

it my duty to acquiesce without another murmur. I really smile at being accused of wishing to create a difference between my sisters and himself - they must both acknowledge, at least to their own hearts, that I produced the cordiality which I am rejoiced to see subsisting now. My judgment of the manner in which they allow their prejudices to blind them, is not altogether founded on my own experience, but the more accurate part is formed by hearing their sentiments concerning those with whom they are apparently on the most friendly terms - some of whom tho' have their actions as cruelly misconstrued as mine can be. - They have not received any new mortification to inflict on me, but will in future be obliged to retrace the old catalogue -

I shall return to Bizarra as soon as I am allowed. After the receipt of your unexpectedly kind letter by Tack, he added his assurance to my sister's painful intelligence respecting Fan - Flament extremely their telling me in presence of the servants nine persons in ten, who have heard it, conclude that I behaved with the utmost ingratitude to your daughter. However, I must resign myself - Present my most affectionate love to Mrs. Tucker and Polly; I am seated amid a terrible confusion. Believe me dear Sir with the most tender and unchangeable regard yours Ann C. Randolph -
