Fig. 5 Wheel-lock from Causey's Care 44CC178, x-ray view. This is likely a French or Dutch lock, similar examples are illustrated in Decorated Firearms 1540-1870 (Gussler and Lavin 1977: 18, 66)

Fig. 6 Snaphaunce lock fragment from Causey's Care 44CC178; x-ray view. The style of this lock is difficult to discern due to the fragmentary nature of its condition, it is interesting to note that it still retains the flint in the cock jaws.

3 Interior of the above lock. Note the wheellock-type 2-piece sear and sliding pan-cover. The push-rod, which is attached to the tumbler and opens the pan-cover as the cock falls, can be clearly seen. (Bristol City Museum)

11 Snaphance lock, c1630-40. The slim design of the lockplate probably reflects a later date of manufacture. (Hardwick Hall Derbyshire-National Trust)

*note the subtle changes in the lock-plate design and sear position.

12 Interior of the lock in Fig.11. The sear springs are mounted in an unusual position, above the sears. (Hardwick Hall, Derbyshire - National Trust).

Fig. 11 and 12 Snaphaunce lock-plates from Causey's Care 44CC178 x-ray views These two images provide a graphic illustration of the screw and attachment holes associated with snaphaunce lock construction. Note the sliding pan cover on Fig. 11 and the shadow for the pan attachment on Fig. 12.

Fig. 14 Snaphaunce lock ca 1620. Note similarity of lock-plate style to that of Fig. 13, particularly the rear finial and the top profile of each lock-plate. (Godwin et al 2003a)

Fig. 15 Page from catalogue of English Arms 20th Park Lane Arms Fair, London (Godwin 2003b)

This figure illustrates the expected form of pistol that would have been used in Virginia during the early seventeenth-century. Of note is entry 1, this relic pistol shows clearly the parts of a pistol in the correct configuration without the wood stock obscuring the relationships. Also, this figure illustrates the Type I English-lock from around the 1635 as a comparison to the snaphaunce locks discussed in the text.

A Loan Exhibition from the Royal Armouries and Private Collections

curated by BRIAN GODWIN, DAVID OLIVER, MARTIN PEGLER AND ROBERT C. WOOSNAM-SAVAGE

An English snaphaunce pistol, circa 1580.

Royal Armouries XII.4180.

In its original form this was a pistol of some quality and sophistication. It has a pan cover that opens automatically as the cock falls and on the end of the iron lockplate is a pivoting safety catch. There is a long narrow belt hook fitted to the sideplate. The cock and steel were once finely scroll engraved.

Overall length: 185/16 inches. Barrel length: 111/4 inches.

Calibre: .58 inch.

Provenance: Found on the Thames foreshore at Queenhithe. Purchased from Mr J.

Matthews, South Australia.

H.L. Blackmore, The Queenhithe Pistol, 10th Park Lane Arms Fair Catalogue, London 1993, pp.17-23.

Royal Armouries XII.1823.

This small pistol exhibits much of its original finery with its fluted barrel and flared fluted muzzle, which still retains traces of gold damascening. The stock is probably of walnut and is heavily inlaid with horn and mother of pearl, it has a button trigger but no trigger guard. Such small pistols were known as 'pocket dags.' Overall length: 111/4 inches. Barrel length: 61/4 inches

Provenance: Formerly in the collection of J. T. Hooper and acquired with assistance from the National Art Collections Fund from Christie's London, 1971.

Figs. 25 & 26

An early example of the Type 1 English lock. Its overall form, including the trapezoid lockplate, decorative finials and the use internally of a 2-piece horizontally acting sear, are characteristic of the English snaphance, from which it evolved. An unusual feature is the springcontrolled dog-catch (dog missing): the long controlling spring can be seen below the cock

Overall length 8 inches. (Private collection UK)
