My dear Mother:

Yesterday, I received your letter of April 11th also two from Essie, and one from Jeff. Gee! but they were welcome. It did seem good to know that at last you are beginning to receive my mail. Pay no attention to that post script, asking for money. I am sure that I ~~never~~ did not write it, and only wish that I could locate the "son of a gun" who attempted such a low-down trick. We are being paid regularly now, but even if we weren't, you don't suppose that I would send home for money, for myself, do you? No! mother dear, when neither Uncle Sam, nor my comrades, can "keep me going," then I am willing to do without such things as would be available, if I had the cash. One thing, for which I am most thankful, is the great spirit of good heartedness, which prevails over here. During the time when
