"Mikado" Will Be Presented On Three Nights

Gilbert and Sullivan's "Mikado" will be presented by the Department of Fine Arts on Thursday. Friday, and Saturday, March 17, 18, and 19, instead of just on Thursday and Friday, the 17 and 18. It is hoped that three performances instead of two as originally scheduled will give more people a chance to see the operetta. The production of "The Gondoliers" was received with so much enthusiasm last year that it was necessary at popular request to give a third performance.

A completely reorganized Symphony Orchestra, made up of eighteen persons under the direction of Mr. Raymond Douse, will play at "The Mikado." The members of the orchestra are as follows: Cello, Norma Warren; Flute, J. M. Frey; Clarinets, Samuel Cohen and Dorothy Whitefield; Trombone, John Hinman; Violins, Seymour Waxman, Howard Calish, Arthur Kneip, Norma Petillo, Kathleen Deming, Robert Cartwright; Piano, Mary Moncure and Maxine Hines; Viola, Dorothy Judd; Bass, Gay Robinson; Trumpets, John Tinsley and Robert Fiche; Percussion, Burton Reed.

Tickets for the production will be forty and sixty cents, without a season theatre ticket. They will go on sale Monday, March 14 at the box office in Phi Bete. #### O. D. Holds Second Informal Party

Carrying out the spirit shown in the last few games of the basketball season, Old Dominion held their second party within the past month on last Thursday evening. This latest get-together in their newly finished basement, was even more successful than the initial affair. Approximately one hundred students were present, including Professors Ash and Sherwood. Although the program was far from the ranks of the professional musical comedy, it was a pleasant, light, and lively affair due mainly to the great number of participants and talents-received by a spirited audience.

There were many solos and group arrangements, including that old Club Sandwich Trio of Hooke, Della Torre, and Lenzi; a duet by Ray and Charlie Walker: Bill Bryne and Steve Dennis and guitar; and a skit, the feature of the evening, including Hanna and McGowan as customers in a tavern; Farnsworth, as tin-pan alley; Lenzi as the villain; Sam Walker, as waiter; and none other than the heroine of the Christmas Some of the outstanding single numbers were: Bill Greene at the piano, who played one of his own compositions; Art Kneip, Rubinoff of O. D. at the violin; Sam Cohen and his clarinet; and a colored boy, Horace, who tap-danced his way to two encores. Charlie Beale led

To that group of students in Old Dominion Hall who plan and produce "O. D. Night" the FLAT HAT extends its heartiest congratulations. The movement deserves notice because it is a manifestation of something that has been lacking at William and Mary to a great degree ever since we can remember. The College has not been entirely spiritless but it has never reached the height of enthusiasm in four years that these students have reached in a short few months.

Time was when the rotogravure of the New York Times carried lovely mountain democracy and peace one of his life efforts. and valley scenes, Rembrandt, toddling prize There is much discussion over this anwinning babies, forests-scenes of peace. But times have changed. For where before the pictures were peaceful and lovely to see, they are now grim and foreboding. Where before there were grinning toothless babies we now see yawning cannons; for lovely mountain scenes, they have substituted the flash of armor and a foray of "heils"; Rembrandt is replaced by scenes of newly launching skyward; tanks are where athletes were before. War is in the air. Even the stupid are aware of it.

If war comes, as it must, of one thing view it than any other war we have watched or taken part in before. For in the past year a myriad of books and articles have been written for the layman about the next war. Some authors have described in addition to the backgrounds of the war, the strategy, probable nature, and the great powers which will take part. Recent volumes such as T. H. Wintringham's "The Coming World War," B. H. Liddell Hart's "Europe in Arms," "The Background of War" by the editors of Fortune, Eliot and Dupuy's "If War Comes" and Hanson Baldwin's "The Caissons Roll," are some of those that give the reading public opportunity to become well informed about the next war. Such is the modern age. We might even well expect before judgment day to go tripping over to the library, thumb through the card catalogue, and return with the succulent piece of literature called "Civilization, After the End of It." Yes, well-read persons must no more confine themselves to the past and present, for already the future lies open to the curious.

Thomas Mann, Aryan exile from Germany announced at the formal opening of but wonder, whither leads Mr. Roosevelt . . .

Cannons to the right of us, cannons to the "The Thomas Mann Collection" in the Yale library that he had made a serious decision —that he intended to make the cause of nouncement among critics who believe that the world will lose a creative genius and gain merely another propagandist, whose pleadings will prove no more effectual than others of lesser caliber. But Mann answers the critics when he says:

"'Art concerns itself with the grave and the good.' Well, then, the grave and good thing that is at stake in the world today is peace. It is the problem of peace that sets humanity its task today and only in a state of peace can these tasks be accomplished.

. . . To support with one's whole personality, that same personality which took art seriously, the human and no less holy cause of peace, that, it seems to me is the right of an artist and the duty of a man."

But if the loss of this great literary figure to the creative world were the only loss the world will suffer from its present military rampage, it would indeed be getting off lightly. When one-quarter of an entire nation's governmental resources are directed towards strengthening the military, the loss to civilization is more than proportional.

The politicians call the recent disturbance in business a "recession", the business men call it a "depression," the laymen call it "hard times," some of the economists call it "natural cyclical fluctuation"; but whatever one's choice of names, it matters not, the fact remains that business conditions have slowed down to the point of jerking, and need an immediate change of gears. The writer is admittedly an admirer of Mr. Roosevelt, but Mr. Roosevelt's seeming inof the old Jackson pork-barrel days. Mark Twain, in speaking of the weather, once remarked succintly that it was something that everyone complained of but never did anything about. He might well have been talking about the William and Mary women's social rules, about which so much has been said-in and out of petitions -but about which nothing is ever done. We would like to begin, impossibly, with an amendment, to wit, that William and Mary regulations are 1) lovely 2) just and even 3) cute, but that while they are all very well for underclass toddlers, they are a sneer under the august noses of Seniors. We, it is unnecessary to add, are Seniors, and we believe that the unnatural town of Williamsburg has a crippling enough effect on students without throwing in a student government handbook. A Senior, at least, should be granted the privilege of making up his mind. Take, for instance, the rule that forbids dating in the morning. The rule has obvious virtues; and if the entire student body had that privilege, no doubt the little ones would perennially clutter up the local restaurants ad nauseam several classes. We believe the with Seniors it is different, however, and an it-is-out-of-social-hours-sir answer to the question "Mind if I have some coffee with you? is not only ridiculous but downright juvenile. Then there's the rule about couples walking in the park. We, for two, are not chigger fanciers—at least, not to any noticeable extent—but we do note that couples who start out legally together, are, three minutes later, in entirely different latitudes. Then there's the one about riding at night in an automobile. It is generally conceded by intelligent people that a horseless carriage is fairly safe, and while we agree with the rule that forbids students to have cars, we stamp up and down in fury at the one which prevents students from driving at night with friends from out of town. We also dislike the idea of bundling William & Mary coeds into a bus, and then letting them out at Blow Gym like the women at Jamestown in 1619. We mean, after all! Then there's the rule, the new one this year, which states that it takes three couples before the legal weight is reached for going to the Williamsburg Inn Saturday. Now it may happen that you want a party, and then again you may be the sort who like to hold hands between the sugar bowl and the salt cellars. If the latter is true you're sunk. According to the Powers, one ,or even two William and Mary boys, are not adequate protection from the mythical Indians on the Duke of Gloucester Street. We figure that that's a kind of subtle dig at the men's student body. You'd certainly think that if they wouldn't allow one couple to go, two would be plenty. But no. They throw in the third—either as an extra dividend or as a chaperone for the first two. From this, a tirade on that first-block-of-the-Duke-of-Gloucester-Street rule. It is hardly advisable to allow William and Mary coeds to wander around alone after dark, but we don't see why a girl and her date cannot walk to the capitol at night if they want to. We can't see anything very hair-raising about the illegal bricks in the second block as compared to the legal ones in the first block. In fact, the whole place looks rather sleepy to us. Then there's Monday, when we women may not go out with anyone but we women of an evening. This is probably a good rule. We have a feeling it is. But why Monday? The week-ends are hardly that exhausting.

So; the social rules. We believe them excellent for underclassmen. Learning to stay within a law and live under a rule is a good thing. But to treat a Senior like a prepscholar when he's already slightly ossified by Williamsburg is to prepare him shoddily for the Life that guest speakers tell you he will have to Face.
