribe, and they pulled out a double overtime 73-68 win over the Spiders on the clutch free-throw shooting of George Spack. After losing at East Carolina, they came home long enough to trounce VMI, but when they hit the road to face Georgetown and VPI, it was the same old story and the Indians dropped both contests.

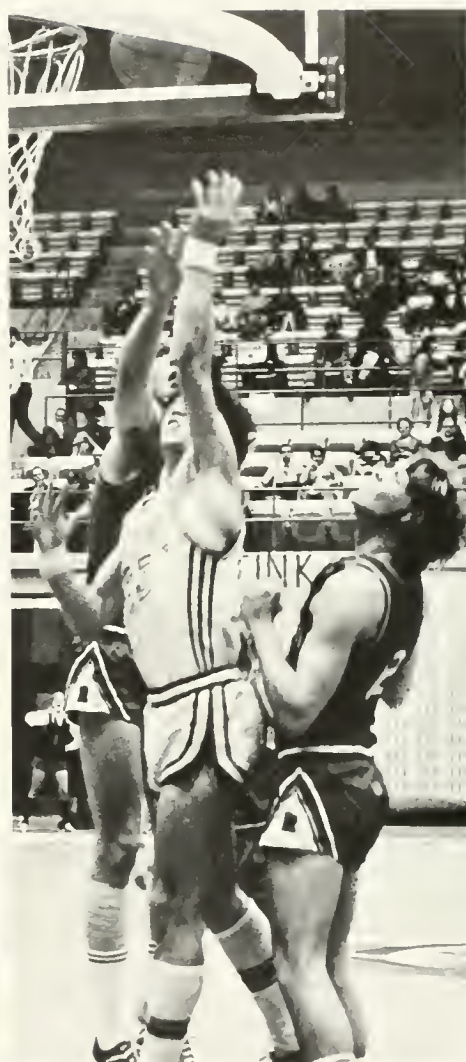

Six of the Tribe's last nine games were played in William and Mary Hall, and the Indians won four of the six, including a thrilling 73-68 upset of Pittsburgh

as George Spack sank six straight free-throws in the final two minutes of play. Sub Mark Ritter picked apart the Florida Southern zone with his accurate outside shooting and wound up with 28 points to lead the Indians to a 76-67 triumph. The thrill of these two wins was quickly erased as VPI used their superior height to pull away from the Tribe in the early moments of the game and post a 90-69 victory. Two dismal shooting percentages spelled defeat in the Indians' next two outings as they lost to Duke and West Virginia, a team that Pittsburgh had beaten earlier in the season. Closing out the season, the Tribe put together a close win over East Carolina, and following a road loss to VMI, rapped Richmond in their season finale in William and Mary Hall as Jerry Fisher scored 14 points in the first ten minutes of play. Jeff Trammell finished the season as the Tribe's outstanding player by leading the team in scoring (16 points per game) and rebounding (9 per game).

While the varsity team was struggling through a disappointing season, the freshman basketball team was busy blowing everybody off the court as they posted a 15-2 record. Only losses to V.M.I. and Richmond in the season's finale marred the Baby Tribe's record for 1971-72 as they three times broke the 100-point scoring mark. Bob Blenner, Bob Panzenback, and 6-11 Jim Christensen provided the rebounding muscle and each averaged in double figures in scoring, but the big news on the freshman team was

fiery redhead
Tom Pfingst

who swished the nets at a 25 points-per-game pace. With the NCAA's new rule that incoming freshmen are eligible for varsity basketball, many observers are predicting that next year's team will feature Pfingst, Blenner, and incoming high-school All-American Tom Wortman as starters. It promises to be quite a year for Indian fans next season.

A new season brought a new outlook.

Despite last year's lack of wins. The formula to build a team: start with veterans, add talented frosh. Simmer slowly under Pat Crowe's guidance. Practice and more practice. New defense: four man zone with a floater boxed in opposing guns. Finally height under the backboards. Rebounds cashed in for points. Videotaping for evaluation. More publicity brought increased spectators. Enthusiasm built. Teamwork clicked. The Varsity emerged. A team to be reckoned with. 5-3 record going into the State Tour-namment. Losses were heart-breakers. VCU took it in overtime. A much improved team under Captain Evelyn Shearin.

The J.V. sparkled. Team play compensated for a lack of height. A 4-1 finish; "dead-eye" Westbrook kept the points coming. Rawlings and Vermilye: captains, ringleaders and head honchos.

Coach Steve Haynie can take some comfort from his mediocre gymnastics season- -all his performers will be back next year.

Several talented freshmen & a few old hands provided the core of the squad but a lack of depth and some tough competition added up to a losing season for the Indian gymnasts. Old Dominion spoiled the Tribe's season opener by handing them a twenty-point loss, and in their next outing the W&M gymnasts finished at the bottom of a three-team contest with Frostburg State and Slippery Rock. Rebounding from these losses, the Indians scored a narrow two-point victory over Montgomery College and Virginia in Blow Gym. The Navy Plebes buried the Tribe with an incredible 123-point performance in their next match, but the season ended with a victory over the Citadel. Juniors Bob Millious, Willie Sordill, and Chris Gilmore will return to anchor next year's squad, but the key to success will lie in the trio of talented freshmen Don Fergusson, Bob Lamberson, and Martin Rich.

Unlike the Indians of the wild west, William and Mary's brand wins all their battles by running away from their foes.

On the indoor track circuit in 1972, the Indians ran away from everybody except national power Florida and proved once again that they are the finest track team in the state and possibly the whole region. After some good individual performances at the National Invitational Meet, the Indians hosted North Carolina and Richmond in their first meet ever on the Tartan track in William and Mary Hall. Freshman Charles Dobson set school records in winning the 50 yard dash and the 50-yard high hurdles, and Lewis McGehee led a sweep of the first three places in the 880-run to give the Tribe a thirty point edge over second place North Carolina. In a tri-meet with Florida and Ohio State,

Indian runners staked out a lead and then watched Florida finish strong in the field events to hand the Tribe a four-point defeat. Bill Louv, Steve Snyder and freshman Tim Cook took the first three places in the two-mile run, and Dobson once again won the low and high hurdle events. Strong performances from the relay teams allowed the Indians to dominate the VMI Winter Relays as they took the two-mile relay and the sprint medley and finished second in the four-mile and mile relays. Charles Strode won the pole vault with a 15-foot jump. Alumnus Howell Michael came home to win the two-mile run in the Indian Invitational Meet in William and Mary Hall and Dobson broke his own record in the 50-yard high hurdles, with a time of 6.0 seconds. Charles Strode vaulted 16'1" for a William and Mary Hall record.

The same team that posted such an impressive record in indoor track will face a tough schedule on the outdoor circuit. The trackmen face two meets with state foe Virginia as well as strong ACC teams Maryland and North Carolina. Coach Randolph hopes for a strong showing at the Penn and Drake Relays as well as the Martin Luther King Games in early May.

William & Mary will once again host the Colonial Relays

on April 7-8. Rounding out the outdoor season will be the IC4A Meet at the end of May and the NCAA championships in Eugene, Oregon, on June 1.

They don't love coach Randolph.

The guys who run (and win) for him speak of him as hard and excessively discipline-minded, a man who they feel sometimes cares too much for the sport and not enough for the people he coaches. But they respect him as a man, for John Randolph is a man who commands respect. His boyish face and closely-cropped hair make him appear deceptively mild-mannered, but his is a personality disciplined by his own high standards in collegiate athletics and four years as a Marine captain in Vietnam. At William and Mary in the early sixties, Randolph excelled at the middle distances and cross country, and during his senior year was the state 440 champion. After serving with the Marine Corps, he returned to his alma mater in 1968 to take over the track program and quickly started producing champions. He has been doing it for five years and his list includes Juris Luzins, Howell Michael, and Mike Fratkin. Randolph is a fine recruiter, but his success lies in getting the maximum performance from his performers. Some of them may question his methods, but they are willing to give that little extra effort that separates champions from also-rans. Whatever else may be said about John Randolph, he is not also-ran—he is a winner.

They didn't beat Irving

as often as they had in the past. "Irving" is the swimmer's name for whoever their opponent is at the time.

Under new coach Pete McIntosh, the Indian swimmers ended the season with a 4-4 mark. All four losses were to good swimming teams, the most disappointing coming at the hands of state rival Virginia Tech. No other state team could sink the Indian swimmers as they defeated VMI, Virginia, Old Dominion and Washington and Lee to account for all of their victories.

A split season with rough start.

Loss of Co-captain Kathy Love. Layoff from the holidays and exams meant hard work to regain stamina and lower times. But the team rallied under Coach Jackson and new records were set. Frosh Peggy Lawlor took two; Wolff and Gibson one each. A new relay time: Adams, Wolff, Love and Gibson brought it in. Undefeated diver Janie Harland cranked them out. A 6-1 record. First loss in three years—be-grudged to VCU, but prospects indicate a good showing at State. Eight years the champs. Away trips. The green machine makes it all the way to ECU. Mrs. Harland takes on the crew for spaghetti dinner. The traditional steak feast at Jackson's. And five off to Ohio for National's to end a busy season.

A winning coach like Dick Besnier can't get used to losing. Quite a few coaches at William and Mary would be happy to see their teams win two more contests than they lost, but an 8-6 record was a disappointment to Besnier and his young wrestlers. The season opened with the Virginia State Meet in which four Indian grapplers, Mark Belknap, John Kaila, Scott Moyer and Greg Freaney emerged with championship trophies. The Tribe traveled to Pennsylvania to wrestle three northern foes and finished last, losing to Franklin and Marshall, Harvard and Penn. Following that came their worst defeat of the season, a 34-6 drubbing by eastern power Navy, and then a 24-9 loss to Princeton. Their winning ways returned when the Indians came home to post victories over Virginia and Tennessee before Christmas break. Over the holidays, co-captain Scott Moyer won runner-ups honors at 177 pounds in the prestigious Wilkes Tournament in Pennsylvania. Returning to action after the break, the Tribe beat VMI 30-5 and the next weekend swept a four team match, suffering only three losses and two draws in thirty matches. A tough loss to East Carolina previewed the Southern Conference tournament, where the Indians dropped the first three weight classes in the finals to Pirate wrestlers.

The Tribe surrendered its conference crown to ECU

for the first time in five years. Brad Smallwood failed to repeat as conference champion, but Kaila, Freaney, Moyer and Bill Hogan all won in the finals.

A strong attack promises to be one of the few bright spots on a lacrosse team loaded with freshmen and sophomores. Co-captain Bob Wooldridge and Dave Hinder return at the attack positions, but Coach Al Albert will be hard pressed to put together the midfields that the attack needs to get the ball to them. The defense is young and suffers from the loss of Don Holmes to a knee injury, but could jell around the goal-tending of co-captain Bill Fields. The ten-game schedule features six home games at Cary Field.

Lacrosse fever.

That wouldn't wait until spring. Frozen Phi Beta field called its own. Who said you can't play? Come and be taught. Traditional tutoring system: old-timers coached the beginners. Individual attention with expert advice instilled enthusiasm long before spring fever hit. Yearbook pictures: an early frolic. A new first: pre-season party in the fieldhouse. After the season began,

Southern Holiday. A weekend of top coaching and games with U.S. players. Easter was followed by Sanford Club Weekend. A trip to Penn and intense competition. Blisters and fun. A quick but heavy season for two full teams. A building year for the first team. Plans to have William and Mary host the Virginia State Tournament. Coach Archer in her element. Helped by Captains Buhrer and Ausura.

Strong conference showing.

While finishing the regular season with a poor overall record, the rifle team went into the Southern Conference Tournament with a 2-1 conference record, and Captain Bruce Sisco hoped for a high finish in the tourney. Seniors David McKiernan, Frank Morgan, and Larry Leightley were the mainstays of the squad, while several underclassmen improved during the season and could help the Indians surprise the conference front-runners.

If Virginia had showed up for the scheduled meet, the fencing team would have broken .500 this season. As it happened, a snow storm kept the Cavaliers in Charlottesville and the Tribe had to settle for a 3-3 mark. All three losses were at the hands of nationally recognized teams, as the Indians fell to the Navy Plebes 11-16, to North Carolina 10-17 and to Duke by a single point. To even up their record the Tribe scored lopsided victories over VMI and Appalachian State and finished the season with a thrilling 15-12 victory over Maryland.

Top fencers were Jack Kuhlman with the sabre and Rob Smith, Bob Snead, and Pete Appel with the epee.

W & M's first tennis scholarship and a transfer could put William and Mary on the southeastern tennis map. Ford Robinette, recruited from Florida and W&M's first tennis scholarship recipient, will step into the number one spot, and transfer Bob Raedisch will play second. Last year's top man Harry Cross moves to third position and will team with Raedisch for the Indians' top doubles team.

Hanging out.

Of the doors and windows of Jane Bergman's car. The women's Tennis Team traveled away. To Duke and UNC. And racked up a 3-1 fall season. Only loss going to Mary Baldwin, unquestionably the top squad in the Middle Atlantic. Early October brought the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships in New York—"by far the high point of the season."

Number one this year: Captain Joanne Dukeshire, seconded and thirded by sisters Libby and Umpie Graves. Spring hopes: an undefeated season.

Women on the green.

A relatively young sport at William and Mary. But second in the state last year, losing by one stroke. Play by holes, not medal play. Practice at Newport News: time-consuming and only for the dedicated. A split season in 1972. Fall sends Susan Robbins to Mary Baldwin Invitational. Spring sees the Invitational Tournament at UNC Greensboro.

"Never a losing season in the eight years I've been coaching golf," says Joe Agee, but this year's schedule may try that record as the Tribe faces several strong southern teams among their fifteen opponents. Captain Bill Bonifant will play in the number one slot, followed by veterans Doug Bing, David Johnson, and Doug Sankey. Freshman Jim Angel showed promise in practice rounds, and strong showings by Russell Brown and Bert Wilson could provide the Tribe with the depth they will need to continue Agee's winning record.

As the baseball squad approaches its season opener, newcomers are competing for several places in the starting lineup. First-year coach George Pearce will choose from a roster which includes only six seniors and twice as many freshmen. Team captain Jeff Steckroth and Andy Tisinger will be fixtures in the outfield while the third spot could go to hard-hitting Bob Spencer or one of a number of underclassmen. Last year's standout short-stop Paul Scolaro returns, but the loss of David Cripe at third base could spell a weak left side of the Tribe. Lefty Steve Whitten and righthanders Sanford Boisseau and Steve Moore will provide a strong pitching rotation with support from Scott Kramer and some promising first-year hurlers. The catching job is wide open as last year's trio of Bill Harris, Reggie Kidd, and Hunter Robinson will compete with big Greg Freaney for a starting berth. The Indians face a 41 game schedule in 1972, including a four day trip to Florida to face Jacksonville.

Ben Carnevale

succeeds Lester Hooker as athletic director at William and Mary effective July 1. Quickly scuttling rumors that the athletic program at William and Mary would be de-emphasized, Carnevale insisted, "Our goal at W&M is a winning program."

He emphasized that the recent cutbacks in athletic scholarships would only force coaches to screen prospective recipients with more care. He indicated that his primary interest would be directed toward building a strong basketball program, pointing to Virginia and North Carolina as examples of schools which had revitalized their basketball programs.

A graduate of NYU in 1938, the 56-year old Carnevale was head basketball coach at North Carolina for two years and for twenty years at Navy.

He comes to the head position at William and Mary from a similar post at NYU.

Jim Root

who succeeds Lou Holtz as head football coach, learned the game of football from two of the most successful coaches in the college ranks, playing quarterback under both Woody Hayes and Ara Parsighian.

His coaching career began at Tulane and led him to the head coaching job at New Hampshire four years ago where he turned a losing program around and was named College Division Coach of the year in 1968. Root noted the loss of several key players but added that a strong offensive nucleus remains to build a winner. The question mark will be the defense, according to Root.

After a year of holding the jobs of both athletic director and director of newly-finished William and Mary Hall,

Lester Hooker leaves his position as athletic director to become full-time director of the building that he was instrumental in establishing. President Graves emphasized in announcing the appointment that Hooker's primary job would be to attract profitable programs such as concerts and other activities to help repay the tremendous investment in the structure and also to provide funds for completing the inside of the building. Hooker will be succeeded as athletic director by Ben Carnevale.

A sport for everyone.

WRA does more this year. Organization promotes participation. A vital executive committee, enthusiastic reps and an efficient Managers Board. Greater emphasis on publicity and communication. Result: coordination of varsity sports, intramurals and special interest groups. Welcoming to the frosh at Matoaka complete with Crotty Brothers chicken and Williamsburg rain. Hockey season opens fifty strong; everyone sticks it out. A year that includes softball, bridge, swimming, and volleyball; numerous choices for a varied student body. Second semester holds still more. Basketball, badminton and a new sport—girl's track. Intense competition for the trophy. And of course the traditional WRA cookout in the spring.

and into their new "jock palace" gave the intramural department more room to hold its events. Coach Edward Jones supervised the program, including everything from team sports such as basketball, football, volleyball and soccer to individual events such as ping pong and badminton. The goal of the department is to involve the entire population of the college in some form of athletic activity; faculty and graduate students as well as undergraduates.

Performing Arts

Creative Drama.

The Rainbow Sign by Louis Catron. One of the few attempts at a major production at William and Mary. Combination of several modern forms: expressionistic and poetic drama. Fantasy and Romanticism. Unique and elaborate staging: a feudal castle transported to the South. Three unhappy couples at a cocktail party—the survivors of an atomic holocaust, which intensifies to the crisis of the individuals. Acting out their fantasies in full costume—witchcraft under blacklights—then out to repopulate the world. Puzzling to the audience and not well received. But an experiment in Modern Theatre.

Professional Casting

of a difficult playwright's work: Virginia Museum Theatre Company's production of Harold Pinter's The Homecoming. In Phi Beta Kappa Hall. Reviews that "guessed what it meant". Pinter's brand of action: a shifting web of intricate human relationships. Flashbacks. Accusations. Fears. Reality and unreality scrambled together. Believable acting brought the audience right onto stage. A professional ensemble courtesy of The William and Mary Theatre.

Adapting Moss Hart's Pulitzer prize winning play to the contemporary scene —nineteen seventy-one.

Playbill termed it

"A group of people doing their own thing."

Done with a cast of five freshmen and eight sophomores. Neutral reviews: one called the production "strained"; others said "delightfully dated."

Senior Jeff Shonert turning in his usual bang-up job as the Grandfather-Philosopher-in-Residence. Director Howard Scammon working the wonders that turned a relatively inexperienced group into a real cast. For new set designer Jerry Bledsoe: initiation into W & M Theatre.

More than slogans.

The trial of the Catonsville Nine communicated two individuals' solutions to the problem of being-in-the-world. Not a fictionalized standard court drama, the play by rebel priest Daniel Berrigan was a combination of poetry, theatre, dialogue, contemporary visual media. A play that raised a number of traditional questions. Legality versus morality, or when is a law not a law? Man versus the state. And to which master does man owe his first allegiance? Department-sponsored discussions and book sales to help those in the community search the question for themselves. Through the personification of the Brothers Berrigan—who were released from Federal Prison in February. A modern morality play directed by Louis E. Catron.

"If

people think that Oscar Wilde is dated, they will get a different impression when they see the William and Mary Theater production of Ernest in Love. It suddenly comes to life. It is fun. It is provocative."

Such were Howard Scammon's remarks about the adaption of Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest.

A cast heavily weighted with freshmen, but featuring seniors Jeff Shonert and Jim McLean as the Masters Worthing and Moncrieff. Droll Music. Clever lines. Pleasant characters.

Another fine William and Mary production. Organized under Howard Scammon, Stephen Palades, John McConnell, Jerry Bledsoe, Roger Sherman, and Albert Haak.

"A pair of star-crossed lovers . . ."

"This bud of love,
by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower
when next we meet."

"What a joke,"

commented
Flat Hat Arts Editor John Keating in his review. "I'd like to forget it," said Howard Scammon and Louis Catron of The William and Mary Theatre. No doubt about it. The National Shakespeare Company blew their campus production of Romeo and Juliet. Inadequate cast. Jerky stage movements. Chanted lines. Resulting in noticeable restlessness in the audience. A performance not exactly deserving the title: "The Original Love Story."

Original productions.

Goal of the Backdrop Club in their effort to musically and theatrically involve a large cast of students. This year, a student-written musical entitled Magic. All under a nine man Board of Directors. Including Producer Cathie Snyder, Director Harvey Credle, and Business Manager Sally Sims. Last year's Backdrop production: Cabaret. Not-so-original. Yet a tremendous success.

The town of Titipu, otherwise known as Phi Beta Kappa Hall. Scene of Sinfonicon Opera Company's seventh production, "The Mikado".

A Gilbert and Sullivan musical. Complete with lavish costumes, pleasant melodies, and tongue-in-cheek script. Delightfully simple. A 19th century genre—camp enough to delight a packed William and Mary house. Totally student produced. Directed by Calvin Remsberg. Choreographed by Donna Metz. Settings and lighting by Ann Chancellor and John McKernon. Conducted by Barbara MacCubbin.

Additionally, a repertoire including Richard Wagner and Aaron Copland.

"New voices".

The way Louis Catron described Premiere Theatre. Drama experience written by and for students. Original one-acts out of Theatre 204 and play-writing classes. Six chosen for spring production by a Board of Directors. Auditions yielded casts. Rehearsals in Phi Beta—the lobby, the lab theatre, or wherever no one else was. Scripts to be learned, scenes to be blocked. Representing experiments in multi-media, split level stage, and one character study. Then the final test: an audience.

Rotate on your own axis and the score is nearing equality. The volleyball court became a battlefield. As students, professors, and administrators vied to spike the ball over the net. Quiet, small group discussions provided a chance for reflection and examination. Beginning with the topic: Masculine/Feminine. Then digressing into personal philosophies of education, life. And love. Games on Saturday evening. Developing a camaraderie lasting far into the night. A feeling that continued on into Sunday. Superficiality gave way to friendship. Hesitating to break the atmosphere. "Retreaters" lingered to play a "farewell" volleyball game. Then returned to school to face studies. Perhaps with a new outlook.

February 28- March 3.

Black Culture Week. Featuring Dick Gregory, Doris Whalen from Virginia State, and Black State Senator Douglas Wilder from Richmond. Plus a film on Black roots, and a Black Church Service. Conducted by the Reverend Ivan Stovall.

On the whole, sparse attendance. But for those who did come, the experience was outstanding. A real sense of community prevailed. Especially as the BSO choir sang—"Sing a song full of the faith that the dark past has taught us. Sing a song full of hope that the present has brought us."

"The Black Student Organization's primary thought and purpose in presenting Black Culture Week was to allow an insight and feeling for the Black experience in America. It is our hope that a greater level of understanding will result due to the exposure to Black institutions, concerns, moods, and aspirations. It is our desire that the impact of the Week's events would encourage Blacks to attend the College by increasing the capacity for self-identity and expression. The recruitment effort was also helped by the contributions to the Martin Luther King Scholarship Fund, which permits financial assistance for needy Black applicants. Black Culture Week was generally well received and this response is encouraging. Of course, no problems are solved in an instant, but we hope that the increased level of awareness will make the problems less formidable."

While Frank M. Snowden of Howard University added that color bigotry was not a product of history, but a very modern prejudice. And that bigotry should not be excused on that basis.

And “modern” Black Roy Innis took the militant stand. Blasting whites for being afraid to come out of their skin, the CORE head challenged whites to do their half. Or more if they dared.

Stated Sam Keen, author of To A Dancing God. An advocate of the philosophy that life is a joyous kind of madness. Criticizing modern man as overly-serious, Keen advised students "to let themselves go, to let go out of control, to trust". And know that it would be ok.

Speaking as part of the College-Wide Reading Program on Thursday night. Conducting a three-hour workshop on Friday morning. Titled "Storytelling as Identity". Which involved drawing the house that one lived in as a child. And telling another about all that went on in it. Sam Keen: an ex-professor. Now an editor of Psychology Today.

Government

"Confined,"

said Board of Student Affairs Chairman Mary Edwards. "Within the ridiculous confines of its long assigned role as a body for discussion only." Still, the BSA worked successfully for late fees for Freshman women, and change in the Board of Visitors By-Laws. A membership of 20; all by virtue of their offices. Long range attempts to broaden the BSA scope. By investigating the General Fee. By opening up financial documents previously labeled "classified". A year in the role of "watchdog". But still, great questions of the reality of the BSA's power.

New directions for the SA.

Less pre-occupation with philosophical debates and a greater concern for Joe Student. And his needs. Interest Night in September to acquaint freshmen with campus opportunities. Soliciting student donations for UGF. A return of 25-cent SAP movies and the beginning of a speaker series. Fred Harris and Black Culture Week featured on campus. SA Book Fairs both semesters. Students finally got a discount rate. Major leadership changes in late September. President Kay Rorer left office for "personal reasons". A power struggle ensued, with Honor Council affirming Vice-President Purdy's right to office. Increased contact with the Board of Visitors via Liason Officer Stewart Gamage. Board by-laws to guarantee presentation of student perspective. Senate Housing Committee hearings on dorm conditions. Deans confronted with facts, pictures prepared for the press, and Monroe and O.D. were painted. A smaller Senate than ever before. Particular emphasis on committee toward the end of more power. Coordinated by Speaker Bob Stanners. STINC: Students Inc. Theoretically, the W&M Student Corporation organized to bring big entertainment and smaller prices to students. Under Corporation President Bill Brun. Booking entertainment for the Hoi Polloi. A great idea, but limited accomplishments.

A merger

of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils.

Into a joint council. To think, discuss, implement, evaluate, revise. No longer were women's infractions tried only by women.

And vice-versa. Striving to make the Honor System a viable one.

Philosophical problems: a campus-wide image as merely a judicial body in black robes; misunderstanding of the much-debated fourth point.

(Is one bound to turn in his best friend?) Practical problems, too: widespread theft in freshmen dorms; inability to act or investigate adequately; obscure student support.

Dedicated, level-headed leadership in a co-chairmen Jackie Sivertsen and Rich Guardino. Striving toward education, individual value determination.

A continuous effort towards keeping traditional privileges and responsibilities relevant.

Referendums.

On whether or not to keep the traditional WDA structure. Officers vs. a coordinating board. Votes on whether or not freshman women should have lates. It was making less and less difference, though, as more and more women moved off campus for senior year. And as dorms became virtually autonomous.

New administratively appointed Resident Assistants take on managerial duties in dorms, replacing elected House Presidents. Paid positions, but not as counselors.

Bateman's resolution forces the College to require parental permission to participate in open housing and lates. DuPont third remains segregated because two held out. WDA's power structure kept insisting that housemothers were being phased out; the Administration denied it just as often. White cards and the new signed envelopes eliminated the paranoia involved in signing out. Still a difficulty making an impact. How to make dorm life more suitable to increasingly independent women. Via what means? An organization consistently choked with paperwork.

Unmedaled heroines.

Those people on campus who helped others for the intrinsic value in doing it. Who tore up "Do Not Disturb" signs. People-to-people, face-to-face contact with real problems. Suicide. Abortions. Drugs. Loneliness. All part of a year for a duPont counselor or a Ludwell House President. Good times, too.

Hall parties, football games, and picnics. Midnight deli runs for the whole building. Long rap sessions. "Anonymous" notes and suite rivalries. All part of an effort to help each freshman woman find (or create) her particular niche at William and Mary. Little lime-light. Much satisfaction.

Big sisters.

Another name for the sophomore girls who man the sponsor program. Chosen by recommendations and grade-point average.

"Well-adjusted" girls providing a really human welcome to William and Mary. Summer. Letters.

Door signs. Escorted tours to High's or the deli. Head Sponsor Suzanne Jones says the '71 program tried to integrate academic and social orientation. New additions:

Orientation Central and Interest Night moved to the various offices in the Campus Center. Plus, a Saturday opening of the Treasurer-Auditor's office for the parents. Making that first month as easy as possible.

characterized the Group Leader system in September. Head Steve McGinnis. An elaborate chain of command. Result: much greater efficiency. Tours, sessions, and endless speeches. Producing action.

Or at least thought. The Flat Hat's mission as stated by editor-in-chief Mary Frances Lowe." There was a great deal of seeming apathy or malaise on campus, especially first semester. People didn't appear to get excited about anything; they were 'down', perhaps worrying about grades and jobs. At the Flat Hat, we had to try to provoke, if not action, at least occasional thoughts about some of the problems and issues at William and Mary." September brought new offices—editorial headquarters were located in the Sit 'n' Bull room. Production was in the old basement study hall.

Resulting in some internal problems—production versus editorial interests. Excellence in both phases of the publishing operation, but little understanding. Expanded use of news analysis and investigative reporting sometimes brought criticism of “editorializing” from SA leaders. Broadened coverage of the arts. Two minor obscenity charges. Neither followed by legal accusation. Editorial offices headed by Mary Frances Lowe as editor-in-chief and Steve Bates as managing editor. Who's Who on Their Heroes

To feature the Who's Who recipients as individuals, the Echo staff requested each one to reply to the following question suggested by the Who's Who questionnaire: "... name the two historical or contemporary figures that you most admire. Why and how you chose these two particular people should make up the essence of your answer."

Robert David Bacher

out of my home life." I admire Colonel Herbert's courage and idealism. I think he resisted the temptation to take an easier route. I'm not sure I could have done the same.

Robert David Bacher

The question tempts you to name two people who are indisputably great so your taste in heroes can be acclaimed. I don't admire anyone to the extent that I would attempt to pattern my life after theirs in every detail. But people like James Joyce and Dick Gregory I admire, because they have a quality that is valuable for anyone human. In the cases of Joyce and Gregory, they both have the ability to parody themselves, a sense of humor that is universally applied. Because they have that quality, they seldom make the mistake of taking themselves too seriously.

Dr. Albert Schweitzer—a man unafraid of man or nature with an overwhelming love for both. He met challenges with all the power within him until it was eternally exhausted, and he left the living with his challenge to continue. Dr. Franklin Kameny—a man unafraid of himself. He was a revolutionary in the fight for an unpopular minority, battling within the political system which has traditionally condemned his way of life. He put himself on the line so others would follow.

Jon Gilbert Fox

There are many whose lives have served and will continue to serve as a standard against which to judge my own. Chief among those would be two persons—Constance Baker Motley and my Father. Regardless of their radically different backgrounds—Miss Motley is a highly educated black federal judge in Mississippi; my Father is a high school educated, white working man—both have remembered that human beings are the end of all things. Although, too, their approaches to humanity are quite different, both Miss Motley and my tain aspects of character. Thus it is extremely difficult to write down two names and say that these are the people that I admire and give reasons for the choice.

I admire, in many people, intellectual ability that is not reduced to sterile intellectualism and capacity to express one's ideas fully and articulately. There are many people who would fulfill these requirements, but one must also be able to maintain a balance between the intellectual and the non-intellectual aspects of life in order to be a

Thomas Jefferson and Claude Monet— Both adventurous, compulsive, out-of-step with their contemporaries. In their respective worlds, they provided a momentum for change, the impact of which has new implications with each successive age.

Jefferson—Innovative in politics, education, architecture. Creative in social organization, land use, life style.

Monet—Aggressive in technique, palette, paint application. Rebellious in his suggestive representations and

My father, Richard Vincent Guardino, Sr., died of cancer on January 12, 1972. He is the person for whom I have the most admiration. I admire him for his zest for life, his compassion, his understanding, and his advice. Most of all, I admire him for the great concern he felt for people, even while he was facing his own death.

Richard Vincent Guardino, Jr.

Mahatma Gandhi—
 . . . for his theories and practice of passive resistance and civil disobedience to achieve reform,

 . . . and for the unlimited respect and love he felt for mankind.

Patricia Anne Kenig

Richard Vincent Guardino, Jr.

Father have lived their lives as manifestations of the fact that we are indeed our brother's keepers.

Harriett Lari Stanley

Evidently, by answering the question I am to set up personalities upon whom I attempt to model my life. However, after considering the problem, I find that I do not wish to emulate persons or personalities, but that I do admire cer-whole person. For these reasons, if pressed for names, I would list Aristotle, who gave one of the best accounts of the balanced life in the Nichomachean Ethics; and William F. Buckley, Jr., because, although I do not agree with all of his political views, I find him to be an intelligent and highly articulate contemporary figure.

Patricia Anne Kenig

Mark Hatfield—
for the way he has crystallized the conflict I feel in trying to live a life based on the teachings of Jesus, while ministering to the political and social ills of our time,
... and for his ability to maintain his deeply based religious beliefs in the face of those who so disagree with him politically that they call him un-Christian.

It is only common sense that most people considered great have qualities such that, as one comes to know them, one may simultaneously admire and despise men of character. Worst of all, one may come to consider them bland.

So it really makes no sense to ask about heroes, for most people who survive living are heroic. There are no supra or super human heroes; there are only idiosyncratic preferences. I like Napoleon because Marlon Brando played Bonaparte when I was impressionable, Robert E. Lee because he was a "good" man, Ivan the Terrible because he had the strength of his convictions, or Kate Millett because she tries hard.
They are none of them larger than life.

Mary Frances Lowe

Although it is extremely difficult to pinpoint only two men in which I admire, I will place John F. Kennedy and my father, Alvin E. Oliver, as the men I most admire.
I view John Kennedy as a man of extremely high character whose ability to help the poor, aged, and oppressed is unparalleled by any man occupying the post of President.

John Kennedy not only carried the country through crises and internal strife but also taught the people of the United States to conduct their lives enthusiastically and to the fullest.

I admire my father for his ability to strive ahead in achieving the goals he has set out to accomplish. He has provided my brothers and myself with every opportunity to better ourselves not only through his encouragement and advice but also through his example.
He looks for the truth in a problem

Donald Duane Oliver

and after analyzing what should be done, he makes every effort to rectify the wrong.

Donald Duane Oliver

In trying to select the two historical or contemporary figures I admire most, I have decided upon two men whose works and talents I respect.

The first of these two men is Andrew Wyeth, the painter. I like Wyeth's works, the things he chooses to depict, and then the way he depicts these things and life. I admire and like his works but I also admire and respect his talent; he has a gift given to few people and his talent is one I would like to possess.

The second figure I have chosen is Dag Hammarskjöld. I admire him for the work he did in connection with the United Nations and in connection with world peace. I also respect him for his goals and ideals and because of the example he set in his own life time as well as the example he still sets for us today.

Judith Lacy Martin

The man who I most admire is a man of the contemporary world. His name is Muhammed Ali, formerly Cassius Clay.
He is a man who believed in his cause so deeply that he was willing to suffer personal degradation. He is a man of the sports world; the finest boxer in history. But I don't admire him simply because of his athletic prowess, but more so because he was willing to sacrifice all his athletic honors because he cherished his religious and moral beliefs to such a high degree

Judith Lacy Martin

Philip Charles Mosser

that he chose to resist the military draft and face imprisonment. He was stripped of his Heavyweight World Boxing Championship and he withstood much verbal abuse until he won his court case several years later. This took a man of firm convictions.
Muhammed Ali is a Black Muslim. I am not a believer in the preachings of Elijah Muhammed, and I did not judge Muhammed Ali because of his color;
rather I judged his value as a man.

Steven Arthur McGinnis

In selecting the two historical figures I most admired, the primary consideration was to judge them in the context of the society in which they lived. I also considered their principles as another important factor—what they stood for, and how they defended (or accomplished) their goals. My choices were Abraham Lincoln and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Lincoln, I selected as the exemplary President—the best we have had. Facing apparently insurmountable odds, he held tenaciously to his belief in the Union, and secured for us our government as we know it. Martin Luther King, Jr., I chose because of his role in the Civil Rights Movement. Under his leadership much was accomplished, and, as we face the yet more difficult task of total integration, his compassionate model should be one of our foremost guides.

Randall Stephen Strange

In choosing those people from history or contemporary life whom I admire my mind naturally turns toward the field of Fine Arts. Within this field there are many people from whom to pick, but I will concentrate on two, Henry Moore and Kahil Gibran.

Being one of England's top artists in the field of sculpture, Henry Moore has produced abstract figures in stone and bronze that practically breathe with freedom and dynamic energy. To be able to express oneself in such a manner

is truly a talent that few possess. Seeing the beauty in this world within ourselves and feeling it is something that all people are capable of doing; but in producing an object of beauty and in being content with this three dimensional expression of one's feelings there is great cause for admiration. Besides the realm of art there is the realm of verse and the written word. Seeing the simplicity in the world is one of Kahil Gibran's many talents, as well as having the ability to put down in the beauty of writing what to him and to many is important in life. For his depth of insight and for his expressive use of our language I hold him in high esteem.

Jacqueline Gail Sivertsen

Who do I most admire? To be honest, I left that question blank on the Who's Who questionnaire. I can admire one person for one thing, and another person for something else, but it seems impossible to come up with two people who will somehow contain the composite personality with all the traits I respect. The two traits I most admire are perception and self knowledge to know what you want to do with your life; and the balls to go do that. The first trait is best exemplified, for me anyway, in Fritz Perls, a psychologist and leader of a modern movement of what he calls Gestalt Psychology. The second trait is perhaps easier to come by, and is usually seen with the absence of a life plan, as in the famous nation-grabbers' like Napoleon and Hitler. But, for me, one trait provides the end, and the other the means; either is meaningless alone.

Robert Michael Stanners

Robert Michael Stanners

For his incredibly varied talents, his energetic mind and his humanitarian dedication, Albert Schweitzer is perhaps the figure I admire the most. Although he died in 1965, his life seems to me to suggest all that is hopeful in contemporary culture. His sense of "reverence for life" encompasses our own desires for world peace, social equality, and personal sensitivity, and his continuous active involvement in philosophical exploration, self-expression and humanitarian service seem to assert the potential of the single individual to live meaningfully and contribute concretely to the world of the twentieth century.

Without sharing Schweitzer's idealism, Voltaire exhibited the same dedicated energy and critical thought two centuries before. Even in opposition to strong political and religious authority, he was committed to his own principles and to the rights of those whose abuses he did not share. His campaigns against intolerance and social injustice seem particularly inspiring today, when it is so easy to feel that no individual can successfully battle the inequities of the Establishment.

Charlotte Harrison Hummel

In many ways I find it presumptuous to even attempt to narrow down to two the many individuals in history and in the contemporary world whom I greatly admire. Nor do I feel that my selection to "Who's Who" qualifies me to do so more than anyone else. As simply a college student with a limited perspective and vision, then, I would have to say that the two contemporary public figures I most admire are Ralph Nader and Daniel Ellsberg. Regardless of one's perspective on the political spectrum, Nader certainly has to be respected for his complete devotion to a cause in which he believes. Although one's political views are likely to color one's perception of Ellsberg, I find him an admirable individual who had the courage to say what he felt needed to be said, despite the consequences he knew he would face.

Bob Wooldridge, Jr.

The ideal of the Renaissance man (or woman, as the case may be) is one which I greatly respect. Thomas Jefferson and Albert Schweitzer are two figures who come closest to representing this ideal. Both were individuals of great integrity and compassion who excelled in humanistic, aesthetic, and scientific pursuits. Each utilized his many talents to the fullest extent and successfully served the era in which he lived. "A man for all seasons" aptly describes each of these people; the examples set by their lives are in my opinion, truly worthy of admiration and emulation.

Bob Wooldridge, Jr.

Loreen Kennedy Tipton

Due to the shortcomings of human nature, I think that it is difficult to cite one or two historical figures that I admire without reservations. However, there are a number of men who had a decisive impact on history. In these men, one can find admirable qualities to form a more perfect historical figure. I suggest that Christ, Frederick Douglass, W.E.B. DuBois, Martin Luther King, and Ralph Nader are among these men.

First among the admirable qualities of a great historical figure is a strong sense of mission. It is important that this be arrived at after extensive observation and contemplation and that it be based on principle, conviction, and humility. The mission should reflect broad concerns, equity considerations, and long run results.

An equally important attribute of many historical figures is the determination to implement their ideas and plans. These men often feel a strong compulsion to correct the wrongs they have observed. Despite the pressure and opposition from established forces, they remain steadfast in their beliefs and in pursuit of their goals.

Henry Thompson Tucker

A third important quality is the ability to remain above the temptation of self-aggrandizement when one's personal influence increases. Great historical figures should not allow petty designs to corrupt their ideals, but should remain humble throughout.

Project Plus

This has been a year of transition for the General Honors Program. With one of its prime purposes being to experiment and innovate, the Program has offered colloquia courses from the time it first began to operate in 1965. Thematically-organized and discussion-oriented, these colloquia with small enrollments formed the models for the freshman seminars when the latter were introduced for all freshmen under the new undergraduate curriculum. In anticipation of the appearance of these seminars and as exploration of new areas in which to experiment, students in a spring honors colloquium and the college honors committee proposed to the faculty and administration a new program. This was a non-honors sophomore academic and residential program to be designated as Project Plus and hopefully to be inaugurated in the fall of 1972.

Commitment

On why you chose William and Mary:

The three days that my wife and I spent at William and Mary last April were truly an exceptional experience. Perhaps it was in the way faculty, administration and students that we met talked about the College. I felt that there was a certain kind of potential here that I wanted to be a part of. There was a quality and opportunity that was unique, and I wanted to have an influence on the forward movement of this institution. Later, on the plane, as we flew back to Boston, Mrs. Graves and I knew at least one thing: whether we got the job or not we felt terribly good about our experience.

On your opinion that William and Mary is on "the verge of excellence.":

First, let me say this—I hope we never really arrive at excellence, because when an institution becomes self-satisfied—she no longer looks ahead. One thing that can contribute to William and Mary's excellence is size. The College is small enough to provide intimate and exciting relationships between students and faculty, but large enough to attract good resources . . . We need to ask what we can do to help each student take full advantage of this place. Too many freshman never really become completely a part of William and Mary. The mainstream of the College is here and they are somehow over there. We haven't yet found a way to capture them . . . We haven't reached excellence yet, but I hope we're working toward it. I'm not sure how close we'll come to reaching it. It will start by increasingly thinking of students as whole individuals, both in and out of the classroom.

In late February, ECHO stall members Harriett Stanley and Bobbi Woodall interviewed Dr. Graves in his Ewell Hall office. The President was asked to comment very informally on topics suggested by the ECHO. The text of his remarks follows.

On minority groups:

I'm concerned about how to attract groups to this campus. We need to find a way to create an image at the College that will encourage potential Black faculty, students, and administrators to know that we really want them. We must increase the number of Blacks here at William and Mary not because HEW says we should, but because all of our students will benefit from their presence. I would like to see more programs like the Hampton Institute Exchange. Last fall I visited Dr. Hudson at Hampton Institute. I wanted to meet him, but I also wanted him to know that the person in this office cares about this relationship. It may seem like a little thing, but hopefully, a lot of little things might make the difference.

On campus living conditions:

The way we live here is not as good as it should be if this is truly going to be a quality institution. There is a close relationship between educational quality and living quality. More specifically, we need major renovations in each of the older living halls. We plan to do one this summer, and two each summer after that if we can find the funds. Then we need to encourage students to take responsibility for where they live. Once we bring living halls up to a quality level, I hope that they won't deteriorate the way that they have over the years.

On administrative reshuffling:

Let me say this: a major responsibility that I've got is to get the job done—as well and as efficiently as possible. If that means moving people around to our best advantage, then that is what we will do . . .

There will be more of it. (When asked about his reactions towards student, faculty, and alumni recommendations for administrative posts, Dr. Graves replied, "They will be welcomed.")

On William and Mary Students:

I think the William and Mary student is more conservative, and I don't mean that in a negative sense, and more responsible than most of those that I've heard about in undergraduate institutions.

For example, I visited an SA Senate meeting just last week. I found that when students here make decisions, they try to take into account much more than just their own interests. By and large, this has not always been the case in educational institutions in recent years.

I hope that we shall not talk about your rights and my responsibilities but rather about our rights and responsibilities . . .

*Dr. Thomas Ashley Graves
Opening Remarks
September 14, 1971*

On what College ideally could be:

I know what I hope William and Mary will be and let me say just what I believe it must be to approach its full potential. William and Mary could be a College of national reputation in terms of the kind of liberal education that is offered at the undergraduate level. It could be a state college that would attract the very best men and women on a national basis. If we can hold to our size we can be the highest quality college in the Virginia system in service to both the Commonwealth and the country. And by quality, I don't mean bringing in only Merit Scholars, and turning out only Phi Beta Kappas. I mean quality in terms of the kind of people who leave here and the lives that they live.

It's time to make the House a Home.

characterized the 1971-72 Board of Visitors. In President Grave's estimation, "a body of dedicated and capable men and women." In SA President Andy Purdy's words, "an extremely responsive group." Frequent general meetings at the Williamsburg Lodge. Additional outside gatherings for active committee members.

Result: progress. Adoption of the Rosenthal Resolution, allowing for student and faculty invitation to Board meetings. Not to mention long overdue dormitory renovations. Real rapport. Cocktails with student leaders. Dinner with President and Mrs. Graves as part of the very real open door policy." A desire to listen. Willingness to respond. Major steps.

Administration

In his convocation address, President Graves re-emphasized that William and Mary is and will be primarily an undergraduate school. How do you feel about this as an individual and as an administrator? What do you like most about William and Mary?

Warren J. Green
Director of the Campus Center.

Kenneth E. Smith, Jr., Assistant Director of the Campus Center.

J. Willred Lambert, Vice President for Student Affairs.

The concept of William and Mary as a small university with primary emphasis on undergraduate education is completely consistent with its history, its present character, and its place among the colleges of Virginia. In the 1967 Virginia Plan for Higher Education the State Council of Higher Education set forth its recognition of the kind of college William and Mary is and specifically stated that it did not "expect William and Mary to become a comprehensive university".

I hope not.

For more than forty years William and Mary has been the way of life for me. It would be quite impossible to single out the specific things I like most. I like it for what it has been, for what it is now, and for what it can become. I like it for its campus, its buildings, its students, its faculty, and its alumni.

And for other good and sufficient reasons.

J. Willred Lambert
Vice President for Student Affairs

At a time when the necessity for expansion in higher education has led to burgeoning enrollments and greatly expanded graduate programs it seems very important that there be institutions like William and Mary which establish as their first priority the quality of the undergraduate experience.

Historically the liberal arts college in America has attempted to fulfill two objectives, the development of a man's intellectual as well as his personal potential; objectives which are not, I might add, unrelated. Much of the direction and the intensity of this development depends on the quality of the relationships that take place within the college community.

An institution which emphasizes the undergraduate experience reflects that emphasis through its curriculum, its approach to teaching, its services, indeed by its very environment. By thus . . .

constantly reminding the undergraduate of his importance

. . . and the importance of his work and by creating an atmosphere which respects the personal relationship as essential to one's development, an institution can provide maximum assistance to the individual in the realization of his potential.

On the other hand, graduate study programs on a campus with a predominantly undergraduate orientation are not an incongruity. While providing for advanced study, these same programs can serve to upgrade the quality of the undergraduate experience if the instructors who teach graduate courses also instruct courses on the lower level and make themselves accessible to the undergraduates.

It is impossible for me to separate my personal and professional feelings on these matters, for each in part determines the other. The importance of William and Mary to me lies in the efforts which it makes to provide for its students the kind of experience which I have described. Its most enjoyable aspect is the people who compose it. There is a natural excitement that arises from relating on a day-to-day basis to persons who possess such great ability and such widely varying interests, needs, and dreams as do the students of the College.

Wallace A. Elliott, Assistant Dean of Students.

*Paul N. Clem, Director of Summer Session,
E. Leon Looney, Associate Dean and Director of Evening College and Extension.*

Birdena E. Donaldson, Dean of Women.

As one who received two liberal arts degrees, I place a great value on the undergraduate program and would like to see William and Mary become the finest in quality on the Eastern Coast! To me the liberal arts undergraduate program is the "heart" of our educational system. It is 1971-72 and . . .

we are living in a complex age

. . . and all higher educational institutions must adapt themselves to some of the vocational and technological needs. It should be said that William and Mary should maintain the services of a small liberal arts university and only provide its share of professional education as requested by the state.

All faculty and administrators take great pride in the high academic prestige of William and Mary. As a venerable and prestigious college, it is known throughout this section of the country. Further, one has high regard for the freedom to think, believe and teach the truth. Other things we like most are 1) the small size of the university 2) the beauty of the campus in its natural setting and 3) the friendliness of the student and faculty community.

*Birdena E. Donaldson
Dean of Women*

President Graves has expressed the desire that William and Mary remain primarily an undergraduate school. It is, I believe, entirely . . .

Donald L. Herrmann, Dean of School of Continuing Studies.

Carson H. Barnes, Jr., Dean of Students.

appropriate

. . . that William and Mary's mission remain focused on the undergraduate liberal educational experience. Though we are a small and growing university, the quality of graduate studies is affected in so many ways by the quality of an institution's undergraduate programs. President Graves has expressed a hope that we may strengthen our graduate offerings in the Arts and Sciences and in the professions of law, business and education and that we should explore new offerings at the graduate level. I believe it is possible for William and Mary as a small university to offer both quality undergraduate and graduate and professional programs and that this mission need not be accompanied by a sharply increased enrollment or a large university status. I believe the exceptional heritage and location of William and Mary in historic Williamsburg gives the institution a special appeal and an opportunity to be a unique educational institution. William and Mary does, I believe, attract students and teachers who possess a high motivation to contribute to the academic life and experience at the College. There is at William and Mary an atmosphere of quiet intellectual excitement which all great educational institutions must have and there is every reason to believe that this atmosphere can continue provided we remain flexible and innovative in our future plans.

*Carson H. Barnes
Dean of Students*

Robert P. Hunt, Director of Admissions.

I support

... the concept that William and Mary should be primarily an undergraduate institution. However, I do feel that the role we are currently pursuing of limited graduate work can and does serve to strengthen the undergraduate program. I believe it is appropriate for individual faculty members to teach courses at all levels as much as possible, and that our graduate students be encouraged to actively integrate with undergraduates. A major concern of prospective students is whether or not regular faculty members teach lower level courses, and we should strive to make sure this is the case. The thing I like most about William and Mary is that it is a comparatively small institution, yet has diversified, high quality programs both at the academic and extracurricular level. Also, the fact that we have a fine physical plant which is located in an attractive and unique setting is a very favorable characteristic of William and Mary which seems to appeal to prospective students.

After four months on the job,

... I hesitate to draw concluding responses, though my impressions may be well and good. But anyway, you did ask ...

The college has a most definite commitment to the undergraduate. Since we are so small a university, it seems wise to concentrate our energies and efforts towards strengthening the programs that are already now in existence on all levels, rather than undertaking expansion of graduate offerings. Our smallness can lend itself to more strength.

The location of the College in historic Williamsburg enhances the unique beauty of William and Mary. To stroll along the path of the Crepe Myrtle, catching views of the fleeting landscaped shrubs, onto a collage of architectural beauty, one cannot but be impressed and lifted up from the woes of everyday living.

The College of William and Mary occupies . . .
a unique place
. . . in the Virginia system of higher education, as recognized by the State Council of Higher Education in its "Virginia Plan." This Plan refers to the College as "an institution of national reputation" which has acquired a status as "a university with limited programs of high quality." I concur in President Graves' view that the College's role is to strengthen its present position as an institution of excellence with first emphasis on the undergraduate program, which accounts for the bulk of its enrollment, and is consonant with its primary mission.

The character of the institution, meaning both student body and faculty, was one of the most persuasive factors in my becoming associated with William and Mary, so I probably would say that this constitutes my best answer to the question posed. More personally, that which gives me the most enjoyment is the association with the fine students here.

Dudley M. Jensen, Registrar.

The College of William and Mary has served many different educational needs in its long history, but I believe its most . . .

essential and abiding mission

. . . is to undergraduate education in the liberal arts and sciences. Graduate and Professional work is compatible with this purpose, in my view, provided it is done without prejudice to the basic undergraduate commitment, and provided, too, that such work is conceived—as I strongly believe it can be—within the larger framework of liberal values. My hope for this venerable academic institution is therefore that it may continue to develop the fullness of its potential to become a distinctive and altogether excellent college, deeply informed in all it does by humane, liberal, and intellectual values.

To me the most attractive element of the College of William and Mary is an exciting sense of possibility. This is a fine college, and it has within it the capability of an excellence second to none in the country. To be even a small part of such a challenge is deeply gratifying.

George R. Healy
Vice President for Academic Affairs

George R. Healy, Vice-President for Academic Affairs.

In my opinion a liberal education is not only a . . .

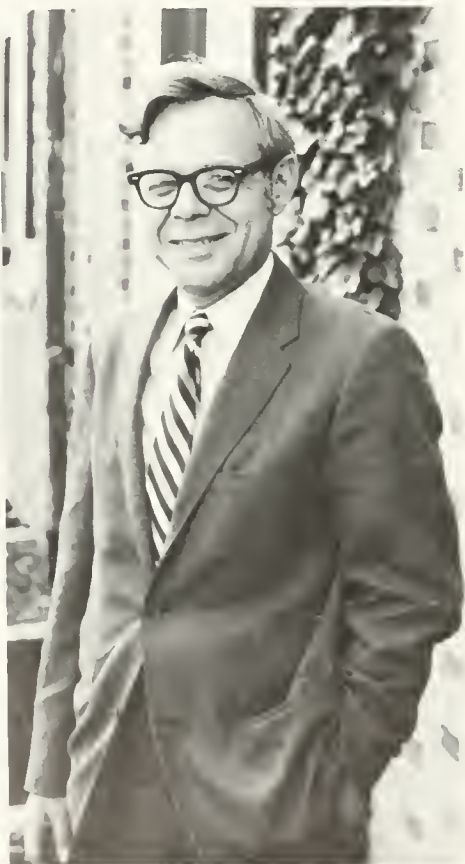

vital ingredient

. . . in preparation for life but also the best preparation for training in the professions.

There has been a tendency in the educational history of our society to sacrifice education for accelerated vocational preparation.

This trend has resulted in a nation of well trained specialists but few who have the breadth of knowledge to creatively solve the most important of the world's problems.

The vision of William and Mary, one of the nation's important institutions of higher learning, promising to focus its attention on undergraduate education of the sort designed to prepare its graduates with the breadth of understanding necessary to meet the great issues of the day is welcome indeed.

Moreover, as an educational administrator, I must take note that the recent emphasis on graduate education has led to a nation overstocked with specialists. Graduates of our best graduate schools are un- or underemployed. Our focus and our resources must now be shifted back to undergraduate education and the challenge of liberally educating an ever-increasing percentage of our population by providing them with the incentive and the liberating experience of an undergraduate education designed to prepare them to think both rationally and creatively about society and the world. When I came to William and Mary eight years ago, I saw it as an exceptional educational institution of not only national but international repute. At that time, it was almost entirely an undergraduate College and I saw it resisting the trend towards emphasis on graduate and professional education. I saw in William and Mary a student body with outstanding potential and a faculty with exceptional capability and background for both scholarship and teaching. I saw William and Mary aiming to fulfill a mission to which I was committed and I wanted to be a part of that effort.

Education is, I believe, learning to think originally and creatively, profiting from the efforts of the past but not in slavery to it, utilizing a basic foundation of knowledge but always looking forward and seeking depth of understanding but in the context of a broad perspective. Education is an interpersonal venture and William and Mary provides the opportunity for close student-faculty interaction. It is this opportunity that means the most to me.

off-campus opportunities, and interdisciplinary studies so that our curriculum responds to the times in a responsible and academically sound manner, and does not remain frozen for another thirty years as it did after the last curriculum change in the 1930's I most enjoy my relationships with students and colleagues in and out of the classroom. I find the personal experiences of teaching, administration, and coaching thoroughly rewarding and stimulating.

James P. Wythe, Jr., Dean of Marshall-Wythe School of Law.

I think that President Graves is absolutely correct in emphasizing the importance of the undergraduate liberal arts and sciences as the heart of William and Mary. If we are to achieve the goal of high academic quality envisioned by the President, we should certainly develop dramatically our present high standards at the undergraduate level. I believe that our limited graduate and professional programs should flourish at the College within this recognized context of the excellence at the undergraduate level. To my way of thinking, the biggest challenge for the College will be to continue the direction begun by the new curriculum. I believe it is essential to continue to develop our curriculum, to increase or inaugurate . . .

I think the thing I like most about William and Mary is that it is a small university, thereby allowing a closer relationship between students, faculty and administration. Then too, I like William and Mary because I know of no college that has a finer student body than do we.

Schools

The School of Business Administration, four years old in name, is graduating its last class with the Bachelor of Arts degree with a concentration in business this year. At the same time it is preparing its first graduates to receive the Bachelor of Business Administration degree in June 1973. The redesigned undergraduate studies range from computer-oriented decision theory to human behavior in business organizations. New directions in the search for solutions to old problems are included in the new courses in Managerial Economics, Business Logistics, Investments, and Management Use of Accounting Data. The graduate program has been expanded to a two-year Master of Business Administration curriculum of sixty credits with some specialization, but the emphasis is on breadth of knowledge. The administration is committed to growth in an orderly, controlled manner, and the School will never be so large that the faculty can no longer know the students as individuals. The faculty is a blend of experienced administrators with younger educators trained in the latest areas of business administration and management. They are actively involved in research, public service, and consulting, with emphasis on the search for facts, at which point the hard reality of managerial decisions merely begins. In providing the undergraduate student with "an academic experience that is relevant for today and tomorrow," the School tries to prepare the student for life as well as for rewarding careers in organization, large and small, with an awareness of an ethical dedication in the concept of business responsibilities in American life, viewing education as a life-long endeavor. At the graduate level, we try to develop the professional manager, broadly educated yet trained in depth in the complexities of business and management. The program of study is intensive and demanding, and always presents the challenge: justify and defend your decisions. The "mix" of the manager's responsibilities is presented—how much responsibility does a manager owe to society at large, to the stockholders, to the employees, to the customers, to himself, and to the survival of the organization. Without each of these, other responsibilities cannot be properly met. What we strive to develop is a way of thinking—a way of approaching decisions with judgment based on facts, and, sometimes, intuition, experience, courage to recognize the hazards involved and still act. Equally important is understanding—of our economic and business system, of organizations large and small, of ethical and moral behavior, and appreciation of human frailty and a deepening sense of personal responsibility.

The School of Education of the College of William and Mary is in full accord with the statement of President Thomas A. Graves, Jr. in which he calls for "raising the College to new, high levels of excellence."

For too long a period of time the preparation of educational personnel has been dictated by population growth and the necessity to provide immediate craftsmen for the public schools. Schools of education, particularly at the undergraduate level, have engaged for many years in the mass production of teachers with the quality of the product often considered to be less important than the numbers produced. Fortunately, this era seems to have ended with the quantity of educational personnel now exceeding, in most fields, the quantity demanded. The employers of educational personnel are now in a position which permits selectivity on the basis of quality.

It is the desire of the School of Education of the College of William and Mary to utilize "the superb resources that are our heritage" to develop educational leaders

—persons who are quickly recognized as being exceptional. Furthermore, it is proposed to accomplish this by combining innovative practices initiated by a competent faculty with an able and enthusiastic student body.

Achieving a high level of excellence in legal education presents both a problem and a challenge. Until recently the goal of law has been to provide neutral rules allowing man the opportunity to predict the consequences of his conduct. The study of law has, it follows, been rooted in precedent with an aversion to innovation, a distrust of flexibility.

Yet the attitudes of society, responding to a compelling need to solve problems of environmental pollution, international tensions and dramatically changed mores reflected in drug problems, rising crime rates and the notion that constitutional rights are absolute, are forcing the lawyer, the legislator and judge, indeed all of us, to question legal concepts which have been taken for granted.

In a very real sense, law reflects values honored by society. It is the job of the educator, therefore, to discover the new dimensions of these values and prepare his students to handle problems concerning them ably when they enter the practice of law. To do this it will be necessary for the law teacher to guide his students into uncharted areas of knowledge. Real property never was and is now less than ever merely land; crime never was and is now less than ever merely an anti-social act.

Flexibility and innovation in teaching law will be important tools in the quest to produce lawyers who can competently serve as society's problem solvers.

To produce such lawyers is the goal of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, for competent problem-solvers will provide a consistent basis for orderly social progress.

The new president's challenge finds the Law School already committed; two years into the implementation of the search for "... new, high levels of excellence ...". The student body will have doubled next year, leveling off at 450, the course offering greatly broadened, new professors added; all first steps in the transformation of Marshall-Wythe into a better law school. In many respects, some of the problems of the unknown that will accompany the change are already being faced in the law school; and the traditional features of high pressure and competition in a maze of difficult reading are more keenly felt by the teeming masses of people daily stumbling over each other, yet not quite able to get to know one another. Who are they? Even more fitting, who am I? Lawyer? The flux has left the former image too narrow, and the pace leaves little time to replace it. For sure, we more nearly represent a broader base, are more equal in ability, and are lucky—last year 1 in 9 were admitted, next year it will be closer to 1 in 20. But in relation to William and Mary, this group has no soul, the new President next door seems still too far away ... do we fit into his timetable? It may not matter, for if excellence is indeed forged out of stress, the Law School should meet the new challenge.

Phi Beta Kappa's talk about the most important thing they have learned in their four years at William and Mary:

“ I would like to think the most important thing I have learned in college is to say “wow” to the present instead of “gulp” to the future. To want to savor every experience and be alive to the potential in every relationship . . . to be receptive to the moment. I suppose this new sense is the emotional counterpart of the aesthetic awareness or intellectual curiosity a college course may hope to awaken; yet despite the fact that it derives from the social environment, it assigns special worth to experiences of any kind.

Charlotte Hummel, English

“ If I have learned anything besides the fact that all that I know or ever will know is finite, it is that even such finite knowledge is absolutely necessary if we are to impose any order on the chaos that surrounds us. We must first learn if we are to teach; we must be used to reasoning if we are to reform the evil and encourage the good both within ourselves and around us. Human wisdom, although transient and less than divine, has its proper sphere and we would lose all sane perspective of the context of our lives if we were to relegate our reason to a lesser status than our emotions.

Douglas Clark, History

“ I am learning how to integrate what I learn and perceive and how to utilize my human capacity to encounter persons and situations with a conscious awareness that all I have learned so far makes my encounters unique and enhances the value I give them or take from them. Becoming conscious that I change may be a kindergarten lesson, but I find the impact one significant to my education over the past four years. I am learning that the value of human life is more important than any facts about what it was or is like.

Carol Clarkson, Mathematics

“ I have spent four years at William and Mary digesting a liberal arts education, but in that time I have also learned to think—to synthesize something of my own from the knowledge given me. Knowledge is meaningless unless you can use it as a foundation for a creative experience. Our creativity is our only outlet for the expression of our individuality. If we do not exercise our ability to think, we cannot create, and we are no longer distinguishable among the mass of humanity.

Ginger Dick, Biology

“ Although I have learned many facts and theories from my various classes, my most meaningful learning experiences have come from outside the classroom. Meeting new and different types of people, having new experiences, and learning to live a more worthwhile and well-rounded life have made my William and Mary experience worthwhile.

Joanne Dukeshire, Psychology

“ . . . a deep and lasting love of art, and a desire never to stop learning.

Anita Coles, Fine Arts

“ In this excellent, but very competitive school, in which every student can tell you his grade point average to two decimal places and his number of quality points, I have finally learned that the most important evaluation of my learning is my own. For an education is useless unless it becomes part of a student, unless it makes him think and question. Learning is not so much an achievement, a diploma to gather dust in the attic, as a continuing attitude of real interest and tolerance.

Elizabeth Percy, English

“ Something that anyone can discover, not just at William and Mary or any college, or by being a Phi Beta Kappa, is that learning is not accomplished in an all-nighter, at a library table, or in a classroom in Washington Hall, unless you can understand something well enough to teach it, criticize it, and hopefully to add to what knowledge you have acquired.

Janet Spencer, Chemistry

“ . . . use the superb resources that are our heritage, in raising the College to new, high levels of excellence . . . be innovative and flexible in searching out new ways to motivate the students to like it here as students, new ways to provide them with an academic experience that is relevant for today and tomorrow.”

*Thomas A. Graves, Jr.
Convocation Address*

A new president, a new convocation center, a new curriculum . . . a new atmosphere on campus must in turn be indicative of a changing academic atmosphere. What reactions do you have to the above quotation, as it is relevant to the progress of the department you represent?

The study of religion has undergone significant developments in recent decades, and the Department of Religion at William and Mary, being a new program, has a unique opportunity to take advantage of these new ideas and approaches to religion studies. But because we are at present a small department with limited human resources we must choose our priorities carefully. There are certain guidelines that we follow in planning our curriculum so that it will reflect the rich diversity of the field and, at the same time, allow an indepth study of certain traditions.

We are concerned

- 1) to introduce our students to the several methods and approaches to the study of religion; to acquaint students with the fact that the study of religion is a field-encompassing field, using the methods of historiography, literary criticism, and philosophical and social-scientific analysis. We want to develop awareness of methodological presuppositions, limits, and achievements;

- 2) to expose our students to the rich diversity of religious traditions and the universal types and structures of religious belief and practice which express man's uniquely religious response and quest within and across the great cultural traditions;
- 3) to engage our students with materials which span periods of time from primitive and archaic cultures to contemporary society, to indicate the persistence of certain types of religious belief and response, as well as their transformations into new forms and often unconventional expressions.

There are many things that we would like to do and which we look forward to doing in the near future.

We hope to offer more courses in modern Roman Catholic studies, some work in classical and contemporary Islam, a course or two in comparative religious ethics, and occasionally some courses on topics of especially current interest to students.

The possibilities for innovation and experimentation are inexhaustible.

As Paul Tillich once said, "the substance of culture is religion, and the form of religion is culture."

The Department of English has this year instituted a completely new curriculum at the freshman-sophomore level which gives more options and greater flexibility to the student in planning a program of study fitted to his own individual needs and interests. Five new courses at the sophomore level and fourteen freshman seminars on individual topics are contained in this new curriculum to satisfy Area I requirements. The Department has been deeply committed this year to a nation-wide search for qualified Black professors to add to our staff and at this writing we have some hopes of success for next year. We are also turning into a "publishing department." Three faculty members in English finished books this year which will be published in the very near future and several more are in the progress. More than half of the members of the Department are now publishing articles and leading reviews in major journals.

Without losing our traditional emphasis upon good teaching,

we expect that our record in publications and scholarly endeavors will soon bring us recognition as one of the outstanding undergraduate English departments in this country.

This year the Department of Fine Arts has attempted to respond to the increasing demand for courses in the arts with revisions of its curriculum and with the addition of two members to the faculty. It is now possible to concentrate either in Art or in the History of Art.

A new approach to beginning studio work has been developed with the Basic Design courses introduced this year. The History of Art program has been reinforced by the addition of courses in Northern Renaissance Art and in Baroque Art and Architecture. The department is also participating in interdisciplinary studies in the areas of Medieval and Renaissance Studies.

 Fine Arts*

F. Donald Truesdell, Head, Department of Music

There are many ways in which the Department of Music has implemented President Graves' quote, and the Department is no longer merely a stepchild in the academic community.

The new curriculum has had a strong impact on the enrollments in music courses which now satisfy area and subsequent requirements in Area I. The Music Department offers both a general introduction to music as a freshman seminar and a variety of seminars of special interest, such as the seminar offered First Semester 1971-72 entitled "Jazz".

A new interdepartmental course is being offered Second Semester 1971-72 for the first time, Music 318 (Theatre 330). American Music Theatre is a study of American operetta and musical comedy from the colonial period to the present with emphasis on their musical and dramatic styles.

The first student has been approved for an interdepartmental concentration and will concentrate on the period of the Baroque in terms of Music, Religion, Philosophy, Fine Arts, etc.

"We are unique in some ways in that our educational program is a small and closeknit department; on the other hand, as a service department we reach hundreds of students, motivating and disciplining through a variety of ensemble groups."

This, the first Department of Modern Languages in the United States, was established in 1779 at the College of William and Mary at the insistence of Thomas Jefferson, who was at that time Governor of the State of Virginia and member of the Board of Visitors of the College. The department today offers courses in five modern languages (French, German, Italian, Russian, and Spanish) and concentrations in three (French, German, and Spanish). There are twenty-eight faculty members on the staff, eighteen of whom hold the Ph.D. degree and five of whom have completed all work for the doctorate with the exception of the dissertation.

Approximately two thousand students are enrolled in courses offered in the department. Our curriculum is under constant study, and the most recent innovations have been the revision of the French and German curricula and the introduction of courses in English translated in French, German, Russian, and Spanish.

The Department of Classical Studies offers a broad range of courses besides Latin and Greek language studies; courses are offered in Greek and Latin literature, mythology, and archeology which require no knowledge of the languages. The Greeks and Romans were the starting point of cultural traditions which continue to dominate European and American society. Moreover, at one time or another they grappled with nearly every intellectual and social problem which faces modern man; their very remoteness in time makes them peculiarly relevant because of the objectivity with which we can examine their answers to these problems in a cultural setting quite similar to our own.

A student is forced to analyze himself in the field of communicative arts. Am I creative? imaginative? disciplined? cooperative? unselfish? responsible?

Courses are so designed in the Department of Theatre and Speech that the student is challenged to study and to perform at his maximum ability. The student is made aware of his possibilities and potentialities to communicate with people in today's world.

The rich and diverse cultures of Africa are being explored here by three scholars, Stephen Reyna, Louis Noisin, and Ernest Emenyonu, each of whom brings unique contributions to our program of African Studies being nurtured in the Department of Anthropology. For the first time this year, three courses in African history and culture are being offered. We hope that this is just the beginning of a much broader and expanded program. We are trying to reveal a knowledge of the many cultures of Africa which have been long neglected. When you have a continent such as Africa, which is three and a half times the size of the United States, with a rich cultural history, that culture should be brought to the attention of those interested in the development of world culture. We hope that this is the beginning of both increased offerings in African and Asian studies. I would like to see studies in these areas include exchange of teachers and students. The department has brought in professors, and several members of the department have undertaken field studies to both Europe and Asia, as well as to different sectors of the United States. An has been added (in the basement of Washington Hall) which houses part of the African collection of the late Dr. George H. Harley, medical missionary to Liberia.

The Department of Economics has made several changes that are in keeping with the new excellence that is coming to William and Mary

We have added several outstanding new faculty members; instituted new courses in high level economic analysis and in such vital problem areas as urban studies and population analysis; and reduced our specific requirements in order to permit greater student choice of courses. Furthermore, we have encouraged independent and topical study with most pleasing and productive results.

Leonard Schifrin Chairman, Department of Economics

The Department of Government has recently introduced some curriculum changes designed to improve curriculum options for all undergraduate students. The department has recently added courses in Independent Study and Topics in Government in order to afford upperclassmen more opportunity to pursue their own interests in preparation for their careers. In addition, the department in 1971-72 created a Curriculum Committee to study the department's course offerings and graduation requirements. Changes resulting from the Committee's work include the abolishment of specific course requirements for graduation.

All these changes are directed toward maximizing flexibility for undergraduates and encouraging close faculty-student collaboration in study and research. These recent innovations are supplemental to the department's continual concern for close faculty-student relations in the pursuit of academic excellence.

Our superb resources are not merely our traditions and buildings, important as these things are, but are chiefly our human resources—the ideas and energies of students and teachers. Students will most likely respond when the teacher conveys his own enthusiasm for the problems he is dealing with, and at this point history becomes “relevant,” not in crass immediate sense of practical goals, but rather in a personal sense. History’s aesthetic relevance is the satisfaction felt when one at last perceives new relationships between old sets of facts, when one realizes anew his own participation in the human drama, and perhaps when one discovers that one of the greatest lessons of history is that it has been no infallible guide in future actions.

We, in the Department of History, have tried to provide that sense of excitement in our teaching that stems from our own active and varied research interests. We have tried to provide historical perspective to many of the contemporary problems troubling all of us.

We have added some new courses in recent years; but equally important we have tried to keep our old courses abreast of new research and new problems. By definition history is concerned with the past, but not a static past. It is properly concerned with change. In this sense historians are always dealing with the interaction of the new with the old, and we welcome the opportunity to examine old material in a new perspective.

The department of Sociology continues to strive for two main accomplishments: (1) To present the student with information and interpretation on the major characteristics of today's society and social life; and (2) to involve the student through various means in the ongoing discipline of sociology and thus to develop the research and analytical skills for his own use. Through the several changes in curriculum, staff, and techniques that the department, along with what the rest of the college has experienced, these two aims have remained constant. While some of the courses remain largely within their previous formats, other new ones have involved the student in off-campus involvements, including such activities as hospital aid, probation work, and extended interviews with various segments of the population. Other innovations are in courses of readings tailored to the individual's interest and in special-topics courses related to the research projects of different faculty members. All of this is in addition to the continuing stress we put on individual research

which all students undertake, with the topics selected by the students almost as varied as social life itself.

*Edwin H. Rhyne
Chairman, Department of Sociology*

It is the goal of the Department of Biology to engage students in a joint quest for knowledge about living things. In a world increasingly aware of its biological heritage, we seek to present the important principles and concepts of biology, from cell to ecosystem, and to give the student a feeling for and experience with the way scientists ask and attempt to answer questions about nature. In addition to increasing the student's appreciation of the scientific method, this should remove the superstitions and biases that frequently develop from lack of knowledge about the biology of man and nature.

This is especially important today when rational judgement and logic are essential to intelligent evaluation of the social as well as scientific implications of the various biological phenomena involved in the control and continuance of the quality of man's life.

Newly revised concentration requirements, while allowing flexibility in course selection, are designed to give students broad exposure to the diversity of approaches to the study of life. Students will thus be aware of how continuing advances in the understanding of cell biology, homeostatic mechanisms, development, organismal interrelationships, and evolution over the past two decades have kept the biological discipline as vital as the organisms it studies. Such awareness, along with familiarity with the use of objective and experimental methods in the continuing search for understanding of life processes, should allow the student to gain a better understanding of the phenomenon of life, the living world, and man's place in nature.

*Stewart A. Ware,
Assistant Professor, Department of Biology*

Chemistry concentrators receive an up-to-date experience in science such that they compare favorably with the best in the United States. The department intends to continue its emphasis upon quality at the undergraduate level so no more than a modest increase in the number of concentrators is anticipated. Particularly successful programs which we intend to continue and augment are:

(1) the research participation program for rising seniors during the summer months, (2) participation in ongoing faculty research programs by seniors under the course number 409, (3) work-study programs whereby even freshmen and sophomores become involved in such research programs. A long-range goal is the development of courses for non-science students and the division of some existing courses into sections for chemistry concentrators and sections for biology concentrators.

It is our hope that chemistry graduates will continue to use the chemistry program as a stepping stone into medicine, law, computer science, dentistry, environmental sciences, and engineering, in addition to the chemistry profession itself.

The Department of Geology places its entire emphasis on undergraduate education and its small size allows a close working relationship between faculty and students. Independent student research plays a strong role in the department's program and last May four seniors presented papers before the Annual Meeting of the Virginia Academy of Science.

A constant attempt is made to keep the departmental curriculum in pace with the times and as a result course offerings are frequently revised. Examples are the recent addition of a course in freshman seminar. A Geology Intern program has been initiated in which senior geology majors assist in elementary laboratories on a voluntary basis. This provides a major student with experience which will be valuable if he enters graduate school and also provides more personalized instruction for the student in the elementary course.

We consider the hallmark of the department to be a deep interest in our students and we attempt to express this both in and out of the classroom.

Bruce K. Goodwin, Chairman, Department of Geology

The deteriorating environment and new frontiers challenge the physics department. Non-science students learn astronomy in a new one-year course. They follow the search for life in the universe in an Honors Colloquium this year and a freshman seminar next year, and they learn how physics can help solve environmental problems in a new introductory course.

Physics Majors start with an introductory course in the form of small seminars and elect to prepare themselves either for graduate school in physics or for other fields where physics is important, such as law, education, medicine or biology. Our own newly graduated Ph.D.'s are all working in industry or universities, helping to meet multiple challenges.

Not only does the Department of Mathematics offer the usual concentration in mathematics, but it is in the process of obtaining faculty approval for a concentration in mathematics with a computer science option in which a student would take several basic math courses along with a number of computer science courses.

Physical education has been and must continue to be of prime importance. The well organized, purposeful and planned instruction in this particular enjoyable discipline definitely aids in the development and maintenance of one's physical and emotional stamina. It stimulates healthful cardio-respiratory activity—that singular factor above all else that is basic to life itself. Optimal functionings of all vital body processes are promoted and the harmful effects of hypo-kinetic "dis-eases" are counteracted. Thus, its total relevancy for yesterday's, today's and tomorrow's students here at the College.

We, as physical education faculty, accept our responsibility of providing a program that offers students an opportunity to realize the truth of this statement through enjoyment and accomplishment. It is our endeavor to establish a versatile program that reflects student interest and contains a starting point for each student based on her past experience. We are fortunate to have a naturally informal teaching situation that lends itself to an easy flow of student-teacher communication which helps determine student needs and interests. We let students know that we are interested in them as individuals and that we are at William and Mary for the purpose of helping them. It is our desire to reevaluate constantly ourselves, our program, and our facilities in order to accomplish our long-term goals deemed appropriate to the liberal arts student.

Co-educational courses.

The Department of Military Science, a part of the Reserve Officers Training Corps, has recently restructured its program to offer two courses for academic credit to the entire student body: American Military History and American Civil-Military relations. For students formally enrolled in ROTC, a four year program is offered to prepare interested college men to assume the responsibilities of a commission in either the regular army or in the United States Army Reserve. Students in the program are organized as a cadet battalion. This year's battalion commander is Bill Fields with Larry Leightley as the executive officer. The battalion organization is designed to give the student practical experience in leadership while on campus.

An entirely new type of institution has recently been developed for making the resources of institutions of higher education available to the adult population. These "universities without walls" are found within separate administrative units, such as the School of Continuing Studies at William and Mary. The nature and content of occupations has changed so rapidly and so drastically that it is necessary to update knowledge through education continuously in order to remain employable, and a major portion of the responsibility for the continuing education of employed adults has evolved naturally upon the colleges and universities. The development of adequate programs of continuing education may seem of minimal interest to most undergraduates. However, if current trends continue, most of you will spend many more years enrolled in programs of continuing studies than you will in full-time residence on campus.

Think about it.

VIMS

The Virginia Institute of Marine Science offers opportunities for advanced undergraduate and graduate students to obtain training in biological oceanography, general oceanography, and marine fisheries biology. Most instruction is given on the Gloucester Point campus which provides students with the advantages of learning in a research oriented environment.

The faculty of the Institute is drawn from the research staff of VIMS. Advanced degree candidates carry out thesis and/or dissertation research in the well-equipped labs and aboard the vessels of the Institute. Most who desire to do so may also work as research assistants on institute research projects.

VARC

The Virginia Associated Research Campus of the College of William and Mary provides residents of Tidewater Virginia with the opportunity for an innovative educational experience which is particularly relevant for today and tomorrow. Through the Applied Science, Business, and Education graduate program of non-credit courses on specialized topics, qualified graduate students may pursue a degree on a part-time basis while they advance their careers. The combination of classroom instruction, advanced research activity, and professional employment makes for a particularly relevant educational combination, flexible enough to adapt itself to our rapid changing society and the changing motivations of man in that society.

Few colleges

of comparable size have so rich a heritage as has the College of William and Mary, and it has been the good fortune of the Institute of Early American History and Culture for the past thirty years to be an important part of the excellence of the College.

Through its publication program of books and the William and Mary Quarterly it has been able to enrich the proud tradition of Virginia stemming back into the colonial period of our history. Through classroom teaching and informal conversations with undergraduates, historians and editors on the staff of the Institute have been able to share their enthusiasm for historical scholarship in a direct way. We hope and believe that as we are strengthened in our knowledge we can pass on to the students of William and Mary something of our concern for excellence and for truth.

Joint activity.

For over forty years the social studies at William and Mary have had some organizational form for joint activity. First, the Marshall-Wythe School of Government and Citizenship, later the division of Social Sciences, and recently, the Marshall-Wythe Institute for Research. The activities and emphasis have changed from time to time, but one continuing program has been the Marshall-Wythe Symposium, a one credit course of lectures given by persons invited to the campus. Topics and speakers have been drawn from across the social sciences.

This year's topic is "Equality, the Person, and Society". The Institute also assists students and faculty in research. At present, the Institute is carrying on an elections data project on changes taking place in the Virginia electorate. This has been used as a resource by scholars, journalists, local governments, and political parties. Proposed projects on contemporary Virginia are a date bank, newspaper index, and collection of personal papers. Interest is not strictly Virginia, however, the Institute also assists with conferences such as the one for local budget officers, and annual meetings of the American Committee for Irish Studies, and Virginia Political Scientists.

Greeks

To move or not to move.

Housing was the big issue for Pan Hel this year. For Greek women, the question was whether or not to abandon their deteriorating houses in favor of the new campus residential complex. There were advantages in doing so. Bigger facilities.

Partial air conditioning. Private phones, and consolidation of all Greeks on the new end of campus. The administration actively promoted the move, issuing numerous statements about the desirability of living in more modern facilities, and personally visiting each sorority house with drawings. But there were obvious disadvantages, too. The new rooms were very expensive. Adequate parking space had not been planned on. And furnishings were not to be the college's responsibility. Each sorority was responsible for completely decorating its unit. The result of the controversy was that all women, Greek, and non-Greek alike, voted 10-1 in April, 1971 against Greek occupation of the complex. So, the college got tougher. This fall a heavily weighted statement of "questions and answers" was circulated by the administration. In essence, the point was that Greeks really had no choice in the matter.

Students saw the problems inherent in the switch. All independent women would have no choice but to live in the older, on-campus dorms. Greeks would be forced to fill 42 units each semester. And there would be no opportunity to live with members of other sororities. Isolation was not what sororities wanted. So they fought. Various student groups got busy. Pan Hel paid a visit to Dean Barnes. WDA's Executive Board wrote the Flat Hat, formally proposing other uses for the already underway dorms. Their solution, to house freshman women, thus eliminating JBT and Ludwell. Or to convert the off campus dorms to graduate and senior apartment use. Or to use the complex to house experimental residential programs such as Project Plus. Then the Greeks banded together and voted as a unit to stay in their houses. Period. As spring arrived, and the sorority decision was past history, the College had some problems. Exactly what group should be offered the new housing opportunity? Or should the complex be open to all students? And what was to become of Ludwell and JBT? March saw these questions answered. Additionally, as sororities began to plan renovations and redecorations, fraternities began investigation on the possibilities of returning to the Lodge system. House maintenance was a major problem, and declining membership had forced smaller fraternities to house non-members. It had been a long skirmish. And the housing battle wasn't really over. But for 1972 sorority women remained on the court . . .

The ECHO solicited comments from sorority and fraternity leaders, as well as Pan Hel officers, on the overall housing question. Basically, the comments were in response to the question: What benefits were there in complex living? And, why did their own Greek letter organizations make the particular decision that they did? Their answers follow.

Pan Hel on the reasons why not:

"Factors contributing to the decision to stay were many.

The major reason given by

Greek women opposed to moving was the size of the complex which housed 42 women per unit. Greeks generally agreed that the move would be detrimental to our system to have the majority of a chapter living in a sorority house. On such a small campus as William and Mary, we felt that Greek women would isolate themselves by living with the same group for three or four years. Living in the dorms with all other women on campus has been one of the ways Greeks keep in touch with the rest of the College population, bringing diversity and new ideas to their own chapters from their different experiences and associations. We feel that the decision to stay was a wise one, and we also feel that the majority of the College community was behind our decision. The complex is going to be used in a way which should prove more beneficial to the majority of students at William and Mary.

*Mavis Henry
President, Panhellenic Council*

Sororities on the new complex:

We have two main reasons for not wanting to move to the sorority complex. One is that a sorority is already expensive without adding the cost of a room in the complex to the bill. Also, it would mean that all of us would be living in the complex about three years, and we would lose contact with girls who are not in sororities.

*Lynn Santoroski
President, Phi Mu*

Our major concern was with the size of the housing units and the implications of this size. Under the present quota-oriented rush system, more than one class within the sorority would have to move into the house to fill the spaces. Secondly, freshmen would tend to pledge in blocks if they knew that they were choosing their friends and roommates for the next four years. We oppose this exclusiveness. As it stands now, Greek women can live Pan-Hellenically for three years. We feel that this living situation has added significantly to the Panhellenic support of the Greek system at William and Mary—a condition not found on many campuses today. Additionally the added expense was not attractive, especially to those putting themselves through school. In short, we're happy where we're presently living. For Chi Omega's best interests and the best interests of the Greek system as a whole, we think the arrangement on sorority court is the most appropriate.

*Debbie Lewis
President, Chi Omega*

Fraternities on the present complex:

The complex provides an opportunity to form very close associations with people having at least one common bond. As opposed to being spread around dormitories, there is a chance to develop a sense of unity with others by seeking a common end (the degree), by participating in group activities (service projects, intramurals), and by socializing together. All of these things are available to any undergraduate. However, the fraternity has the advantage of being an established group that is built on the idea of collective effort. This "idea" has been given more meaning by living in the complex.

*Kevin Rainey
President, Sigma Phi Epsilon*

Kappa Alpha has always been a small chapter with usually between 20 and 25 members. The present chapter is also rather small. The school requires that each fraternity fill 33 beds in each house. This has hurt KA very much because of the size of the chapter. We are not the only chapter that is affected by this rule, as several of the other fraternities on campus have a small chapter strength. Although the fraternity complex was at one time completely separated from the rest of the campus, much of the growth has come in this direction, and because of this the fraternities have become more closely integrated with the campus community. In the near future, the fraternity system will have to focus attention on their relationship with the College community in order to survive.

*Sam Waldo
President, Kappa Alpha*

While the idea of the fraternities residing in the college-owned dormitory complex is often extolled as the means of achieving brotherhood through close association in everyday life, and the complex itself is supposedly a superior dormitory facility, there are definite disadvantages to the present system of fraternity life. Leasing the houses from the college is an increasingly heavy financial burden on the fraternities . . . The fraternities must be increasingly concerned with financial matters and with the quantity rather than the quality of their membership. Fraternities, however, are social organizations, and as such, should not have to be primarily concerned with these matters. In addition, upperclassmen who have been living in the fraternity houses for two or more years tend to tire of dormitory living, and the desire to live outside the houses combined with the expense of having to pay dues plus pay for house improvements or empty beds leads to the alienation of juniors and especially seniors from the fraternities. The fraternities, then, lose a prime source of leadership, and the loss is due in some substantial measure to the present system of fraternity living.

What the fraternities need is either a system of privately owned or rented houses, or a system such as the use of fraternity lodges which enables these organizations to concentrate on social considerations and remain flexible in terms of the size and nature of their membership, while at the same time using college dormitory facilities.

Marshall Gimpel, President Sigma Alpha Epsilon

Living in the complex has been a worthwhile experience. Its shortcomings have been far surpassed by the benefits of a fraternal relationship enhanced by the opportunity to live, work, and party together, and living in the complex has provided this opportunity.

Only one

informal fall party this year. Which meant one night of nine parties. So that rushees and sorority women alike could get to know each other more thoroughly. Low quotas because of poor participation. Which prompted suiciding and Pan Hel cuts. Sunday night selection sessions for the sororities. Heavy informal bidding on Monday morning. And pledge classes big enough to fill the sorority houses.

Enthusiasm about Rush for men. Which led to large numbers of shakees and incredibly large pledge classes. As IFC President Gary Pfeiffer put it, "Formal Rush was the successful culmination of a long term public relations campaign by the fraternities. While fraternity membership has declined nationally, the overall strength of the system has increased here. Including a sharp increase in the number of upperclassmen who went through Rush." For fraternities, also, Rush insured filling the complex.

Operation Backtrack.

Subsidized by a $500 donation from IFC. To help develop a new synthetic track at Cary Field for College and community use. Also, a charity concert in Blow Gym and IFC Weekend in November. Poor turnout hurt the concert, but cooperation made the open weekend highly successful. Plans were formulated for re-landscaping the muddy complex grounds. In early spring. Which included box-wood plantings, and re-seeding grass. Aided heavily by efforts of individual houses. A year with IFC President Gary Pfeiffer at the helm.

Low quotas

caused problems during formal Rush for women. Primarily due to poor participation. Which may have stemmed from lack of interest, or poor communication. Or both, according to one Pan Hel officer.

Fall months were devoted to the Housing Issue, and distribution of Greek Notes. Pan Hel successfully led the fight to stay on Richmond Road. A Greek Sing in October where sororities exchanged jerseys. And sang each other's songs. February brought an all-Greek rush for Phi Mu. To help the re-colonized chapter gain numbers strength. Result: more pledges and better prospects. Under president Mavis Henry.

Sisterhood:

the kind that came from having everyone live in the House. A delayed rush in 1972 will Pan Hel's help. To bolster membership. "Successful," in the sisters' opinions. Socially: a tree trimming party at Christmas with non-sorority friends. House Santa party and freshmen men's party. At Homecoming, donation to the Christian Children's Fund. In lieu of a float. And donations to the Lupus Fund in memory of Susan Fallon. Phi Mu: Symbolized by the rose carnation.

"Bye-bye, Miss American Pie. . ."

Give the Pi Phi's half a chance and they would break into a rendition of the Top-Ten. Or the Blue Moon routine. Or maybe oldies-but-goodies. Especially if the audience was at Frank's. A year of change: a new I.C. '71 idea on restructuring sororities to meet the challenge of the seventies. A pioneer program by the first national sorority. Elimination of offices and outlined duties. Instead, an emphasis on individuality and ad-hoc committee work. All of which meant a different kind of rush and a new last night skit. Plus long, long talks into the night. Retreat at Sandbridge. Monmouth Duo. A "Miss Highway Department" presentation. Thanksgiving and lasagne dinners. Bridge in the TV room. Not to mention the (almost) champion Mudville 9 softball team. Coordinated by President Debbie Dougherty.

Gatoring.

The Pikas did their thing in the middle of the dance floor. Whether it was at a keg and combo party with Alpha Chi. At the Christmas party with fraternity Little Sisters. Or to entertain Sweetheart Peggy Jenkins.

Yearly activities included post-football game receptions with alumni. Christmas caroling at women's dorms. And manning a flashlight brigade to collect for the Tidewater TB and Respiratory Disease campaign.

Under presidents Dennis Propst and Bob Byrne. Attending the District Convention at Blacksburg. Holding the annual Founder's Day Banquet. Going primitive for a Prehistoric Party. And soaking up the sun on beach weekend at Nag's Head.

Bopping on the bar-top.

Or enjoying the Richmond look and Franklin stomp with Sweetheart Sue Berryman. Pi Lam favorites on Saturday nights. House activities included paneling the living room and providing food and clothes for the needy at Christmas. Or watching Hollywood Squares and Lancelot Link. Not to mention worrying about the Sig Ep game. Zimmerman's sheets. And boomers.

Sitting on the Gamma Phi roof during women's rush. Beach weekend. After the Spring Formal in April. Led by president Bob Wooldridge.

A changing image

at SAE. To accommodate the new requirements put on fraternities by prospective members.

Still, the traditional activities. A champagne Sweetheart dance to crown Laurie Smith. A Homecoming reception and party with "August."

And a visit by former E. A. Willard Smith.

A Founder's Day formal in March. And a second semester pie-fight party. Overseen by President Dave Charlton.

Riding the school bus every morning.

Despite those early hours. Brothers of the Zeta Upsilon managed to heavily support the Williamsburg Pre-School for Special Children. Raise money for the Wallace Village Children's Home. Run a Red Cross blood drive. And create an endowment fund.

All of which resulted in numerous national awards. Including the Peterson Significant Chapter Citation, the Sigma Chi Scholarship Award, and the Public Relations Citation. Athletically, an "inexperienced football team."

Socially, a champagne party for Freshmen women, and a Faculty and Administration reception at Christmas. Less formally, hay loft and turkey-hunting parties. All topped off by beach weekend in the spring - - "In hoc Signo Vinces".

Pig parts.

A real swine grilled in back of the Sigma Nu house. With a band on the porch and kegs. Plus a Faculty-Businessman's get-together in November. Informal talks over drinks and sandwiches. Christmas caroling at the Graves—then being invited in to hear the President read his favorite Bible selections. As usual, sponsoring Big Green after football season. And a Homecoming reception that lasted into the night. Jan Reed as sweetheart. Jeff Jensen as president.

Champions of the intramural sports league.

In 1971 and probably in 1972. Genuine interest in philanthropies, also. Members worked with Circle K on Christmas and Easter parties. With the Chickahominy Children's Gang. And pledges collected for the Heart Fund.

Selling activities calendars at fall registration. The House project. To raise money for fraternity scholarships.

Sig Ep on the housing complex: pro. Because it develops a sense of unity through participation and socializing. Because to Sig Ep's the collective effort was all important. In the words of President Kevin Rainey.

Waterballoons off the roof in the spring.

All passersby beware. The Sigma Pi's were dangerous dudes. Casual parties that all seemed to end before 11 p.m. In a boothlined basement—supervised by the figure in a brother's oil painting. At Christmas, caroling and a party complete with a cold duck fountain. In the spring, orchid ball and then a weekend long blow-out at Virginia Beach. A year under presidents, Bill Bonifant and Scott Young. And Susie Russell as sweetheart.

"We're Number 1!"

yelled the Theta Delts. As they captured the blue ribbon in scholarship. With a cumulative GPA above the All-College average. As much of a surprise to the brothers as to anyone.

Still, time for parties. At Christmas, two Theta Delt Santas and a sack-load of embarrassing gifts and notes. And, of course, the traditional Harry Buffalo Party in February. Complete with body paint. And sweetheart Barbara Bledsoe.

A keg with the Pi Phi's. Spring beach weekend. Approval of the fraternity fostered by complex living. Under president Henry Tucker.

Amicus Discipulus

Student Bar members provided a full range of services. After orientation came a school picnic, Homecoming alumni reception, and a Christmas dance.

Publication of a newspaper—Amicus Curiae.

Conducting a moot court competition with other schools. Judged by former Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark.

Forming an environmental law group lobbying for a Wetlands Protection Statute in Virginia.

Spring: Tying it all up with the Sixth Annual Barristers' Ball.

A scholarly journal

published quarterly. By students of Marshall-Wythe School of Law. Dual functions: first, to contain ideas on modern legal development. And the problems thereof. Second, to provide a forum for publication of school researched articles. Membership: determined by academic achievement. Leadership: headed up by third year law student Chuck Boochar.

Environmental law and drug control. Two topics discussed at the five state district law students' convention. Hosted by Phi Alpha Delta. The oldest and largest college legal fraternity. Services: scholarship awards, an alumni newsletter, a speaker's program. Which featured State Attorney General Andrew Miller. Social events: a sports car rally, keg parties, faculty-student parties. Under President Richard Potter.

Trashberry

punch. Highlight of Phi Delta Phi's social season. Which also included a wine and cheese party and moonlight cruise at Hampton Roads. Under president George Hudson.

Professionally, a speaker program. Including Judge Cofer of Hampton Civil Court. James Bradberry, former Commonwealth's Attorney. And criminology expert, Larry Gunther of the College sociology department.

Also, a three-day trip to Washington, D.C. in the spring. To meet with national judicial officials in an informal capacity. Providing, in one member's words, "a much needed opportunity for the students at Marshall-Wythe to socialize and combine for interesting and useful professional activities."

Retrospect 1971-1972

A school at a crossroads as a nation drew a breath.

A year not so eventful as those recently past but rather, an introspective one. School started as the government reeled from Daniel Ells-burg's disclosures about Viet Nam, and the international devaluation of the American dollar. Nixon's wage price freeze enraged labor. Plans for a ping-pong tournament with Red China grabbed headlines.

And Edmund Muskie formally declared his candidacy for President.

As fall progressed through monsoons, prison riots broke out at San Quentin and Attica. Followed by a major insurrection at Rahway, New Jersey, on Thanksgiving Day. Northern Ireland continued to riot

as unmarried Bernadette Devlin bore a child. First indications of bussing protests cropped up. The Beach Boys reappeared on the scene. And former Russian Premier Nikita Khrushchev died in the USSR.

Fashion wise, trends were imitative of 40's and 50's.

The natural look was out for women's make-up. In vogue was a return to classic clothes and basic black. Musically, every major radio station played oldie-but-goodies and beebopping became the rage.

One wondered if the nation, in its pause, had begun to lean backwards for security. Politically, elections in South Vietnam turned violent. Thieu emerged with a surprising majority. As Captain Ernest Medina was court-martialed for My Lai. Supreme Court

giant Hugo Black and John Harlan retired; Justice Black died shortly after. Chicago Mayor Daley's top aide was indicted for obstructing justice regarding 1969 police killings of the Black Panthers.

As the Kennedy Center opened in D.C., Archie Bunker captured middle American TV ratings with All in the Family. Ralph somebody sat on his bed saying "I don't believe I ate the whole thing", while another tube star advised—"Try it, you'll like it." Disney World opened in Florida.

Lindsey and McGovern began campaigning. ABM deployment was approved in the Senate.

Nixon rescued the Taft-Hartley Act from dusty files to be wielded against the West Coast dock workers. Jesus Christ Superstar rocked Broadway's new season, and the Pittsburgh Pirates took the World Series.

As former Secretary of State Dean Acheson died, China was admitted to the United Nations. Marking a major change in US policy towards communist countries. Border incidents between India and Pakistan nearly turned into all out war. Causing columnist Jack Anderson to expose what he called "a deception of the American public." Anderson was to make headlines once again in early March by exposing Attorney General nominee Kliendiest's knowledge of an ITT/GOP financial deal. Nixon sparked legal uproar with his Supreme Court nominees, but William Rehnquist and Virginia's Lewis Powell were confirmed. The agony of bussing moved north to Detroit and Boston. And women's lib demonstrated against National Airline's "Fly Me" ad. Internationally, West German Chancellor Willy Brandt won the Nobel Peace Prize. Pablo Picasso celebrated his 70th birthday—still in exile from Spain. Christmas catalyzed activity for the 92nd Congress.

The House killed an amendment to allow prayer in schools. Another bill to limit campaign spending was introduced. Rep. John Dowdy's guilt of bribery became apparent. And the Washington Redskins fell from their new-found throne.

New Year, 1972 saw the Dallas Cowboys rout the Miami Dolphins for the Superbowl title. New nation Bangladesh was born of war. Stanley Kubrick's Clockwork Orange blew the minds of cinema freaks. And Three Dog Night's "Joy To The World" was number one rock hit in 1971.

Nixon's February visit to Peking captured international television, along with the Winter Olympics from Sapporo, Japan. On the domestic scene, Clifford Irving's hoax biography of Howard Hughes was exposed, an anti-bussing amendment was drawn up, and the New Hampshire primary prompted a multitude of speculations.

For Virginia, the winter meant alternate snow and 80° weather. The Richmond motorcade to Washington. And the trial of Radford College's Dr. Jervey for his "immoral" letter to Redbook Magazine. Don McLean's 9-minute epic "Bye-Bye Miss American Pie" was still going strong as the Echo went to press, along with the revival of "The Lion Sleeps Tonight." Nostalgia was the name of the game as DJ's once more played "Those were the Days . . ." A song that ended with the phrase:

*"Oh, my friends we're older but no wiser--
For in our hearts
the dreams are still the same."*
